For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

Every person who maliciously cuts, defaces, breaks or injures any book, map, chart, picture, engraving, statue, coin, model, apparatus, or other work of literature, art, mechanics or object of curiosity, deposited in any public library, gallery, museum or collection is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Penal Code of California, 1915, Section 623.

/ 225137

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2013

http://archive.org/details/ladieshomejourna67julwyet

JULY, 1950

Ladies' Home JOURNAL

25 CENTS

The Magazine Women Believe In

225137

PUBLIC LIBRARY

Undiscovered

AMERICAN BEAUTIES

GLORIA McGOUGH

Beverly Hills, California

Gloria with dog

Melody — Condensed Novel Complete in this Issue — Elswyth Thane

The Harrison Case — The Story of How Syphilis Spreads

"We Knew What We Wanted" — How America Lives

The Little Princesses — Elizabeth Chooses Ph

PUBLIC LIBRARY
BURLINGAME
CALIF
JUN55

225497

Your mouth and breath are more wholesome, sweeter, cleaner—when you guard against tooth decay and gum troubles both. So don't risk halfway dental care. Rely on doubly-effective Ipana care for healthier teeth, healthier gums—better all-around protection for your whole mouth.

Keep your Whole Mouth Wholesome!

"I have lots of confidence in Ipana . . . it's made by Bristol-Myers," says Miss Pat Barnard of Great Neck, N. Y.

Bristol-Myers, makers of Ipana Tooth Paste, have worked with leading dental authorities for many years on scientific studies of the teeth and gums. You can use Ipana with complete confidence that it provides effective care for teeth and gums both. It's another reliable Bristol-Myers product.

Fight tooth decay and gum troubles with the one leading tooth paste specially designed to do both!*

Naturally, you'd like to have a healthier, more wholesome mouth. And you will have, if you do what dentists advise: fight not only tooth decay but gum troubles, too.

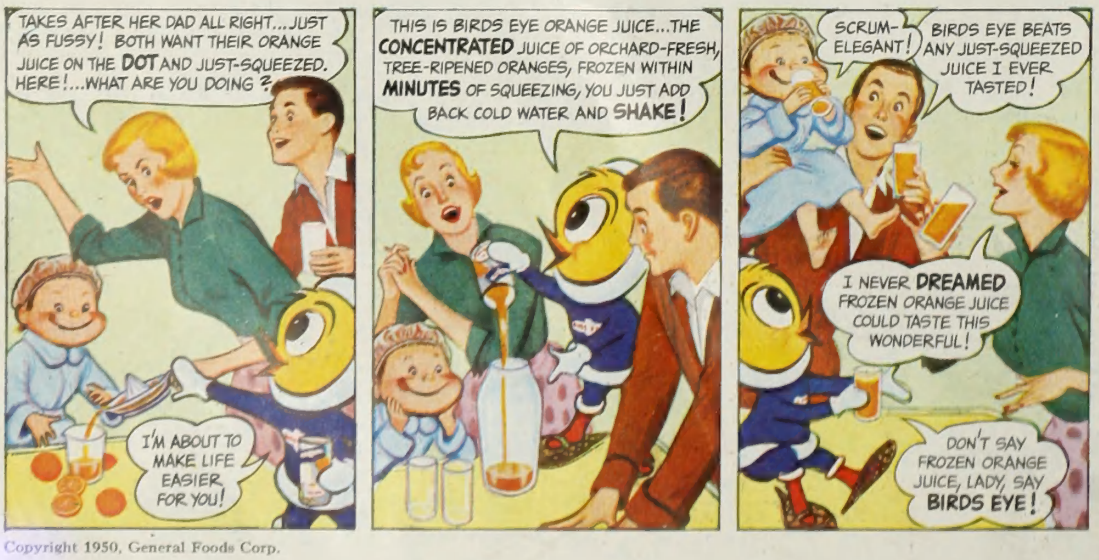
With one famous tooth paste—*with Ipana and massage—you can guard your teeth and gums BOTH.

For no other dentifrice has been proved more effective than Ipana in fighting tooth decay. And no other leading tooth paste is specially designed to stimulate gum circulation—promote healthier gums.

Remember, Ipana is the only leading tooth paste made especially to give you this doubly-protective, doubly-effective care.

So be sure of double protection—keep your whole mouth "Ipana wholesome." Ipana's wholesome flavor is refreshing, too—you'll enjoy it. Get Ipana today.

NEW!
Big economy size Ipana saves you up to 23¢



IPANA

For healthier teeth, healthier gums

If you'd like a color reprint of this Birds Eye Youngster, and pictures of 3 others in the series, send 25¢—to cover mailing—and your name and address to Birds Eye, Dept. J, P. O. Box 84, Brooklyn 1, N. Y.

PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Fussy Folks say Birds Eye Orange Juice tastes better than just-squeezed!

Copyright 1950, General Foods Corp.

BIRDS EYE – BOUND TO BE BETTER!

JOURNAL
CONTENTS
JULY, 1950
Vol. LXVII, No. 7

PHOTOGRAPH BY BERNARD OF HOLLYWOOD

Sic transit Gloria.

From time to time the JOURNAL cover features an Undiscovered American Beauty—a girl who has never previously modeled for money. Nominations are submitted by photographers throughout the country.

Gloria McGough, of Beverly Hills, California, has a weakness for double hamburgers and thick milk shakes, and that partially explains her appearance as the Undiscovered American Beauty on this month's cover. Gloria was indulging this weakness one afternoon at a drive-in on Sunset Boulevard (above) when a Hollywood photographer spotted her as a good bet for the JOURNAL cover. We were only too glad to agree with him.

Just out of high school, Gloria hopes to go on to UCLA or Stanford to study drama. Her love of stage and movies dates from the time when she was a sidewalk autograph hunter in school plays (below). She has been an angel (silent) and recently played a movie star in a musical comedy. She is studying hard at tap and ballet, and also rides, swims and skates.

Gloria is our best-traveled Beauty to date. She has lived in five states and visited twenty-three others. It is our pleasure to introduce her to the remaining twenty. And it is quite an introduction: JOURNAL cover girls have received proposals from almost every state in the Union—and Texas.

PHOTOGRAPH BY BERNARD OF HOLLYWOOD

Schoolgirl actress

Gloria at home.

PHOTOGRAPH BY BOB LANDRY

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

Melody . . . . . Elswyth Thane 34

Fiction

The Ring . . . . . Isak Dinesen 36
Where is This Girl? . . . . . Mel Heimer 38
Wintertime (Conclusion) . . . . . Jan Valtin 48
Birth: a Love Story . . . . . Hallie Southgate Burnett 54

Special Features

The Crisis in American Education . . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
Children . . . . . Roderick L. Haig-Brown 11
Tell Me Doctor—No. 6 . . . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
The Harrison Case—Syphilis: How It Spreads . Joan Younger 40
The Little Princesses (Seventh part of eight) Marion Crawford 42
There's a Man in the House . . . . . Harlan Miller 52
Baby's First Year . . . . . Photos by Wayne Miller 58
How America Lives: "We Knew What We Wanted" . . . . . Betty Hannah Hoffman 111

General Features

Our Readers Write Us 5
Under-Cover Stuff . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
Children's Museum in Fort Worth, Texas 23
More Work for Volunteers . . . . . Margaret Hickey 23
Reference Library 24
Making Marriage Work . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
"As Pretty As ——"(The Sub-Deb) . Edited by Maureen Daly 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town 33
Ask Any Woman . . . . . Marcelene Cox 95
Protecting Your Child From Polio . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 133
This is a Splasher . . . . . Munro Leaf 140
Diary of Domesticity . . . . . Gladys Taber 144

Fashions and Beauty

Midsummer Lovelies . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 50
Summer's Bare Necessities . . . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 53
Mother and Daughter Look-Alike Patterns . . Nora O'Leary 116

Food and Homemaking

Country Supper . . . . . Ann Batchelder 56
Line A Day . . . . . Ann Batchelder 60
Quick and Easys for Two . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 80
Salad Days . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 118

Interior Decoration

Young New Orleans . . . . . H. T. Williams 46

Poetry

Just Among "Us Girls" . . . . . Elizabeth-Ellen Long 63
Suburban . . . . . William Stafford 74
Vision . . . . . Walter De La Mare 79
Mother of the Silences . . . . . Joseph Auslander 85
What Have You Done All Day? . . . Marjorie Lederer Lee 92
My Love's Young Face . . . . . Elizabeth McFarland 103
Katydid Joe the Fiddler . . . . . Vincent McHugh 109
Misapplied Energy . . . . . Jeanne-Alix Maisonville 120
Aspetuck . . . . . Mary McKay Coey 130
Hurdy-Gurdy Song . . . . . Fleur Conkling 139
What Every Young Man Should Know . . . . G. M. White 146

Cover: Photograph by Bernard of Hollywood

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.
Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U.S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Traysser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

The LION'S ROAR
Published here monthly . . . Column No. 133
The greatest star of the screen!

We have an idea!

★ ★ ★ ★

We have an idea that people like fun better than gloom, laughter better than trouble, and happiness better than anything.

★ ★ ★ ★

That's why we're so pleased to bring you the news about "The Happy Years".

★ ★ ★ ★

M-G-M's wonderful new Technicolor hit is full of fun and laughter and heaped high with happiness.

It has the gay, gladsome qualities of "Meet Me In St. Louis" and "The Green Years".

★ ★ ★ ★

It goes straight to the heart and the funnybone of anyone who has ever been young—and we presume that includes you.

★ ★ ★ ★

Those of you who are Owen Johnson fans will remember its amazingly colorful characters, Tennessee Shad, Coffee-Colored Angel, White Mountain Canary and all the personnel of Lawrenceville School.

★ ★ ★ ★

Youthful Dean Stockwell is seen as Dink Stover. Whether he's making friends the hard way—by fighting every boy in school—or learning the meaning of sportsmanship, he is as convincing as a real boy should be.

★ ★ ★ ★

Darryl Hickman and Scotty Beckett shine as Dink's cohorts. And Leon Ames and Margalo Gillmore are excellent as the parents baffled by their own offspring.

★ ★ ★ ★

Director William A. Wellman of "Battleground" fame—and himself father of six youngsters—was a logical choice to handle "The Happy Years". Producer Carey Wilson shares the honors as does Harry Ruskin who wrote a screenplay that's a joy.

★ ★ ★ ★

"The Happy Years" is a Technicolor tapestry woven from the richest and fullest experiences of youth.

★ ★ ★ ★

Take it from us—"The Happy Years" is a happy hit.

—Leo

For free illustrated folder "Flagship Vacations" write to American Airlines, Dept. B, 100 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.

VACATIONS

are for Father but...

Mother makes the plans!

IN MOST FAMILIES planning a vacation is mother's job. Carefully, for months on end, she looks for just the right place to give father a good rest.

Today Flagship travel brings within her reach many wonderful places never before practical. Long, tiring hours "on the road" are a thing of the past. By Flagship the trip is quick and easy. The family arrives rested and ready to enjoy those extra days of vacation.

So plan to vacation by Flagship this year. You'll find your holiday starts the moment you board the plane.

America's Leading Airline AMERICAN AIRLINES INC.

Our Readers Write us

Kings Have No Fourth of July

Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

Dear Editors: In the article in the May JOURNAL, which tried to justify the English attitude toward royalty, the author did not recognize the monstrous selfishness of the British in taking over the lives of human beings for their own gratification and pleasure. They make royalty a toy, a whipping boy for their own frustrations and a substitute for real patriotism—destroying the freedom of human beings who should have the same rights to be themselves they have. Who gave the British the right to enjoy secondhand pleasures at the expense of helpless human beings unlucky enough to be born royalty? Poor, rich little princesses, who do not know the meaning of the word "freedom"! Selfishness and cruelty of people take many forms. Perpetuation of English royalty is one of them.

Sincerely,
BERNICE L. WING.

Southerner's Viewpoint

New Market, Alabama.

Dear Mr. Gould: A year or so ago you asked me to explain, if possible, the Southerner's objection to abolishing segregation. I quote from a newspaper clipping what I believe is a fine example of clear thinking by a member of the Negro race:

> Dr. J. A. Long, Jr., of Palatka, Florida, said Negroes have a long way to go before "we get our goal." Some things the Negro in the Deep South must do, he said, is this:
>
> "We must stop loafing and swearing on the streets. We must stop throwing weekly wages away, stop talking loud and telling our secrets, stop wearing dirty clothes for evening dress, stop letting our children go dingy and dirty and stop insulting unescorted women.
>
> "Our children should not be neglected because they are Negroes. Our women should not be untidy just because they are colored and no man should be dumb just because he is dark. . . ."

There are many Negroes, and Doctor Long very probably is one, who are sober, industrious, quiet and keep up property, but the majority of them are happy-go-lucky and live on the doctrine of come day, go day, God send Sunday. If this Doctor Long can make the younger ones realize civilization is a matter of growth, not veneer, and help them to really grow, he will be a great benefactor, and have done much to help find a solution for this most painful situation—brought about by Yankee slave traders!

Yours very truly,
KATHLEEN PAUL JONES.

People Better Than Books

Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Miss Daly: The mail I've been getting about my profile (City Girl, March) from Catholic people is amazing. They are all writing to tell me how sorry they are that I didn't get in a Catholic high school and assuring me that everyone isn't prejudiced. I didn't think the article implied that I thought everyone was prejudiced.

One Catholic college in Rhode Island invited me to come there. I received a letter from one of the faculty to write and invite me to turn my attention toward that school. It is now definitely settled that next September I'm going to Michigan State in East Lansing.

So many things have happened because of the article, such wonderful things that I never dreamed would happen. I really do enjoy school more than I did before. It is an interesting place and you can learn a lot there—but not just from schoolbooks.

Sincerely,
MYRDICE THORNTON.

Double Value

Plainfield, New Jersey.

Dear Editors: I enclose a picture of Susan and Jean Huie, 9-month-old twins, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Huie, of Plainfield, New Jersey. I wonder if these twins might not qualify for your Undiscovered American Beauties.

MARGARET DEMLER.

Thinks It's Neat

Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Sirs: My grandmother and mother think your series, Tell Me Doctor, is awful. They are shocked, but I think it's neat. Thanks. I can't sign my name, because they read your letters column.

MARY JANE (Age 14).

Momo-Ringo

New York City.

Dear Editor: Momo-Ringo is our baby, born last year. She was given the name "Momoko" by homesick parents who hoped her to be like the fragrant peach blossoms of their native land. Ringo is the blooming apple of the American late spring.

For ten years, including wartime, we were art students with temporary dwelling in America, parents who missed the only son left at home with his grandparents. When I began to expect Momoko I felt very helpless, not only because it was fifteen years since my last confinement but also because my mother would not be with us.

The prelude to this confinement was a course at Bellevue Hospital. When I was three months pregnant and started visiting the prenatal clinic, I heard lectures on the wondrous development and problems of a human being from the embryo to the fifteen-year-old child. The lecture, given by an optimistic, gray-haired old nurse, was to clear the way and build confidence that an easy delivery and easy bringing up are most true to nature. I began to wait for the baby with a feeling of freedom from ignorance and helplessness.

My confinement was so easy that I didn't even need to smell the drug. After about twenty-four hours until I really woke up I was roused many times according to the schedule of meals, medicine and toilet. Every time I marveled that the "Exciting! Gives sparkling new brightness to your fine washables!"

Japanese baby at home in America.

says McMULLEN famous New York maker of smartly styled cottons

NEW
IVORY FLAKES
WITH RADIANT-ACTION

"Adds new beauty to fine washables!" say famous manufacturers and stores about this amazing new washing care.

Results are magic! For now, after washing, your sunny colors and cool whites will dazzle you with sparkling new brightness! Your fine lingerie will shimmer with soft new highlights! And all your cherished washables—fine cottons, silks and rayons—are sure to look their beautiful best when you wash them gently in new Ivory Flakes with "Radiant Action!" It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy!

Longer wear for nylons! Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes, and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long. Get a box of new Ivory Flakes today—it's America's largest selling flake soap! The only flake soap with the famous Ivory name!

P.S. Ivory Flakes are perfect for dishes, and so very kind to hands!

If it's lovely to wear...it's worth Ivory Flakes care
99 44/100% PURE!

THIS MONTH HOT WEATHER Steps Up Germ Danger

MRS. CHARLES SCHUH, JR., Bellerose, N. Y., playing with her son Charles. Her daily motherly care includes disinfecting against fly-borne disease germs while cleaning.

Mother "Extra Fussy" Now While Cleaning

"EVERY FLOOR can hold infection risks. So I always use 'Lysol' when mopping the kitchen and bathroom floors. Our garbage pail gets regular 'Lysol' disinfection, too."

"I'M ALWAYS AWARE of the danger of disease germs in house dust," says this attractive mother. "And of course with children in the house, one can't be too careful. That's why I depend on potent 'Lysol' brand disinfectant, in all my daily cleaning, to fight germs and help guard my whole family's health.

"IN SUMMER, PARTICULARLY—with the house all open, and flies getting in to deposit literally millions of germs—I'm extra fussy about disinfecting with 'Lysol,' as I clean. It's no extra work, though. I just add 2½ tablespoons of 'Lysol' to each gallon of cleaning water. It's so easy! And economical, too!"

IN MANY A HEALTHY, happy home, over the nation, dependable, highly concentrated "Lysol" is used to fight the fly menace in house dust . . . help guard family health.

HELP GUARD YOUR FAMILY this summer—and year 'round—against fly-borne disease germs in your home. Get powerful "Lysol" into the cleaning water every single time!

pain was stopping and energy was coming back. I slept on, feeling a smile growing up from inside me.

Every four hours a crowd of babies was brought from the other room to be fed. Like Kurimanju (pastry) in a box, they rode in pushcars and came crying like locusts in midsummer. As soon as the mothers got the right babies, wearing necklaces with their names, they became absorbed. Hurrying to please the little lives that screamed at the top of their lungs as they were held, they struggled with necks bent as far as possible toward their breast which gave too much or too little milk. The nurses ran around to help them. When the busy moments had passed, the satisfied babies fell into quiet sleep. Then came the mothers' time. To the last one, they unwrapped the white clothing of the babies. They counted the fingers and toes, taking a long time.

These scenes gave me the impression of a hundred Madonnas, sitting on a hundred beds. Every mother was fascinatingly beautiful. When I realized this was a fact in real life my heart was filled with joy that made me want to cry out.

Since the baby came home, friends had been visiting us one after the other with presents. There were people whom we hadn't considered close to us. In the blood of the American colonists there must have been a spirit of mutual aid which was built up in the struggle against hunger and sickness, far from parents and home. It was in this inherited spirit that I was treated, not as a thin-nosed, intellectual foreign student, but as a new immigrant, a person, a woman, and was helped to be a mother.

Very sincerely,
MITSU YASHIMA.

Parents' First Year

Sargent, Nebraska.

Dear Editors: The JOURNAL has long been on my list of favorites, and now Wayne Miller's pictures of Baby's First Year put it right on top. Just as this series started in the March issue, our baby (the first), arrived on March 10 and his father and I eagerly turn to see how our boy's progress compares with Dana's and what to expect in the next month. To a pair of inexperienced, but delighted, parents this feature is a real joy. Sincerely, DOROTHY POINTER.

All This, and Fiction Too

Blythe, California.

Ladies and Gentlemen: You pay a great compliment to American women by giving us interesting, authoritative matter on current problems which vitally concern us. You present it without bias. And you don't talk down to us like so many magazines. As though that weren't enough, you include a generous helping of excellent fiction.

Yours very truly,
ALICE MICALIZIO.

Evaluating Life

Kingsport, Tennessee.

Dear Editors: When a member of my "flock" calls my attention to something he feels is mentally and ethically stimulating, I am all ears and eyes! When I was visiting in the home of one of the new families of my church, the husband read a quotation from Goethe in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

I write this because I feel that those little quotations of wisdom help us to a better evaluation of life; secondly, because I wish to call attention to the fact that not a few men get ideas from this women's magazine; thirdly, because indirectly a minister is helped when the fertile seeds of good thoughts enter the minds of his people.

Sincerely,
L. MORROW WITHERSPOON.

Ever Hear of Poppy Fricassee?

Athens, Greece.

Dear Mrs. Taber: If a similarity of tastes has anything to do with it, then I can safely say that I may be considered one of your oldest and best friends. I love the country and all animals and things that grow. During the war we lived near Athens and managed to pull through because we grew most of our own food in our garden and kept chickens and rabbits.

Greece is a lovely country in spite of the marks left on it by war. Above the ugly ruins rise the lovely ones of the Acropolis,

(Continued on Page 8)

Protect your child
AGAINST MOSQUITOES

USE 6-12 TRADE-MARKS SIX-TWELVE INSECT REPELLENT

Prevent unsightly, itchy, mosquito bites—with this odorless protection children can play undisturbed.

Get a bottle today at any Drug, Hardware or Sports Store—only 49¢.

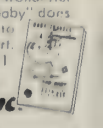
Safe and Comfortable as baby's own crib!

Bunny Bear's ORIGINAL "CAR-BABY"®
"CONVERTIBLE" *
AUTO BED AND SEAT

* U. S. Patent #2488225

ONLY "CAR-BABY" FITS FRONT OR BACK SEAT OF ANY CAR AS BED OR SEAT

THIS BECOMES THIS



$6.98 WITH MATTRESS
Slightly higher in the West

A twist of the wrist . . . PRESTO! "Car-Baby" converts from a bed to a seat. Carefully engineered for safety and comfort. Eliminates travel fatigue. Special extension enlarges bed up to 4 full inches. 34" long, 15" wide. Rigid steel frame anchors securely to seat. Water-repellent twill body for long service. Folds flat.

Mother's most essential travel necessity. Be sure you get the original "Car-Baby" Convertible. Accept no substitutes. On Sale Everywhere.

SEND FOR THIS FREE BOOKLET
Tells all the wonderful things "Car Baby" does to contribute to Baby's comfort. Write Dept. 11

Sole Makers: Bunny Bear, Inc.
EVERETT 49, MASSACHUSETTS

COMFORT with a brand new feel...

and a brand new look!
that lasts for years and years

Firestone FOAMEX*

■ Never again need years of wear leave a "hollowed out" or "sagged down" imprint that robs seating and bedding of comfort and beauty.

■ Firestone Foamex cushioning gives furniture, mattresses, transportation seating a brand new contour-comfort. It springs back to brand new shapeliness no matter how hard the wear. Foamex imparts graceful beauty without bulk—delivers much more comfort with less thickness than ordinary upholstery stuffings.

■ Now you can enjoy a superbly comfortable Foamex easy chair that retains its streamlined loveliness without looking "overstuffed"...without packing down or lumping out of shape.

■ Foamex cushions and pillows never need "fluffing up"—mattresses never need turning. Foamex "breathes" to air-cool and air-clean itself. See Foamex beauty...feel Foamex contour-comfort...at the finest furniture and department stores or auto showrooms.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Listen to the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings Over NBC

because only 3 inches of FOAMEX give more deep-down comfort than 6 to 8 inches of old-fashioned cushioning...

you get...

More head and leg room IN CARS

Less bulk and weight IN BEDDING

More shapely beauty IN FURNITURE

*TRADE MARK

©1950, FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

(Continued from Page 6)

and above all we have our beautiful sky and climate, the wonderful Mediterranean and the peaceful countryside with its wild flowers, olive trees and almond blossoms. We have gone through much that was terrible but we never lost hope; in a country as beautiful as ours it is hard to lose hope.

My dream has always been a rambling old-fashioned house (with new-fashioned gadgets) in the country where one can have plenty of dogs and cats and grow things, both flowers and vegetables. As for recipes, I could even provide some special ones for famine areas—they are leftovers from the time we had to improvise on nothing but a few handfuls of greens. Have you ever heard of poppy fricassee? It sounds quite imposing and it is made of poppy leaves (not the flowers), a little corn meal and a lemon!

Modern fairy tale in ancient Greece.

I send a snapshot of Nina, my little girl, and her pet goat. Yours sincerely,

LISA DELLAPORTA.

No End to War?

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England.

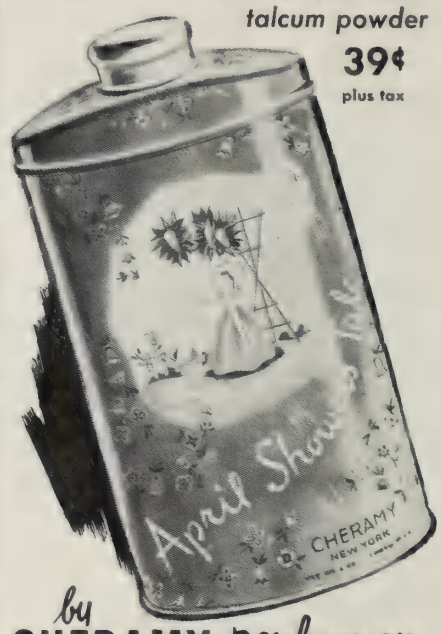
Darling June: I wonder if you remember eleven years ago? It seems a long time and it was lovely weather, I remember; we packed up a supper picnic and built a fire in Knightons Woods, in the same old place where Jock and you all made a sort of shelter of tree branches and built a stove out of stones.

And the next thing I knew, there you and Mary both were in blue uniforms dressed as air women, wearing those odd caps that always looked far too small for you, and you complaining bitterly that the female form was so constituted that if a tunic sat well behind it bulged in front, and vice versa! I minded you both going far more than you ever knew. One has always faced the fact that one has to part with one's sons—but to take the daughters too seemed pretty unbearable.

After you had all gone, I was alone in the cottage with Mary's temperamental Siamese cat, Buna. Down the garden the two geese I was preparing for Christmas dinner did not wait till the bombers crossed the Channel to give a warning. They began as the things cranked up in Berlin. I remember listening to the bombs falling all around, and wondering, if I had a leg blown off, whether I could get to the telephone to call for assistance. However, all that went was a good bit of glass and some of the roof.

And now eleven years have passed, and people are talking about war all over again. I was counting up the other day all the wars I remember, beginning with a very antique nurse we had as children, who used to tell us about waiting for Napoleon to come. Next, my father escaped as a schoolboy from Germany, where his father was chaplain to Princess Alice at Darmstadt—when the Franco-Prussian War broke out. Next, the South African War, and Aunt Elsa, who taught us as children, weeping into her tea-cup because her beau had gone off to fight. Next, the War to End All Wars, when I was a schoolgirl in the Isle of Man.

Well, I am sure it's a great life if you don't weaken, but the older I grow, the less I think of the Works of the Lord as arranged by the Man in the Street!



MOTHER
(Dorothy Black)

April Showers

Finest imported talcum powder

39¢ plus tax

by CHERAMY perfumer

DON'T LET WEATHER ruin your hair

PREVENT wind and dampness from disturbing the smooth set of your hairdo, causing straggly ends and droopy curls. A Venida net makes your hair behave under all atmospheric conditions.

For every season, every occasion, every hair style . . . there's a Venida Human Hair Net made by hand especially for you. And only YOU know you're wearing one!

Colors 20c 12 for $2.25 | single or double mesh | Grey, white 25c 12 for $2.75

Exactly matching shades

VENIDA The Guaranteed HAIR NET rules the waves

Stuck!

The No. 1 catch of the town, hers for a whole evening on their first big date. She dreams this is to be the beginning of a real romance. But how wrong can a girl be? What an awful awakening she's in for! Because, once he gets her back on her own doorstep, he'll never darken it again...and she won't know why. It could happen to any girl... even to you...if you're careless about one little matter.*

How's your breath today?

Never take it for granted. Never risk offending others, needlessly. Halitosis (unpleasant breath)* is the fault unpardonable. It may be absent one day and present the next . . . without your realizing it. That's the insidious thing about it.

Play smart. Rinse your mouth with Listerine Antiseptic night and morning, and especially before any date when you want to be at your best. It's the extra-careful precaution against offending that fastidious people never omit.

To be extra-attractive be extra-careful

Listerine Antiseptic is the extra-careful precaution because it freshens the breath . . . not for mere seconds or minutes . . . but for hours, usually. Popular people, attractive people consider it almost a passport to popularity.

*While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.

BEFORE ANY DATE ... LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

.... IT'S BREATH-TAKING!

Mild as Moonlight for a Lovelier You!

Bathe your way to beauty with mild Camay and the daily Camay Beauty Bath! Use the big, economical "Beauty-Bath" cake of Camay, and give all your skin the finest kind of complexion care. Camay's lather is so quick and creamy, and it's gentle as a caress. Why, you'll rise from your bath lovelier from head to toes—touched with a perfume no other soap has ever quite captured—the flattering fragrance of Camay, The Soap of Beautiful Women!

CAMAY MEANS MILDNESS TO ME!

PLUNGE INTO A CAMAY BEAUTY BATH TODAY!

BE DAINTIER FROM TIP TO TOES!

FIRST ONE IN WINS A LOVELIER SKIN!

SUCH A FLATTERING SCENT—AND IT'S CAMAY'S ALONE!

LOLL IN CAMAY'S LAVISH LATHER!

CAMAY

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

the "Beauty-Bath" size

Bath-Size Camay for your CAMAY BEAUTY BATH!

JOURNAL

Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

CHILDREN

By Roderick L. Haig-Brown

I SOMETIMES think the only crime a parent can commit, short of not loving a child, is to try to force it into the realization of his own half-forgotten dreams. There is no reason why the child of any parent should excel, or even want to excel, no reason why it should ever be urged to strive and fight beyond its strength.

A child, and the man or woman after the child, must strive within its strength, up to its own full realization. It must learn to feel and know the world about it, advance the world, if it will, use the world so far as it must, understand the world as it can. Fulfillment may be in driving trucks as well as in signing treaties, in lying in the leaves as surely as in painting pictures.

Let children only become themselves, using eyes and minds and senses, feeling and enjoying as men and women do, searching into the meaning beyond meaning if they aspire to, accepting the truth in light and color and movement before their eyes if that is more natural to them. Let them only be true to themselves, so that they have true selves to give. Let them be sure in this, feeling the strength of their sureness within themselves, not in relation to or in competition with other men and women, but in relation to an absolute standard their own hearts know.

This I wish for my children, not honors or rewards or riches, not the satisfactions of success or even of creation, but only this sureness, truly and solidly based, that makes them human beings, capable of sympathy, understanding and tolerance. It is in them now and growing within them. They see things with their eyes, interpret them in their minds, understand them in their hearts and often show them again to Ann and myself with the impress of fresh thought upon them. They reach beyond us more and more boldly to touch the world and give themselves to it. I wish the world joy of them. And I wish them a world no more difficult and dangerous than man has always found it.

The Crisis in American Education

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

FROM many quarters, though chiefly in books and articles written and read by few besides scholars and educators, comes a persistent criticism of American education. American life, at its present moment, seems to justify the criticism. Furthermore, there is universal acceptance of the fact, at least in theory, that for a country which is a democracy—that is to say, a society where the will, and tastes, of the majority prevail—the measure and quality of their education is the key to their survival. And at this stage of our history, when destiny has appointed the United States to lead and protect what is left of western civilization, the survival of what has until now been, perhaps, the greatest culture the world has ever known also depends upon the condition of American education.

As far as quantity is concerned, there is little wrong with it. "Statistically" speaking, we are the most "educated" people in the world, and numerous Government programs contemplate an extension of the figures. At the present moment, one fifth of the entire American people are going to school. Education is the largest American industry. It employs a million and a quarter teachers for over 32 million students. A larger percentage of our youth obtain college or university degrees than those of any other country.

But what, exactly, do they learn?

Canon Bernard Iddings Bell, lately of the graduate faculty of Columbia University, reports in The Crisis in Education, published last year—a book I strongly recommend—that some four years ago an analysis was made of the knowledge of freshmen entering one of our better state universities. Remember that these young people had already had twelve years of schooling—mostly at the public expense. Yet 40 per cent of them had had no mathematics beyond arithmetic, and many of these could not do a problem in long division. One third had had no training at all in grammar—even in English grammar. Less than half could spell many words in common English usage. Four out of ten could not read quickly or accurately—to say nothing of being able to write correctly—a single paragraph of coherent prose.

Recently a national magazine offered readers a vocabulary test of 20 words. These were put in affirmative sentences, as part of a supposititious conversation, and the reader was asked to test his knowledge of the word by checking against one of several answers or remarks that the word might reasonably elicit. The editor said that if a reader showed knowledge of 19 of the 20 words he was "superb"; if he

Executive Editor, Mary Bass • Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman • Associate Editors
Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Alice Blinn,

W

"A tasteful meat so good to eat"

ROASTED MOR DINNER

Score 2 WILSON'S MOR PORK*. Top with sirup made from ⅓ C. brown sugar, 2 tsp. flour, ⅔ tsp. each dry mustard and grated lemon rind, ⅓ C. water and 1 tbsp. each lemon juice and vinegar. Bake at 350° F., 20 minutes, basting several times with sirup. Serve with vegetables to 6.

*If MOR Beef, omit sirup glaze and top with equal parts of finely minced onion and brown sugar.

Brimming over with flavor—that's Wilson's MOR. In a matter of minutes, with a few vegetables added, it becomes a delicious, taste-satisfying "roast" of beef or pork.

Cold or hot, sliced, fried, or baked, versatile MOR will save many a meal-time "situation" in your home. And, because it's all good, nourishing meat, Wilson's MOR saves money, too. No waste. Get several cans of Wilson's MOR at your favorite food store today.

WILSON & CO. INC.

Buy WILSON'S MOR

You just can't beat a Wilson canned meat.

It's Wilson Label protects your table knew 17, he was "just wonderful"; if he knew 14, he was "average plus."

Yet with the possible exception of three, each of these words is in common English usage at the newspaper or business level. I knew them all, and my vocabulary is by no means "superb," nor is it "just wonderful." I am sure, for instance, that it is a fifth less than the vocabularies of my friends Rebecca West and Vincent Sheean.

A few months ago Doctor Gallup took a sampling poll in six democracies—England, Norway, Canada, Australia, Sweden and the United States—on the simple question: Are you now reading a book, or books? The United States ranked way below the five other countries. England was at the top, with 55 to our 21.

Now, it may be argued that Americans read more newspapers and magazines than the British, but that, too, is dubious. Immense numbers of publications to suit every variety of taste appear in England, with large circulations. By and large, also, and of course with exceptions, books which survive more transitory publications are on a higher literary level. It may be British reading habits as well as a far more demanding education that account for the richer vocabulary and superior spelling accuracy of the English with twelve years of schooling—as anyone who has ever employed a British stenographer for more than hack work has had an opportunity to observe.

The New York Times has been promoting the study of American history in our colleges and universities. In 1942 it found that only 18 per cent of American colleges required American history as an undergraduate course. Last April the Times, making another survey, rejoiced that now 34 per cent of institutions of "higher learning" require it. But that leaves 66 per cent of our college students who never study one word about the ideas, men, events and developments that have made this nation. Yet we are supposed to be conducting an "ideological war."

It is nature's rule, that as we sow, we shall reap; she recognizes no good intentions, and pardons no errors.
—BUDDHIST SAYING.

And if they do study American history, do they learn much, or anything, about political philosophy? Can they make accurate, or even approximate, comparisons between the ideas that animated the building of the United States and those of other nations and civilizations, past and present?

We are greatly concerned about "foreign ideologies" creeping into our schools and colleges, and in self-defense "loyalty" tests are instituted, and "communists" are smoked out. Now, I have no inherent prejudice against ideas because they did not originate in America. But how can anyone intelligently resist, accept or modify any idea except as he can measure it against another? "Intelligence" is simply the capacity to exercise judgment by choosing between alternatives. The word actually comes from the Latin: inter and legere—to judge between.

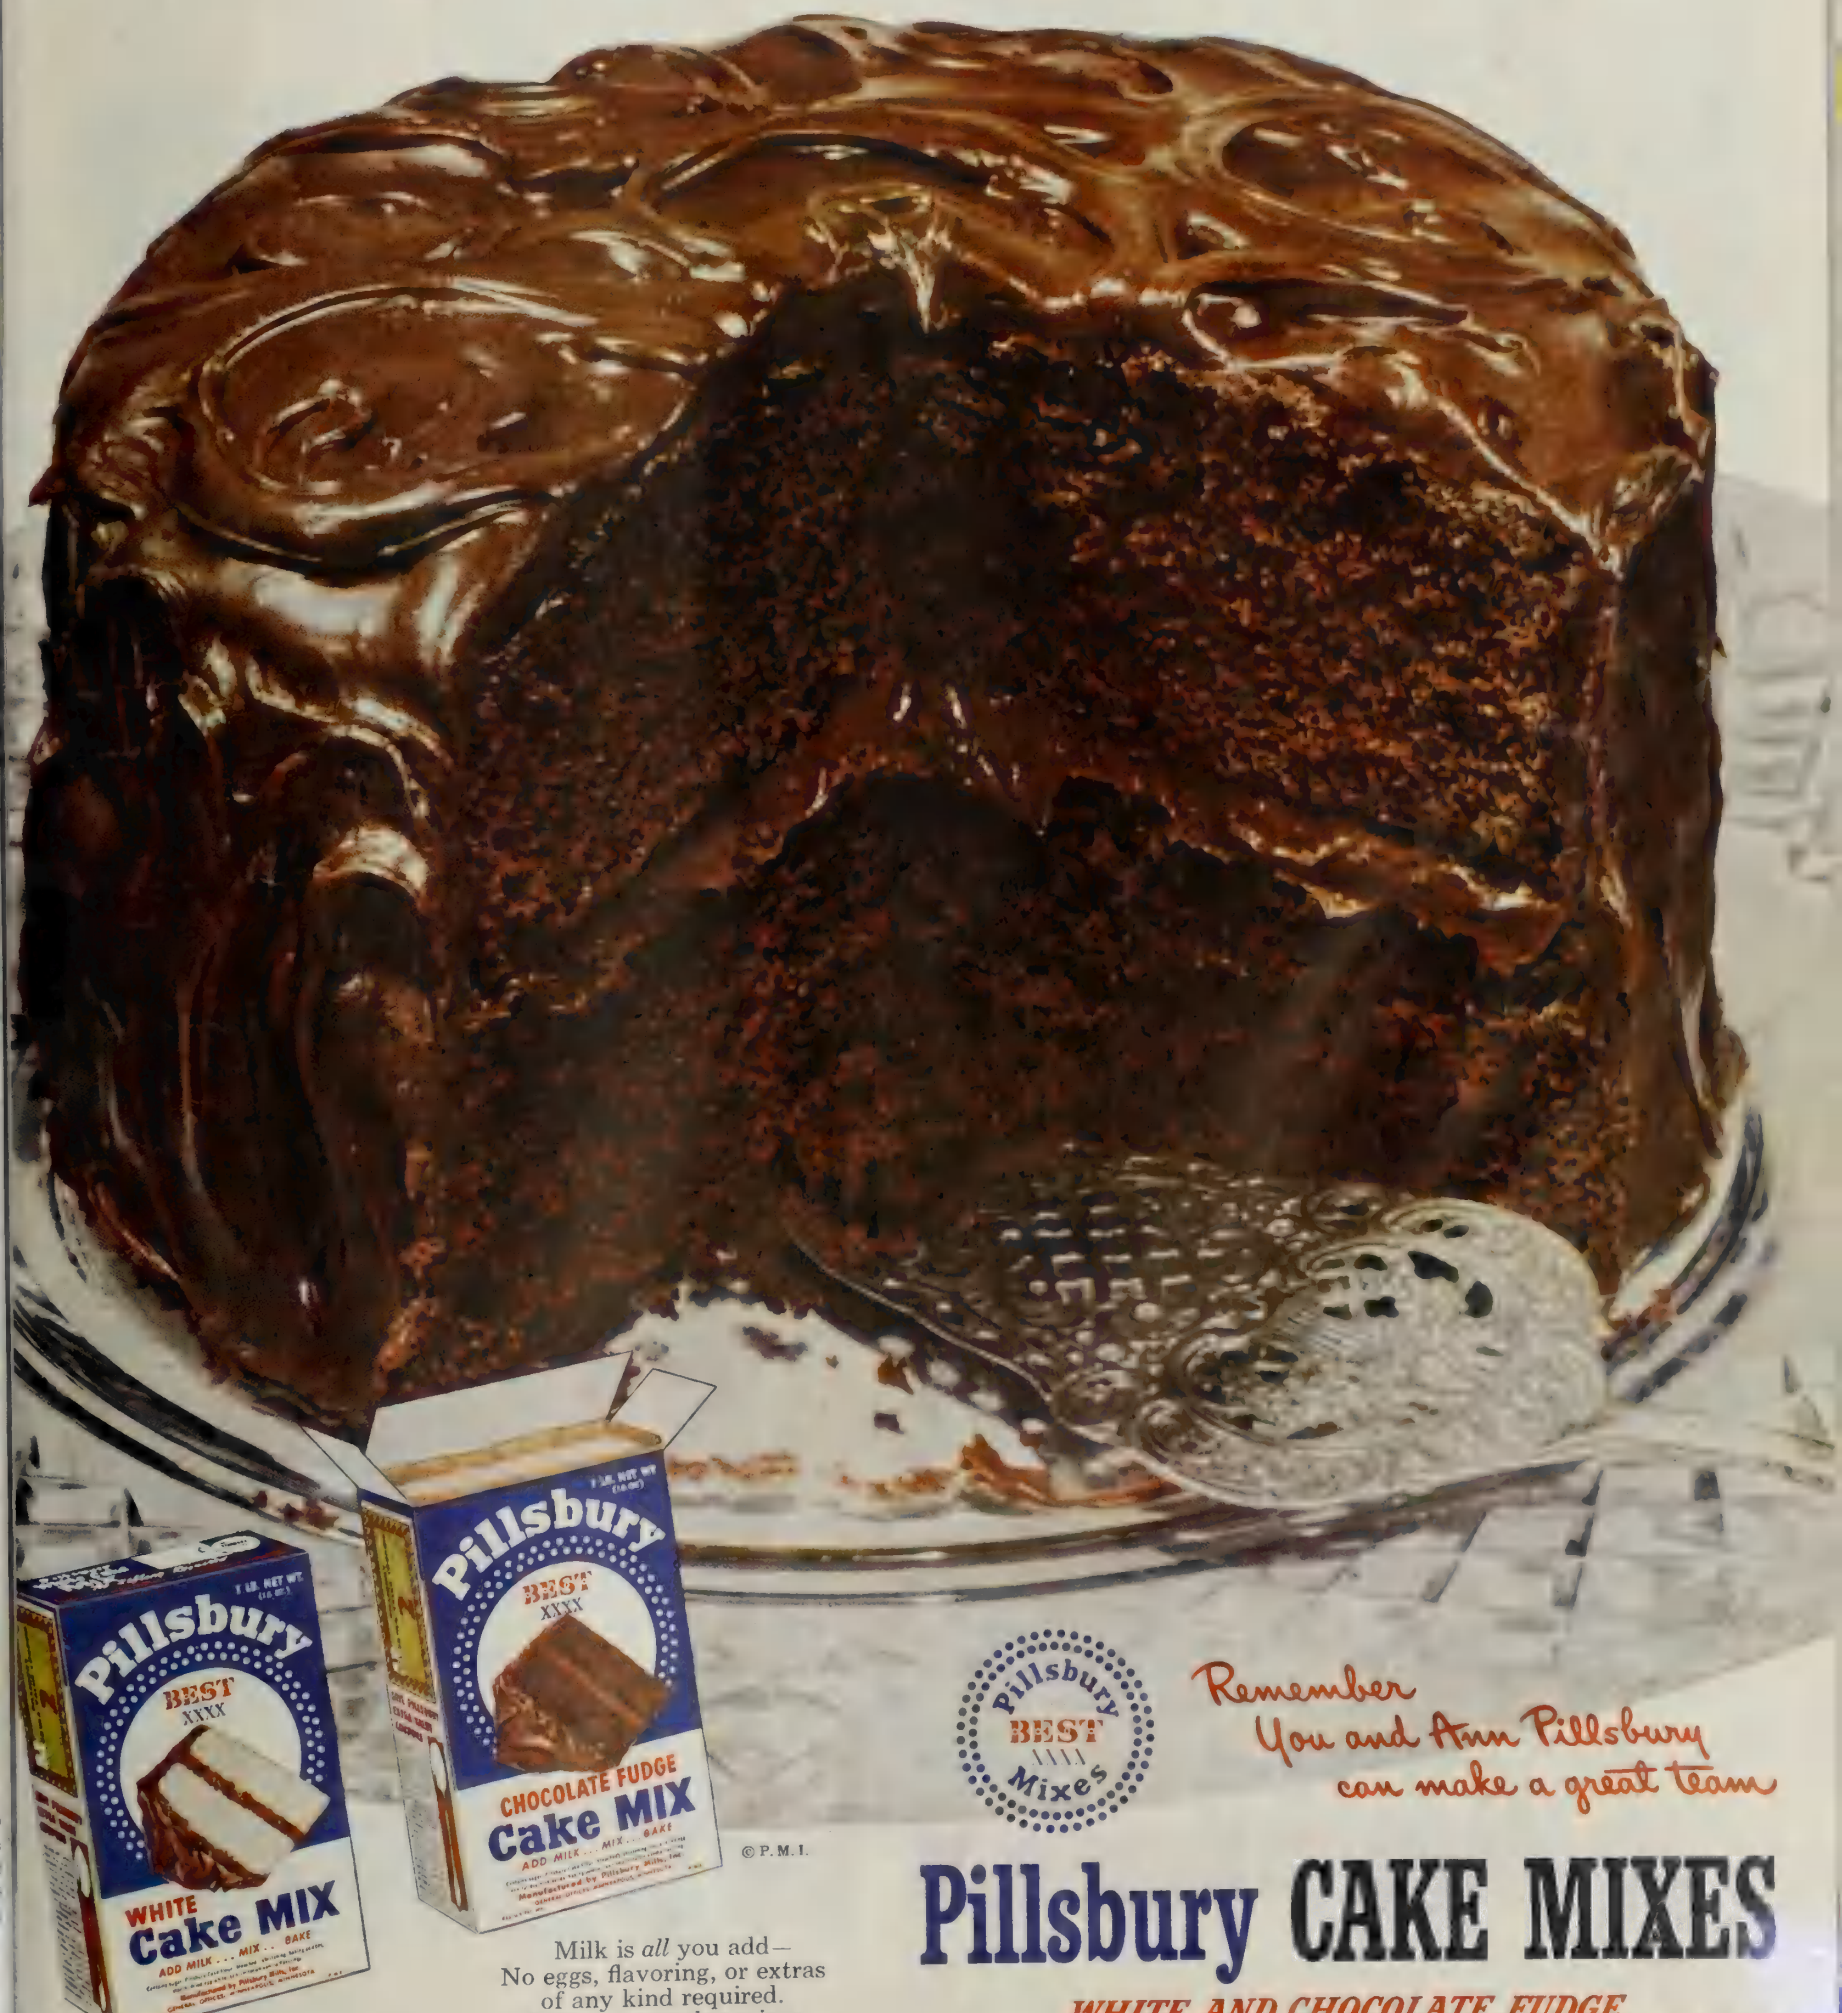
In my own view, the study of history is, of all single activities of the mind, the greatest necessity for those who would exercise policy-making leadership. Goethe correctly said, "He who cannot give an account of two thousand years [of the life of mankind] lives in darkest inexperience and from day to day."

It is, to my mind, unthinkable that any leadership which possessed the vicarious experience of the human race as recorded in history would have lightly made the agreements, open and secret, of Yalta and Potsdam. The great question of the educated man is always: Why? And the educated man always asks, "What, in the light of logic and the previous experience of the race, is likely to be the result of this or that policy?" Had historically educated minds been operating at the various conferences that brought such disasters—rather than experts, who are the very persons who often, perhaps oftenest, fail to ask themselves the right questions—they would not have to have inquired whether the chief political adviser at Yalta, Mr. Alger Hiss, was a communist (which has not been proved), to have suspected that the policies there formulated would have most unfortunate results for the west. It is now rumored that the German policy embodied in the "Morgenthau Plan" was formed by a Treasury official, since deceased, who was a communist. But it was not necessary to be concerned about the personality or political associations of the possible author to be convinced that the plan was an economic monstrosity that could be carried through only by conducting a permanent war! The great danger in assessing guilt by association is that by providing a scapegoat, another excuse is furnished for policies that are essentially due to failure to think clearly and logically, rather than the result of some "plot."

The mind is trained only by effort. A person endowed with very low native intelligence—a low I.Q.—will never become educated in the higher levels, which require capacity for abstract thought. But the greatest gifts of native intelligence cannot come to fruition without the sort of intellectual training which develops powers of discrimination, logic and precision of thought. Brilliant half-educated persons have been the threat of every social order since the days of that Roman "subversive" named Catiline.

Our education—and I am speaking here of the so-called higher education—has been steadily eliminating from college curricula all the studies which require concentrated effort for their mastery. The declined languages, ancient and modern, compel the student to make an effort. One cannot learn Latin or Greek by listening to a lecture. Nor can one master mathematics by hearsay—or pass a course in it by a brilliant argument. The answer is either right or wrong—not approximate. We are training excellent technicians in our engineering schools, who do have mathematical comprehension because they have to. But the mental discipline, exercise and effort which the subject requires are given only to those who intend to specialize in a field where the knowledge is practically applicable. To have a well-trained mind does not, of itself, appear to be "useful."

When I was a university student in the second decade of this century, I attended a college which did not then rank among the first educational institutions of the country. But in order to get a bachelor of arts degree—and although I was an English major—I was compelled to pass courses in solid geometry, advanced algebra, trigonometry and simple calculus. I intensely disliked mathematics, but there was no escape! Counting high school, four or six years of Latin or Greek were required, and at least two years of one modern language. As a history minor, I had to be able to give a reasonably coherent account of the life of western man from the ancient Greeks to modern times. And as an English major, to read with comprehension the major works of English literature from Beowulf to H. G. Wells, and pass pretty comprehensive examinations in them all—which were not alternate-answer quizzes, which a clever student can often pass by eliminating obvious absurdities and by guesswork.



Now what "good" did all that do me? I was a good Latin student, but I have largely forgotten Latin, and was piqued the other day to find that I needed a dictionary to reread Horace, large parts of which I had once translated into English verse to scan with the Latin. We had to do that too! I never got more than a C in mathematics, and though I retain some useful knowledge of geometry which has helped me since in building plans and

(Continued on Page 122)

Who...Me?

Yes, Madam, you can make a cake of the very same lush, well-turned-out appearance as the cake you see here. And you do it without raising a single bead on your pretty brow. How do you do it?...

By merely adding milk to either of the two new Pillsbury Mixes... you triumph, you please, you make everybody very, very happy. How about a Pillsbury Mix Cake tonight? How about...YOU?

Milk is all you add—
No eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required.
These are complete mixes.

© P.M.I.

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Remember
You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

Paper Maids Save Time—Save Work

Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Place Mats • Cookery Parchment • Pressing Parchment • Kalacloths.

Your Guarantee of Quality

Kalamazoo Vegetable Parchment Co. Parchment, Michigan

Relieve Pain Instantly Combat Infection from minor Cuts

WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples*

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples.* Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer this colorless liquid antiseptic. Doesn't stain the skin. Children like it, too. It's soothing, doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Get it today!

*Due to external causes.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(PRONOUNCED CAM-FO-FIN-EEK)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

PHOTOGRAPH BY BROWN BROTHERS

Motoring was a serious adventure in the age of indiscretion.

"OUR own period is one of decline; . . . the standards of culture are lower than they were fifty years ago; and the evidences of this decline are visible in every department of human activity." So says the Anglicized American T. S. Eliot (born in Missouri).

"I say anyone who would trade 1950 for 1900," says American Clyde Brion Davis (also a Missouri boy), "would trade a brand-new Cadillac for a second-hand velocipede. . . . T. S. Eliot has become the unofficial leader of a cult of reactionary esthetes which is making its influence felt in important quarters, particularly in the field of education.... It is the fashion for intellectuals to poke sneers at modern man. They are always sure of publicity if they can think of a sufficiently extravagant exaggeration."

"There may be some significance," says Davis, "in the fact that among the retrogressionists who long to go back to the good old days you don't find many middle-aged women."

In his new book, THE AGE OF INDISCRETION, Clyde Brion Davis describes his own boyhood in Chillicothe, Missouri, and an uproarious hell-bent-for-mischief boyhood it was. Then by way of contrast he tells about the schools in Chillicothe today, and the boys' clubs, and the much better relationships between boys and parents.

The "he-man" who used to be the American ideal is now replaced by the "good joe." The pompous, swaggering, patronizing he-man with hairy chest and flashing eye has given over to the Will Rogers type of good joe, personally unassuming, considerate of others, with a laconic good humor which cannot be shaken, sane, shyly self-possessed, genial and unexcited. Bing Crosby is the type.

•

Paris has not changed, says Elliot Paul in SPRINGTIME IN PARIS (sequel to THE LAST TIME I SAW PARIS). After ten years' absence he finds that the French are still charmingly inefficient. Whatever is easy is made difficult.

Huge trucks still bumble through the city traffic with five-pound loads, while pushcarts break down under tons of junk. When a little Geugeot, "which could not win a butting contest with a healthy Billy goat," loses a spark plug, eight full-grown volunteer mechanics gather around, while if an autobus stalls, the chauffeur is left to potter around alone in the middle of

(Continued on Page 16)

PHOTOGRAPH BY EARL LEAF FROM RAPHO-GUILLUMETTE

Paris fishermen still whip the Seine.

Calm & Cool Breakfasts!

Skip out of the kitchen fast these hot mornings! Yet treat your family to the freshest of all Corn Flakes—Kellogg's. Delicious breakfast main dish . . . the "power" of corn and its whole-kernel richness in iron, niacin, vitamin B_1!

Frosted Honey 'n' Milk Surprise: Beat ¼ cup honey with 1 pint milk. Freeze in ice tray. That's all! Super with crisp Kellogg's Corn Flakes and milk. Pretty, too—see cereal bowl picture!

Good for John! "For bedtime snacks, my young John surely loves Kellogg's Corn Flakes. And it's good nourishment a growing child needs!" writes Mrs. Edwin Mayfield of Hickman, Ky.

Fruity Rainbow Pie in Dainty Corn Flakes Crust. For crust: Crush 4 cups of Kellogg's Corn Flakes in a folded towel, then crush fine with rolling pin. Add 2 tablespoons sugar, ¼ cup melted butter or margarine. Mix well. Press into 9" pie pan. Chill, or bake in mod. oven (350°F.) about 10 minutes. For rainbow filling: Drain syrup from No. 2½ can of canned Fruit Cocktail. To ½ cup of syrup, add 1 envelope of plain gelatine. Heat remaining 1 cup syrup to boiling point; add gelatine mixture, stir till dissolved. Cool till thick and syrupy. Fold in drained fruit and juice of 1 lemon. Fill crust, top with whipped cream. Chill well.

"Watching your weight?" asks Betty Betz, famous newspaper columnist for teen-agers. "Then, note—students in a well-known university discovered that a good breakfast made them feel better than a 'just coffee breakfast' yet added no weight. You see, in the morning it's natural to use food-energy, not to store it! Enjoy your fruit and nourishing Kellogg's Corn Flakes . . . and feel fitter!"

Open! Open! "My three enjoy opening their own packages in Kellogg's VARIETY. A different breakfast every day!" finds Mrs. James F. Kelly, Jr. of Bethesda, Md. Yes, 10 choices of 7 famous favorites. And most every box is a Kel-Bowl-Pac . . . eat right out of it! Handy for motor trips, dandy for camping!

Initialed! "Words can't describe the thrill of getting Kellogg's initialed Signature Silverware. I'm adding pieces constantly!" writes Mrs. W. T. Coleman of Roanoke, Va. Yes, start with 4 lovely Signature teaspoons—only 75¢ with the white-star end from Kellogg's VARIETY. See package. Begin a beautiful set!

NO FOOLING, SO COOLING!

Fresh as a breeze—served in a shake—and so nourishing!

From mountains to seashore—
Wherever we may roam,
Here's 10 cooling favorites
That taste just like home!

10-box choice of 7 cereal favorites

Kellogg's
Mother Knows Best!

"CALORIC IS
The Cookingest cleanest range
I'VE EVER USED"

So says one Texas homemaker. And thousands of women throughout the country are proving every day that the smart, streamlined Caloric is the "cookingest, cleanest range" they've ever used. See "America's Easiest Ranges to Keep Clean" at your dealer (listed in your Classified Telephone Book). Caloric has every feature you want and need for quicker, easier, cleaner, cooler, automatic cooking. Caloric Stove Corporation, Widener Building, Philadelphia 7, Penna.

1 Flavor-Saver Dual Burners—give any degree of heat instantly. Save gas, hold flavor. Replacement guaranteed for life of range.

2 Hold-Heat Oven with exclusive seal. Fully insulated to keep your kitchen cooler. Automatic Oven Time Control on "CP" Models.

3 Veri-Clean Broiler with smokeless Hi-Lo Rack and Pan. Completely removable. Washes like a dish.

SEE THESE EASY-CLEAN FEATURES

Porcelain enamel inside and out—all white parts triple-coated, acid-resisting.

Seamless Oven, Broiler, Burner Box, all with rounded corners—no crevices to hold dirt.

All models specially engineered for "Pyrofax" Bottled Gas and other LP-Gases.

ULTRAMATIC
Caloric GAS RANGES
AMERICA'S EASIEST RANGES TO KEEP CLEAN

(Continued from Page 14)

the place, obstructing traffic for sometimes two or three days and nights. Nine times out of ten it takes longer to put up stagings on buildings (and these stagings are everywhere!) than to do the repair work. "All in all," he tells us, "the French still firmly believe that inefficiency is the law and ordinance of human nature and that, without it, they would become a nation of automatons."

Paris is a city of firetraps, but nothing ever burns. Electric wiring is done by amateurs, gas fittings have not been replaced or repaired since the outbreak of war in 1939, and still no buildings burn. Now and then, Mr. Paul says, a curtain is ignited, whereupon the Paris firemen inundate a whole apartment house with water and chemicals and chop down a dozen antique oak doors.

You may think that Elliot Paul is fussing. But he is not. He loves Paris just because she is that way.

•

Very, very few Americans have found the little island of Grenada (pronounced to rhyme with the girl's name, Ada). It is in the British West Indies, modest, demure, inconspicuous, self-sufficient, and the most beautiful—so all travelers say—of the islands of the Caribbean Sea. It is made of volcano peaks rising out of the blue-green ocean. Unlike the other islands, it has never been swept by hurricanes or suffered a great fire. Georgian brick houses dating from the late eighteenth century circle the harbor, where slender sloops ride at anchor, and on the surrounding hills stand the old stone forts of the French. Grenada is one of the few truly prosperous spots in the West Indies.

Grenada's people—about 70,000—are Negroes. These are the merchants, the lawyers, the doctors, the teachers, the bankers. The feeling between the white British settlers and the native blacks is warm and friendly.

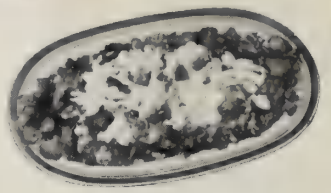
Though at present there are few tourists, the Grenadians greet those who do come with open arms.

•

Those New Jersey colleges are always taking statistics. Now John Marshall

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"Henry! Stop guffawing!"



(all-male) College has found what its students want in the way of a wife. They want a woman who is well groomed, a good conversationalist, sincere, honest and intelligent, with an attractive face and figure and good disposition. Only 15 per cent mentioned anything about cooking.

•

With all the appeals for contributions that come to us these days, the decision as to which to help has to be made not only among the kinds of work accomplished by the soliciting organizations, but also between large and small organizations. The Near East Foundation is one of the small

(Continued on Page 18)

ANGLO CORNED BEE

QUICK-TO-FIX
Corned Beef
Egg Scramble

Rim platter with corned beef, piping hot; then scramble eggs in the savory drippings.

ANGLO CORNED BEEF IS ALL SOLID, LEAN MEAT—NO BONE, GRISTLE OR EXCESS FAT. A "MEAL-IN-A-TIN."

ANGLO ROAST BEE

SUPPER QUICKIE
Beef in Pepper Cases

Cube the meat, 2 cooked potatoes, 1 onion. Heat. Fill 4 cooked peppers. Bake ½ hour.

ANGLO ROAST BEEF ALSO MAKES TASTY MEAT PIES, STEWS, HASH AND RAGOUTS. UNSURPASSED IN QUALITY.

Ask for Anglo Corned Beef and Ang
Roast Beef today! Always keep sever tins on hand for emergencies. You ca put your wholehearted trust in Angl

ON SALE AT ALL GOOD GROCER

Dessert is a "breeze" with any of these!

(TEMPTING FAMILY TREATS IN ALL 5 SURPRISE PACKAGES!)

1.

OLD FASHIONED FLAVOR—NEW FANGLED EASE!

Now homemade ice cream almost makes itself! Just add milk and cream to "JUNKET" FREEZING MIX and pop it in the refrigerator tray—no stirring while it's freezing! Makes wonderful frozen desserts with evaporated milk, too! 4 flavors . . . sundae-super with "JUNKET" QUICK FUDGE sauce!

2.

FUDGE IS SLICK—AND OH-SO QUICK!

In a class with the best homemade! Only 4 minutes to make—no beating—using "JUNKET" QUICK FUDGE MIX with butter and water . . . the only pre-cooked mix! For sauce or frosting, too! Chocolate and penuche flavors.

3.-4.

BE AN ARTIST WITH RENNET DESSERT!

Good as it looks—lemon rennet dessert with nuts! Easy to make, easy to digest—this milk dessert's better than milk alone for children! 6 "JUNKET" RENNET POWDER flavors or use unflavored "JUNKET" RENNET TABLETS.

5.

THIS DANISH DELIGHT IS SUMMER-RIGHT!

Cool currant-raspberry flavor in a new-style pudding that "hits the spot" when the weather's hot! Easy—boil "JUNKET" DANISH DESSERT one minute with water, then chill. Serve it plain or with cream or fruit!

. . . . . for dessert variety use "JUNKET" BRAND FOODS all different! all easy, quick! all delicious!

"JUNKET" is the trade-mark of Chr. Hansen's Laboratory, Inc., for its rennet and other food products.

National Cherry Pie Champion Wins with Armour Star Lard!

Indiana High School Girl Reveals Secret Of Her Success

When Jacqueline Hanneman, 17, of Indianapolis won the National Cherry Pie Baking Contest in Chicago this year, it was proof again that Armour Star Lard is the Magic Ingredient of pie champions everywhere.
Here is the prize-winning recipe for

JACKY'S CHERRY PIE CRUST:

1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
½ cup Armour lard ¾ teaspoon salt
¼ cup cold milk

Sift flour and salt. Cut in half the lard to consistency of cornmeal. Cut in remaining half to size of peas. Work in milk with a fork. Roll half at a time to make two crusts.

FILLING:

3 cups frozen cherries
1 cup granulated sugar
5 tablespoons pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt ¼ teaspoon almond extract
1 teaspoon butter

Thaw cherries almost completely. Drain. If thawed completely, use ¼ cup cherry juice. Mix sugar, flour and salt. Add to cherries. Add extract. Pour into pastry-lined pan. Dot with butter. Cover with top crust, slit. Bake 45 to 50 minutes at 400° F.

Miss Hanneman, who has won several other contests and first prize at last year's Indiana State Fair, uses Armour Star Lard regularly. She says: "It takes lard to make a pie crust really tender and flaky and it's the crust that makes the pie!"

Yes, lard is the Magic Ingredient of the champions. And the champion of all lards is Armour—America's leading lard—America's perfect pie lard. This finer lard blends faster and easier than any other—and works wonders with hot breads and fried foods, as well as pies.

Furthermore, every ingredient in Armour Lard is U. S. Government Inspected. So take a tip from the experts, and make your pies, hot breads, and fried foods doubly delicious with Armour Lard. Look for Armour Pure Lard, in the self-measuring green-and-white carton, in your grocer's shortening section today!

For a free booklet of MARIE GIFFORD'S choice baking recipes using lard, write Dept. 435, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

ARMOUR Star Lard

. . . the pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration

MARIE GIFFORD'S famous 5-minute pie-crust RECIPE ON THE PACKAGE

(Continued from Page 16)

ones. It has a compact personnel which works with great efficiency. We have seen it at work in Greece. We saw Marathon, for instance, the little town on the edge of the ancient battle plain. It was riddled with malaria and its people were poverty-stricken.

Then the Near East went to work. They put one nurse in charge, and with the help of a single Greek boy she cleaned up the area. The boy dug ditches and the nurse poured in the oil that killed the mosquitoes. In less than a season there were no malarial mosquitoes. She then set about rehabilitating the town. The Near East principle is to help people to help themselves. Heretofore the women of Marathon had gone with their husbands to work in the fields. They worked in desultory fashion and accomplished very little. Now they were advised to stay at home, not only to keep their houses clean (and clean they were when we saw them) but to learn to weave and to make decent clothes for themselves and their families. The nurse brought in healthy geese for them to raise—creatures of great productive virtues in the way of feathers, fat, food—and she organized a nursery school with a Greek girl trained by the Near East as teacher.

But the significant thing—as far as we are concerned over here—was that each loom for weaving was the gift of an individual American, and each original pair of geese. This is only a sample—one that we happen to have seen. In another part of Greece where thyme is abundant and honey of the choicest, the Near East have made bee-raising a thriving industry—single Americans giving single hives. Your money goes a long way under that kind of management, and you get regular, definite reports on work done. All told, it is a most satisfactory organization, and greatly beloved by the people of Greece, Syria, Iran and Lebanon.

•

So much interest was shown by readers of this column in the pamphlet, UNDERSTANDING SEX, that we here make note of a somewhat similar book on the same subject: HUMAN GROWTH, by Dr. Lester F. Beck, associate professor of psychology at the University of Oregon, who was also the guid-

COLLIER'S

"What's cooking, pop?"

ing spirit behind the film of the same title. Like the film, the book is designed as a decent, honest description of the true facts of life, told in terms that adolescent children can understand. (Harcourt, Brace and Co., 383 Madison Ave., N. Y. 17. $2.00.)

•

A wonderful kind of vacation if you're a writer or plan to be one is to attend one of the many Summer Writers' Conferences. At most of these conferences the student has an opportunity to have his own work criticized, and to hear the latest word on the literary market from writers, agents, editors and publishers.

(Continued on Page 21)

America's favorite

Try it! See if it isn't your favorite, too!

NOTE: If you like a french French Dressing, with just a hint of garlic, try Miracle French, by Kraft.

He'll Say Hamburgers taste better with

A·1 Sauce — the dash that makes the dish!

Ask for A.1. when dining out, too.

FREE
BIG, BRAND-NEW ROSE BOOK
48 PAGES IN GLORIOUS COLOR

Big 48-page Fall Catalog shows in FULL COLOR hundreds of the newest, most popular Roses and Perennials, including All-America Prize Winners. Catalog also contains helpful garden hints; expert advice; shows how to save money. All plants guaranteed to live and bloom! Mail coupon NOW.
Jackson & Perkins Co.
Newark, NEW YORK

JACKSON & PERKINS CO.
44 Rose Lane, Newark, NEW YORK
(World's Largest Rose Growers)
Please send me, FREE, new Fall 1950 Catalog.
Name.....
Address.....
City..... Zone..... State.....

NOW! Frozen Orange Juice Pie

Captured in a pie — Fresh Orange Juice Flavor! Betty Crocker

FROZEN ORANGE JUICE PIE

with new "no weep" meringue

(THIS PIE RECIPE DEVELOPED FOR USE WITH GOLD MEDAL FLOUR ONLY)

No grating of oranges. No squeezing juice. Has the tangy, delicate flavor that comes from fresh oranges.

Make . . . . . 8-in. Pie Shell (recipe at right)

Mix in saucepan . { 1 cup sugar; 3½ tbsp. cornstarch

Stir in gradually . { 1⅓ cups orange juice (use frozen concentrated orange juice diluted according to directions on can)

Cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens and boils. Boil 1 minute. Remove from heat.

Beat a little of the hot mixture into 2 large egg yolks, slightly beaten.

Then beat into remaining hot mixture. Return to heat and boil 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Continue stirring until smooth.

Blend in . . 2 tbsp. butter

Pour into baked pie shell. Cover with Meringue (recipe at right). Bake 8 to 10 minutes in moderately hot oven (400°) until delicately browned. Let cool at room temperature away from drafts. Serve as soon as cool.

*For a stronger flavor, dilute concentrated orange juice using only ½ as much water as called for on the can.

8-IN. PIE SHELL

Sift together . { 1 cup sifted GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour; *½ tsp. salt

Cut in with pastry blender or 2 knives . . { ⅓ cup shortening . . . first cutting in half of it until mixture looks like "meal" . . . then cutting in the rest until particles are the size of giant peas

Sprinkle over mixture . . { 3 tbsp. water . . . mixing with fork to make dough stay together

Round up into ball and roll out on lightly floured cloth-covered board 1½-in. larger than inverted 8-in. pie pan. Trim evenly. Place loosely in pie pan. Fold edge under or over to make stand-up collar. Prick thoroughly with fork to prevent puffing. Bake 8 to 10 minutes in very hot oven (475°).

MERINGUE . . . Beat until frothy 2 egg whites, ¼ tsp. cream of tartar. Gradually beat in 4 tbsp. sugar and beat until mixture is stiff and glossy.

MERINGUE SUCCESS TIPS— 1. Add sugar gradually when egg whites are frothy rather than when they form stiff peaks. It dissolves more completely and helps prevent weeping. 2. For tender meringues that cut easily, you'll note that this recipe requires a shorter baking period at a higher temperature. 3. To help prevent shrinkage, spread meringue to edge of pastry so it has something to cling to.

When using Gold Medal Self-Rising Flour (sold in parts of South) omit salt.

Avoid Costly Baking Failures—use GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

THE FLOUR you use in a recipe costs but a few cents. Yet if it fails, your baking can fail—and ingredients costing many times as much may be wasted.

Avoid costly failures. Use Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour. The baking qualities of Gold Medal are uniform from sack to sack—from month to month. You can count on every cupful—every time.

Good cooks depend on Gold Medal. They know its reliability. It must be better—women buy more sacks of Gold Medal than the next five brands combined!

Available in six different sack sizes—2-lb., 5-lb., 10-lb., 25-lb., 50-lb. and 100-lb. Valuable silverware coupon and a folder of tested Betty Crocker recipes in every sack.

"Betty Crocker" and "Kitchen-tested" are reg. trade marks of General Mills

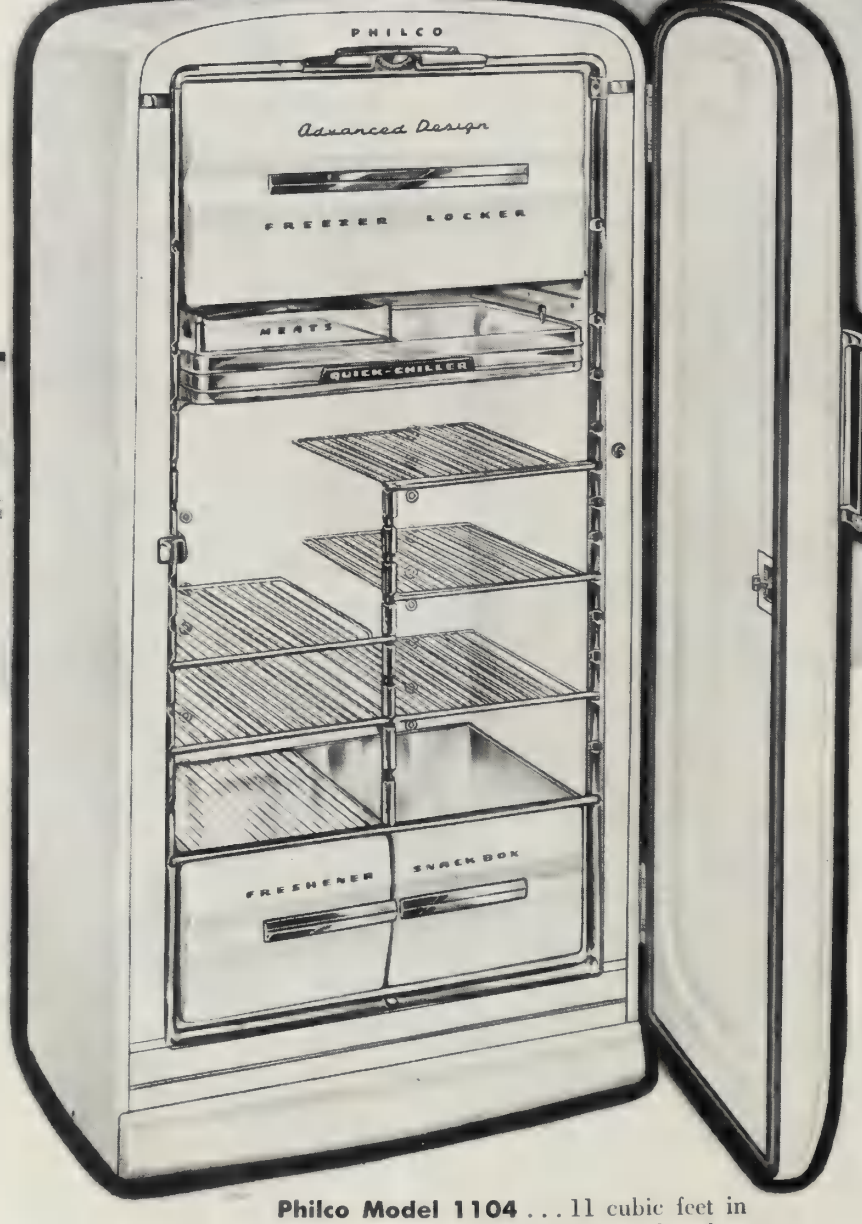
IT MUST BE BETTER—

...women buy more sacks of Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Flour than the next 5 brands combined

Everything to Catch a Woman's Eye

IN THIS GREAT ALL-FEATURE PHILCO yet it costs $50 to $100 less than any other refrigerator with a 2 cu. ft. built-in freezer.

See and Compare the great new 1950 Philco refrigerators with any other—at any price! In efficiency... in economy... in fast freezing... in luxury and convenience features that every woman wants... these truly magnificent Philcos challenge all comparison. We believe—once you see and examine them—you'll agree that here indeed are the finest refrigerators—finest in quality, finest in performance—that have ever been built!

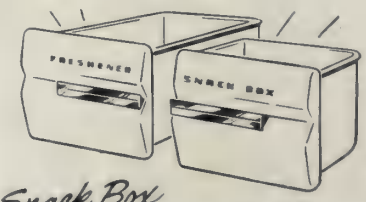


Super Size Built-in Freezer

Huge 2 cubic foot freezer holds full 70 lbs. of frozen foods. It's full-width, fully enclosed by its own insulated door. True zero-zone temperatures with a separate shelf for extra-fast freezing of ice cubes.

New! Quick Chiller

Extra cold zone—7° to 15° colder than main food compartment. Ideal for meats, salads, jellied dishes.



Philco Model 1104 . . . 11 cubic feet in floor space of an 8—actually costs less than last year's "10". See it, compare it at your Philco dealer's now.

Fully Adjustable Shelves

Move the shelves anywhere to store foods of any size or shape. You arrange your refrigerator to suit you.

Snack Box Giant Freshener

Oversize drawers keep fruits and vegetables fresh and crisp. Exclusive Snack Box for cheese, spreads or butter.

NOW
BROIL UNDER GLASS
with the sensational new PHILCO Electric Range

No Smoke! No Soot! No Stain! Revolutionary new Philco Range gives you, at last, true smokeless broiling. Amazing improvement in flavor—far less shrinkage. Nine beautiful one and two oven models as low as $129.95.

PHILCO
ADVANCED DESIGN

has a woman in mind

Get this EVERBRITE STAINLESS STEEL STEAK KNIFE

8½" FULL SIZE SERRATED EDGE

$1.00 VALUE FOR ONLY 25¢

with band from a can of VANiSH

Here's a fine serrated stainless steel knife that never needs sharpening.

Handle is of imported rosewood with brass rivets. Send yellow band from can of VANiSH, the double action toilet bowl cleaner, with name, address and 25¢, to VANiSH, P. O. Box 1110, New York 46, N.Y.

Send six bands with $1.50, and have a half-dozen set. Buy VANiSH today.

KILLS FLIES, MOTHS, MOSQUITOES and many others!

TWICE AS EASILY AS OLD-FASHIONED SPRAY METHODS!

ONLY $1.89

3 other sizes: 75¢, $2.98, $3.98, $3.98 size refilled for $2.25

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*Trade-Marks

● Bridgeport Aer-a-sol Insecticide kills germ-bearing flies, gnats, moths, mosquitoes and many others! A quick 6-to-8 second spray kills most flying insects in an average room! Reaches even hidden insects! A flick of the thumb gives an instant automatic spray! Completely harmless when used as directed! On sale at drug, department, hardware, grocery or variety stores.

BRIDGEPORT*

AER★A★SOL* INSECTICIDE

BRIDGEPORT BRASS CO., BRIDGEPORT 2, CONN.

(Continued from Page 18)

Probably the best known are the Breadloaf Writers' Conference (Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vermont) in the East, and Boulder (University of Colorado) in the West. But there are many more: the Writers' Conferences of the University of New Hampshire, Durham, New Hampshire; of the Universities of Wisconsin, at Madison, Wisconsin; of Kansas City, at Kansas City, Missouri; of Indiana, at Bloomington, Indiana; of Washington, at Seattle; of Utah, at Salt Lake City; of Oklahoma, at Norman; of Omaha, Nebraska; of Fordham University, New York City. (Please write direct to the colleges, as information is not available in this office.)

●

Every cloud has you know what kind of lining. And even diseased trees have their virtues. In a very pleasant nature book, A SAND COUNTY ALMANAC, Aldo Leopold, the author-naturalist, tells us that "dead trees are transmuted into living animals." Wood ducks nest in diseased hollow trees; squirrels depend for their permanent homes on a delicate equilibrium between a rotting cavity and the scar tissue with which the tree tries to close its wound; barred owls manage to escape the crows and jays by getting into the hollow of an old basswood; pileated woodpeckers chisel living pines in order to extract fat grubs from the diseased heartwood; and the prothonotary warbler nests in a dead snag overhanging water. According to Mr. Leopold, tree diseases have made of his wood lot a mighty fortress.

●

We just learned what the Goddess of Liberty holds in her other hand. The upraised one, as we all know, holds a torch, but the other hand holds the Declaration of Independence, and at her feet lie the broken chains of tyranny.

●

Long-winded telephone conversations on suburban party lines are doomed, we hear. In a certain region of enterprising Ohio, an automatic cutoff

REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION. COPR., 1947, THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"And that's only the half of it. Wait till you hear this . . ."

will deaden the line when six minutes are up. But does anyone, not on a pulpit, talk six minutes at a stretch?

●

We hear that Olney, Illinois, is the home of the white squirrel. Olney is one of the only three known habitats of this "albinistic" variety—a pure white creature that must look particularly attractive frisking over the green lawns and through the dark oak leaves. . . . And did you know about the African leaf-nose bat, the upper half of whose nose is the shape of a leaf and the lower half like a horseshoe?

SEE IT... TRY IT... and you, too, will say:

"It's the Most Amazing STEAM OR DRY Iron Ever Invented!"

$17.95

Fed. tax incl.

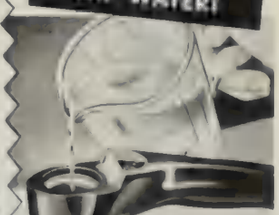
National Presto AUTOMATIC Vapor-Steam Iron

UL

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Iron with ease... Press when you please...

From the pioneers of steam controlled home appliances comes the new, remarkable PRESTO VAPOR-STEAM IRON. No other iron at any price gives you all these advantages:



- Vapor-Steam irons up to 1½ hours on 6 ounces of ordinary tap water.
- Completely automatic. No valves to regulate, no extra gadgets needed.
- Weighs only 3¼ pounds.
- Irons most clothes without sprinkling. No pressing cloths needed. No drops, no spots.
- Pays for itself over and over again in savings on pressing bills alone.
- Perfect for dry ironing, too.

PRESTO VAPOR-STEAM IRONS are available wherever quality housewares are sold. See it . . . try it, today!

NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER COMPANY, Eau Claire, Wisconsin

© 1950 N.P.C. CO.

USES ORDINARY TAP WATER!

USES ORDINARY TAP WATER... No distilled water needed. 6-ounce filling steams up to 1½ hours. Wide spout, fills and drains in seconds.

TRUE-IRONING HEAT INDICATOR . . . Shows at a glance exact soleplate temperature at all times. Stops guesswork and helps prevent scorching.

FINGER-TIP TEMPERATURE SELECTOR . . . Easy to set, easy to see . . . Highly accurate . . . Maintains an even heat for any ironing need. Protects delicate fabrics.

WRINKLE-PROOF ROUND HEEL . . . Glides over clothes in either direction without lifting or twisting . . . Backs into tucks and pleats smoothly.

THE EXCLUSIVE PRESTO "VAPO-MISER"® . . . Automatically converts ordinary tap water into a smooth, strong flow of Vapor-Steam.

OVER-SIZE, 30-SQUARE INCH SOLEPLATE . . . Covers more area with each stroke for faster, easier ironing . . . Light weight, too, only 3¼ pounds.

GIVEN . . . with every PRESTO VAPOR-STEAM IRON, at no extra cost: (1) Scorch-proof ironing stand, and (2) Valuable illustrated instruction book.

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF WORLD FAMOUS PRESTO COOKERS

THE BEST COOLER OF ALL

Fresh Lemonade

THE PUNGENT FRAGRANCE of fresh lemon greets you as you lift the glass. You take a long, cold swallow—and the delicious tang of fresh lemon cuts right into your thirst!

You relax, drink deep, let it cool you through and through. And you realize again that lemonade refreshes more thoroughly than any other summer drink, offers more real relief from heat and fatigue.

But remember—only fresh lemonade can give this satisfaction. Freshly squeezed lemon juice contains vitamins that actually relieve fatigue. And only the fresh fruit provides the true lemon flavor and aroma.

Drink fresh lemonade this summer made with Sunkist Lemons, finest from 14,500 cooperating California-Arizona citrus growers.

Children need lemonade

Youngsters play so hard in hot weather! Fresh lemonade, with its quick replacement of vitamin C, helps prevent overfatigue. Give them plenty!

Everybody wants lemon with iced tea!
Provide plenty of lemon with iced tea this summer—for added flavor! Instead of flat slices, serve generous wedges, easy to squeeze.

California Sunkist®

WORLD'S FINEST FRESH LEMONS

CHILDREN'S MUSEUM...

More Work for Volunteers

By MARGARET HICKEY

MUSEUMS for children offer two valuable opportunities available in few other institutions: education is presented in a delightfully sugar-coated form, and the way is paved for development of permanent hobbies and skills. The first children's museum opened in Brooklyn, New York, about fifty years ago. Today twenty-five children's museums operate in their own buildings and have their own boards of trustees. More than two hundred others operate as departments of adult institutions or under boards of education. Art or natural science is the basis for the majority of exhibits.

Civic and Service Groups Back the Programs

All the centers have been backed by local civic and service organizations such as the Junior League, Kiwanis and Rotary clubs, Junior Chamber of Commerce, Parent-Teacher Association. The American Association of University Women, long interested in the establishment of children's museums, has distributed a pamphlet to its local groups and others telling how to start one. Since 1939, the William T. Hornaday Memorial Foundation has helped seventeen children's museums get under way. It is now sponsoring six and giving technical assistance to four others.

Junior Leagues are helping in children's museums in 50 cities. In several communities local leagues sponsor art or nature museums as demonstration projects. The one at Pasadena, California, is operated almost entirely by volunteers. In addition to its regular program of exhibits, entertainment, arts and crafts, the museum has a summer workshop that emphasizes training in creative expression. Children work in water color, pastel, charcoal, pen and pencil, wood, clay.

School classes come daily to hear discussions on social science and history at the Children's Museum in Jacksonville, Florida. Craft groups meet after school. Activities include toy making, and particularly popular is a fix-it shop. After-school programs are open also to children of Durham, North Carolina, where the Children's Museum was launched in 1946 through efforts of the Hornaday Foundation and the city recreation department. The museum is one of many which emphasize service to blind and other handicapped children. At the Children's Museum in Hartford, Connecticut, some of the volunteer workers themselves are handicapped. They catalogue, paint backgrounds for case displays, keep exhibits arranged and perform many other tasks.

Traveling Exhibits are Effective

In many cities traveling exhibits are employed effectively. In Long Beach, California, the Junior League uses a trailer for its art demonstration project. When the Children's Museum of Washington, D. C., was evicted from its spacious quarters five years ago, the director, Miss Matilda Young, put the museum on wheels. Now a trailer coach takes exhibits to the schools four days a week. From Saturday through Monday it sits on a parking lot and receives visitors.

Parents and other volunteers who have worked closely with these programs have discovered that the appeal is not exclusive to youngsters. In fact, working in children's museums has proved to be one of the most satisfying and rewarding of volunteer services.

THE END

In Fort Worth, Texas

BENNY BOB, in a red-plaid shirt, new Levis and miniature cowboy boots, clicked across the mellow parquet floor of the Fort Worth Children's Museum. The room was filled with cages, bird perches and large tanks of tropical fish. Benny Bob was in a hurry, for he was taking part in a treasure hunt in a new kind of museum where there are few "DON'T TOUCH" precautions, and not a "QUIET PLEASE" sign in the place.

Benny Bob and sixteen other youngsters were tracking down clues in the museum's regular Saturday-morning hunt. Teen-ager Jack, with the rolling gait of a Texas cowboy, was hot on the trail of a six-foot indigo snake, which slept peacefully through the hubbub. Anne Louise, a ten-year-old with bobbing blond curls, found a coyote family mounted against a lifelike backdrop of Texas sage and blue sky. Billy Smith raced through the Indian Gallery to a screened-in outdoor aviary, and back to the front porch where a clue was pinned to a stuffed buffalo.

There were no long faces at the end of the contest. In this game, everybody gets a prize, digging for it in a model Treasure Island of sand and evergreen. Buried there are cornhusk dolls, fossils for embryo collections, even neckties made from real rattlesnake's skin. And each prize has its own story of American history or natural science. The children can go to any one of the museum's three young curators for the "story" of their prize, or read about it in the museum's pleasant library. The insatiable curiosity of the youngsters about the world around them was the cornerstone of the first children's museum of natural history in Texas.

The idea developed in the Fort Worth schools, where understanding teachers like Miss Hue Leanna Murphy encouraged her second-graders to find out, "Why does a beetle shed his skin?" or, "How did the picture of a shell get on this rock?" The Administrative Women in Education (an organization of women serving the school system in executive offices) were quick to recognize the value of some permanent center where children could study and play to their hearts' content. They first (Continued on Page 146)

Introductions to animal friends are informal at the Fort Worth Children's Museum, where nothing is under lock and key. With this stuffed pelican, a toddler may be beginning a lifelong interest in birds and animals.

Leading fashion designers know it takes a superior starch to restore the original finish of cottons after washing. That's why so many famous dress labels say "Starch with LINIT®".

This perfect starch evenly penetrates fabrics... lets irons glide... keeps cottons crisp and new-looking between washings. You'll avoid laundry greyness with LINIT, too, because dirt floats out on these "wash-out" starch particles. LINIT is so easy to use. Merely mix LINIT with cold water, add boiling water, dilute and use.

LINIT adds the "finishing touch" to dresses, blouses, children's clothes, housecoats, men's shirts, curtains, bed and table linens. Directions on every LINIT package. All grocers sell LINIT.

Reference Library

NURSERY NOTES

CHARMING smocked dresses for the tiny miss; sweaters or a nightie for the newest cherub. Make them yourself in several colors and use nylon yarn for summer sweaters.

2336. LATTICEWORK SMOCKED DRESS. 25c. Order by size: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2337. SMOCKED-YOKE DRESS, 25c. Available in sizes: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2334. SAW-TOOTH SMOCKED DRESS, 25c. State size: 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2335. ROUND-YOKE DRESS. 25c. Smocking forms yoke. Sizes: 1, 2, 3.

2408. JACKET, BONNET, BOOTEES. 15c. To crochet; contrasting loop trim.

2438. EMBROIDERED NIGHTIE. 15c. Use soft flannelette, add feather-stitching and delicate lace edging.

2439. WRAPPER, BONNET, BLANKET. 15c. Narrow satin bindings, trimmed with tiny embroidered flowers.

2404. CAP, SACK, BOOTEES. 15c. To be knitted. Pattern is accented with rows of narrow lace.

ORDER BLANK

PATTERN NUMBERS

Name _____
(Please Print)

Street _____

City _____ Zone _____

State _____

We will gladly send any of these patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penn.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE DIFFERENT BRECK SHAMPOOS FOR THREE QUITE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIONS

Hair is either dry, oily, or normal. One Breck Shampoo is used for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is used for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is used for normal hair. Whenever you buy a Breck Shampoo mention whether your hair is dry, oily, or normal and you will be given the correct Breck Shampoo for your hair condition. All three Breck Shampoos are gentle and thorough in action, leaving your hair clean, fragrant and lustrous. The Breck Shampoos are produced for those who want the best.

Breck pH8 Lather Oil Shampoo is for dry hair. Breck Lacene is for oily hair. Breck Regular is for normal hair The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold. Look for the gold foil box

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 · MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College
Department of Psychology

Why doesn't he ask for that date? College men give reasons any girl can change.

If You Don't Get Dates

WHY don't some girls get dates? In any group there are conspicuously popular girls who never find dating a problem; to them, meeting new men means more dates, and every eligible male acquaintance is a potential "steady." While the average girl may worry occasionally about a suitable bid for the next dance, she takes for granted a few faithful escorts, an occasional new admirer, and enough masculine attention to make life interesting.

But some girls, however many men they meet, simply don't get dates. Perhaps they don't date at all, or perhaps they have an occasional date—but seldom two with the same man. The reasons why are often fairly obvious to everybody but the unhappy girl, and the chances are good that she can improve her situation.

First, however, she must realize that she, and she alone, can solve her problem. It's no use blaming her plight on male stupidity, or taking a sour-grapes attitude toward popular girls' "lack of dignity," or consoling herself with blind dates arranged by friends. Her only hope of a normal social life and ultimate romance and marriage is to arouse and hold a man's interest herself.

On a college campus, we asked hundreds of single men what factors prevented them from asking for a first date, and why, after one engagement, they often lost interest. Their replies are listed below in order of mention; in them, the dateless girl may find clues to her problem, and suggestions for its solution.

Why Girls Don't Get First Dates: Careless grooming, unsuitable clothes • Social awkwardness (can't make conversation, poor dancer, lacks poise, doesn't know how to do anything) • Unapproachable manner (snobbish, cold, indifferent, too sophisticated) • Aggressive behavior • Unattractive face, figure.

Why Girls Don't Get Repeat Dates: • Immaturity • Superiority • Unresponsiveness • "Gold-digger" • Aggressiveness.

Translated into positive terms, these factors can be stated as two basic principles for the girl who doesn't have dates. Like most programs of self-improvement, they are more easily preached than practiced—but the lonely girl will find the effort worth while.

1. The first, and most obvious, is to learn to attract the favorable attention of the men you meet. To do so, you need not be either a beauty or a fashion model, but you do need to make the most of your looks, as does every woman. For, in cultivating her assets (by a clever scarf, a new hair arrangement), a girl is doing more than enhancing her own looks. She is also subtly complimenting the people she meets, by letting them know she wants to look her best—for them! And note that men rank grooming and tasteful dress far ahead of natural beauty as a factor in getting dates! This should be consolation and challenge to the girl who feels her unattractive face or figure prevents her getting dates.

Your appearance may attract a man's attention, but it is your personality that will hold it. Cultivate an easy, friendly manner; act interested and "approachable" without showing off or behaving "aggressively." And never give a man the idea you are running after him.

2. The second is to learn to be good company; easier said than done—but the first step is to realize that you, as well as the man, are responsible for making your time together pleasant for both.

Learn to talk about things which interest men, as well as your own hobbies. Develop skill in current amusements, whether they be dancing, canasta or bowling. Be responsive, but not aggressive; be lively, but act your age; and show that you value companionship more than expensive entertainment.

And never attempt, as many girls do, to hide your self-consciousness behind a superior attitude. The best remedy for shyness is self-forgetfulness. Concentrate on your companion's feelings instead of your own, and you will both have a better time. In fact, this single suggestion is itself a pretty good rule for getting dates—or keeping a husband happy!

Why Do We Quarrel?

NO marriage is continuously serene. Uninterrupted harmony between husband and wife is impossible, since no two personalities are identical. Minor differences, if properly handled, lend spice to life, and major ones may be peacefully resolved by discussion and compromise or, if one is willing to accept the other's leadership, by persuasion.

But too often these techniques are not used, and trivial differences become sources of conflict and tension. Disagreement becomes argument, and every quarrel creates bitterness, hostility and resentment. This is especially serious among couples whose physical relationship is unsatisfactory.

Sexual maladjustment, in fact, is a common consequence of quarreling, for it is difficult to attain physical harmony in an atmosphere of mental and spiritual discord. At the same time, an unsatisfactory physical relationship is a frequent cause of quarrels for, if either partner feels tense or resentful, a trivial incident can precipitate a major crisis. So quarreling and sexual maladjustment are intricately related in an unhappy cycle.

Another common and easily remediable cause of quarreling is lack of sleep. Many couples, trying to stretch the day to accommodate too many activities, sacrifice rest to do it. Having stayed up too late at night, they sleep till the last possible minute in the morning. The day is off to a hectic start: a scanty breakfast, a dash for work, a daylong scramble to catch up with the clock, an errand overlooked on the trip home—after such a sequence, the smallest incident can start fireworks.

How can quarrels be prevented? Sometimes both spouses are emotionally immature, and so unable to face any problem rationally; then quarrels are almost inevitable. But if only one spouse is of this type, the other can often relieve the situation by adopting a program of prevention.

If there are too many quarrels in your home—and every one weakens your marriage—these suggestions may help you as they have helped others.

- Make sure you both get enough sleep, not just once in a while, but as a matter of routine.
- Get up early enough in the morning to insure a peaceful start on the day, including a leisurely breakfast and a margin for last-minute emergencies.
- Avoid racing with the clock, or forcing your husband to. Cut down on activities if need be—don't schedule your days too full.
- If he blows his top about some minor incident when he is tired and irritable, chances are he'll repent in a few minutes—if you keep still. But if you retort, you're inviting a battle. Silence is never more golden than when a quarrel is brewing.
- When a problem arises, wait for a suitable time before discussing it with him. Don't greet him with bad news when he first comes home from work, or when he's tired and harassed.
- In discussing an issue, stick to impersonal facts and avoid personalities. Blaming him, no matter how justified, is worse than useless.
- Remember that it takes two to start a quarrel—but only one to stop it. The more hurt or resentful you feel, the less you have to gain by going on with the argument.

Shouldn't husbands follow these suggestions too? Without a doubt. Will they? Perhaps, if encouraged by your example. But your own efforts alone can minimize quarreling.

Are You Two Companionable?

Many things enter into marriage, but of all the factors that of companionship is the most important. It has many phases because it involves not only how two people feel, but the things they share. Answer these questions with a thoughtful yes or no.

Does Your Husband:

1. Enjoy going with you to visit friends?
2. Display an interest in what you wear?
3. Keep you posted about his job?
4. Frequently show his love for you?
5. Willingly listen to your home problems?

Do You:

1. Usually approve of his general behavior?
2. Take pride in his personal appearance?
3. Make sure that you give him ample affection?
4. Like to talk things over with him?
5. Find it easy to make up after a quarrel?

Do You Two:

1. Have a common interest that both enjoy?
2. Usually spend your vacations together?
3. Like most of the same amusements?
4. Circumstances permitting, often attend church together?
5. Have a mutual goal you are working toward?
6. Adjust fairly well to each other's relatives?
7. Have the same standards and ideals?
8. Usually agree on financial matters?
9. Have several good friends in common?
10. Talk over your daydreams and hopes for the future?

Credit "yes" answers 1 point each, doubtful items only ½ point. Although some of you will have perfect scores, any score of 17 or more is good. Average scores will total 14 to 16. With scores of 13 or less, discuss with your husband things that you two can do to make your marriage more companionable—and happier.

Do You Agree?

My husband and I (no children) continue our failing marriage after three years only because our parents oppose divorce. Should we accede?

The decision is definitely not your parents' responsibility—it is yours alone! Before making it, why not check matters with a competent counselor to see if you cannot achieve greater compatibility?

What does he mean... "glove compartment"?

It's the little things in a marriage that add up to the big irritations.

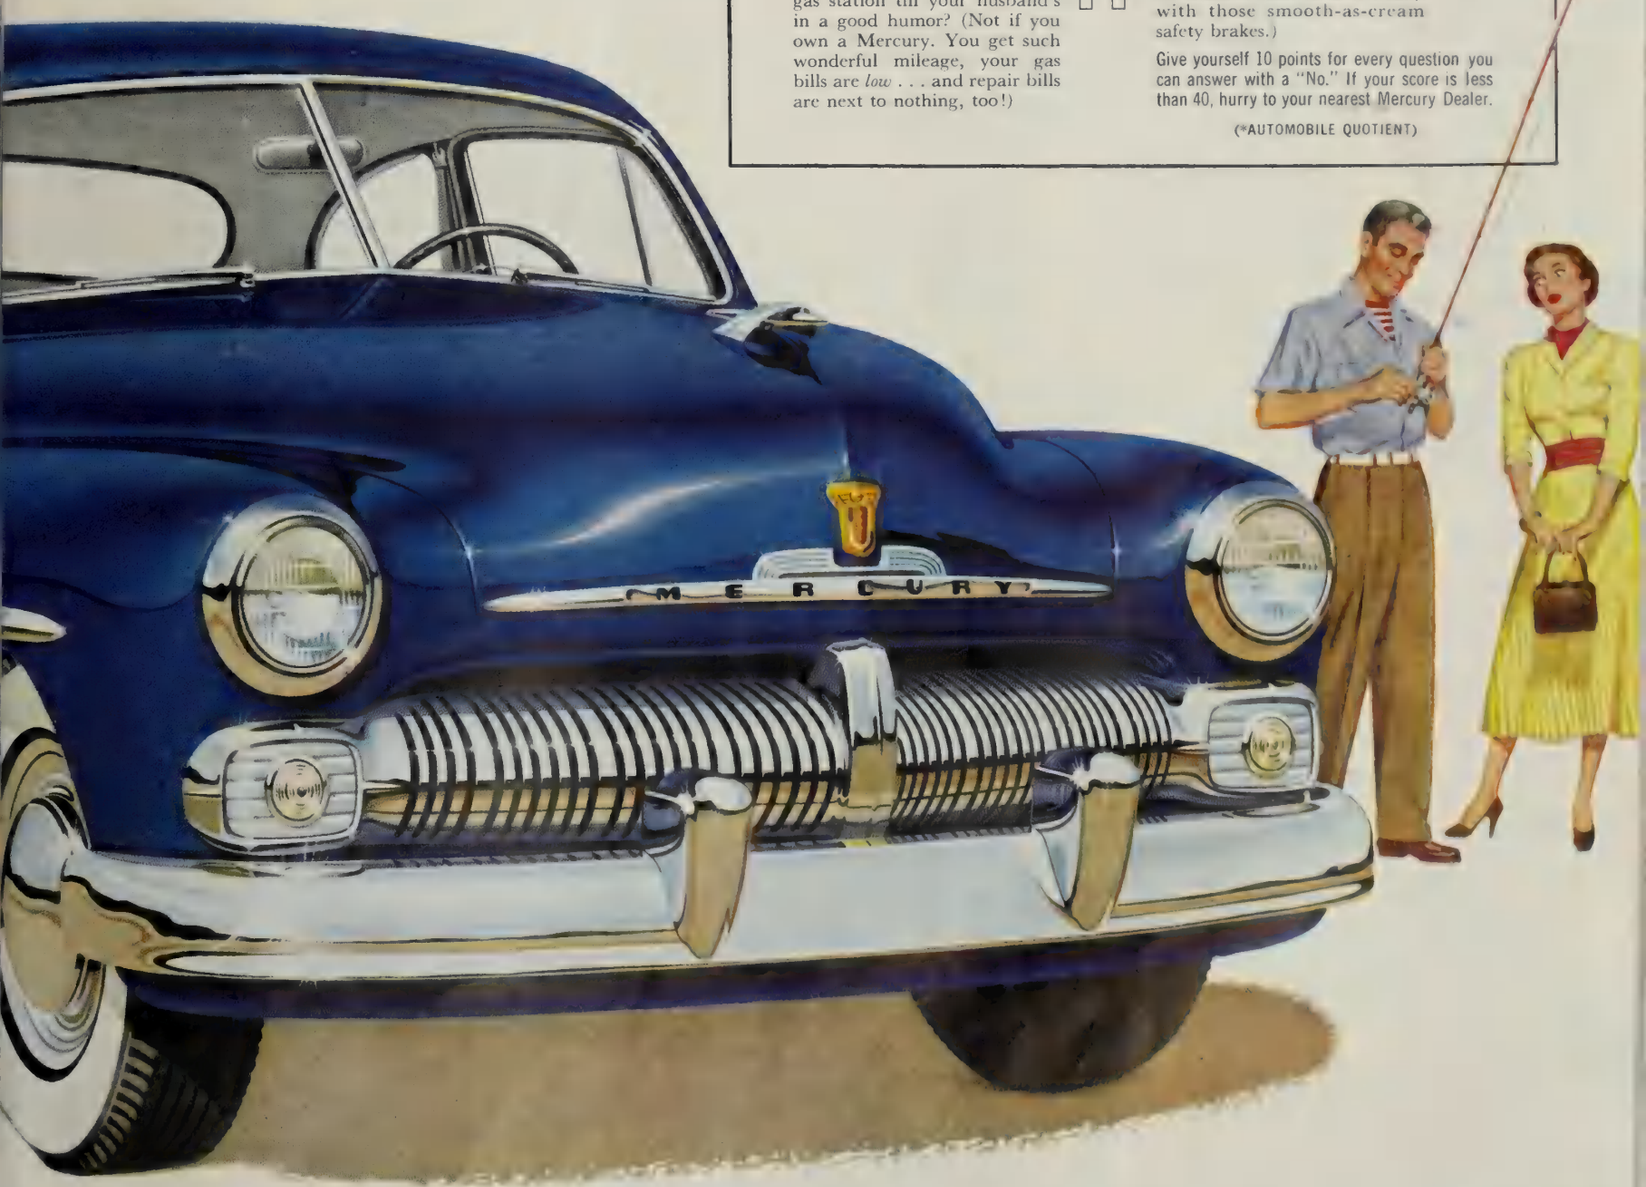
Like when the glove compartment is crowded with masculine clutter . . . (his oldest pipe . . . a tobacco pouch . . . that forgotten box of fishing flies!) and there's no room for your paraphernalia.

That's why Mercury makes sure you get a glove compartment that's plenty big enough for "his" and "hers."

Everything about the beautiful new 1950 Mercury is big and generous and easy to live with. That's why so many smart "happily-marrieds" are making Mercury their car. Check the quiz below . . . and see if a Mercury wouldn't suit you!

What's your marriage A.Q.*?

Do you get cross when your husband wants fresh air . . . and you don't want your hair-do blown? (If you drive a Mercury, there's no argument . . . Mercury's ventilating system supplies the air without a breeze.) YES ☐ NO ☐



Do you hide the bill from the gas station till your husband's in a good humor? (Not if you own a Mercury. You get such wonderful mileage, your gas bills are low . . . and repair bills are next to nothing, too!) YES ☐ NO ☐

Does he grumble when you've left the front seat too far forward? (In a Mercury he can adjust it to his needs in a jiffy. Men love the all-over roominess of this great car!) YES ☐ NO ☐

Do you get jittery when you see he's going to have to stop on a dime? (Not in a Mercury with those smooth-as-cream safety brakes.) YES ☐ NO ☐

Give yourself 10 points for every question you can answer with a "No." If your score is less than 40, hurry to your nearest Mercury Dealer.

(*AUTOMOBILE QUOTIENT)

She's married—She's happy—

She drives a MERCURY

MERCURY DIVISION OF FORD MOTOR COMPANY

As Pretty As —

A girl is as pretty as she thinks she is, as pretty as she acts!

EVER wonder what happened to the "Hiya, Judy" character boys used to hail on the street? Well, she's you—grown up and older, and looking a bit more sophisticated in the latter half of her teens. Whether you know it or not, you've changed a lot! And the attitude of other people, especially boys, has changed toward you too. Once they thought "Just a good kid"; now they think "Sa-ay—look at that pretty girl!" And now is the time to learn to take this new, big-gal attention in your stride.

More and more, for instance, you'll begin to notice that the new men in your life will answer introductions by saying, "How do you do, Miss Jones," and you'll be "Miss" to older men, too, such as employers, teachers and friends of the family. With most of the males, especially those tall, dark and gray at the temples, the relationship stays formal. But with boys near your own age it now becomes your choice to turn the tone of the friendship from "How do you do, Mr. Johnson" to "I'm glad to see you, Jack."

The give-and-take of compliments, too, is an important part of the "I'm pretty, please" policy. When a boy jumps to his feet as you come into a room, holds your chair in a hamburger hangout or makes like a miler to open the car door for you, that's a compliment. All it takes is a smile and a "Thank you" from you to make him feel able as Gable and twice as lucky. And if the compliment is verbal, such as "I like your new dress" or "You look sweet in that hat," it's up to you to follow through with the right answer. A "Thank you" will do, but better still, make it a double-duty compliment with one for him, too, by saying, "I remembered you like blue" or "I wore it because I thought you'd like it!" But never go shy and spoil your beau boy's act by stammering, "What—this old thing?"

WHAT'S THAT YOU SAID?

In conversation, too, there are tricks to help you live up to the "new you" character you've become. If gang gatherings or crowds at dances and parties floor you, try to turn the evening into a temporary tête-à-tête by giving all your attention to the person nearest at hand. It's a smooth technique to learn to talk in a low, intimate voice to one person (just any kind of comment as long as it is friendly and direct) rather than trying to play female Milton Berle to the whole room at once.

If you run short of talk in the midst of a crowd, use a warm smile as a substitute till the conversation just starts naturally. And if your date gets stranded as someone else's table-tennis partner or you find yourself tucked in a corner making courtesy chatter with a chaperon, try a long-distance smile across the room. It shows you don't feel "scared" at being left on your own and can work wonders in suggesting "I'm not talking to you, Bob, but I'm thinking about you just the same!"

As you go through the teens toward the twenties, acting less like Howdy Doody and more like Liz Taylor, older people are going to expect more of you in conversation too. Instead of the casual "'by now" brush-off you once got away with, you're going to have to sit down and talk! But remember this: whether it's an aunt, uncle, teacher or Joe Jones' father, most adults are flattered by attention from younger people. Even if you don't have much to say, they'll be pleased to find out you don't find them too old to try to talk to! A little of your time, all your attention, and before long the talking comes easy.

BOYS LIKE POISE

Poise is a big part, too, of "acting your age." Boys like girls who seem at ease, because that makes them feel more relaxed too. But often, on big evenings, when both the formal and the date are new, poise is slow to come! Best method is to give yourself confidence through a pretty-girl build-up in your own bedroom before datetime rolls round. Arrange your bathing and dressing schedule so that you are ready not so early as to get restless, not so late as to be rushed, with about fifteen minutes' leeway for complete but full-dress relaxation.

Now—try waltzing around the room alone (with the bedside radio for music) to loosen your muscles, get used to the dance dress, and slip into a dancing mood. If your hands feel shaky, here's a good trick to make them relax: shake each hand twenty times, separately and very hard, as if you wanted to shake it off your wrist. Then, if the palms seem a little damp from nervousness, dust them with talcum powder (and then dust it off in respect for his blue serge suit!) and daub your wrists with cologne. It's these little things that make you feel pretty and poised all over.

"Emotional poise," too, is an asset to work for. It means learning to keep your head—and sense of humor—about the romantic situations bound to come up in your young-adult life. Don't be surprised if any day now a boy says, "You're the biggest thing in my life, Mary," or "I'm in love with you, baby." Most of the time he'll mean what he says (or think he does!) and some of the time it will be nothing more than a line! And what's for you to do? Think twice before you take it to heart, but don't be afraid to believe it if you think it's true. If you know it's just a line and are bored by it, just turn down the next date offer from Romeo, j.g. If you want to keep his friendship in spite of the love line, try a smile, a casual attitude and a suggestion for a "can't we just be friends?" relationship. But don't act angry, insulted or too, too amused. Don't let him leave feeling "foolish." You never know when you may say "Let's stop pretending" to a guy who really means it!

PAGING FARLEY GRANGER

or Jim Jones, or Mike Martin, or Johnny Jackson, or just anybody who is good date bait for a Friday night! No need to dream about movie stars with so many smooth boys near at hand. Check our Sub-Deb booklets, How About a Date?, No. 2269, and Do Boys Like You?, No. 1658. Just 5c each from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna. You may find your answer!

TINA LESER, famous for original collections: "My advice is to wear a PLAYTEX—the girdle that slims you where you need slimming, holds you in complete comfort."

TONI OWEN, renowned for her sports clothes separates: "PLAYTEX makes this supple, slim figure a possibility. And it fits invisibly, even under the scantiest swimsuit."

JOSET WALKER, famous for her sportswear: "PLAYTEX gets credit for this new silhouette. It slims and trims naturally, whittles your figure at waist and thighs."

DOROTHY COX, leading fashion originator: "You can see how important it is for you to have this new silhouette—and no girdle does as much for you as PLAYTEX."

To top American designers there's only one girdle for 'round-the-clock wear under all Summer clothes!

INVISIBLE PLAYTEX® PINK-ICE

E ONLY GIRDLE IN THE WORLD YOU CAN WEAR UNDER YOUR SWIMSUIT, PAT DRY AND WEAR IMMEDIATELY UNDER STREET CLOTHES!

Never before have fashion designers recommended one girdle as the answer to all of Summer's figure-revealing clothes—every hour of every day. Never before has there been a girdle you could wear under your bathing suit—then pat completely dry with a towel and wear again immediately under your slenderest sports, afternoon or evening clothes.

For PINK-ICE looks, feels, fits, and acts like a second skin, moulds your figure with comfort and freedom 'round the clock. It hasn't a single seam, stitch or bone—it's absolutely invisible under briefest bathing suit, the most clinging dresses. And it washes in seconds, dries with a touch of the towel.

Made by a revolutionary new latex process, PLAYTEX PINK-ICE dispels body heat . . . slims you in cool comfort. Light as a snowflake, fresh as a daisy, PINK-ICE actually "breathes" with you.

In SLIM, shimmering pink tubes,
PLAYTEX PINK-ICE GIRDLES . . $3.95 to $4.95
In SLIM, silvery tubes,
PLAYTEX LIVING® GIRDLES . . $3.50 to $3.95
Sizes: extra-small, small, medium, large
Extra-large size slightly higher

At all department stores and better specialty shops everywhere!

INTERNATIONAL LATEX CORP'N.
Playtex Park ©1950 Dover Del.

Out In Front With Everything—

New Hotpoint for '50

World's Most Convenient Refrigerator!

"Super-Stor"
With 72% Of All Storage Space In Finger-tip Reach!

OUT IN FRONT FOR COMPLETENESS with a real food freezer and a no-defrost refrigerator that provide every type of refrigeration your family needs.

OUT IN FRONT WITH "SUPER-STOR" Hotpoint's efficient modern design that gives you handy shelves, storage drawers and cold areas for every kind of food.

OUT IN FRONT FOR CONVENIENCE with features that are kitchen-planned—door shelves for small, hard-to-store items, butter conditioner with spread control —and 51 other advance-ments.

"SUPER-STOR" MODELS BY HOTPOINT

KITCHEN-PLANNED and engineered to bring 72% of storage space within finger-tip reach, quality built for long life and efficient performance, the great new Hotpoint Refrigerators for '50 are out in front with everything—the world's most convenient and complete refrigerators. See them at your dealer's now. Hotpoint Inc. (A General Electric Affiliate), 5600 West Taylor Street, Chicago 44, Illinois.

Everybody's Pointing To

Hotpoint

Quality Appliances

LOOK TO HOTPOINT FOR THE FINEST—FIRST!

RANGES • REFRIGERATORS • DISHWASHERS • DISPOSALLS® • WATER HEATERS • FOOD FREEZERS • AUTOMATIC WASHERS • CLOTHES DRYERS • ROTARY IRONERS • CABINETS

PHOTO BY MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor —PART II

"Do you think I'm in danger of miscarrying again, Doctor? I do hope nothing serious is wrong."

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

E woman in the blue dress introduced erself, stated where she came from nd what was her difficulty, in one reathless sentence. "My family doc- nt me here—Doctor Ball—he said know him and you were to call him er you'd seen me—and he said, 'Mrs. don't take cases like yours any more, ou go to see this doctor, and he'll tell vhat's wrong and what to do about o that's why I'm here."

see," said the doctor. "Well, Mrs. what seems to be the matter with ell, my doctor said, 'Mrs. Hoe, you to be in a—ah—delicate condition,' do hope there isn't going to be any- the matter with me because this as though it might be my last e—I'm not getting any younger."

e any of us?" agreed the doctor. at makes you think there might be hing wrong?"

ecause I seem to be bleeding, and that t the way it was when I had my ter—she's just the loveliest girl you aw."

ow old is your daughter?"

e's going on eighteen."

d have you had no pregnancies from ime until now?"

'm—why, yes, once, I believe—it d to be that way and everybody said vell I looked, and I never felt better life, it really was too bad, and I felt fully about it."

ell, what happened?"

m afraid I had a miscarriage, because quite sick, and Doctor Ball had to to the house every day, and ——" ow far pregnant were you at the Mrs. Hoe?"

st over two months. It was just after aughter had the measles—she was six old then—and I came down with before she was out of the house, ——"

id you have any kind of operation at me?"

o. The only time I had an operation hen I had a bunion removed from ght big toe of mine, and the doctor very fine job and I can walk just as ——"

see. So you had measles and then ah—miscarried?"

erman measles it was, Doctor. I don't know why they are any different from any other kind of measles; but, anyhow, I was sick enough for anybody, and then I had to go and have that miscarriage—I thought that was the worst luck a body could have. Wouldn't you say so, Doctor?"

"I can't say that I would. I think you were a very fortunate person."

"Why, how can you say that, when ——"

"Mrs. Hoe," interrupted the doctor gravely, "a rather recent compilation of statistics from all over the world has shown that when a pregnant woman contracts German measles during the first three months of pregnancy, about nine times out of ten the offspring that she is carrying will be born with some terrible handicap—deaf, or blind, or mentally deficient or deformed or—almost anything can happen. That is why I think you were most fortunate."

"Why, I never heard of such a thing! Deaf and deformed and ——"

"It's true. The statistics have been so carefully compiled that there is no room for doubt."

"But—well, I should think that no woman would want to have a child under such circumstances."

"I agree with you. But—they come, just the same."

"I thought—I know I heard that a doctor could interfere—to save life—and I should think that it would be a whole lot worse to know that you were going to have a child like that."

"All people don't agree upon that. Some would say that that ten per cent chance of better luck was what should be hoped for and awaited."

"But you would want to interfere, wouldn't you, Doctor?"

"I don't know about that. I'm not so sure what my legal position would be, in the first place. Doctors are allowed to perform therapeutic abortions to save the mother's life. But this wouldn't be to save the mother's life. It would be destruction of the child to save it from an unfortunate fate, a fetal euthanasia. Many mothers would object from religious scruples, for which I would have the greatest respect. Besides, there's that ten per cent chance which it would be wrong to lose sight of. Let's get back to your case. You say you think you're pregnant. When did you have your last monthly period?"

"June the tenth is when it began—I marked it down as I always do, and ——"

"That would be a little over two months ago. Have you always been regular?"

(Continued on Page 142)

ght, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is th of a series of articles taken from the book ublished early in 1951 by Renbayle House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Discover the difference this grit-free cleanser can make on your Bathtub and Sink

SEE why millions of women refuse to use any other cleanser

It's tough ON ALL DIRT

gentle ON ALL SURFACES

kind TO YOUR HANDS

quick—POLISHES AS IT CLEANS

You'll clean your best with

BON AMI "hasn't scratched yet!"

A DAZZLING CLEAN WASH WITHOUT RINSING

...IT'S A NEW TIDE MIRACLE!

Just wash—wring out—hang up!

PROCTER & GAMBLE GIVES YOU THE FACTS ABOUT WASHING WITHOUT RINSING

YES! You can take your wash right out of the amazing suds . . . wring it out . . . and hang it up CLEAN! Get Procter & Gamble's Tide today—and see for yourself. Every package of Tide on your dealer's shelf right now will give you a dazzling clean wash without rinsing!

1. How can Tide get clothes clean without rinsing? Tide keeps the dirt suspended in the sudsy water. When you wring out clothes, dirt runs out with the washwater—clothes come from the wringer CLEAN, and dry as bacteria-free as rinsed clothes.

2. Will clothes come white? Yes, clothes come dazzling white! Just see if you can possibly tell the difference between a rinsed, and an unrinsed Tide-washed shirt!

3. How about ironing unrinsed clothes? When you wash with Tide --without rinsing—clothes dry soft and fluffy . . . iron easily.

4. Is this method safe for fabrics? Yes, it is safe . . . skipping the rinsing and extra wringings actually saves wear and tear on clothes.

"I'M THRILLED AT ALL THE TIME AND WORK I SAVE!"

SAYS MRS. DOROTHY LEIPHEIMER, BUTTE, MONTANA

"My wash came so sparkling clean without rinsing, I was amazed! Now I feel like telling the whole world—use Tide and don't rinse your wash!"

When you wash without rinsing—

NO OTHER WASHING PRODUCT KNOWN WILL GET CLOTHES CLEANER THAN TIDE

SAME TIDE! SAME PACKAGE! NEW MIRACLE!

Journal about Town

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

IN July, 1900, Americans were streaming over to the Paris Exposition, the song The Rosary was written, and Irving Berlin was a singing waiter in the Bowery, known as Izzy Baline. Teen-agers were all mad for bicycling—the girls wearing Tirolean hats, shirtwaists, and bicycling skirts just three inches off the ground.

The July, 1900, JOURNAL tells How to Have Fun at a Picnic: "Take hammocks and ropes for swings on your picnic, and don't forget a joggling board. This is a ten-foot plank which, when supported at both ends, gives the couple sitting on it a gentle, delightful joggle."

Care of the house: "The habit of throwing pailfuls of water on the floors and letting it sink into the cracks is unsanitary; use carbolic acid to prevent insect life."

Proper dress: "At hotel tables a gentlewoman, when traveling, dresses so as to attract no attention whatever."

"In England women do not hesitate to wear décolleté gowns," writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland, "but in America it is thought more seemly to wear a high-necked gown."

To cure insomnia: "Raise your right thumb easily and relax it fifty times, then do the same with your nine other fingers."

Daily work of the week: "Sweep your house thoroughly once a week, and the next week use a box broom, wipe the paint, and have the windows cleaned."

Fashion: "Girls wear little jewelry—only a string of pearls or a pendant about the throat—while married women exhaust the resources of their jewel boxes."

"I do not think a pint of hot water will weaken the heart," writes diet expert Mrs. Rorer, "but it will rather weaken the stomach."

MORRIS ENGEL—SCOPE

Titbits from all the world in this cheese lover's paradise.

FULTON STREET is a good four miles downtown from the Workshop, but when a cheese fancier named Phil Alpert phoned Louella Shouer that he was just opening a new store for nothing but cheeses, stocked with more kinds of cheese than any other store in the world, Louella and Betty Gray grabbed a box of crackers and made a beeline for the subway. Mr. A. was right. Our food editors have seen a lot of cheeses in their time, but never so many as met their eyes on Fulton Street—nor have they been greeted by so many savory smells. "Cheese of all nations," said Mr. A. "And that's what I call my store. Here's my 366th variety, just unpacked from Denmark: a fine King Christian IX—take a taste." . . . After which a smiling assistant, white-aproned, straw-hatted, took Louella and Betty on a cheese-tasting tour of the world, from Colorado to the Caucasus, from Argentina to Norway. Sharp, mild, tangy, aromatic, smoky, bland and nutty—from cows, sheep, goats, mares, buffaloes, llamas, reindeer and zebus. Until finally taste fatigue set in, and they returned to the Workshop by taxi.

Elswyth Thane, whose story called Melody appears in this issue, is the wife of William Beebe, the naturalist; and talking to Hugh Kahler, she told our fiction editor of the first story her husband ever sold to the JOURNAL—Wild Animals as They Sleep—back in 1903, when Edward Bok was editor, and money had a different value from now. Seems that Mr. Bok sent the author a check for $125, which Mr. Beebe returned with a polite note, saying he knew such mistakes did occur, and was sure what Mr. Bok meant to send was $12.50.*

Maybe you read about the girl who kidnaped a premature baby from the Lincoln Hospital here, and kept it for 26 days in a hotel room, until police recovered it—not only alive, but flourishing. Well, it seems that the girl who accomplished this miracle was using for guidance a book called YOUR BABY, by Dr. Lee Forest Hill and our own Gladys Denny Shultz.

ards: bills—invita-
a slightly different

(Continued on Page 82)

g an old.
ven astound me.
when I particularly r shall I?"

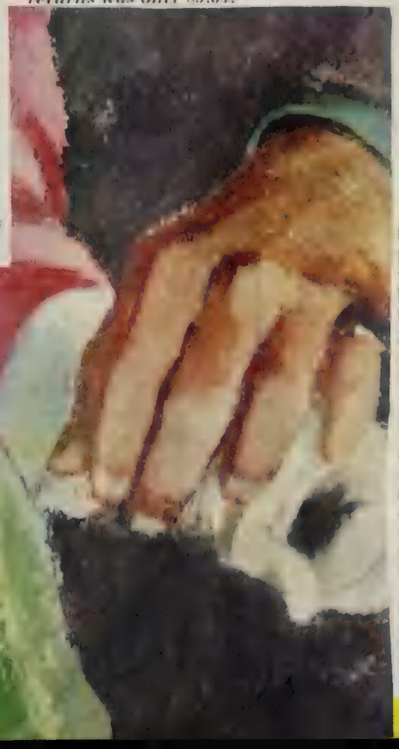
An average of one baby is born every day to women prisoners in training schools, reformatories and penitentiaries in the U. S. . . . The Internal Revenue Bureau figures it will make refunds on three out of every five income-tax returns this year. . . . Napoleon refused to play cards unless he was permitted to cheat. . . . The average American man spends an hour and a half a day reading newspapers, the average woman an hour and twelve minutes.

As a result of a query the other day, we added another item to our collection of things we never knew before about the JOURNAL. One batch of daily mail from would-be contributors contained a total of $10.95 postage for return of "unavailable" manuscripts; return of these manuscripts cost us $16.09. The query? From a successful contributor who, after thanking us for the acceptance of his manuscript (and for the quite substantial check), wanted to know what had happened to the 10c in stamps he had enclosed for return of his manuscript if unwanted. . . . Because we did want his script, our deficit on that one batch of returns was only $5.04.



Now readers are beginning to build the first of our "Sweat Equity" houses, which appeared in April, but we'd already been watching quite a few from the same design going up hereabouts as part of our testing—in addition to the house we published; none with more speed and economy than the one owner-built by John and Marjorie Maas, up the Hudson. And in case any of you are wondering how much of a handicap small offspring might be in a build-it-yourself operation, Richard Pratt can tell you that every time he visited the Maas job during construction he found their months-old baby in a basket peacefully contemplating his parents at work, with 1½-year-old Jane busily building a house of her own out of little leftovers. Here Jane's father passes a hammer down through the skylight to his wife, who confided to Mr. P. that building your own house was pretty much like having a baby: "Just wonderful," she said, "when it's all over!"

PHOTO BY MYRON FIRESHBERG

"Wonderful—when it's all over."

One of the big sterling-silverware manufacturers has had the cute idea of making up miniature silver spoons as lapel or scatter pins, so that when you've picked out the pattern you're going to buy, the jeweler presents you with a pin of that pattern to wear. And you can then also do what we saw one of the girls here in the Workshop do the other day at lunch: she unpinned her spoon, and used it in her saltcellar.

Melody

"Of course I know about Love," Adrian said

Elswyth Thane

HE had waken in London.
Roberts had the curtains, and remarked tha ter was running, and it was n way and find the slippers besid thing that a bath and a shave either, that accor

While he dres thinking about eg enough for people ate? Yes, Yes, it is safe . . . skipp e! Just see and extra wringings difference wear and tear on clot without rinsing—

SHING PRODUCT
L GET CLOTHES
R THAN TIDE

still couldn't count on an egg for breakfast. Roberts was a wonder. He always found something appetizing to put on the table. But there was nothing like an egg straight from the hen.

Slim and straight and quick as he had always been, his brushed hair showing its original black through the gray, he went philosophically to breakfast. The table was laid at one end of the long studio room. dining room and drawing room downstairs had g the war, and they had got used to doing without managed quite well with the sort of cupboard een designed in happier days merely for making ks in the studio. He passed the tall easel and the portrait without a glance. There was no challenge

NSED NOVEL

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CA

I lost it—long ago"

the canvas or the sitter this time. A routine portrait job, commisoned by the type of woman who could hardly be expected not to b ainted sooner or later by Adrian Locke. This would be one of his slick ngue-in-cheek jobs, of which he was secretly ashamed, and at which s critics would sneer, but he had already done his Academy pictur
r the year, and this was one of the ones that kept the pot boiling
He sat down in his usual place at the table, and unfolded his nap n, and eyed the stack of letters beside his plate with the usual wary terest. A well-to-do bachelor's post is full of hazards: bills—invitaons—love letters. And if the last had taken on a slightly different nc in the last decade or so, things still (Continued on Page 82)

"You know," Adrian said casually, feeling an old, remembered singing in his blood, "women astound me. You're wearing that ghastly hat again when I particularly asked you not to! Will you take it off, or shall I?"

After a while he noticed her silence and came up beside her, and asked,
"What is the matter?"

The Ring

by Isak Dinesen

Women can't buy love, find love,
surprise or trap love,
for love comes—sometimes too late.

ON a summer morning a hundred and fifty years ago a young Danish squire and his wife went out for a walk on their land. They had been married a week. It had not been easy for them to get married, for the wife's family was higher in rank and richer than the husband's. But the two young people, now twenty-four and seventeen years old, had been set on their purpose for ten years; in the end her haughty parents had had to give in to them.

They were wonderfully happy. The stolen meetings and secret, tearful love letters were now things of the past. To God and man they were one, in broad daylight they could walk arm in arm and drive in the same carriage and they would walk and drive so till the end of their days. Their distant paradise had descended to earth and had proved, surprisingly, to be filled with the things of everyday life, with jesting and railleries, with breakfasts and suppers, with dogs, with haymaking and sheep. Sigismund, the young husband, had promised himself that from now there should be no stone in his bride's path, nor should any shadow fall across it. Louise, the wife, felt that she moved and breathed in perfect freedom because she could never have any secret from her husband.

To Louise—or, as her husband called her, Lise—the rustic atmosphere of her new life was a matter of wonder and delight. Her husband's fear that the existence he could offer her might not be good enough for her filled her heart with laughter. It was not a long time since she had played with dolls; as now she dressed her own hair, looked over her linen press and arranged her flowers, she again lived through that enchanting experience: one was doing everything gravely and solicitously, and all the time one knew one was playing.

It was a lovely July morning. Little woolly clouds drifted high up in the sky, the air was full of sweet scents. Lise had on a white muslin frock and a large Italian straw hat. She and her husband took a path through the park; it wound on across the meadows, between small groves and groups of trees, to the sheep field. Sigismund was going to show his wife his sheep. For this reason she had not brought her small white dog, Bijou, with her, for he would yap at the lambs and frighten them, or he would annoy the sheep dogs. Sigismund prided himself on his sheep, he had studied sheep breeding in Mecklenburg and in England, and had brought back with him Cotswold rams by which to improve his Danish stock. While they walked he explained to Lise the great possibilities and difficulties of the plan.

She thought, How clever he is, what a lot of things he knows! and at the same time, What an absurd person he is, with his sheep! What a baby he is. I am a hundred years older than he.

But when they arrived at the sheepfold the old sheepmaster Mathias met them with the sad news that one of the English lambs was dead and two were sick. Lise saw that her husband was grieved by the tidings; while he questioned Mathias she kept silent and only gently pressed his arm. A couple of boys were sent off to fetch the sick lambs, the while the master and servant went into the details of the matter. It took some time.

Lise began to look about her and to think of other things. Twice her own thoughts made her blush deeply and happily, like a red rose, then slowly her blush died away, and the two men were still talking about sheep. A little while after their conversation caught her attention. It had turned to a sheep thief.

This thief during the last months had broken into the sheepfolds of the neighborhood like a wolf, had killed and had dragged away his prey like a wolf and left no trace after him. Three nights ago the shepherd and his son on an estate ten miles away had caught him (Continued on Page 120)

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

Where is this

By MEL HEIMER

IT was pure coincidence that the moment chosen by Robert Coe Whitson to walk down the aisle and take his seat at the first night of You've Had It, Baby! was the moment when the theater always is at its most breathless and wonderful—when the bell tinkles, the attendants murmur with quiet urgency that the curtain is going up, and the pit orchestra dips smoothly and swiftly into the overture. Even the worst score sounds halfway decent, and even the worst play is still a starry-eyed promise before that first-night curtain is raised.

Robert Coe Whitson settled into his seat, not thinking of glamour. Mr. Whitson's thoughts, as always, were compact and precise. They were: "Another musical full of grinning young things with waving arms and legs?"

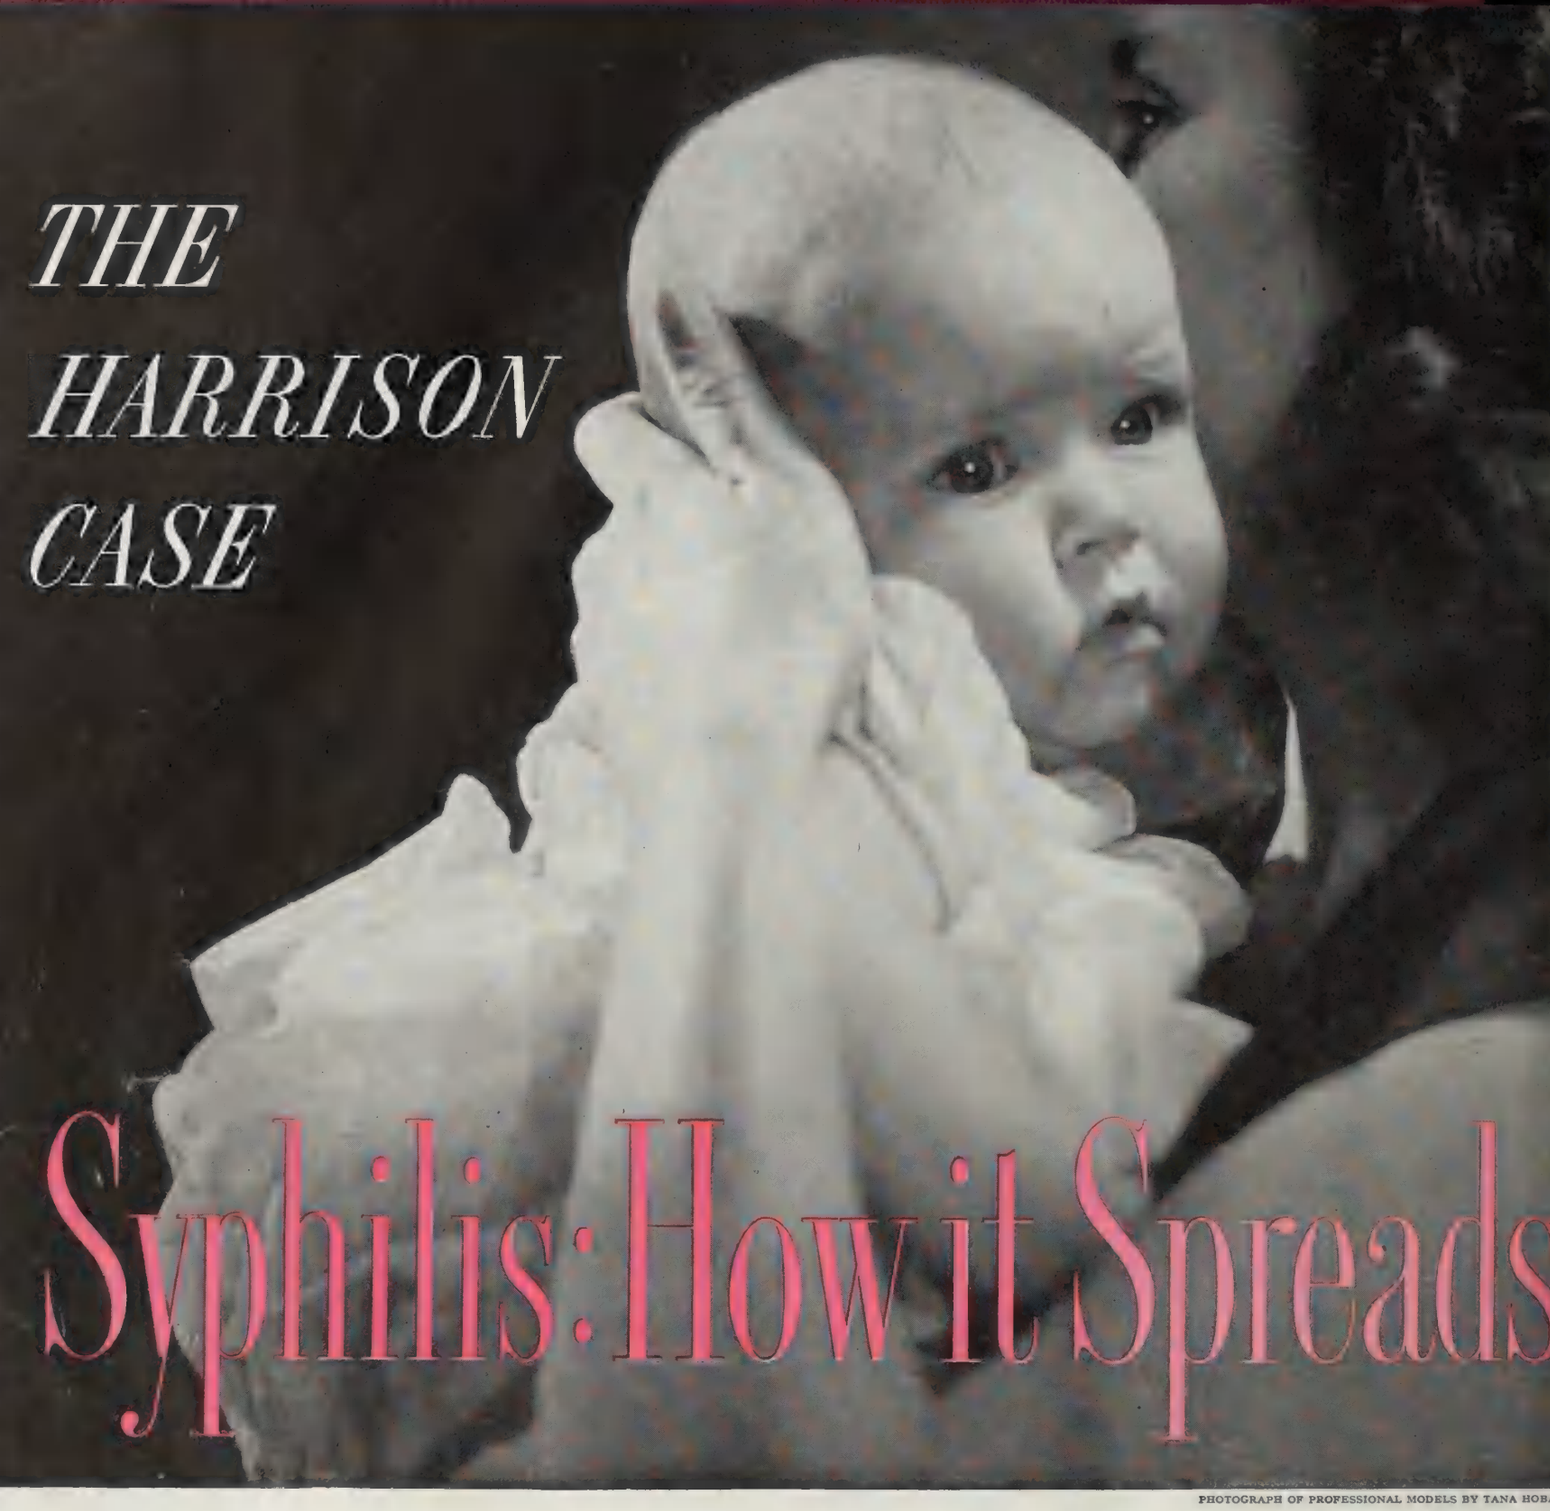
At thirty-six, R.C.W. was fifteen years removed from the yard at Harvard, and he had spent only one ninth of his life to date at that fount of learning. It scarcely seemed possible that four years could stamp themselves on a man so indelibly. But it was so.

The childhood in East 71st Street, the years in Exeter, and the post-Harvard years as a practicing critic of the drama—they had left him unscarred.

But the four years at Cambridge.

Look at him as he sits in his sixth-row seat on the aisle, with the adjacent seat vacant as always because he never brought a companion with him to first nights. His hair is short and his suit is flannel and dark gray. His tie is dark and his shirt is buttoned down. Look at him steadily and see that there is no smile. He is a body of Harvard's, breathing Harvard air, as Rupert Brooke might have put it but didn't. A Harvard man is trained, groomed, bludgeoned and graduated toward one end: imperturbability.

Of the nine old—or cold, as one actor put it—men who were New York City's major drama critics, Robert Coe Whitson was the youngest . . . and the oldest. From point of years he was a beardless youth next to George Jean Nathan, the ageless elf. From point of outlook and attitude, he was Methusaleh next to Brooks Atkinson, in whom hope springs eternal. He was a systematic man and a thorough one, and he wrote with a sure and deadly touch. There was nothing he did not know about the theater.



He had come to You've Had It, Baby! from his apartment in East 50th Street that overlooked the moodily romantic waters of the East River. It was a three-room apartment lined with books that had been read and reread but never earmarked. It was a little warmer than a monk's cell, a little colder than a hospital room. There was one incongruous note. A potted plant sat on a window sill in the living room, ridiculously. It had been brought to Robert hopefully by a maiden aunt three months before, eyed clinically by its recipient, and watered by him regularly, for an unfathomable reason, ever since.

The amiable Dick Watts of the Post Home News turned in his seat and whispered hello to R.C.W. as he seated himself. "Youth," Watts murmured with a grin as he nodded toward the still-lowered curtain. He said it engagingly, expectantly.

(Continued on Page 123)

What's his trouble? . . .
Plenty, because he's made that old, old mistake and tried to outguess
a woman.

Girl?

THE HARRISON CASE

Syphilis: How it Spreads

PHOTOGRAPH OF PROFESSIONAL MODELS BY TANA HOBAN

STORY OF AN EPIDEMIC

ALTHOUGH today we have a fast, easy method of diagnosis, and a relatively quick and inexpensive method of cure, syphilis stays with us in epidemic numbers. There is twice as much of it as tuberculosis—a hundred times as much as polio. We have cut the number of new cases down nationally in the past decade by probably a third and possibly more, but we still find more than 250,000 annually—and there are hundreds of thousands more we don't find.

Why? Because to stop an epidemic you must not only find and treat the one person you know has the disease, but you must also find and treat all those who have been infected with it. This is not easy with syphilis. Many people who have it do not know it—in women especially the symptoms are so hidden that they may be unnoticeable. And even among those who suspect they have it, there are many who will shy away from seeing a doctor because of the social implications of the disease.

Syphilis is transmitted chiefly through sexual intercourse, or, where active syphilis of the mouth exists, through kissing. By and large, it is a by-product of promiscuity, for blood tests before marriage prevent most persons from getting married with syphilis. This promiscuity is not the red-light-district, streetwalker sort of thing that we sometimes think of it as. In a recent survey by the United States Public Health Service of syphilis carriers, it was discovered that approximately eight out of ten persons caught syphilis from friends, that only two out of ten were infected by pick-ups, or prostitutes.

Any sort of promiscuity, however, is a secret thing, and not readily admitted. To uproot syphilis a three-pronged fork is required—one to educate toward higher standards of emotional maturity and morality, one to disseminate knowledge of venereal disease itself, and one to get at the existing cases of syphilis and control the spread of infection.

It is this third point with which this article is largely concerned—the master work of the Federal, state and local public-health services which today (plus penicillin) affords us our chief protection against the disease. Ceaselessly, tirelessly these services work to ferret out syphilis, treat the ill. They are organized in a network which spreads from coast to coast; although each state

By JOAN YOUNGER

TWO weeks before Christmas last year in a farming community in Ohio, Mrs. Harrison, a bony-thin woman in her early thirties, went to see her doctor to arrange for the birth of her fourth child, due in four months.

Routinely, as is required by state law, the doctor gave her blood tests for venereal disease. Although she could recall no symptoms and felt in relatively good health, the tests revealed that she had syphilis. The doctor advised immediate, full-scale treatment, so that her child might not be born with the disease, and so that Mrs. Harrison herself might be cured.

The cost of private care was too much for her strained pocketbook; he referred her case to the local health department, which arranged for her to go to Central Ohio's rapid-treatment center in Columbus, Ohio, for free treatment. Once there, she was put to bed, because of her advanced pregnancy, and every three hours for eight days and eight nights she received a dose of penicillin.

There, two days after she had entered, she was interviewed by a Public Health nurse. This routine interview is made with all patients coming to the center. It revolves round two points: from whom did you get the disease, and have you given it to anyone else?

Mrs. Harrison answered these questions easily. She appeared to belong to the "passive victim" class: the large group of women or men who catch syphilis from errant spouses. She vowed she had been with no man other than her husband, and said her unborn child was the only one to whom she might have given the disease.

Her story was that her husband was a good man, and "pretty true," but that twice last year he had been "out playing around." There was a lodge picnic; the men tied in to the beer while their wives were fixing the tables, and when it came time to eat, the men weren't hungry. They went on drinking and then wandered off, leaving the women to tidy up, gather in the children and go home without them. Her husband never told her where he'd gone.

There was also the night, she said, when he'd gone off with a friend of his while she and the friend's wife stayed home, taking care of the kids. She'd got mad, along about midnight, and gone after him. At Al's Place they said he'd been there but left. He rolled in at about dawn, and since she wouldn't speak to him for a couple of days afterward, she never did know where he'd been. She couldn't place the beginning of the disease, which wasn't unusual. Female symptoms are not obvious.

A nurse from the local health department in the Harrisons' county meanwhile was talking to Harrison. He was a short man and, like his wife, dark-haired and thin. He was alone, painting the barn, when the nurse arrived. She told him, as he worked, that he had been exposed to syphilis, and should come get a blood test. He said he was a family man who stayed home and took care of the kids when his wife was ill, and that he wasn't ill and wasn't planning to go get any blood test. The nurse said that nobody was trying to say he wasn't a family man—the point was he might have the disease and not know it, and that the next thing he knew he might start going blind, or crazy, and it would be too late then to fix him up.

He didn't answer that, and the nurse left him glaring at her, and, when he didn't come in, notified the center.

The center, filing the information, notified the state health department. The information was placed on the desk of the chief investigator, who turned it over to the man who knew that area best.

THE following week he paid a visit to Harrison. By this time Mrs. Harrison was back home, but the investigator avoided her. He wanted his conversation with Harrison to be private. He caught Harrison in the barn and sat down on the milking stool. Again Harrison protested his good health and high standards of living. Patiently the investigator explained how the disease worked: first a small sore, then maybe—or maybe not—a rash, and then nothing, until from anywhere from two years to ten, when the real ravages of heart disease, brain impairment, trembling, blindness and paralysis might come. Harrison listened impassively, then, after again proclaiming his fidelity, said that once he'd had a hankering for a girl named Martha J——, over at Riverton. The investigator filed the name mentally, and then, casually, told Harrison to get his blood test within the next few days, or run the risk of having the law after him. When the investigator left he felt reasonably sure he had all the information Harrison was going to give, and that he was scared enough to show up at the local clinic the next day.

He did. He was found to have syphilis. Arrangements were made for him to go immediately to the center for treatment.

The investigator's next stop was in Riverton, seventeen miles away. Al's Place was on the main street, a dour-looking tavern, where even the dark glass of the front could not hide the need for a good window washing. Inside there was a long bar on one side: booths on the other, a juke box and a pinball machine.

He ordered a cup of coffee and sat down at the bar to drink it. It was only a little after noon, and the place had about eleven people in it, all of them men. It turned out to be a waste of time. The bartender vaguely placed Harrison as a man who'd come in once or twice, but he swore Martha's name meant nothing to him. The investigator left and went to see the chief of police, the sanitation officer and the main V. D. investigator here—all of whom were one man, his old friend Sam.

SAM knew Martha. He shook his head like a dog overrun with fleas when her name was mentioned. His word for her was "trouble." She was about seventeen, pretty enough, he guessed, but with a slight limp; came from a decent family, but she'd "grown up too fast." During the war a group of Mexican workers had come in to work on the railroad and she'd fallen for one of them, run off with him, and then come back home alone saying they'd been married and divorced—that he was a "real jealous guy." Since then she'd been drinking all hours, and picking up anyone handy. The family had told her to get out: she'd left and then, one night when they were away, had sneaked back in, taken some of her father's clothes and tried to sell them. Sam had had a long talk with her then, and she left town for a while to visit relatives. There was a sister who lived up near Lake Erie, and another who lived about twenty miles south, in Jenkintown. Some people around here still called her Martha, but mostly she used the name Molly—it was fancier. Sam didn't know Harrison. He did, however, know Al's Place. There was too much trouble coming out of the place, he said, and if there was syphilis too, now, he'd either get it cleaned up, or shut up. The investigator knew what he meant: places that were careless about their clientele and encouraged pickups also were careless about liquor laws against letting minors drink. If there were such evidence Al's license could be lifted.

The investigator said he'd let Sam know what he found and took down Martha's sisters' married names. He was moving on down the state the next day on some other cases and he decided he'd stop off in Jenkintown. He had several cases to work on, for this was a rural area which could not see its way clear to support local health departments with staffs large enough and strong enough to handle their numerous health problems. For months, for instance, Riverton had been without even one nurse; now they had a young woman who was eager and willing to work, but overburdened with too much to do. It was about noon when he pulled up to the sister's house, a small, trim, white clapboard, near the railroad tracks. He rang the bell (Continued on Page 79) is autonomous within its borders, it co-operates with every other state.

Fighting against ignorance, apathy, prejudice and prudery, our V. D. staffs search for contacts, secure intimate information, round up carriers for treatment. It is their earnest hope to do their work so thoroughly that they will eliminate the need for their services—they have been called the only people in the country desperately trying to work themselves out of their jobs. Their motivation is strong, however: they know there is no such thing as just one case of syphilis.

This is the story of how one case led to the discovery of ten other cases, and how Ohio's public-health workers struggled for five months to track them down. In microcosm, it is the story of all public-health departments that are trying vigorously to fight V. D.

It was a happy day for all when King and Queen finally granted approval of the love match between Philip and Lilibet. "Something is going to happen at last," a radiant Lilibet had confided to Crawfie earlier. "It's about time," governess answered her.

KEYSTONE

BALMORAL CASTLE

13th September
47.

Dear Crawfie

Just a line to wish you every happiness on your wedding day. I loved seeing you for a minute at Holyrood after all the letters. It seems extraordinary that you are going to be married before Lilibet

Somehow lets has been meandering along for ages - 4 months is a very long time - and then you suddenly spring this on us and go rushing ahead!

You will be glad to hear that Dinsley was not hurt in the crash yesterday. How sad it was. However it is all right.

Once more I wish you every good fortune for the future. With best love

Margaret

When Lilibet met Crawfie's fiancé from Aberdeen, she told him, "I hope you are going to keep Crawfie in order, because she has certainly bullied us the last sixteen years."

King gave Crawfie a small cottage "which looks as if it had got to London quite by mistake" as wedding present. Lilibet gave her some curtains, Margaret helped her decorate it.

COMBINE

Like any other parents, King and Queen fretted over daughter's romance, worried because Philip drove too fast, once had mishap with a taxicab.

The Little Princesses

TWO DREAMS AT LAST COME TRUE: A ROYAL ENGAGEMENT, A COMMONER'S WEDDING.

By Marion Crawford

Former Royal Governess

Marion Crawford, who became governess to the British Princesses when Elizabeth was five, delayed her own marriage for eight years because the royal family needed her. Here she tells of Lilibet's engagement, Margaret's growing up, and her own wish for a home and a life of her very own.

WIDE WORLD

lly she wore publicly the they had chosen secretly.

VII

ALL this time Lilibet led a really remarkably quiet life compared with that of her sister Margaret today. She went to an occasional dance or play, squired by some young officer from the garrison, or by personal friends of the family. Looking back on it I am amazed to recall how very discreet and unspoiled she always was. The greater part of her day she gave up to performing what must often have been rather dull duties, and this she did quite as a matter of course. Like her parents, she considered it her job, and it never struck her to try to avoid it.

She had very little social life of her own. On many occasions when I went to her room she would be gazing dreamily out the window, no doubt worrying quite a bit in her own quiet way about the outcome of all this.

Lilibet has a large collection of snapshots, and the King and Queen never go anywhere without the movie camera. They took films of the babyhood of the Princesses, and have pictures right on up to date. They are often shown after tea at Royal Lodge, and much to our amusement the King would sometimes reverse the films so that we saw ourselves leaping out of the swimming pool back onto the board, or the horses or dogs going backward.

One day I saw Lilibet had been busy with her photograph albums. When I looked to see what she had been doing, I noticed that she had stuck, for the first time, some snapshots of Philip among the family pictures.

When it was known that Prince Philip was going to Balmoral that autumn, public excitement and speculation brimmed over. The papers carried whole columns of "inside information" and entirely unfounded stories. It must have been trying indeed for these two young people between whom there had as yet been neither proposal nor acceptance.

The generally accepted idea was that this was for Prince Philip a trial trip. The King and Queen were commonly supposed to have invited Philip up to see whether he would be acceptable as a son-in-law.

The silliness of all this is apparent when it is realized that they had both known him from his boyhood, and had seen a great deal of him just previous to this in London. He was asked up because he was a young man they all liked, who would make an amusing addition to the party. Perhaps also to give Lilibet a good long spell of his company, to see how she liked him in large doses. Perhaps to give older members of the household an opportunity of getting to know him against the family background. Nothing of that sort was said. But Lilibet was well aware World copyright, 1950, The Curtis Publishing Co. No portion of this may be reprinted without special written permission. At the end of serialization in the JOURNAL these articles will be published in book form by Harcourt, Brace and Company at $3.50.

EUROPEAN

Departure for South Africa. "It's a pity they could not have announced the engagement before they sailed," old family friend told Crawfie. "I disliked seeing that dear child Lilibet go away unhappy."

COMBINE

Girls' letters to Crawfie during South African trip were typical of them: Margaret raved over luxurious glories of The White Train, fun they were having; Lilibet worried about London's horrid winter, home troubles.

THEY WANTED THE BEST FOR HER—AND IT IS NEVER EASY FOR PARENTS TO DECIDE WHAT THAT BEST IS.

that there were two schools of thought. Some of the King's advisers did not think him good enough for her. He was a prince without home or kingdom. Some of the papers played long and loud tunes on the string of Philip's foreign origin. There must have been for Lilibet in those autumn days, that should have been such happy ones for her, plenty of doubts, plenty of embarrassments, uncertainties and heartaches. Her own mind never wavered for an instant. It was solidly made up.

It is good fun to be a princess in a palace. But not always. Not all the time. I have often thought how much, at Balmoral, Lilibet must have envied the Scottish lasses their peaceful courting at evening ends on moor and hillside.

My own view was that a young man who had served so long in the hard and severely disciplined Royal Navy, including active service, must have proved his manhood, and would be a worthy husband for any woman. Also, I knew that Philip was very well liked in the senior service by both officers and men—not because he was a prince, but for himself.

Philip's visit dragged on for more than a month. The young people went out with the guns and picnicked together, but they were very seldom alone. Occasionally he would take her out for a drive, and now and again they would manage to get off into the gardens after tea.

But the family is a very demanding one, and however sympathetic the other guests might be, there was little they could do to help. The general feeling was that if nothing was to be announced, the boy ought to go south. It was fair neither to her nor to him to keep him hanging around.

I was on my holidays at this time, but I heard all about it when I got back. The general opinion was that both Lilibet and Philip had had rather a bad break, and the summer could not have been much fun for them. Most of the household longed to see her happy in her own way, with a man of her own choice.

By this time we were all a little bewildered. I think what it really amounted to was that neither the King nor the Queen could make up their minds what was best for their very dear daughter, and so postponed decision. They wanted the best for her, and it is never easy for parents in any walk of life to decide what that best is.

Lilibet was quiet, her brightness suddenly shadowed. The royal discretion held even here, and she never discussed the problem with me. But I, who knew her well and loved her dearly, knew there would never be any other man for her.

The next move was an even more unlikely one. An official statement was issued from the palace early in September, denying the rumor that there was an engagement between the two young people. On top of this came the announcement that Princess Elizabeth and her sister would accompany the King and Queen on their trip to South Africa early in 1947. Prince Philip, everyone noted, was not to be of the party.

It was a quiet and subdued little Princess who went about the task of collecting her frocks for the trip. She would be twenty-one in the spring of that year, but looked much younger. That unsophisticated air of hers has always been part of her charm. More than once, watching her, I was reminded of something I had read about Prince Albert, her great-great-grandfather, when he was a very young man: "From the very first Prince Albert had shown a touching sweetness of disposition, a shy gentleness that was both

(Continued on Page 134)*

KEYSTONE

Philip wore unusually unconventional garments for a palace visitor—baggy flannels, tennis shirts, and had no hat.

EUROPEAN

Engagement happiness transfigured Lilibet. How she laughed at headline: GOVERNESS BEATS LIZ TO THE ALTAR!

TOPICAL PRESS

At Margaret's first ship launching, a blushing sailor presented her with a bouquet of roses. Smiling, she pulled out a rose and gave it to him for his own.

EUROPEAN

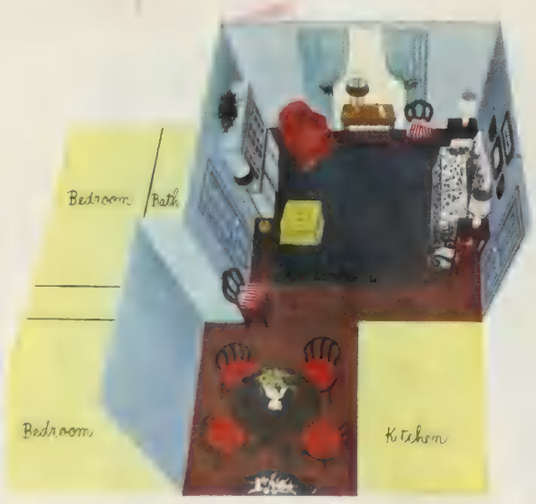
Family and Philip at variety show. Even before parents accepted him as future son-in-law, Lilibet had added pictures of him to royal family's album.

BLACK STAR

Lilibet irked press by keeping wedding gown secret from them. "Royalty earn every penny they get for the loss of privacy at times like this," Crawfie says.

EUROPEAN

Candid picture of happy Lilibet snapped night before announcement of her engagement was published. "I have never seen her look lovelier," Crawfie says.



Problem:

This month the JOURNAL visited a housing project in New Orleans where most young married couples like their up-to-date conveniences in surroundings that recall a bygone day. Fresh colors and clean-cut treatment are the ingredients of this living-dining room that guard against banality.

THE continuity of Southern family life is suggested in this traditional living-dining room. If you're one of the young marrieds who want to link the past with the present in your surroundings, here's how without breaking the bank—combining reproductions of antiques at budget prices with several authentic heirloom pieces. The eighteenth-century-type end tables flanking the couch cost $21 each; the period sofa, made to withstand the next fifteen years of wear and tear, cost $147; and we paid only $36.95 for the solid cherry armchair, a Duncan Phyfe reproduction. All the furniture shown is pretty generally sold throughout the country, except the antique pieces picked up along New Orleans' Royal Street. You may have inherited or collected antiques of your own. But if you want to start collecting now, search will reward you with prices like these: $100 for the early-nineteenth-century dining table of solid mahogany, and $50 for the charming old chandelier of gilded iron above it, to give you an idea. A mahogany break-front bookcase adds convenience and distinction to a smallish modern room without swamping it, if you paint the break-front to match the walls. Since pieces like it are no rarities in the secondhand stores, they supply that much-needed storage space at bargain rates. But the best way of economizing in your first living room is illustrated in the adequate woven cotton rug. It is appropriate to the setting, and cost only $60.50. Over-all result: a living room and dining room of nostalgic appeal, spiked with a contemporary color scheme. The sharp lime green of the ottoman, the vivid coral red of the upholstered chair and the aqua of the walls and cotton broadcloth draperies bring a youthful sparkle to a room that is keyed to the past, but adapted to the present.

Young NEW ORLEANS

By H. T. Williams

Little things we like about this living room: the pair of lamp shades. These, of gilt paper so bright it was overpowering, were painted white and scraped with a brush while the paint was still damp, uncovering the gilt in vertical streaks. And: the old love letters tied with a pink ribbon on a blue mat and framed.

PHOTOS BY HAROLD BOWLER

The light touch is the right touch these days in decoration reminiscent of the past. Here (left), simplicity gives a sense of spaciousness to this alcove of a dining room in an FHA housing project. The iron park chairs, with their velveteen cushions, are the unexpected note that exempts formality of dullness.

How to keep a tall, bulky mahogany piece from dominating a smallish modern room is illustrated at the right. We painted it to match the walls. If you like your radio out of sight, the cabinet does the trick.

Lisa came to Martin, tears in her eyes.
She brought him a single flower.
"I love you," she said. "Do you believe me?"

THE cell was on the fourth floor of the central police prison of Nordune. The steel door had a Judas hole through which light from the tier glinted like a baleful eye. A card holder outside the door contained a small white card. The name on the card read: BRANDT, MARIANNE.

She was alone. She was staring at the ghostly square of the window, waiting for the dawn. She forced herself to be patient; dawn would arrive, cheerless, undesired. A bell would ring; the prisoners would march in single file to breakfast. A hunk of scabrous bread from a basket, a mug of acorn coffee from a barrel. Her name would be called, she would be led to another examination by disagreeable young men who would question her and threaten to subject her to various discomforts; and she would listen and refuse to give replies.

An unregenerate fanatic, they would call her. . . . And she would sulk an hour or two, then, with a nettling absence of guile, inquire about the progress of democracy in Nordune.

Yesterday one of them had rebuked her: "Isn't it a fact that you've gone around preaching that co-operation with Americans is a crime?"

"It depends on the motive."

"For instance?"

"If motivated by nationalism," Marianne had told him, "collaboration is not a crime."

Copyright, 1950, by Richard J. Krebs. The complete novel was recently published by Rinehart & Co., Inc.

"To save Germany from the Bolsheviks?"

"No. To make us great again."

"For what purpose?"

"Vengeance."

"Vengeance can be an expensive matter, Frau Brandt."

"I know," Marianne had said. "Destruction breeds hunger for vengeance. And vengeance breeds a new will to destruction."

One of the investigators had said harshly, "You admit that your desire for vengeance led you to grant aid and comfort to Herr Fleming, a war criminal?"

"If you please—yes."

"And if somebody had not notified the American police, he'd still prowl around at night, shooting occupation personnel in the back?"

"If you please ——"

"Do you think we treat you too roughly?"

"No." She had laughed and added, "There's nothing you foreigners can add to the treatment of Germans by Germans."

"Explain."

"I have nothing to explain. I hate Germans."

"You hate Americans too?"

"Yes."

"And the Russians, of course?"

Marianne had given no reply.

"Well—can't you answer?"

She had smiled. "I don't want to spoil my future."

The procedure bored Marianne. Life was a mass of corrosion, unpalatable, devoid of purpose; a span of years in which the most important things remained undone—unsaid.

Inside her was a storm. An icy wind swept through her; it whistled and howled, it thumped and rattled. Loathing. Hatred and loathing.

Marianne felt an unbearable loathing for herself. She whispered, "I want to be a woman." And that, to her, was not a justification of her betrayal of Hanns Fleming. It was a statement of truth.

The morning bell rang. She got up, grasped her leg of wood, prepared to adjust the harness. Then she set it aside. She leaned it against the wall beneath the window.

The trusty was padding along the tier. A key rattled. The trusty was unlocking the doors of the cells. Marianne stripped off her clothes. She dipped a piece of cloth cut from a flour sack into the rusty tank above the toilet. A thin sheet of ice covered the water. She thrust her hand through the ice. Then, leaning against the wall, she rubbed her face and her body with the wet cloth until her skin glowed.

Again the bell rang. It was the breakfast bell. She dressed without haste. Along the tiers, prisoners stepped out of their cells. A slamming of iron doors rumbled through the building. Marianne's face was calm and white. She was aware of a tingling warmth under her skin. Her heart was beating painfully.

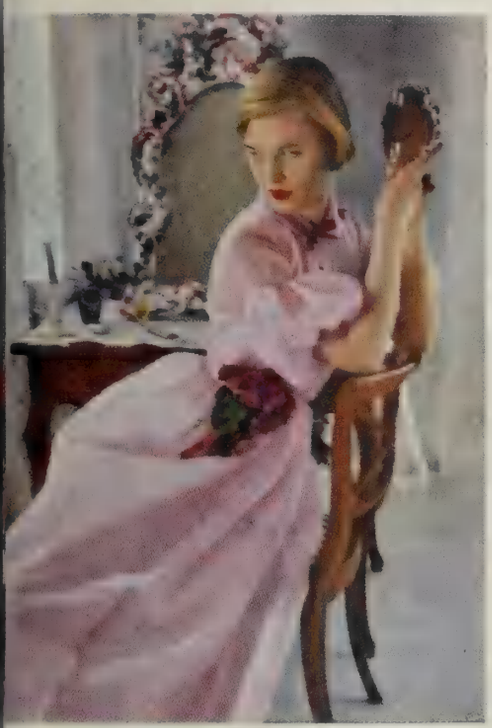
She pulled open the door of her cell. She hopped out of (Continued on Page 62)

ILLUSTRATED BY HADDON SUNDBLOM

MIDSUMMER LOVELIES

Breakfast. teatime. Sunday afternoon, bedtime for your children . . . it's a wise wife and mother who looks her prettiest for these important hours. Below: rose-printed batiste with velvet sash, balloon puff sleeves, $15. ▪ By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Mother, daughter seersuckers, $8.95, $5.95



Embroidered organdy, André D'Aulan

Coin-dot nylon: gown, $16.75; robe, $25.00

gnoir in summer chintz, around $29.95.

uve organdy, shirtwaist style, around $16.

tted-swiss peignoir, by B. Cohen, $22.95.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

FOR YOU TO WEAR AT HO

Cottons, organdies, chintzes, nylons—cool, not expensive, easy t enchanting change from city clothes into the fresh and feminine.

Above: two-piece cotton sateen for Sunday supper, by André D'A

THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE

By HARLAN MILLER

Just to torture his wife, my next-door neighbor brags he can remember his Army serial number, five years after the war, but confesses he can't remember their wedding anniversary. (She knows he's lying, but to please him pretends to lose her temper anyhow.)

"She can wear her dress cut as low as she pleases," observes Betty Comfort scathingly, removing her dancing shoes in the shadows of the country-club porch, "but that's no proof she'd take any prizes in a bathing suit!"

I'm embarrassed when I hear somebody knock Picasso or modern art. Why, the man next door hung an abstract painting over his TV set that's prettier'n a rectangle of wallpaper in a frame.

Our ten-year-old has begun to appreciate audibly my talents as a father. . . . But he obliterates my blushes with strong hints about a chocolate-dipped ice-cream cone and a trip to the drive-in theater.

In our town a woman tips off her chums that her husband's income is now past the $12,000 mark by consulting an interior decorator instead of a paperhanger when she wants a room papered.

Over our midmorning coffee at the Greek's we've agreed that a man reaches maturity when he no longer meditates which pair of pants to wear to dazzle the ladies, but puts on any pair that has a belt and a crease in 'em.

Our neighborhood grocer is the wittiest grocer in town. Over the phone he jollies the ladies skillfully through their trying forties, helps 'em forget their troubles and his prices too. (Some customers haven't seen him in ten years.)

Why is it that my envy is stirred more by the sight of scads of fertilizer on a neighbor's lawn than by a new Cadillac in his driveway, or a new TV aerial on his roof?

The man next door wanted to plant a few apple trees in the pasture behind his house, till his wife insisted that he consult the darlingest lady landscaper. He confides that he now intends to plant 'em surreptitiously some spring day next year while she's at the Garden Club.

Alas, my true love has a weakness for opaque lamps that need three 200-watt bulbs to give 100 watts of light. (Someday I'll confront her with a truly artistic lamp, with bulbs sealed inside an opaque black box.)

I still object to a girl's dating one boy all through high school and college. (That way, I argue, the girl of sixteen chooses the man whom the girl of twenty-two is apt to marry.) But it's an uphill debate; my own red-haired daughter seems skeptical.

If a Russian boy teased his dad into shooting off a few illegal firecrackers on the Fourth of July, sonny'd probably turn him in to the OGPU. (But I'm daydreaming: they've no Fourth, and no freedom to celebrate.)

Our industrial wizards can't convince me they're in close touch with the great American public until they begin to build refrigerators and TV sets with locks on 'em.

Our town's richest man used to invite the whole neighborhood over to watch him shoot his $100 worth of fireworks on his big lawn. It seemed an eternity from suppertime till it got dark enough. (But he always waited firmly till the stars were out!)

My newest theory on lawn chores: divide the yard into ten-foot squares, let each member of the family volunteer to mow and rake as many squares as possible. (If that one fails, too, I'll have to hire meditative college boys again at eighty cents an hour.)

My neighbor around the corner tells me he's having trouble laying down the law to his seventeen-year-old son. "If we were both water buffalo," he says ruefully, "he'd probably challenge me out behind the garage and gore me."

It's hard sledding in our town for the starry-eyed apostles of world government: Our leading patriots are more absorbed by an old question, "Whose ancestors won the war of 1776?" than by a new one: "Whose descendants may lose the war of 1976?"

Our town's leading clothier predicts the free vest will vanish in a year or two, even with a single-breasted suit. Neckties are losing ground, too, along with garters, hats and undershirts. Our sex seems headed toward nudity faster than the ladies!

As delicately as possible I explored with Junior my hope that he might like to do some chores around the house this summer. He was decent enough about it, but imagine my amazement when I found out that none of his chums' fathers asked them to do chores. They must be richer dads than I thought, or fearfully son-shy!

"I'll concede that three kisses a day helps a marriage," confides Peter Comfort, swabbing some chalked words off his front sidewalk. "But if you really want to make your wife happy enough to purr, just rub her back three or four minutes before getting up every morning."

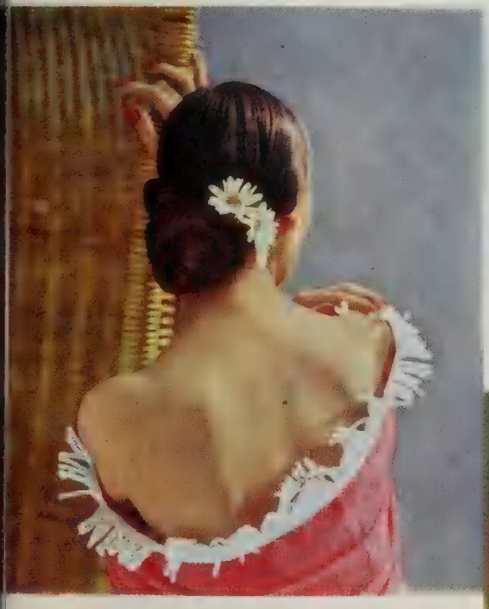
You can't quite foresee how a man'll react to danger. . . . Since my philosophical neighbor with the aluminum porch learned we might conceivably collide with Mars or Venus, he tells me he's quit worrying about atom bombs or his children's driving.

We relaxed when our redhead and Junior came through their sieges of chicken pox and whooping cough unmarred, and thought the worst was over. Then all of a sudden they began to suffer from attacks of love, an adolescent malady which we'd mislaid.

My neighbor with the two television sets has a handsome pair of book ends on top of one of 'em. . . . His wife has put some impressive books between 'em, but I'd bet ten to one they haven't been touched since.

When Junior gets on the honor list at school and doesn't even mention it to you . . . or your youngest insists that he wants to save two thirds of his small allowance . . . and your daughter speaks scathingly of the same kind of behavior you'd scorn, too, if anybody'd listen . . . and you're far from home, and you find letters from each of 'em in your hotel mailbox, and your wife's voice comes singing over the wires with more than electricity . . . then you're ready to knock off early to celebrate your wedding date every month, and even let your hair grow longer to please her.

Pinks and corals for fair or lightly tanned summer hands.



Bright red lacquer for finger tips and pretty toes.

First week of sun-bathing—fifteen minutes in the morning and afternoon. Always avoid noon sun.

Summer's beauty secret lies in protection as well as exposure, common sense as well as fashion sense!

SUMMER'S BARE NECESSITIES

After-dark eye make-up; sleek hairlines for evening glamour.

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

WITH the shedding of cover-up clothes in favor of bathing suits and bare-back dresses, here are some tips for any woman who wants to look bare—and beautiful—this summer! ▪ NEW COLOR in sunglasses. Doctors report that blue-green, greenish-yellow and yellowish-green lenses afford the best protection for beach wear and day driving—and that color is more important than cost. ▪ TWO FOR ONE. Try one of the tinted sun creams which double as a make-up base for your face and neck. A generous amount on the tender areas around your eyes, nose and chin will help prevent sunburn—eliminate a bereft-of-color look your first few days on the beach. ▪ TAKE YOUR PICK. Whether you prefer oils, creams or lotions, be sure to apply and reapply your sun-tan preparations often enough to protect you every minute you are under the sun. Welcome the excess on your finger tips to help promote softer cuticle, less brittle nails. ▪ AN EYE FOR COLOR. As your skin gradually darkens you will discover new shades of lipstick and nail lacquers will be more becoming than their winter counterparts. Soft corals and vibrant pinks flatter pale beige or golden tans; deeper skin tones take to clear, true reds, or one of summer's new reds with a touch of blue. ▪ WHERE'S THAT STOLE? No matter how pretty your bathing suit, it loses its glamour once you toss an old towel or sweater over your shoulders to protect them from the sun. This year buy (or make) a pretty stole to match or mix with your suits. Try gingham, printed cotton or—to double as a towel—one in fringed terry cloth. Add two patch pockets for super-service. ▪ KEEP IT COVERED! Hair can become as dry and parched-looking as skin through overexposure. Protect your head with a pretty visor cap which also holds your hair in place, shades your eyes, wards off squint lines. ▪ EVEN THE SHAPELIEST legs in the world require defuzzing before they can be considered beautiful. Preface your beach debut by using a wax, cream or lotion depilatory as often as is necessary to keep your legs hair-free. Whichever you choose, follow the directions on the container for the safest, best results. (Continued on Page 82)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

"I'll go see John,"
she thought suddenly.
"Surely it will be all right."

ILLUSTRATED BY TOBY WHITMORE

Birth: a Love Story

It was like standing outside the door of Time, afraid of the minutes to come, and even more afraid of the ones that had gone before.

SHE drew herself heavily from the quicksands of sleep, the movement of the child having awakened her. Already she must feel this responsibility to the child, pulling herself to slow consciousness in order that she and it could rest more comfortably, that the rebelliousness of the unborn might be apprehended, and better tolerated. She felt no impatience with this and wondered that she did not, knowing that even now her feeling for the man beside her remained the depth and the sound of her existence. She wanted the child, but still it was not quite real, not yet so important as her love.

It was an admission not easily made, and never encouraged. No one—not even John in his tenderness, especially not in that—could see other in her than the strange physical being she had outwardly become. Her discomforts and possible strain were respected, protectively; she must not be worried, fretted, excited. Passion was the dark bulb hidden now in the deep soil; and seeing its flowering, people spoke and thought of that, its source forgotten.

The child lurched suddenly, angrily, against her ribs, and it was like the beat of her heart, the breath she took into her body, normal, accustomed, an integral part of her as she now was. But John's breathing became quiet with returning consciousness, and he reached back and patted her, gently, with the hand of a father, a protector. The urgency once behind their love was arrested by an instinct deeper than desire. It was a proof of his love, his kindness—but, within, her spirit wilted. It was as if the bulb had been trying to rise with the flower, but was pushed back, firmly, into the earth. . . .

Morning, and she arose from their bed, forcing a lightness into her movements that required a balance fine and controlled as a ballet dancer's; she was like a reaper trying to gather in too many sheaves of wheat. John lay watching her, his eyes lazily giving back his contentment, his good night's sleep having left his face smooth, and his fair hair lightly curling on his forehead.

"You've got quite a shelf there," he said, teasing her, meaning, Anything about you is all right with me; meaning, It's only for now; meaning, I like you this way for what you have become to me, the bearer of my small share in immortality.

Hastily she brought the strong, chastening girdle up over her (Continued on Page 73)

By Hallie Southgate Burnett

COUNTRY SUPPER

By ANN BATCHELDER

EVERY year when July rolls around I think, "Well, it's picnic season once again." But picnics aren't common to city ways. So I'm calling you to join our party in a Country Supper which can happen in our own back yard, so to speak, or mosquitoproof porch or the more vulnerable patio.

Every supper or any other meal has to have a beginning, and since it's pretty hot most everywhere except in Alaska and Iceland, let's keep cool and take things easy even though we're having a few neighbors over to supper. And that being the case, here's something they can enjoy while they sit around in the gloaming, watching the fireflies light their magic lanterns, and listening to the tree toads tune up their instruments for the twilight symphony, and the last homing bird gossip to his mate in the syringas. It's all nice and peaceful, and so to the beginning.

(Continued on Page 148)

MENU

Raw-Vegetable Appetizers

Ham, New Potatoes and Peas in Casserole

Grilled Corn

Tomatoes Country Style

Toasted Rolls with Garlic Butter

Peach-and-Raspberry Batter Pudding

Coffee

(Planned for 6)

PHOTO BY STUART-FOWLER

Baby's 5th Month

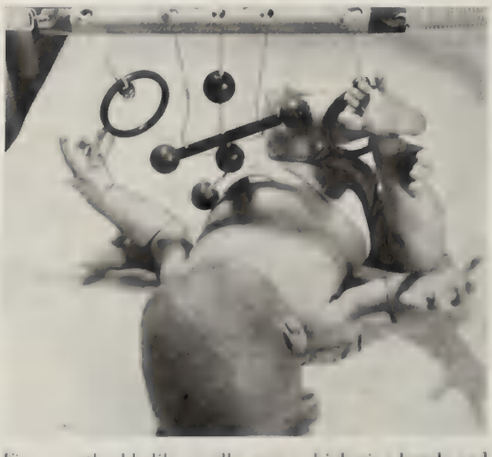
Hale and hearty at five months: Dana can roll over now, tries to creep and shows some interest in sitting up. Like most babies, she has doubled her birth weight, gains regularly, but has begun to slow down to an average four ounces each week.

Photographed by Dana's father, WAYNE MILLER

ALONG with a new baby, most parents bring home a set of dreams for what they'd like him to be. Some want a football star, others a man in the White House, others hope only that their child will be happy in a future of his own choosing. The last are the luckiest, since well before birth babies are busy outgrowing their parents' dreams. Even a four-month fetus has its special set of reactions to stimuli and a newborn is immediately ready to prove that he is himself, no one else. Nevertheless, in physique and temperament, he'll tend to fit one of three basic human types. Knowing which he resembles can help you size him up and guide your care of him. You may, for instance, have a butterball with a short neck, small hands and feet. Chances are he'll eat and sleep well, be sociable and develop in a relaxed sort of way. He's the solid citizen who'll "make do"—in fact, you may have to prod him into doing more. On the other hand, your baby may be long-limbed, lean and delicate. A tenser nature goes with this constitution. He may be prone to allergies or feeding upsets, find company and noise disturbing, have trouble going to sleep. Patience and encouragement are musts for him, but he's likely to reward you by being brilliant later.

Somewhere between these two is the muscular baby whose square little body is always up and doing. Hungry for new experience as well as for food, he'll probably sit and stand early. And though his rowdiness may wear you out occasionally, he won't need too much help in learning what he wants and how to get after it.

Somewhere between their fifth and ninth months, babies need immunizations. Shots for whooping cough, diphtheria, tetanus may make them irritable and feverish.



The show must go on, and like any young star, Dana wants to be the center of attention. She's begun to remember her friends and even to "play favorites" a bit.

Exercise is good for growing girls, and Dana takes hers in evening romps with daddy. Sleeping time's decreased to 12 hours a night plus 2 daily naps.

Deep thought—maybe about a new tooth. Babies tend to be fretful, may drool and lose appetite at this time. Rubbing of gums and a hard toy to chew will ease pain.

Five-month-olds like cradle gyms which give hands and feet a workout. Other suitable toys are rubber blocks with bells, teething beads, water ball to float in bath.

Dana can "see and grab" at the same time now, showing good muscular co-ordination. Favorite game: playing peekaboo with her big sister Jeanette.

AT IS HE LIKE—HOW DOES HE GROW?

What your baby's like will also be determined by the stage of ving he's in. Yale's Dr. Arnold Gesell points out that growth not follow an even, straight-line progression, but is rather a es of ups and downs. In baby's first year, you'll notice definite es when he's mastered his problems for the stage he's at and as on specially good terms with the world. These are the ages alance and are likely to occur in the first, fourth, seventh, tenth twelfth months. Between them come the ages of imbalance n the hungry child turns peckish, the "trained" one goes off edule, the friendly one takes a dislike to strangers. Yet, paradoxically, when baby seems most out of step, he's often moving forward. The five-month-old's shyness shows development—he can tell new faces from those he's seen before. The six-monther's finicky appetite means that advanced perceptions are teaching him to pick and choose. Even his bowel irregularity proves his once-supine body's getting ready for the uprights. Your baby will be happiest if you take a long-range view of him and accept him for the kind of person he is. All-in-a-rush or slow, he'll make some marks, some mistakes. By allowing him to do this with tolerance and pleasure, you'll give him the best chance to have his own dreams come true.

of growing up is learning to distinguish friends and strangers. Baby's now aware of change in mood or surroundings, won't take to new people.

WELLFLEET ROAD—by Edward Hopper

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 Have you ever considered the middle name? It occurs to me that in days gone by we didn't hear so much of them. Some of the illustrious in our history eschewed the middle name, if they ever had one. George Washington—would he have fathered the republic if he'd signed himself G. Valentine W.? The answer is nix. Paul Revere—he of horse and silver teapots—John Hancock, Patrick Henry—the list is endless. Why?

2 Fresh strawberry meringue is the real McCoy. Make a fine soft custard, chill, turn into a heatproof dish, cover with a meringue into which crushed strawberries are folded, brown instantly in a very hot oven, and serve right off. Speed does the trick.

3 For a delicious, well-mannered and appropriate July luncheon first course, give fresh crab meat with Russian dressing a turn. Well chilled. (Of course, no Russian ever heard of this dressing. It's just mayonnaise with chili sauce beaten into it.)

4 I might as well switch back to a wonderful dessert. It's only vanilla ice cream bedecked with hot puréed apricots flavored with a little almond extract. My stars, this is good.

5 Never one for fillings that belong in a sandwich about as much as Oriental pearls in a horse's mane, one prime favorite comes to mind. It's thin, beautiful ham and thin slices of Swiss cheese on rye bread with Russian dressing. Even the Russians would like this—if they only knew.

6 Always trying to find some little tasty thing to go with and on the cold-meat platter? So are we all. Cook some large prunes, split them and fill with finely chopped pickle relish. Bite one, prune. Bite two—the works.

7 There are corn fritters and corn fritters. Not the same as corn oysters. Take a dozen or more ears of fine, fresh sweet corn. Slit the kernels and press out the pulp, leaving the hulls. Beat six eggs and mix with the corn. Also a little top milk, salt to taste and enough flour to make a stiff batter. Drop by spoonfuls in deep hot fat and fry to the color of an autumn leaf. Elegant.

8 Here's a two-part play: Then there's corn pudding. Another favorite on my mind. Again swipe a dozen ears of corn. Well, you've got neighbors, haven't you? Slit and squeeze as before. To two cups of the inner doings, add two beaten eggs with two cups of milk, a tablespoon of sugar and two tablespoons of melted butter. Salt and pepper to taste.

9 Part II: Mix, put in a greased pudding dish, cover with buttered crumbs and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., the dish in a pan of hot water, until it is as clean as a hound's tooth when you run a silver knife through its middle. All clear?

10 Get a nice big fresh pineapple, peel it and grate very fine. Cook about ten minutes in half a cup of honey and a quart of water. Strain it and cool. Then freeze to a mushy consistency and serve garnished with fresh pineapple and mint.

11 Deep-dish apple pie is as New England as sage cheese. Sweetened with maple sugar and served with whipped cream flavored with the same sugar and nutmeg, it's a dessert that deserves a niche in the cooking hall of fame.

12 When ambition is at its peak, bake an angel cake. When cool, cover with a heavy overcoat of slightly softened strawberry ice cream. Now cover, quick, with a very stiff meringue and put in the hottest of hot ovens to brown delicately. Act fast. Don't let any violets grow under your feet.

13 Artichoke bottoms, which arrive in tins or jars, are pretty special filled with onion purée to be served with a filet mignon. And then there are broiled bananas with lemon juice and butter to carry the torch for such a steak.

14 For a dandy luncheon dish for the ladies, get large, firm, white mushrooms. Peel them. Save the stems. Now, for each serving, select two large mushrooms. Brush these with melted butter, sprinkle with salt and pepper and set aside to sit still until you do the ——

15 Second part: Now mince fine the rest of the mushrooms and the peeled stems. Cook these in butter and cream. Add salt, pepper. Also sauté large rounds of toast. Spread the mixture on the toast, grill the large set-aside mushrooms. Put two on each of the toast rounds and heat quickly and serve hot.

16 Add Worcestershire to taste, and a dash of Tabasco, to apple butter—and you have a good substitute for chutney sauce to go with curries.

17 Here's a July dessert for anyone. Beat vanilla ice cream until it is soft. Then serve it on chilled blueberries.

18 Soften cream cheese with orange juice, add grated orange rind. Serve on hot gingerbread.

19 Steamed chicken breasts, taken off with care, one half to a person, and given a light treatment in butter and cream in a skillet, are arranged around a hot platter. The center is filled with perfectly cooked rice with nests of new peas in biscuit shells disposed about. Mask the chicken with a rich cream sauce and pass more sauce separately. This is supreme of chicken as it should be.

20 Chopped egg and shrimp with water cress, on toast, makes a first-rate sandwich. And sliced cucumber and chopped deviled egg on whole-wheat bread makes another. (Mayonnaise goes on both.)

21 One of my favorite desserts—you'll join me once you try it. Provide halved apricots poached in their sirup, flavored with vanilla or almond. Cool them and drain. When ready to serve, fill the halves with a scoop of vanilla ice cream. Set on large macaroons. Sprinkle with chopped pistachio nuts, pour a little of the sirup over each.

22 From an old cookbook: "Three quarters of a pound of coffee for a family of three—adults, of course—is sufficient for one month's consumption. No one should taste this beverage under twenty-one years of age." Can't wait till my next birthday.

23 Don't say no till you've tried it. It's Spanish as a mantilla. Take some perfect cooked rice, add little peeled tomatoes cut into quarters, julienne strips of sweet pimiento, a very little grated garlic, minced onion and chopped cress. Toss and turn in French dressing and serve very chilled.

24 Sauces for ice cream are right out in front, comes the ice-cream and frozen-dessert season. That's now. The sirup of stewed cherries put with an equal quantity of red-currant jelly, sweetened a little, maybe, might be a welcome change.

25 Here's another company (and don't neglect the regular boarders, either) dessert. It's only small, ripe cantaloupes, halved lengthwise and filled with a macédoine of fruit and berries, suitably dressed and sweetened. Chill them severely.

26 Remove crusts from slices of a sandwich loaf, cut each slice into one-inch fingers. Dip each finger into melted butter, then roll in prepared cinnamon-and-sugar mixture. Place on a cooky sheet and pop into a 400° F. oven for five minutes. Delicious with tea, either hot or iced.

27 Mold your favorite gelatin dessert in a deep layer-cake pan. When it is firm, and you are ready to serve it, top it with whipped cream (frosting-fashion), then cut it into wedge-shaped pieces.

28 And don't forget to serve a chilled soup some hot evening. Ice-cold bouillon, for instance, with a slice of orange floating on top.

29 Fish dishes look nice and taste good if garnished with either tiny whole new beets or diced ones done in butter and sharpened with a touch of vinegar. Beets are wonderful with fish fixed with salt pork, and do real well with fish balls too. Tricky little rascals, beets.

30 Good breakfast eating: Scrambled eggs garnished with tiny broiled sausages and asparagus tips served on toast points.

31 Seems to me I've done what is practically a cookbook. But I'll go now. Quite a few outdoor matters claim my attention. But I'll be back.

SOUP IN SUMMER

BY Anne Marshall

Family supper

You'll enjoy setting out this inviting hot weather supper quite as much as the family will enjoy eating it. You made your pie in the cool of the morning, of course, and your main dish is a hearty prepared soup. So your meal is on in a jiffy.

Vegetable-Beef Soup
Tomato and Cream Cheese Salad
Cherry Pie Iced Coffee

WITH HOT FOODS, SERVE JELLIED CONSOMMÉ

Cool, smooth, and delicious Jellied Consommé is a grand beginner when your meal is hot. That clear amber looks so inviting in the cup. And the beef broth and vegetables—strained clear—make it delightfully refreshing. Try it.

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

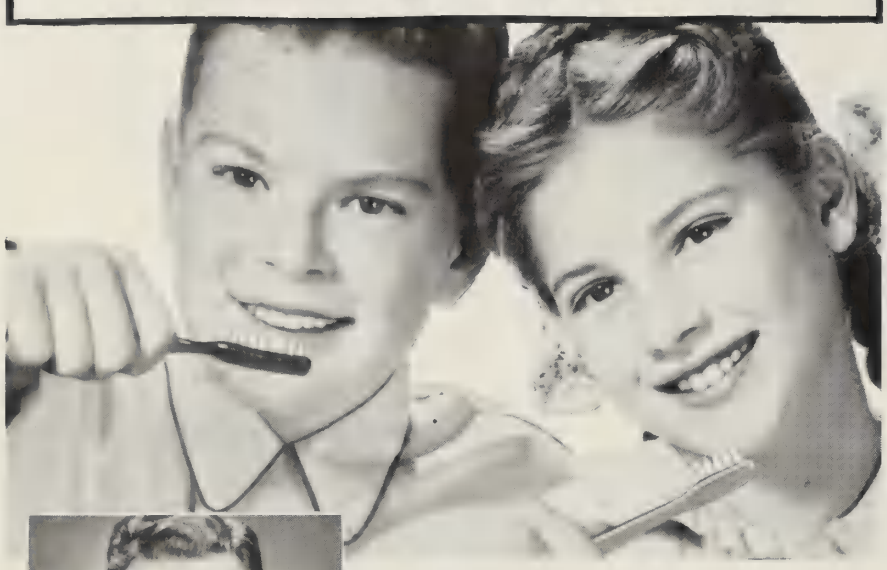
WITH COLD FOODS, SERVE SOUP AS YOUR ONE HOT DISH

Here are two big reasons why soup is a favorite summer dish: First, nutrition experts have proved that every meal needs one hot dish. Second, you and your kitchen both keep cool—it's only four minutes till "Soup's on!"

You can build any cold lunch around soup—whether sandwich, salad or cold cuts. And there are so many different soups to vary your menu. Soup stimulates appetites . . . it's easy to digest . . . it brings important nutritive benefits . . . and the contrast makes cold foods taste better. You'll find it pays to keep a shelf of soups.

It's so easy to fix!

Simply place can of consommé in chiller, or immediately below the freezing compartment of your refrigerator. Any time after 4 hours, remove and serve.



Family lunch ⇨

Cups of delicious, golden chicken soup (with rice) will bid the family welcome. And lady, that soup's a real nourisher. Add sandwiches and a beverage, and there you are!

Chicken (with rice) Soup
Egg Salad Sandwich with Watercress Watermelon Iced Tea

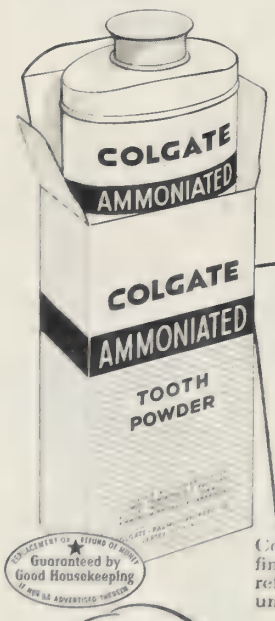
Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder



DENTISTS THEMSELVES USE and recommend ammoniated dentifrices to aid in controlling tooth decay, especially for growing children. For cavities already formed, and to safeguard mouth health, visit your dentist regularly.

Colgate's Scientific Dentifrice Tastes So Good Children Love It! Removes Dull Film, Gets Teeth Naturally, Sparkling Clean!

Just try Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder! Watch its foamy cleaning action remove clinging film . . . Makes teeth look and feel cleaner immediately! Notice how its delightful minty flavor refreshes your mouth and breath! Most important, laboratory tests indicate that using it regularly, as directed, may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay.

Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder, a product of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet research laboratories, is based on a formula developed by University of Illinois scientists. Contains the wonder-ingredients: Dibasic Ammonium Phosphate and Carbamide. Large-scale clinical tests are now being conducted to confirm its full benefits in preventing new cavities. Buy it today.

3 Definite Benefits
TO HELP PREVENT TOOTH DECAY

1. Using Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder after meals and before retiring helps neutralize destructive mouth acids considered by many dental authorities a leading cause of tooth decay.
2. It inhibits growth of acid-producing bacteria, Lactobacillus Acidophilus.
3. It helps dissolve and remove from teeth gluey film in which acid-producing bacteria thrive.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

GUARANTEED BY COLGATE—Try Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder. If you don't agree it's the finest ammoniated dentifrice you ever used, we guarantee to refund your purchase price in full, plus postage. Just return the unused portion to Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., Jersey City 2, N.J.

4oz. 43¢ 2oz. 25¢

COLGATE
Ammoniated Tooth Powder
With a Flavor the Whole Family Will Enjoy

WINTERTIME

(Continued from Page 49)

the cell. At this moment she noticed that her foot was bare—a slim, strong foot. Standing on the brightly lit tier, she slammed the door. Faces. Prisoners. She was late. The tier was lined with silent women, faces shrunken by worry and the winter, waiting for the command, "Breakfast line—forward—march!"

A woman guard called out, "Prisoner Brandt, put on your prosthesis!"

Marianne ignored the guard. She stared at her foot.

"Hurry." The guard was annoyed. "Go get your leg! How do you expect to get down the stairs—swim?"

Marianne heard some prisoners snicker. It did not matter. Everyone had the right to laugh. In one long jump she was at the railing of the tier. Below her the prison swam in murky distance. She grasped the top of the railing with both hands, flexed her knee. Then she shot forward in a graceful arc, diving headlong.

"THIS RUIN," MARCUS SAID. "FROM THE TOP we have a view." He pointed at the remnants of a four-story building.

"Don't trust it too much," Martin said.

"The high corner."

"We can try."

They were in a field of rubble two blocks from the police station where Waldemar Hacker had discovered Lisa. The afternoon was sinking into dusk. Hidden under their belts they both carried revolvers of Belgian make, and Marcus carried American grenades. Martin studied the four-story ruin. One corner still stood, jagged and knock-kneed, surrounded by lesser walls, scraggly beneath their tracery of snow, and fringed by mortar dust and broken stone.

"It is not a good ruin," Martin said.

Both knew the danger. A moderate northwest wind blew. The toppling of high ruins was a common event on any windy day. Many of the derelict buildings appeared so delicately balanced that a man's boot might tumble them in a cloud of dust.

Marcus scaled the fringe of debris. He vaulted over a crotched stone portal. Moving forward on hands and feet, he followed the multiangular crest of a lesser wall to the base of the high corner, and then, recklessly, he climbed toward the top.

Martin followed at a slower pace. They reached the top of the ragged tower. There was a niche. Behind it a piece of roofing dangled from a girder; in front, like a triangular shield, was a fragment of a cornice. From this perch they overlooked the field of rubble, at the end of which the low brick structure of the Hornung station arose.

MARCUS crouched low, his face taut. He brushed the snow from the niche. "You scouted?"

"Yes."

"How many Sipos to a station?"

"Normally forty-five. Thirty on street patrol. A dozen men, the riot squad, inside the station. A lieutenant and maybe a couple sergeants."

"That makes fifteen in the station."

"About fifteen, one of them a policewoman."

"Fifteen are too many," Marcus said. "Unless I use grenades."

"If we are patient, there may not be fifteen."

They lit cigarettes, shielding the match flare in their cupped hands. They smoked, and their eyes were on the station house where everything was quiet.

"Down there sits my sister," Marcus said, "and here we sit. And she does not know."

"I hope she is still there," Martin said.

"Six days now since you knew she was there?"

"Six days. . . . A patrol is returning to the station. Do you see?"

"Two men. Now there are seventeen inside." Marcus continued, low-voiced, "I should have taken my comrades. . . . Lisa she is my sister. But the organization is my life. Two halves of a conscience are fighting—which half is bigger?"

Martin said, "Go back if you wish."

"Go—what for?"

"To meditate, if you please."

"Why are you so rude?" Marcus regarded him obliquely.

"We waste strength fighting ourselves."

Darkness was seeping thickly into the dusk. Among the ruins the shadows lay black, fringed by grays and purples against which shimmered the far-flung ornamental graining of the snow. The droning of a steamer's siren was faint in the wind.

Marcus was peering at the station where the windows had leaped to sudden brilliance. Across a shaft of light projected by a window, shadows moved like marionettes.

MARTIN counted them before they merged with the darkness of the street. "Five Sipos are leaving the station."

"You have good eyes. Now only twelve are inside." Marcus was toying with the grenade.

"That is correct. Put away your grenade. Put it in your pocket."

Marcus removed the pin of the grenade. He looked at it, and then replaced it slowly.

"Put it away," Martin said.

"Only a grenade ——"

"If it falls, it may blow over this corner of the house."

"It will not fall."

"It may. Put it in your pocket. Or give it to me."

"I am nervous," Marcus said slowly. He put away the grenade in his sheepskin coat.

"Three Sipos are coming back."

"Four!"

"No. Three. They are bringing a prisoner."

"You are right," Marcus said. "The man in the middle is wearing a cap. How many are there now?"

"Fifteen again."

Fifteen were too many. Martin experienced a sensation of weird movement, as though the lacerated tower were swaying in the wind. It is impossible to win, he thought.

The night wore on, and still they squatted atop the high ruin. Policemen arrived, policemen departed. Waiting in the night would not help Lisa. How could the number of policemen be reduced? Upon this thought Martin's mind chewed stubbornly.

"We must fling grenades into the police station," Marcus said. "Then we can enter and liberate my sister."

Martin shook his head. "I have another plan."

"I am tired of your plans," Marcus said bitterly.

"A ruse." Martin looked down into the ruins below them. "We can simulate a battle with grenades. That may draw the riot squad out of the station."

A while Marcus was silent. Then he muttered, "You should have become a tactician."

Martin said nothing. They descended the serrated flank of their tower. For minutes they listened into darkness.

"Come this way," Marcus said.

Martin followed him over mounds of debris. A small distance away from the tower they halted. There was now a pantherlike quality about Marcus: he moved as if by instinct alone, freed—it seemed to Martin—from all necessity for conscious thinking. One by one he drew grenades from the pockets of his sheepskin coat.

"Five," he said. "One I keep. Are you ready?"

"Yes."

"Fire your revolver."

Martin fired into the air: one shot, and then two in quick succession. A dog barked. The ruins about them echoed the sounds of firing. Marcus burst out in a howl: "Hooooo—aaaaah—eeeeehhhh!" Howling, he pulled the pin from a grenade. He hurled the grenade through a window hole of the ruin.

"Down!"

A reddish flash lit up a circle of wreckage. ey lay flat on the rubble as the grenade ploded. The ruin shuddered.
Marcus leaped up.
'Saaaatanaaah—perrrkeleeee!"
He lobbed the second grenade into the n. Martin joined him in the shouting.
Marcus snarled, "Volley!"
He was shooting at the ruin. Martin emp- d his revolver in the direction of the win- w hole. Ricochets drew parabolas of fire in night.
Marcus said calmly, "Make all the noise u can."
Martin yelled. Marcus hurled grenades— e—two—three. The detonations reverber- d among the dead houses, and before the oes subsided into moments of stark and expected stillness, Marcus commanded: ome! Quick!"
There was a rippling and a murmur, inter- rsed with cracking sounds. The high cor- of the ruin which had been their post of servation was leaning to one side like a olar bending in a storm. Its upper portion ne apart, disintegrating in a kind of lazy ignation, accompanied by sounds resem- ng the distant passage of a train; then the ole tower collapsed.
'Now cry for help," Marcus whispered.
Martin roared, "Help! Help! Oh—help!"
Marcus raised his revolver. He fired a sin- shot; and after t they were silent.
They moved ftly through the d of rubble, in the ection of the Horn- g station. A little y off lay a street, ed with stumps of es, and on its far e the brick mass of guardhouse shed nt from windows l an open door, louetting the fig- s of running men.
Marcus threw him- into a bomb crater f filled with ice and use. He extracted handful of car- dges. "Reload."
They reloaded their revolvers. The barrels re still hot. Martin peered over the edge of bomb hole. Doorways along the street re crowded with war-wise people whose ds protruded intermittently from cover, gging and twisting. Sipos were rushing o a truck in front of the police station. The headlights of the riot truck glared up. rtin and Marcus yanked down their heads, of the sudden illumination. Then the tor rattled; the lights shifted, sweeping ghostly confusion of broken houses, and truck, rolling away, gathered speed as it rted the area of ruins.
'Come."
Marcus stood up. He pulled the safety g of his last grenade, tossed the ring into refuse of the bomb hole. His left hand tched the grenade. His right hand held the olver.
'Hold on," Martin said.
'What?"
'One moment."

ARTIN thrust his loaded revolver under belt where it was hidden by his jacket. grasped Marcus' left wrist, forced open hand that held the grenade, and seized grenade. An instant he intended to search the ring, to replace it in the grenade, but was a useless thought. Ring and safety pin re lost in the rubbish. He thrust the gre- de into the pocket of his jacket, holding it nly, clear in his mind that a mistake—an plosion—would really bring about the end Capt. Martin Helm.
Marcus snarled, "Give it back!"
Martin told him, "Put away your re- lver. We are going in."
Martin leaped out of the bomb hole. He d not look back to see what Marcus was ng. Again there was the sensation of utter difference he experienced after he had ded ashore from the Mercedes boat. If Marcus wanted to shoot him through the back of the head—let him shoot. It would be an end, and then at least there would be peace. Martin sauntered across the street. In his pocket his hand was clamped around the grenade.
Since no further explosions occurred, the war-wise people emerged from the shelter of the doorways.
"Ach, what a noise . . . it sounded like a battle."
"Ha-ha, not much of a battle! It was more like a grenade fight of patrols."

MARTIN hesitated a few long seconds. The people paid him no attention. Marcus was at his side. They entered the station house. A gray-haired sergeant at the desk was talking into a telephone. A Sipo stood at the window, looking through the glass. Near him stood a young policewoman, thick-hipped in a tight blue uniform.
The Sipo turned as Martin entered. "What's going on?"
"Not much."
"Have you heard the commotion? Seen anything?"
"No," said Martin. "Somebody cried for help."
"Ja-ja!" The Sipo grinned. "Perhaps a fracas between Ukrainians and Poles. They've been at each others' throats of late."
The police girl laughed. "Ach—wunderbar!" Martin addressed her humbly, "I am a landlord. You have a prisoner here who owes me rent. She lived in my house, this person—she . . . she ——"
"Bitte?"
"I came to register a claim," Martin blurted, "for rent. I was referred here by Herr Oberkriminalsekretär Kurz."
"A woman? What is her name?"
"Lisa Berzins, a displaced person."
"She did not pay you rent?"
"No. She used the false name of Berger."
"Berger-Berzins?" The policewoman was suddenly attentive. She looked at Marcus. "Who is this man?"
"My assistant," Martin said. His fist pressed the hidden grenade. "Ach, Gott," he went on, "these vagabonds are a pest. One helps them, one tries to put them on their feet—it only leads to bother!"
"Ja! And how they steal!"
Marcus was edging along a wall, pretending to peruse the posters, toward the prisoner cages in the rear of the building.
Martin said, "I beg permission to speak to Lisa Berzins about the matter of my unpaid rent."
"She is not here."
"Not here?"
"Prisoner Berzins was transferred," the police girl said. "She was a special case. She was transferred three days ago."
"Three ——" Martin's blood beat against his temples and his eyes hurt.
"Yes. I don't understand why the Herr Oberkriminalsekretär sent you to Hornung. He personally conducted the transfer."
Marcus approached them. His hands were buried in the pockets of the sheepskin coat.
"Where was this—this person transferred?" . . . Sweat was on the hand that clutched the grenade.
"I don't know," the girl said pleasantly. "She is not here any more. You will have to make proper application with the Herr Oberkriminalsekretär."
The guardroom was quiet. Then Marcus said, "We will make proper application."
They left the police station as quickly as it was possible without betraying a suspicious haste.

"HACKER SPEAKING—WALDEMAR HACKER."
"Helm." (Continued on Page 65)

Just Among "Us Girls"

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

You can talk about your "in-laws,"
Sell all your best friends short,
You can be a hypochondriac
As well as a poor sport,

And we'll doubtless still be for you,
But, lady, be advised,
Just try to mind your own affairs
And you'll be ostracized!

Some DOs and DON'Ts for Summer Months

These are the months when fresh air, sunshine, and outdoor exercise can contribute most to good health and the enjoyment of life. To get full benefit from summertime, however, it is well to be on guard against accidents and health hazards.

Fatal accidents in the summer are about 5% above the annual average, according to the National Safety Council. In fact, during June, July, and August there is an average of 284 accidental deaths per day. So, to help you avoid common summer hazards, here are some of the things that safety and health authorities often recommend.

DO . . . take proper precautions for safety in the water. Fewer than 1 out of 14 Americans who participate in water sports can be considered skilled swimmers, and even they may sometimes need assistance. So it is always best to swim only where other people are around to help if you need it. When swimming even moderate distances away from shore, try to have someone in a boat accompany you.

DON'T . . . exercise too strenuously on week ends or during your vacation. Too strenuous exercise, especially if you are not accustomed to it, puts a heavy strain on heart and blood vessels. Some physical activity, however, is usually beneficial. Your doctor, taking into account your age and physical condition, can advise about the kind and amount of activity you may enjoy safely.

DO . . . learn the principles of First Aid. There is always a chance that an accident or emergency may occur where you are. If you know how to take prompt and proper action before a doctor arrives, you will help to protect the victim, and may save his life. To do this, you may want to learn basic First Aid techniques, including artificial respiration. Your local Red Cross will be glad to help you.

DON'T . . . take chances on overexposure to the sun. Starting slowly (about 10 minutes the first day) and tanning gradually may help avoid a painful or serious burn. In addition, if you stay out in the sun too long or exercise strenuously during the hottest part of the day, sunstroke or heat exhaustion may result. Getting out of the sun before you get too red or too hot is a wise safeguard.

DO . . . make sure, when you are away from home, that the water you drink is safe. Water that looks clear and tastes good may still contain disease-carrying germs. So when you are on vacation, or on week end hiking or camping trips, make sure the water is pure. If there is any doubt, you will be wise to boil it for at least five minutes.

DON'T . . . neglect cuts, bruises, or other minor injuries. Prompt First Aid should include cleaning the wound, applying a mild antiseptic and covering with a sterile bandage. This will lessen the chances of infection. Of course, if signs of infection appear, such as redness or swelling, a doctor should be consulted promptly.

COPYRIGHT 1950—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 70-J, "First Aid."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

SWIFT'S PREMIUM

Favorite Bacon Sandwiches from radio's famous Breakfast Club

Don McNeill says "When I bring home the bacon this is how I like it!"

DON'S BACON AND TOMATO SANDWICH. Spread enriched bread or toast with butter or margarine. Top each slice with lettuce sprinkled generously with grated yellow cheese, a tomato slice and three crisp slices of zesty Swift's Premium Bacon.

Patsy Lee says "I'll sing any time for this sandwich!"

PATSY'S "BACON-SPRINKLES". Combine equal amounts of Swift's Peanut Butter and orange marmalade and spread thickly on slices of enriched bread or toast. Sprinkle lavishly with chopped, crisp Swift's Premium Bacon.

Sam (FICTION AND FACT) Cowling says "It's food like this that makes eating a habit!"

SAM'S BEET'N'BACON SANDWICH. Drain pickled beets (with or without onions) and chop fine. Spread on slices of enriched bread that have been spread with butter or margarine. Top with crisply fried Swift's Premium Bacon slices.

Sandwich time . . . or any time . . . Swift's Premium Bacon is an easy-to-fix favorite. Sugar-cured Swift's special way and oven-smoked over fragrant hardwood fires, it's the bacon with the wonderful Sweet Smoke Taste. There's a dealer in your neighborhood who sells Swift's Premium . . . America's best-liked bacon!

LISTEN TO THE BREAKFAST CLUB ABC network, Monday through Friday, 9:15 A.M. New York Time.

Swift's Premium

...the bacon with the Sweet Smoke Taste

(Continued from Page 63)

ltch—Captain Helm. I have been think-bout you ——"
artin cut him short. "Lisa Berzins is no er in the Hornung police station," he
"She was transferred four days ago. By
."
Kurz ——" Martin heard Hacker cough.
aited. Hacker said soberly, "She's prob-at the central police prison. I have d over my suspicions about Herr Kurz e Americans. If Kurz received an ink-that the military are exploring his past, affair will be a burning chestnut in his s."
You think he dropped the thing?"
Possibly," said Hacker. "Herr Kurz rid elf of the corpus delicti by slipping her the common pool of prisoners awaiting sition of their cases. That should relieve f your worries, Kapitän."
must find out."
t will take time. The courts will not re-until there is coal to warm the gentle-of the law."
did not mean that," Martin said. "Did inform the Americans about Lisa?"
No," Hacker re-. "No—I have ccasion ——" What?"
have deeply ered the mat-
I am not a po-informer."
e was a silence.
Hacker said, ll you accept a of advice?"
Go ahead."
Surrender your-to the Amer-
s. By your kill-of—well!—by rash deed you unwittingly Soviet espio-wide open in lune. You have ered the Amer-
—the west—a ce. You can-orever exist as gand. A civid surren-
——"
thought of
" Martin said. ill surrender."
You will?"
Yes. After Lisa Berzins is safe I will give lf up to the Americans. Could you ascerwhether or not Lisa has been transferred he central police prison—to ordinary edure?"
can. Telephone me in exactly one hour."
artin counted the minutes of the hour.
at in a cellar tavern which was a meeting for petty blackmarketeers. The glass of p beer in front of him stood untouched.
rosene lamp cast muddy light. At the he owner was arguing with two youths t the purchase of twenty liters of stolen ine. He smoked one cigarette after an-
r. Outside the tavern, in the darkness of n, Marcus was waiting.
he hour. "Mein Herr, may I use your hone again?"

DDED assent. Martin entered the bed-n at the rear of the tavern, closed the . He called Hacker. The quickness of the nse told him that the journalist had waiting.
checked with the night inspector at po-headquarters," Hacker reported. "They no prisoner named Lisa Berzins. They no record that such a prisoner has ever in police custody."
artin stood dazed. The floor swayed.
acker said, "It may mean ——"
know what it means," Martin said.
Yes," said Hacker, "yes." Then he added, oice rattling in metallic anger, "I shall a tremendous noise—I shall demand the ediate arrest of Herr Kurz."
No," Martin said. "Don't do that. What e address of Kurz?"
"Police headquarters."
"His private address."
"Oh ——"
"It is urgent."
"Kirchstrasse Number Two. Don't ——"
"Thank you, Herr Hacker." Martin hung up the phone.

THEY HASTENED TO THE NEWSPAPER KIOSK AT the displaced-persons camp near the railroad station. Marcus spoke to Cucumber, the kiosk man, who hurried away, toward one of the barracks in the camp. Presently Cucumber returned with two young men. They were pushing bicycles.

"Here are your two-wheels," Cucumber said to Marcus.

"You took much time," Marcus said angrily. Turning to Martin he said, "Come!"

ON bicycles Martin and Marcus rode through falling snow to the abandoned dredge in Tobacco Dock. A sentry met them at the dredge. Recognizing Marcus, he trotted ahead. He lit an oil lamp in the cabin, then lit an oil stove propped to a level position by wedges of wood. A blackened kettle hung from a hook and chain suspended over the stove.

"Eat?" the sentry inquired.

"No," said Marcus.

"Coffee in the kettle." The sentry withdrew, returning to his post.

Marcus moved about the cabin. His face was white. On each side of his mouth a vertical line stood out like a black-purplish scar. Not much was said. Martin drank coffee and smoked.

The sentry entered the cabin an hour after midnight. "They are here," he said.

Marcus sprang to the door. Soon a group emerged from the streaming curtain of snow: Cucumber, and two other men whom Martin recognized as guides who had led him to Tobacco Dock in his search for Marcus. Between them they dragged a spasmodically kicking bundle. The bundle was Oberkriminalsekretär Kurz. His wrists were manacled, his ankles strapped together with a belt. The raiders had given him no time to dress. He wore a heavy ulster over flannel pajamas. One foot was in a leather slipper, the other foot was bare. The Balts dumped him on the floor of the cabin. Marcus motioned to the sentry and the guards to leave.

"Free him," Marcus said.

The kiosk man undid the belt, unlocked the wrist manacles with a key.

Marcus said, "Did he give you trouble?"

"Only with his mouth."

The mouth was bruised. Kurz did not rise from the floor. His pale eyes, frozen with fear, were fixed on Martin.

Marcus asked, "Is this Kurz?"

Martin nodded. Cucumber was pulling things out of Kurz's coat and placing them on the table: money, a watch, identification papers, a gold cigarette case, a police badge.

"Stand up," Marcus said.

Kurz stood up, scowling. He shifted his gaze from Martin to Marcus. An expression of surprise came to his face. Then his eyes appeared to recede into their sockets. His face became slack, a dirty gray.

"You know who I am," said Marcus.

"Berzins," said Kurz.

Marcus lit a cigarette, blew smoke toward Kurz. "Where is my sister?"

Kurz stiffened. His mouth moved convulsively.

"Answer!"

NEXT MONTH

"You just can't bear to see your sister engaged before you are!" Ernestine looked Anne squarely in the eye. "Engaged?" Mother cried. "Do you mean you and that ——"

THE gay Gilbreths of Cheaper by the Dozen discovered it wasn't easy, without Dad, to carry on smoothly the "efficiency" system of family life. It wasn't easy to fall in love, when there were so many critics at home eager to rub the bloom off romance. And a full Gilbreth jury to pass its verdict on each prospective suitor!

This heart-warming family continue the story of their hilarious life together, in

BOYS AND GIRLS TOGETHER

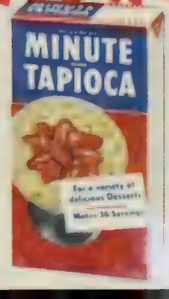
By Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey

in three parts, beginning in the August JOURNAL.

When a girl gets married, she wants to be a dream cook that her husband can marvel at, brag about. No "get-by" dishes for her! When she serves old-timey tapioca favorites, it'll be real, genuine tapioca—Minute Tapioca, with richness that ready-made desserts can't match. Like this strawberry treat:

Husband-dazzler

So easy...so wonderful...made the real Minute Tapioca way!



STRAWBERRY SUNDAE

1 recipe Minute Tapioca Cream
Sweetened sliced strawberries (fresh or Birds Eye quick-frozen)

Prepare Minute Tapioca Cream according to package directions. Cool as directed. Serve in sherbet glasses. Top with strawberries. Makes 4 or 5 servings of the most heavenly-luscious dessert. It's a dream to fix, too—so economical and easy. Smart brides (and old hands at the cooking game) solve their dessert problems with real, genuine Minute Tapioca, full of "country-kitchen" goodness no ready-made dessert can match!

REAL TAPIOCA! MINUTE BRAND TAPIOCA

FULL OF COUNTRY-KITCHEN GOODNESS!

FREE! WONDERFUL NEW RECIPE BOOK! Over 50 recipes for delicious Minute Tapioca dishes—creamy desserts, omelets and soufflés that stand up, meat loaves that slice without crumbling, juicy fruit pies that don't run over, and many other chefs' secrets. Get your FREE copy—send your name and address to MINUTE TAPIOCA, Dept. V-3, Box 815, New York 46, N. Y.

Offer expires December 1, 1950. Good only in U. S. A.

A product of General Foods

she's in love with a wonderful buy!

Who could help loving these wonderful, wonderful Pequots... sheets that look so beautiful, feel so refreshing, retain their smooth, firm texture through years of extra wear!

You just can't find a better buy than plus-service Pequots! More than 144 threads to every inch... extra strength in every thread, yet soft and smooth to the touch... that's what makes Pequot plus-service sheets ideal for luxurious comfort and maximum service.

If you love value... if you love sleeping comfort... if you love good-looking, long-wearing sheets... stock up now on plus-service Pequots... specially priced for White sales. Traditional White • Dusty Rose • Green • Peach • Pink • Airway Blue • Candlelight Yellow.

Get yours now at the white sales

PEQUOT
PLUS-SERVICE SHEETS
PILLOW CASES

Pronounced 'PEE-KWAT'

PEQUOT
plus-service
SHEETS

PEQUOT MILLS, SALEM, MASS.
Also makers of exquisite Pequot Percales

"Lisa Berzins has been discharged," said Kurz.

"When?"

"Yesterday."

"By whom?"

"Upon my order."

"From which place? Hornung?" Marcus' face was filled with cruelty.

"From the police prison yesterday morning."

"You lie," Marcus said. "She was not in the central police prison. She has not been released. You have perpetrated her surrender to the Russians at the zonal frontier."

Kurz blubbered, "Not true."

"What is true?"

"Released. I told her she had to leave Nordune."

"You are a fatherly fellow," Marcus said. "I would like to have a talk with you. A philosophical discourse."

Kurz was weeping quietly. The kiosk man sidled up to him, shoulders slightly hunched and grizzled head thrust forward. He raised his three-pronged hand in front of the weeping face. Kurz raised his hands to protect his face.

"Put—down—your—hands," Marcus snarled.

The hands fell. On one finger there was a ring. Gold—a red stone. Cucumber grasped the hand, removed the ring.

Marcus asked, "Are you a Communist?"

Kurz moaned dully.

Marcus said, "Listen to me. You see three hooks—one for each eye, the third for your lying tongue."

The kiosk man planted himself firmly in front of Kurz. He drew back his three-pronged hand, preparing to strike.

Kurz bellowed, "Erbarmen ——"

"Where is Lisa Berzins? What have you done with her?" Marcus leaped forward, yelling, "Speak!"

Kurz's knees were buckling. He whispered, "On a ship."

Cucumber lowered his false hand. He turned his back on Kurz and sat on the table.

Marcus snapped, "What ship?"

"The Krasny Pioner."

Martin gave a hoarse cry as Kurz collapsed. Marcus looked at him. "The ship—you know it?"

"Yes. A Soviet steamer."

"Krasny Pioner means Red Pioneer," Cucumber said gravely. "She is going to Murmansk."

"Too late."

"Maybe not. You must hurry."

"Where?"

"To the harbor," Martin said.

Marcus clenched his hands. "The harbor is well guarded. The Americans ——"

"I know smugglers' roads," Martin said. "I will summon a friend. A newspaperman. We can go to my old ship, the Sirius, and he can meet us there."

"What can he do?"

"He can mobilize the port command."

MARCUS unclenched his hands. His face twitched, as though it was racked by pain... exhaustion and doubt.

Martin asked, "What shall be done with Kurz?"

"He is in good hands." Abruptly Marcus went to the door. "Come."

WHAT TOOK PLACE IN THE GRAVEYARD OF ships in Tobacco Dock after their departure, Martin never came to know. A while the kiosk man stood in the deckhouse of the half-submerged dredge, squinting at Kurz, who lay on the floor. Then Cucumber stepped out on deck, holding the door between himself and the flying snow. He shouted.

The sentry came, and one of the guides. Together they went into the cabin and put Kurz on his feet.

The young guide led the march out of the cabin. Kurz staggered after him, uncertain, resembling a patient who in a nightmare wanders from his sickbed. The flat-faced sentry brought up the rear. They crossed the slanting deck of the dredge.

"Keep going," the sentry said.

As Kurz clambered over the railing, the sentry whipped something from the pocket of his sheepskin jacket. It was a piece of ano wire attached to wooden handles. flung the piano wire around the neck Oberkriminalsekretär Kurz and drew it tig Kurz gave one astonished squeak.

"Lettland must never perish," said t young guide.

The sentry hummed a monotone. He w washing his wire with a handful of snow.

STEVEDORES OF THE MORNING SHI trudging to work in the harbor of Nordu noticed three jeeps parked near the Russi freighter Krasny Pioner. At the foot of t shore ladder, on the wind-swept quay, group of men were locked in a palaver. patrol of soldiers with helmets and carbi sat waiting in the jeeps. Other men stood the deck, watching impassively. A few the watchers had Mongolian faces; and of them wore wool-lined Russian hats w flaps covering their ears.

THE Krasny Pioner had been loaded. H holds were full—machines, steel plate a girders, concrete mixers, hoists, electric sa Loot. She was a small, dirty-looking sh The wind wrenched yellow smoke from funnel, scattering it into the dusk. A gri red flag whipped over her stern.

The snowfall had stopped at daybreak, b the storm blew unabated under a sla colored sky. The palaver at the shore lad appeared to lead nowhere. An officer of Port Security Command insisted that he h a right to board the Krasny Pioner a search her; the steamer's master, a stoc and unemotional man, refused to budge. his resistance to boarding and search, Russian captain had the spirited support an official dispatched by the Soviet con late. Skirting the group, eager and restle was the journalist, Waldemar Hacker.

"I forbid," the Soviet captain said. "A solutely I forbid."

"I have been ordered ——"

"Speak to vice-consul. I forbid."

"We do not accept orders from Am icans," the vice-consul said. "A Soviet shi always Soviet territory."

"A crime has been committed."

"Which crime?" The vice-consul smil "Disciplined Soviet seamen commit crimes."

"You are holding a prisoner aboard Krasny Pioner."

"There is no prisoner."

"A young woman has been abducted —

"A woman? There is no woman. It is c culated provocation! Soviet steamships not steal women."

"I regret," said the American, "I have ders to search your ship."

"I forbid. Absolutely I forbid."

The American signaled to the soldiers the jeeps. As the soldiers advanced, the R sian captain ascended quickly to the deck the Krasny Pioner. There he barked co mands in Russian. One of the seamen ra toward the wheelhouse.

At the foot of the shore ladder the vi consul blocked the way.

"Please stand aside," the American sa

"I represent the Soviet Union," the vi consul warned. "Do not touch me."

Aboard the Krasny Pioner the seaman w had raced to the wheelhouse returned, bri ing a flag. He spread out the flag over the t of the shore ladder, where it billowed, bright crimson blister. A burly Russian peared behind the flag carrying a machi pistol. A moment he held the weapon alo then leveled it slowly.

Now the vice-consul moved aside. "This the flag of the Soviet Union," he announc addressing the Americans. "To board Kras Pioner, you must trample on the Red Fl It will be defended."

A long silence followed. A forced boardi of the Krasny Pioner meant slaughter. T Americans had orders not to engage in v lent action. And what proof had this G man this Hacker—for his assertion th some obscure guerrilla woman had be shanghaied with the help of a detecti named Kurz? The arrest of Kurz had be ordered the night before—but Kurz had d appeared.

The American officer told the sergeant to ke his men back to the harbor station and and by for orders. He jumped into a jeep id drove off to get instructions.

On a harbor siding, from the shelter of a ofless railroad car, Martin and Marcus erzins observed the happenings on the ay. The Americans did not return. Aboard e Krasny Pioner, armed men with Russian ats stood guard. A squad of Sipos arrived, pairs patrolled the quay.

Nothing happened; except that in the ormy twilight of this winter afternoon the amp ship Krasny Pioner hauled aboard her awsers and moved away among the ice es, down the length of the mooring basin, d out into the Norden River, where an ebreaker chewed and hammered to hold en the channel to the sea.

"YOU ARE MAD," HEIN RODE SAID.

"No, I am not mad."

"Martin, my boy, you are stark raving ad."

"Give me the tug or I'll do it." Martin was lm. His eyes were bloodshot from lack of eep. He raised the muzzle of the Belgian re- lver against his right ear.

"Don't do it," Hein Rode said. "You're ad."

"I am not mad. I know what I am doing. want the tug. I want to follow the Russian ip."

"Stupid ox," Hein Rode growled. "If I eren't so old, I'd thrash sense into you."

"All right."

"My crew's ashore."

"We need no crew. I can tend the engine."

"Who'll pilot her?"

"You."

Hein Rode shook his ead. "Verrückt . . . com- etely mad. We're laid up week—no coal."

"I looked in the inker. There's about ree tons."

"Dust."

"All right—dust. Three tons coal dust."

"How far'll that get you? Suppose you itch the stinker down the channel—what od will it do?"

Martin made no reply.

Hein Rode roared with triumph, "What ill it get you?" He added, in a soft growl, Hark to reason, boy. We're not going to ay in the bilges forever—there'll come a y when the sun will shine again . . . on ordune, aye! On you, too, boy."

"I hate to hurt you," Martin said.

"Don't do it, boy—don't ——" Hein Rode as staring at the finger which lay against e trigger of the Belgian gun.

"Either I get the ship, or ——"

"Or you'll shoot yourself, hey? Suicide is r cowards." Hein Rode spat through a orthole. "Easy way out—never the best."

Martin smiled. "I know another way."

"Mad, too ——"

"If you go ashore, leave the ship to e ——"

"Never in the world!"

"Or I make you a prisoner. I seize the ip."

HEIN RODE glowered. There crept into his oice a quality Martin had not known be- re. "Then I must fight you. Even if that eaks my neck."

Martin said in a tired voice, "I will now unt to three."

"Put down that shooting iron."

"I will count to three ——"

"Blast you . . . count to a million."

"One . . . two ——"

Hein Rode cursed bitterly. And so the atter was settled.

MARTIN STOOD IN THE FORECASTLE. "HERR lacker!"

Waldemar Hacker shot erect from the bunk here he had been sprawling. "Herr Kapi- n?"

In the gloomy light of the narrow triangu- r space they looked at each other. "You'd tter go ashore," Martin said.

Hacker said, "I've never felt so defeated in y life. So beaten up."

"Better get ashore," Martin said. "We're building steam."

"Am I dreaming? Am I crazy? Are you again in command of the Sirius?"

"No. We are going down-river. We are going to pursue the Krasny Pioner."

"Donnerwetter! What is your objective? Do you calculate ——"

"I calculate nothing."

"A pursuit ——"

"Yes." Martin went on angrily. "I don't want to be brusque, but you should get ashore quickly."

"Allow me to participate," Hacker said soberly. "Do you need a stoker?"

MARTIN gave no answer. Marcus Berzins was useless, a man who had lost his reason. Ballast, jerking and violent, nerves shattered ——

Hacker stepped forward. "I am not going ashore."

"You've done all you could do."

"All?" Hacker put on his green felt hat. He said, "I shall heave coal!"

The Sirius foamed down-river. Her engine hammered. Her ironwork throbbed and her timbers groaned. Her bluff bows crunched through the drift ice or shouldered it aside. The gale filled the heavens with sounds of wrath, but the waters in the channel were strangely calm until the river widened toward the North Sea.

The sun, invisible for days, went down beyond a rolling wilderness of clouds. In open water the bedlam aloft transferred itself to the sea. The Sirius labored, rising in truculence to break the crests, pitching headlong into the seething gutters.

Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves, and, under a just God, cannot long retain it.
—ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

At times, when she plunged into a canyon between waves, solid water leaped over the bulwarks and swamped the deck; and with each plunge, spray enveloped her from stem to stern. The spray froze into ice, clinging to the shrouds, to mast and bridge, heavily coating all open surfaces with a shimmering armor; and only the funnel, spewing hot smoke, remained naked in the winter blast.

In the engine room the heat was intense. At the valve wheel which controlled the throttle Martin stood, streaming sweat. Inside he was cold. In front of him the engine thundered, a rhythm of glistening steel, and to his mind it was an onslaught of orderly turmoil against an orderless world. The sounds of the Sirius' impact upon the waves were magnified below; each thumping of the hull into a trough was like a muffled cannon shot; spray hitting the deck had the sound of wild drumming.

From straining machinery steam hissed, darting like erratic tongues. The stench of hot oil was at once reassuring and menacing. Martin deeply breathed the fumes. They gave him a sense of mastery and of detachment. He was doing his duty, unconcerned about outcome and result. Bending his back to a task impossible of fulfillment, he stubbornly clung to the delusion that somehow he would succeed!

Martin Helm, the German!

After the Sirius had emerged into rough water, he had climbed to the bridge where Hein Rode stood in windy darkness, perplexed and saturnine, hands holding the wheel and eyes boring forward into the murksome night.

"Anything in sight?" Martin had shouted. "Ship's lights?"

"No." Hein Rode had grumbled, his face a bony mask in the sheen of the binnacle light: "Time to go back, boy."

"I am not going back."

"Coal giving out?"

"I don't know."

"You'll take us to the devil."

"Go back if you will. I am not going back."

But the ferment had also invaded the brain of Hein Rode. "No," he had barked. "We're going on. Wouldn't go back if you begged me."

"All right."

(Continued on Page 69)

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

A Famous Name Since 1888

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

ONE name - quality - price

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

The LESTER name on your piano is complete assurance of musical excellence, enduring craftsmanship and lasting beauty. Built by the same family for 62 years, each Betsy Ross Spinet is a lifetime investment in true happiness for children and adults.

Playing is a real pleasure . . . just as learning is easier on this superb 88 note instrument because of its glorious tone, responsive touch and rich volume.

Available in lovely traditional and modern styles . . . the Betsy Ross Spinet is compactly sized to fit your home or apartment.

Guaranteed for ten years; Dampp-Chaser equipped . . . the exclusive Lester feature that insures regulated moisture control.

Priced from $545.00 . . . model pictured $750 f.o.b. Lester, Pa. Your dealer will gladly arrange convenient terms.

Made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

mail this coupon for illustrated booklet

Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., Lester 13, Pennsylvania

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone No. _____ State _____ LHJ • 5J

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N.Y.

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

Bronze Angel — Your Suntan foundation and powder all-in-one!

Heavenly mid-summer shade of Angel Face by Pond's

Never shiny . . . never greasy! A Bronze Angel Face never registers the heat . . . or the humidity. Not a cake make-up, not a greasy foundation! This completely different make-up gives the newest suntanned look—mat-smooth, golden . . . cool!

So easy to apply! Pond's Angel Face is actually foundation and powder blended together. No watery sponge. No greasy fingertips. No spilly powder. Your Bronze Angel Face smooths on with a puff and stays on—much longer than powder!

Carry your suntan in your pocket, your b bag, your suitcase. Pond's Angel Face is n for travel! Can't spill, can't "sift," can't l It's a wonderful little space-saver. Bronze A Face is your summer make-up—complete!

BRONZE ANGEL FOR SUMMER—5 OTHER YEAR-ROUND GLAMOUR SHADES—WITH PUFF, 89¢ PLUS T

(Continued from Page 67)

"All right nothing! All right till the coal ns out."

"Krasny Pioner can't be far ahead now," artin had said.

"I'm sorry for you," Hein Rode had shouted the wind. "Coal finished—we'll anchor for e night, or drift."

Anchor or drift. Next day a coastal patrol ip would tow them upriver and policemen ould be waiting on the quay. It would be e end. Marcus Berzins crouched in the lee- ard wing of the bridge, seasick, muttering himself as though in a delirium. For him so it would be the end.

Now Martin was back in the engine room d his hands were clamped around the rottle wheel. The throttle was wide open. he tachometer, counting the propeller rev- utions, was rampant. There was a wheez- g in the bold pounding of steel. Steam pres- re was too high; the needle of the manom- er trembled fitfully about the red danger ark. For several instants he considered the ssibility of a boiler explosion. Rebelliously cast the thought aside. There was only the ge not to accept voluntarily another failure.

HREE HOURS NOW. THROUGH THE OPEN ulkhead door he could see Hacker in the okehold. Hacker was barefooted, stripped the waist. As the needle of the pressure uge dipped below the red danger mark, acker heaved coal. He yanked open the e door, a sudden flood of reddish light upon m. He scraped up coal dust from the bot- m of the bunker chute, shovel after shovel dust, and flung the dust into the flaming aw. Then he slammed shut the fire door d sat limply on the floor plates to rest.

ARTIN crossed the few feet of greasy deck ates that separated him from Hacker. "Ex- austed?"

Hacker nodded. "Burns on both hands."

"Water?"

"No water. Cognac."

"No cognac."

"A cigarette then."

Martin's cigarettes were sweat-drenched. e thrust a poker into the fire hole and after minute withdrew it. They lit their wet cig- ettes on the red-glowing end of the poker.

"I'll stoke now," Martin said.

"How far are we?"

"Past Norden Light. We're coming into elgoland Bay."

Martin went to the bunker chute. On hands nd knees he crawled into the chute. His ands probed over the remaining coal dust. hen he backed out of the chute and sat own at Hacker's side.

"Less than a ton," he said. "A half ton aybe." The truth of his discovery depressed im. The truth was like a malevolent hand, ressing on him, pushing him down.

Hacker said, "What will happen?"

"I had a foolish hope," Martin replied. "A mad hope. Lisa is finished now."

Hacker smoked. He said nothing.

"She is lost now," Martin said. "Gone and lost."

"Berzins," Hacker asked suddenly, "where is he?"

"On the bridge. He was a hero. He's cracked."

"When we return to Nordune, they'll take him."

"Yes. They will take us both. A cracked hero and a fool in good condition."

"Should we not ask Captain Rode to turn about?"

"You don't know Hein Rode. He is the master. He does not forgive. He will go as far as the coal will carry him."

Hacker yawned with deliberate unconcern.

THE engine wheezed and rumbled. In the fire hole the coal dust burned with a dim, roaring sound. But the motions of the tugboat through the turbulence outside had changed abruptly. The heaving and pitching against a head-on sea had changed to a violent rolling. There was a clatter of coal heaver's tools sliding over the floor plates, and the thumping sound of a comber breaking aboard broadside.

"Something has happened!" Hacker braced himself to keep from sliding.

Martin sprang up. The tugboat wallowed, careening dangerously from side to side. The engine groaned. Water sloshed heavily over the deck.

"Are we in peril?" Hacker inquired.

"Stay calm," Martin told him. "She's changed her course."

"What does it mean?"

"I don't know."

"Captain Rode is turning back," Hacker cried. "You see—a reasonable man!"

"Then we should move with a stern sea."

But the Sirius continued to heel crazily, broadside to the combers.

"Something is wrong?"

"Yes. I'll see." Swiftly Martin ascended the narrow iron ladder to the deck.

WHEN THE SIRIUS CHANGED HER COURSE AND began to roll on her beam ends, Marcus Berzins had already usurped control of the bridge. Out of a curtain of scudding mist a light had appeared, floating in the tempest like a lantern suspended from a moving cloud. Marcus had suddenly whipped out of his brooding. He had confronted Hein Rode, demanding that he head the tugboat toward the light.

"Lay off," Hein Rode had said roughly.

"Light over yonder—a ship?"

"Aye."

"Go ——"

"No. She's too close."

"Everybody ready? Okay . . . DEAR MOM AND DAD . . ."

FOR naturally BEAUTIFUL HAIR . . .

"Pure Castile is the Best Shampoo!"

You probably recognize New York model Cindy Cameron because you've seen her so many times in leading magazines. Stunning Cindy, known for her lovely hair, says "I use Conti Castile Shampoo because it leaves my hair silky-soft, radiant and easy-to-manage." Typical of the hundreds of models who praise Conti, Cindy says "I agree with beauty authorities that pure castile is the best shampoo!"

Making the rounds "Every model knows that professional photographers give artificial beauty a cool reception," says lovely Cindy. "That's why I use Conti the night before I visit the studios. The olive oil it contains helps my hair to set easily . . . hold waves better . . . look so naturally beautiful!"

Works wonders "For those important close-up shots, it's really wonderful the way Conti makes my hair look its loveliest . . . shimmering with attractive highlights!"

For lovelier hair . . . today . . . tomorrow . . . and always

Conti
THE PURE Castile SHAMPOO

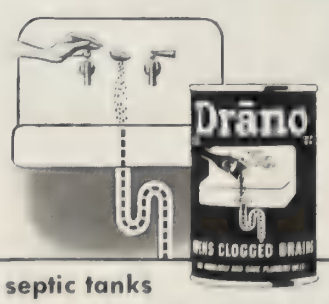
If you could pump out your sink drain...

you'd see this muck, crawling with sewer germs that liquid disinfectants can't budge!

Inches from where the children's food and dishes are washed, greasy muck, crawling with sewer germs, collects in your sink drain.

Liquid disinfectants can't budge this greasy muck. It takes Drāno's special churning, boiling action to scour it out—with all its germs.

So make this a must: Put a tablespoon of Drāno in your drain once a week—every week!



That filth is chased right down your drain by Drāno. Your drain is left clean, fresh, sanitary—and fast-running.

P. S. Remember—Drāno also opens clogged drains in a jiffy! Even removes hair from bathroom basin drain!

Available in Canada

Drāno®

removes the muck that slows drains
and breeds sewer germs

Proved harmless to septic tanks

Tests by the well-known Molnar Laboratories prove the use of Drāno in normal quantities will not harm septic tanks. In fact, these tests prove Drāno actually makes tanks work better and cuts down odors. Also read Dept. of Agriculture's Bulletin #1950, which states drain solvents are harmless to septic tanks.

Copr. 1950, by The Drackett Co.

"Go—hurry and go . . . ram!"

"Against the law."

"I will kill you."

"Lay off!" Hein Rode had bellowed. "Get below!"

Marcus Berzins had pounced with the lithe ferocity of a panther. The butt of his revolver had thudded against Hein Rode's head, a short, cruel blow behind the ear. Hein Rode had fallen, still grasping the spokes of the wheel; but Marcus had quickly broken the older man's grip, pushing him aside and forcing the wheel to the left. He had aimed the Sirius at the light, allowing for a lead in the manner of a cannoneer intent on bombarding a moving target.

Dazed by the blow, Hein Rode had risen to his knees. "Lay off," he shouted. "You'll capsize ——" He lurched forward, throwing both arms around the usurper's legs, attempting to drag him away from the wheel. "You . . . pirate! Lay off my ship."

"Bolshevik!"

"Hark to reason—give way."

In an insane rage Marcus Berzins had set his revolver against Hein Rode's protesting face. In the same movement he pulled the trigger.

Martin heard the shots as he reached the deck. They sounded like a door banging in the wind. The Sirius swung as though impaled upon the end of a gigantic pendulum.

To leeward, a mile or two distant, the black and massive silhouette of a flat-topped cliff loomed dead against the storm sky, familiar to the eyes of Martin Helm in the heart of any lightless night. . . . An island rock, depopulated, blighted and broken, austere and yet sweet beyond all limits of knowledge. Helgoland, the doomed land of his birth. But toiling knee-deep through angry water, pulling himself over the ice-crusted deck and up the ice-crusted ladder to the bridge, he did not think of Helgoland at all. Athwart the tugboat's bows, a little way off, there were lights. A white light and a green light, the outline of a ship, shadowy and ominous—a hull, a funnel, a small freighter . . . the Krasny Pioner bucking northward against the sea.

As he gained the bridge, Martin saw the ship immediately ahead, and he saw the Sirius' forward-plunging snout. Then a glare leaped out of the black hulk in front of his eyes, the beam of a searchlight, and he heard a succession of siren blasts, like cries for help.

Martin's first thought was to yank the indicator on the engine room telegraph to "Full Astern." But that spark collided with another—the realization that the order "Full Astern" would be only a shout in space. There was no one at the controls below to obey the command, no one except Waldemar Hacker.

Martin lunged for the steering wheel. Lunging, he heard a screeching cry: "Ram! Ram!"

He stumbled over something on the bridge. The tugboat lurched to port, listing steeply. He stumbled over something that had come plummeting down the sudden incline like a wet sack of flour. He pitched forward, throwing out his hands to break the fall. The Sirius righted herself briefly on the white-maned back of a roller, then heeled sharply to starboard, in a sliding fall to the bottom of an unquiet ravine. The thing that had tripped him reversed its course and rolled soggily against his outstretched arms. The thing, Martin saw, was Hein Rode.

"Ram!"

One side of Hein Rode's head had been torn away as though by an explosive blast. The voice that kept screeching the single word "Ram" was the voice of Marcus Berzins. A maniac was at the Sirius' wheel, waving a revolver in the searchlight glare, and already it was too late.

For a small part of a second the flank of the Krasny Pioner loomed above them like a church teetering in the storm. The force of the collision hurled Martin against the weather railing of the bridge. The bows of the tugboat crashed through the side of the freighter. There were sounds of metal screaming as it was rent, a cracking of timbers, a clashing of machinery, the gurgling rattle of steam escaping, cries feeble in the mighty hooting of the gale. The searchlight went out.

Grasping a stanchion, Martin pulled himself erect. Again he was the master of a ship. He knew exactly what he must do. In front of him there erupted dry cracking sounds puny like the breaking of twigs. He saw thin flashes of white light. Marcus Berzins, who had rushed to the forecastle head, was firing his revolver at the wounded flank of the larger ship. Then a curling wall of water smashed down, breaking itself over the tug. Martin hugged the stanchion as the avalanche swirled past him; in this instant he saw Marcus fling himself over the bow of the Sirius in a rabid assault upon the Krasny Pioner.

Martin staggered from the bridge. Halfway down the ladder he met Hacker, who, fully dressed and wearing his hat, was fleeing toward the deck. Martin told him to go back to the stokehold and heave coal. Hacker asked no question. He obeyed. Martin, meanwhile, sprang to the main control lever of the engine. He drew it slowly from "Full Ahead" to "Stop." He paused a moment, then he shoved it to "Full Astern."

The cylinders gave forth a coughing rumble. From the boiler came a singing. Soon the gleaming pistons hammered their rhythm in reverse. Waldemar Hacker was stoking. He was flinging coal dust into the open fire hole until Martin slammed shut the door. Water was seeping into the stokehold. Already it slopped ankle-high, and more was coming in.

Martin led the way to the bridge. The ships had disengaged. The Sirius was sagging at the bow; but her stern rode high, breasting the waves. The Krasny Pioner was no more than a shadow receding in the night. Martin took the wheel. While Waldemar Hacker sat quietly on the deck, holding the dead Hein Rode, Martin steered a course, full speed astern, toward the southern tip of Helgoland Isle.

Two months passed. Wild geese winged over Switzerland and Bavaria and crossed the Nether-Saxon moorlands, and they flew on in honking wedges toward their lakes in Sweden. The storks flew northward from Italy, alone or in pairs, and much higher than the wild geese; far aloft they flew, toward Jutland, over mountains and the plains, following the winding reaches of the Norden River.

The month of March began with snow. But then a south wind turned snow to slush. The waters of the Norden River rose steadily among the brown dikes, and when the March rains stopped and sunlight poured from a blue sky the flood was still rising.

The trial of Capt. Martin Helm before the American tribunal in Nordune held neither surprise nor sensation. In a world accustomed to disaster it was an almost humdrum affair, a quiet aftermath of events already overshadowed by happenings of more immediate concern.

The small courtroom was almost bare of spectators. The questioning of witnesses was brief, except in the case of two witnesses for the defense, and one whom the prosecution had produced. This latter was Heinrich Kossack, who had been a stoker aboard the tugboat Sirius which now lay deserted among the derelicts in the shattered harbor of Helgoland. The first witness for the defense was Frau Lisa Helm, née Berzins, to whom the presiding major judge had granted permission to marry the accused in the police jail, on the day preceding the morning of the trial. A third witness desired by the defending attorney had not appeared: Serg. Bayard Smith had gone home to Maryland.

The rescue of Lisa and her Russian captors was described by the commander of a coast-patrol ship. This officer testified that he had sighted the Krasny Pioner dangerously damaged and flying signals of distress on the morning following the collision near Helgoland Isle.

"At first the Soviet vessel declined my offer of assistance," he reported. "I stood by in case. The sea was very rough. The Russians seemed to have trouble with their gine. After three hours they accepted sistance."

"What did you do?"
"I steamed to windward to make a lee for em. They then lowered a lifeboat."
"Krasny Pioner was abandoned?"
"No, sir. A few Russians remained aboard. here was danger of sinking. I wirelessed for tug. I stood by until the tug arrived. She as the Samson of the Royal Navy. She put ine on the Krasny Pioner and a pumping ew, and towed her back to Nordune."
The presiding judge asked, "What be-me of the Russians in the lifeboat?"
"I took them aboard my own vessel. Later anded them at Cuxhaven."
"How many persons were in the lifeboat?"
"Seventeen men and two women."
"Two women?"
"Yes, sir. A Russian stewardess and a tvian woman who claimed she was held soner aboard Krasny Pioner."
"Can you identify the Latvian woman?"
"Yes. She is in this courtroom."
"Lisa Helm?"
"Lisa Berzins."
"Yes. . . . Did she identify herself imme-tely?"
"She asked for protection. At the time she s barely able to speak. She appeared zed."
"Shock?"
"Drugged, I should say."
"Did the Russians offer any explanation her presence on the Krasny Pioner?"
"Yes, sir. The Sutkom—that is the com-ssar of the ship's political committee—ted that Lisa Helm had secreted herself oard Krasny Pioner as a stowaway . . . t she had wished to re-n home to Russia."
"Indeed," said the pre-ng judge. "What did u do?"
"I did not believe the kom. The girl was in a ha. I delivered her to British hospital."
"Did the Russians explain the collision?"
"They said it was sabotage."
A complete reconstruction of the events rounding the ship collision in Helgoland y was precluded by the unavailability of tain participants. The captain and crew he Krasny Pioner had suddenly departed, train, to the Soviet Zone and a new crew l arrived to man the ship after the damage been repaired. Hein Rode lay buried by side of his wife. And the whereabouts of rkriminalsekretär Kurz remained a total stery. There was no doubt, however, ut the death of Marcus Berzins, whose ose had washed ashore on the Butjadin-sands. . . .
Captain Helm!"
Martin arose. He answered preliminary stions in a clipped, clear manner.
hen the prosecutor, lowering his voice, ed, "Did you ever kill a man?"
"Yes, sir."
t seemed that the nakedness of the reply come as a surprise.
"Whom did you kill?"
"I killed my engineer. Wetterman."
"Will you tell the court how you killed r Wetterman?"
"I slew him in a fit of fury."
"Will you elaborate?"
"It was a fury that had grown for months. e a cancer."
"I see."

E trial proceeded with a strange ab-ce of contest between defense and prose-on. In the course of the examination of rtin Helm, the presiding judge took over questioning. He asked:
"When did you first experience this fury?"
"After I came home from Texas."
"Before you actually knew Wetterman?"
"Yes, sir."
"You mean to tell us you experienced this before you met Lisa—er—the present u Helm?"
"Yes, sir."
"And you say it led you to kill Wetter-n?"
"That is correct."
"How could you carry around with you a fury that led you to killing a man before you actually met him?"
"It just grows," Martin said.
"You mean such fury grows like grass?" The judge sounded faintly incredulous.
"Yes," Martin told him. "It grew. It just kept growing."
"It would seem abnormal."
"I am not abnormal," Martin said. "I am a normal man who wants a normal life."
"Very well. . . . You hold, then, that such blind fury as yours is as normal as grass?"
"Yes, sir," said Martin. "It grows from the ruins."

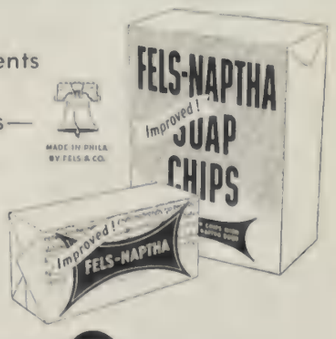
A LITTLE later the prosecutor asked sharply, "Helm, what are you politically?"
"I don't understand."
"Have you been a Nazi?"
"No."
"Are you a Monarchist? A Nationalist? A Liberal? A Socialist? What are you?"
"None of those. I am a patriot."
Silence. A scraping of feet. Then: "Tell me, Herr Helm, what is a patriot?"
"A man who does not want to be ashamed of his country, nor of himself."
"Are you ashamed of your country?"
"Yes. But it is my country. I do not want to be ashamed of it."
"Are you ashamed of yourself?"
"I am."
"Because you killed Wetterman?"
"No. Because I brought about the death of my mate, Hein Rode."
"It has been established," the prosecutor said, "that Captain Rode was murdered in Helgoland Bay by the Balt, Marcus Berzins."
"The death of Captain Rode is my guilt—my guilt alone."
The young daughters of Hein Rode—Margarete, Annemarie and Susanna—were present in the courtroom at the request of the accused. Their well-mannered bearing did much, in the opinion of Waldemar Hacker, to influence the court. They looked clean and warmly dressed. Since their informal adoption by Lisa Helm, who lived with them in the Rode room, they had received loving and consistent care; Mrs. Evelyn Dartman, the wife of the presiding judge, had organized a collection of clothing for the Rode girls among the American women in Helgenau; and Harold Heck of Palestine, Texas, in answer to a nine-page letter which the accused had written, had pledged himself to send to the children of Hein Rode, c/o Frau Lisa Helm, one CARE food package each fortnight.
Following a suggestion whispered by Waldemar Hacker, the defense requested the court to take note of the fact that the accused had assigned a sum of money, representing wages still due him for seven years of labor as a prisoner of war in Texas, to the support of the daughters of Hein Rode. Of this the court took notice. Clearance and transfer of the funds, through the International Red Cross, were under way.
The trial came to an end. The prosecutor, pointing out that the crimes of the accused had been material in ridding Nordune of a band of spies, demanded that the sentence should be imprisonment for life.
Martin Helm was asked if he had anything further to say. He stood up, paused a moment, looking at Lisa, and past her through a dusty window at the brilliant blue sky. "No," he said. He sat down.

THE TRIBUNAL FOUND CAPT. MARTIN HELM guilty of manslaughter and barratry. The sentence, gravely pronounced by Maj. Arcelius Dartman, was nine years' imprisonment at hard labor. His license to navigate any ship on any ocean was revoked. As guards laid handcuffs on Martin, preparing to lead him away, Hacker forwent a strong desire to step forward and bid the captain farewell. He sat very still. This last minute belonged to Lisa Helm.
She came to Martin. There were tears in her eyes. She was bringing him a single,

(Continued on Page 73)

You can never put the blossoms back on the tree after a storm, no matter how hard you try. —CHINESE PROVERB.

New Record for WHITENESS!
Whiter than Ever Before!
World's WHITEST wash!



The "seventh son of a seventh son" couldn't find the truth among the claims of some present-day laundry products. But any housekeeper will understand these plain facts about Improved Fels-Naptha Soap:

Improved Fels-Naptha contains the finest, up-to-the-minute ingredients that give all your washes extra, brilliant whiteness. And Fels-Naptha also gives you cleaner, sweeter washes—because it combines the EXTRA WASHING ENERGY of TWO GREAT CLEANERS—good, golden soap and gentle, active naptha.

Just Remember This:

ONLY IMPROVED FELS-NAPTHA SOAP GIVES YOU THESE THREE WASHDAY ADVANTAGES:

1. Mild, golden soap.
2. Gentle, active naptha.
3. Finer "Sunshine" Ingredients that give white things extra, brilliant whiteness—make washable colors brighter than new.

IMPROVED
Fels-Naptha Soap
BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

Dream Refrigerator Comes True!

The Great NEW

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

$339.95
Model H-92 with Pantry-Dor

Model H-92
with PANTRY-DOR

And All These Features

- COLD-TO-THE-FLOOR—Saves kitche space; adds food space.
- BUILT-IN BOTTLE-OPENER on door fram always handy, easier to use.
- FULL WIDTH FREEZER-LOCKER—Stores 5 lbs. frozen food safely.
- STAINLESS STEEL SHELVES—won't pee stain, rust—stay new, wipe clean.
- "DIFFUSE-O-LITE"—illuminates interi and temperature control; no glare.
- BIG MEAT TRAY—deep, roomy; porcela enameled, holds almost 11 pounds.
- FULL WIDTH AND EXTRA CRISPER—kee over 23 qts. fruit, vegetables, fresh.

There's an IH Refrigerator to fit your family, your kitchen . . . your need . . . your budget! Siz from 7.4 to 9.5 cubic feet—made bigger inside fit smaller floor space. See one—see ALL—now, your nearest IH dealer.

Prices Start a $199.95

SIX MODELS — SIX SIZ
EASY TERMS
Low Down Payment

WOMEN DREAMED IT...
HOME ECONOMISTS PLANNED IT...
it's femineered!

Model H-92's advanced cold-to-the-floor design actually puts a bigger refrigerator inside a smaller cabinet . . . adds Pantry-Dor storage besides! Big 9.2 cubic foot size, with eight more feet of right-in-sight door shelves. It's exactly what you've always wanted!

Every inch is femineered . . . woman-planned for new at-a-glance food finding! Always-needed little things nest in the Pantry-Dor. Fresh meats, frozen foods, milk and beverages store at eye-level, reach-level height. Bulky foods, left-overs and crisper-fresh vegetables are close at hand on big lower shelves.

Women cheer the acid-resisting porcelain enamel interior surfaces; lever-release ice cubes; economical "Tight-Wad" refrigeration unit with 5-year warranty permanently attached to cabinet. See Model H-92—see ALL SIX models.

Shelf Arrangement Is Flexible
Unusual storage is never a problem with Model H-92. Large picture above shows huge space for big turkey when lower half shelf is removed and crisper is placed below meat tray. Day-to-day arrangement at right shows shelf replaced and both crispers in normal position. It's all-season, all-occasion convenience.

Tune in James Melton and "Harvest of Stars" on NBC Sunday afternoons

COPYRIGHT 1950, INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER COMPANY

International Harvester Also Builds McCormick Farm Equipment and Farmall Tractors . . . Motor Trucks . . . Industrial Power . . . Home Freezers ▪ International Harvester Co., 180 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Ill.

(Continued from Page 71)

temmed flower. Lisa smiled as though r that the tears would run down her she stopped smiling.
narcissus," she said. "Yesterday after ame your wife I went out to Borkum
I looked at the house we tried to
——"
meday," Martin told her, "we will that house."
took the flower. Now the tears were over Lisa's cheeks.
's from our garden," she cried. "Do emember? My garden in the pails and t which you laughed?"
es. Your rubble garden."
l the others were frozen to death in the
. This is the only flower that came out, issus. It's for you!"
guards were restless.
arewell," Martin said. He added,
t for me."
ou also wait for me," Lisa said. "I love
Do you believe me?"
believe."
truly love you," Lisa said.
slipped her arms around him. The ters of Hein Rode looked on. Captain Martin stood like a rock, and so they kissed. Hacker sprang up. He felt an unaccustomed wetness in his eyes. He turned his back on them and moved to the window, pulling out his notebook and pencil, pretending that he had suddenly come upon a magnificent idea.

"An empty stomach," he scribbled, irritated by his attempt at pretense, "produces pain, not liberty."

He stopped writing. He looked through the window. Nordune was disturbed by the flood. But there were many minor floods. Broken water pipes, released by the thaw, flooded kitchens and cellars. The sun was shining. In a muddy puddle on the cobbled street a sparrow was bathing. The sparrow was shaking out its feathers. Then it warmed itself in the sun.

The sun. The sparrow. One narcissus, delicate and clean, survived the winter among ruins. Martin Helm was entering a tunnel nine years long.

Resolutely, Waldemar Hacker struck out the sentence he had written about an empty stomach and liberty.

"Springtime," he wrote, "arises most beautifully in lands where the winter is harshest."

BIRTH: A LOVE STORY

(Continued from Page 55)

napping it, with its bones—pulling up pper that fastened the second layer.
uickly as possible she drew on her slip.
ist you wait," she said, turning then niling at him, but she did not mean this.
resent absorbed her wholly, she could ite believe in what was to come and esh as well as her mind believed this it was forever.
eyes turned in to his, and something thought seemed to reach him; for an t the contact was almost unbearable eir eyes met, sweet, and wild, and nate. But now, as though overcome guilt, John broke away; he sprang he bedclothes, putting his feet squarely floor, and sat there on the side of the awning. Vigorously he ran his fingers gh his hair, and then got up.
ok, you get back in bed this morning.
ed to get up, Joyce, you ought to get rest." He patted her, keeping his eyes ng all over the room, before he drew "Does he kick like that when you're our feet too?" he his manner differ-together. And it was The child's kick had between them. "I ht it was only when y down. He goes on at most of the night,
now," and he smiled certain pride. "Must usky, all right." A moment later the was running briskly in the shower, and ard him whistling contentedly, his day

Do not craze yourself with thinking, but go about your business anywhere. Life is not intellectual and critical, but sturdy. —EMERSON.

OR JAMES WAS A KINDLY MAN, HIS WHITE ave a nice softness to his round face, is blue eyes were bright and attentive.
t across the desk and brought his together before him—the arms seemed hort to reach comfortably, and his , capable-looking fingers did not give wining easily, as if their strength kept apart.
ou're fine, fine," he said, in a kindly t voice—distant because it came from erassuring world, the considerate ones surrounded her, protecting her from moment. When now all time seemed to run together like a tributary between ke and the sea that yet embraced them
She was looking forward and back-from the source and from the end;
was the fourth dimension, she sup-
, thinking, The doctor is very consid-
But it was not enough for one who grasping for so much and finding so nurse brought papers to the doctor, g, saying nothing, but smiling more assurances, You're going to be fine, in her white laundered manner.

Fine, fine . . . of course. Fine. But fineness means something else as well. It means drawn clean to a point, all extraneous matter absent.

"Now, look here, have you got a little time?" Doctor James was asking as he reached into his drawer. She had heard this was the thing he did at the last moment, bring out his collection of baby pictures. "My babies," he said.

"All of them?" she faltered politely, as page after page was turned on the little boys, little girls, some so young they seemed to have no sex, all the babies that he had drawn out into the world. Politely, she pointed to one, the only one crying, ugly, perverse. "That's a funny one," she said, and it was, but impatiently he turned the page.

"A pretty young woman like you—you'll probably have a little beauty like this one!" he said, pointing out a stupidly pretty child resplendent in ruffles and a halo of blond curls.

But this was all part of a pattern; now she knew her time was very near, perhaps it was time, but he would not say. It was simply that he wanted her to look ahead from now on beyond the pain, maybe the fear. What fear? The child in her kicked suddenly against her side, and a fist—surely angry, doubled and redoubled against the confining wall. She giggled—she could not help it at this moment—but the doctor took that kindly, too, since he could never let himself be surprised.

"Let me know at once, the first sign you have," he said, closing the book; now he had leveled out her share of encouragement, and there were other women waiting.

Yet as she got up to leave she felt a sudden rush of affection for the man: he was so kind, he spent his days being kind and near; but she could not go with so little. Impulsively she held out her hand, thinking, Another's hand can sometimes fill a void; but he took it brusquely as if this was not in the pattern, shaking it with a slight embarrassment.

Still she felt better as she went out in the air, if only because of another milestone passed, and perhaps the last one; just so many visits and the doctor sends you to the hospital. "Your baby may be late," the doctor always said, cautiously, kindly—meaning, Don't, please, call me in the night with pains that do not mean anything.

The air was cold and clear, and a scent of frozen things was around her, pungently, Creamy-rich! Fresh Fruit Flavor!

FRESH PEACH ICE CREAM

1 can Ten-B-Low
1 cup water
1½ to 2 teaspoons vanilla
1 cup chilled, crushed, sweetened peaches*

a can makes a quart

FOR REFRIGERATOR

1. Set refrigerator control to coldest temperature.
2. Place Ten-B-Low in mixing bowl and gradually add water and vanilla. Mix thoroughly.
3. Pour into freezing tray and freeze until mixture is frozen. You need only add water and flavoring to Ten-B-Low because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks necessary for extra-rich, real ice cream.
4. Break up and spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl. Beat until slightly softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Don't overwhip. Stir in chilled, crushed peaches* which have been sweetened with 2 tablespoons sugar.
5. Immediately return to freezing tray and freeze. That's all there is to it. Nothing to add but flavoring and water. Because only water has been removed, Ten-B-Low is not an imitation. Ten-B-Low is genuine ice cream in heavy concentrated form . . . containing heavier-than-whipping cream lacking in so-called "mixes." Make real ice cream . . . make rich ice cream with Ten-B-Low. Get several cans today!

FREE — 20 delicious recipes, including many unusual and easy-to-make desserts. Just write to Sally Ross, Ten-B-Low Co., Dept. B-57, Columbus 16, Ohio.

*Any fresh, frozen or canned fruit may be substituted for peaches in this recipe.

FOR HAND FREEZER—Just add water, flavoring and freeze.

Makes any flavor

Ten-B-Low

CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

IT'S A WOW!
—this better tomato juice cocktail

-made with...

Easy, quick, here's all you do: Add a pinch of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire for each glassful of tomato juice—mix well, and serve very cold. It's a Wow!

TOPNOTCH QUALITY ...COSTS LESS!

the scent and appearance all along the streets. It made her feel jolly in a wintry, childhood-remembered way, and instead of turning home, she walked on down Madison Avenue, looking in the windows. She looked at dresses and hats and furs and fine antiques, but she did not look at her own reflection. Carefully she ignored this until she came to a florist-shop window and everything in there was so beautiful, all full of white flowers, gardenias, phlox, babies'-breath, roses—all white, such a lovely thought for winter, such a beautiful breathing window, and then she saw herself there with the white flowers surrounding her. She saw that her skin was still clear, and pale, almost white, her face waxen in this setting, but not incongruous. She had a patient look, she observed, with growing joy, almost a gardener's look, as if she might be kneeling there, touching gently at the roots of the flowers.

I'll go see John, she thought suddenly. I'll drop into the office. It's not far, and just today, surely, it will be all right. He will say I should not have come so far. He'll even look a little embarrassed before the people in his office at this huge fertile creature for whom he, obviously, is responsible; but surely I can reach him now, he will understand how my love must see him, be near him at this moment.

The elevator stopped evenly at the tenth floor and she waited for the gate to open, feeling her breathlessness, the leashed excitement of the morning returning. And the gate swung aside and there he was waiting for it.

"John, oh ——" she began, excitedly: it was too perfect, his being there; and then she saw that he did look embarrassed.

"Well," he said. "Joyce, it's ——" and then she saw he was not alone, and a pretty dark girl beside him was smiling brightly, expectantly—but with an amused look, rather than surprise in her smile. "This is Jane Judson," he said hurriedly, as they both got on. "Is anything the matter?" and now, even as she watched, his workday briskness and good humor were turning into anxiety and kindness.

"No, oh, no," she said, and added the words, "I'm fine, darling, really, I just thought—well, I had kind of an impulse, I guess." And suddenly she had to turn from them both to hide the tears, those damnable easy tears, she thought, tensing her throat to hold them back until the pain of this gave her something else to think of. Something else than this farawayness, this being out of touch with so much, so much—— They were under control, quickly, thank God, and she turned to John and the girl again, brightly. I'm bright, really, can't you see. "But you're going someplace ——"

He hesitated for only an instant. "Well—we had some business to talk over. I suggested a bar—won't you come with us? Like a drink?"

THE girl was still smiling and when she spoke her voice was soft, very, very soft and pretty. "I've been on the train," she said. "It was so crowded. Your husband thought I looked too thirsty to concentrate on our business."

"No—well ——" She did not know what she should do; all the poise, all the rules she had made for herself through the years would not apply now. She was trying to play basketball when she knew only tennis rules; what was the scoring, what was "love" in this game? There were all these emotions to choose between: disappointment, and aloneness, and even a small anger she had no right to.

It would be more gracious to go with them, of course. John was insisting now, out on the street, a little roughly, as though he knew how it was for her, and yet was a little angry, too, because it was another way for him. So together they went into a bar where he ordered a sherry for her, while he and the girl—wasn't she pretty, I hate her, I hate her—had tall double Scotches.

It all went badly. Joyce could not carry it off; none of them could. John gave her such a kind smile, but an instant later—she had turned away, trying to say, I'm not spying, I'm not putting in any claims now—she looked back and saw his eyes were holding the dark girl's commandingly, a quick male glance. And the girl was responding sweetly—why not, what did she have to lose?—but the weight of this look rested heavily between Joyce's breasts. Was she to be settled forever in the climate of her pregnancy, a zone of unending, unchanging skies, a lifetime of siesta?

And although John loved her, perhaps more dearly than before, he had paradoxically gained a freedom from their love. She was his wife, she would bear his child, but already it seemed he had discharged in this burden she carried his obligation to her as a lover. And now there was this girl, slim and provocative, and all the other slim-bodied women, their hungers not yet appeased, their destinies unfulfilled. . . .

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Suburban

By William Stafford

In any town I must live near the rind,
Where the animals come around nibbling.
Everything there may be designed,
But near is an edge, not confined.

They must be animals that, though mild,
Come straying in only by nighttime
They don't belong, but lurk, beguiled
By light, but ready to bolt for the wild.

That's how we always feel, we nibblers,
Around any kind of a city:
In front of us lights and glory and stir,
But back of us—country, as friendly as fur.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

"I'm afraid I'll have to leave you." She spoke suddenly, clearly. "I've still got some errands. I'm glad I caught you for a minute, dear ——"

He met the appeal in her look with great fondness, he was so kind; instantly his look was again full of concern, and he moved his eyes apart from the girl's. "Oh, must you? Look, you've been pretty good, Joyce, I'll let you have one more sherry," and his smile was full of depths and affection. But he did not insist, and she had wanted him to.

She got up carefully—yet even so her huge bulk caught at the table edge, and the glasses on it trembled and the contents of one splashed on the girl's glove lying there. "Oh, I'm sorry."

But the girl was reassuring, of course, it was nothing at all.

Joyce got away politely then, leaving them with no unnecessary concern for herself, she was sure. And ran out the door up the street, the tears pouring heavily and she did not care. . . .

The child was still! She was four blocks from the restaurant where she'd left John when suddenly she thought, For a long time I have felt no life, and a terrible fright came over her. She hurried up the street, trying to go faster from this new fear, then thinking, Maybe we will both die, maybe this is the end. All those reassurances, maybe everyone thinks I will die—even John! I hadn't thought my marriage would end so soon, she thought, weeping, and now the silence. Where is the child ——

She did not know if the pain came first, or the fall. They seemed simultaneous, both startled, shocked her into a sudden blurring of vision, and as she went down on the sidewalk there was another, a sharp, unmistakable twinge.

Instantly there were people around her and in the midst a cab driver came and helped her to her feet. A cab driver with a jaunty cap, and cold rough hands.

"Easy now," he said, "easy does it. Now don't worry, please, just tell me where I can take you." Why, he was frankly, openly scared, really anxious, he wasn't trying to cover it over. Out of all the people she knew here was one person in the world who did not pretend, who admitted that he was afraid. "You oughtn't to be walking around like this, alone, ma'am. Are you close to home? Did you hurt yourself?"

And then as she was going to answer him there was another pain, only a slow one this time, starting with such a small feeling and it grew and grew until she felt her face twisted by its intensity.

"SAY, you are in trouble," the man said and led her to his cab, putting her in quickly and shutting the door. "Now you tell me where you want to go and I'm going to take you!"

"The doctor——" she began, but he interrupted her impatiently.

"No time for that," he said, and a note of competence came into his voice. "You're ready for the hospital, ma'am, judging by my own experience—I've got three. Which one? You got reservations, I hope."

"Oh—the Lying In."

Then he was going ahead through traffic and lights, and for a time there was even a policeman riding on the side of the cab waving his arms for other cars to let them by, and turning occasionally and grinning in at her.

She felt the pains now, although not hard, not unendurably. But suddenly she was excited in a new, strong, vital way, and happy and young. She felt herself slowly rising from her cocoon, the way she'd felt at her first Assembly, or before that; she felt all the beginnings she had ever known, all the past she had ever shed dropping from her now surely, surely —— She felt the quiver of excitement between her ribs, like the beginnings of passion, of all the moments, the warm, beautiful moments she had lived through with John. . . .

And then she thought, as she had in the morning, how wonderful it was to be close to him, to know they would always be together, and how he would look when they told him she'd had the baby, after all. He would be so excited ——

She even felt a little bubble of laughter thinking of the girl with him. It really must have been a shock to her, she thought, and she was a nice girl, and didn't show that. I must remember to ask her to the house sometime. . . .

Now she was in a cave with white clouds moving in and out around her, and the sharpness of pain like jagged rock points, stalagmites of pain, stalactites piercing until the sweet cover of the ether cone was placed again upon her face and she could let go, relax, drift deep into the cave with white clouds gentle on the air around her. . . .

Sound. And then activity, the distantly familiar sound of human voices, movements, even laughter, the nearby, angry bleat of a newborn lamb. . . .

Sharply, suddenly Joyce opened her eyes, fighting through the blur until she saw the blocks of white tile clear-cut, gleaming, and the light above. Eyes open, then she heard "She's coming out of it, doctor," the nurse's whiteness leaning over, the doctor's sudden hand pressure on her pulse. "You were fine."

"It's a boy," the doctor said, good kind loving Doctor James and the baby, now you see it, really quite complete, really fine. Oh, he's not ugly like they said he'd be, he's cute. Now only sleep was claiming her, tomorrow she would start to give again of other things, but now, Oh, let sleep come. . . .

And when she opened her eyes again, rested, feeling so marvelously well, she was with John, who was trying to tell her something with his eyes, and she simply let him and thought how wonderful life could be forever after for the three of them, John, herself and the baby. THE END

HOT DAN SAYS:

"Time to eat Outdoors...

Time for FRENCH'S!"

FRENCHWISE BARBECUE SAUCE

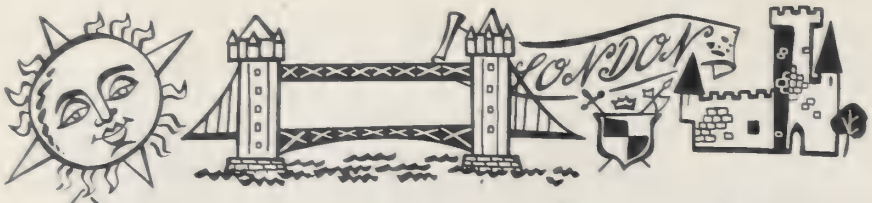
tablespoons butter or margarine • 1 medium onion, minced • 1 small green pepper, minced
2 tablespoons brown sugar • 2 tablespoons French's Cream Salad Mustard
1 tablespoon French's Worcestershire Sauce • 1 teaspoon salt • ¾ cup ketchup

Melt butter or margarine; add onion and green pepper; cook slowly 2 minutes. Add remaining ingredients; simmer 10 minutes. Yield: 8 servings.

Make supper on that outdoor grill an vent! Try Hot Dan's delectable French-ise sauce with sizzling hamburger or ot dogs. It's superb! Only French's Mustard has that special flavor—you'll nd it's smoother, creamier, too. It's a blend of the finest spices, mustard seed, and vinegar money can buy!

This famous golden mustard has a delightfully different taste—brings out the full flavor of meat, gives food added zest. No wonder it's America's favorite!

ARGEST SELLING PREPARED MUSTARD IN THE U. S. A. . . . (Also made in Canada)



FREE! Hot Dan's new recipe book—"DINING DELIGHTS"

Send your name and address to
The R. T. French Company,
1608 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

BUY-LINE

THERE'S an art to packing a suitcase . hence these tips that will help your clot emerge from your luggage with some sembla to their pre-packed freshness. You can't t everything you'd like . . . so cull out the " pendables" and then pack heavy things f Put shoes on the bottom (stuff with hosi

THERE'S SOUTH SEA ISLAND SPLENDOR in plastic housewares . . . especially those "made of STYRON" (Dow polystyrene). They're as gay and colorful as tropical flowers . . . and both durable and inexpensive. Truly, nothing can equal the usefulness and attractiveness of staple household items "made of STYRON" . . . which is why most people (I for one!) prefer them to glassware and metalware. Why do I specifically recommend "made of STYRON" plastics? Before The Dow Chemical Company grants this label, the plastics products must pass the rigid standards of their Product Evaluation Committee . . . by meeting all their requirements as to functional design, quality of workmanship and correct application of plastics. So look for this label of quality; then choose:

Refrigerator Boxes Bowls Tumblers
Cake Covers Paper Towel Holders
Measuring Cups Barbecue Plates

And many other staple housewares you need for daily living.

IN A COTTAGE ON THE COAST or a mansion in the mountains . . . wherever you summer, you'll see luscious blackberries. So why not put up jams and jellies while the berries last! There's a quick, easy way to do it . . . use CERTO, the amazing liquid pectin product. I find that with CERTO I get a "bonus" of about 50% more glasses, too...PLUS more fresh, blackberry flavor, fragrance and color in each. For proof, try this CERTO "short-boil" recipe for the world's best Blackberry Jelly:

Crush thoroughly about 3 qts. fully ripe blackberries. Place in jelly bag and squeeze out juice. Measure 4 cups juice into very large saucepan; add 7½ cups sugar; mix well. Place over high heat and bring to boil, stirring constantly. At once stir in 1 bottle CERTO. Bring to full rolling boil; boil hard 1 min., stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 11 six-oz. glasses.

FUN AND ADVENTURE in making your favorite recipes will be yours the minute you become the proud possessor of a new 1950 GENERAL ELECTRIC Triple-whip Mixer. It's really the most wonderful mixer I've ever used . . . but only seeing is believing. So visit your G-E Appliance Dealer today . . . get him to show you: The completely new Juicer which "juices" up to a dozen oranges . . . without clogging. Notice the brand new Speed Selector . . . with 12 speeds to choose from and "worlds" of constant power in each. See how ABC-easy to clean its 3 "whirlwind" beaters are . . . for there's no center shaft to get in your way. Discover how its built-in light lets you really see what you're mixing, that it's amazingly light when used as a portable . . . and that you get a four quart bowl, a two quart bowl, plus the wonderful new "no-clog" juicer. Now you know why I'm so enthusiastic about the new G-E Triple-whip Mixer . . . and why you ought to have one, too. P.S. My first choice as a beautiful, practical wedding gift.

YOU COULD TRAVEL THE WORLD OVER . . . but you'd never find anything more wonderful for hearty protein main dishes than DEMING'S Salmon. It's salmon at its delicious, mouth-melting best . . . delicate and firm-textured with a tantalizing tang-o'-the-sea in every flavorful morsel. DEMING'S Salmon "guards" your purse and your time with a canny Scotsman's care, too . . . for it costs only pennies a serving and fixes "wink-quick". Try it in taste-enticing casseroles, salmon loaves and creamed . . . as well as in a luscious hot-weather salad like this:

Mix together 2 cups DEMING'S Salmon, ½ cup chopped cucumber (which has been marinated in vinegar), ½ cup chopped celery and mayonnaise. Serve on crisp lettuce with radish roses and green onions in season.

DEMING'S Salmon has so many "talents", I keep both kinds handy, DEMING'S Sirloin Salmon (that old favorite Alaska Red Sockeye) with skin and backbone removed, and DEMING'S Recipe Pink Salmon in the regular pack.

VACATION BOUND? Well, whether you travel to the mountains, the seashore, the Big City or foreign lands, be sure your summer whites and prints look their loveliest! They will if you wash them with BLU-WHITE Flakes . . . for they work two ways at once to give you the brightest, whitest washes ever. First, they blue evenly without streaks or spots (never over-blue!) . . . and second, they work with any soap or detergent to get clothes cleaner, whiter and brighter! But that's not the only reason you'll want to use BLU-WHITE Flakes for both your washing machine laundry and washbowl dainties . . . the NEW, thinner flakes dissolve instantly, are wonderfully KIND to your hands, and they're economical-plus. As a matter of fact, I find that of all leading products that blue and wash, BLU-WHITE Flakes give you most for your money . . . ounce for ounce and penny for penny. So remember these advantages of BLU-WHITE . . . then remember to get a package today.

IN CHINA they'd say it one way and in France another . . . but it all means the same thing . . . you can't match the new FRIGIDAIRE "Thrifty-30" Electric Range! All "dressed up" in a snowy-white, Lifetime Porcelain finish, it's the BIGGEST little range in the world . . . "boasting" such BIG features as: New GIANT Oven that stretches clear across the range . . . BIG enough to bake 6 pies, 10 loaves of bread or a huge "harvest-style" dinner on surprisingly little current. New, faster-cooking, 5-Speed Radiantube Units. New counter-balanced shelf-type door. New High-Speed, Waist-High Broiler and new switch knobs out in front. . . . Still this new FRIGIDAIRE "Thrifty-30" Electric Range is little in size and cost . . . is only 30 inches wide (perfect for today's small kitchens!) and costs only $169.75 in most localities. Discover the many other reasons why you can't match a FRIGIDAIRE . . . at your FRIGIDAIRE Dealer's.

YOU DON'T NEED TO SAIL TO TROPICS to enjoy a tantalizing taste of tropical magic . . . it's yours in every can of DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice. It has a distinctive, tempting flavor all its own . . . not too tart, not too sweet—the pe juice for all 'round use. Wh DEL MONTE such a big favorite cause they select only the juiciest apples at the very moment when ural tartness and sweetness are in fect balance . . . then check for fla quality and uniformity before "hustle" it into the can for your en ment. That's why it has such a tropical, sun-ripened goodness . . . why its mellow, tart-sweet flavor is ideal "accompaniment" for en good things to eat. This healt wholesome drink is a good so of Vitamin C, too . . . so ask Grocer for DEL MONTE Pinea Juice. Make it your mealtime, sn time, party-time beverage.

SEE AMERICA FIRST . . . for it offers you the best of everything. And high on th of good things you'll find North, East, South and West are NABISCO SUGAR WAFERS . . . as American as the Fourth of July. They've been the famous favorites loved by generations . . . for they're twice nice. Each cookie gives you two crisp, golden wafers plus a delicious helping of fondant filling. That's why nothing spells "party" half so sweetly as fondant-filled NABISCO SUGAR WAFERS, especially served like this:

Sprinkle chopped chocolate over ice cream in sherbet glass. Top with maraschino cherry. Insert NABISCO SUGAR WAFERS around ice cr inside sherbet glass. A heavenly sundae!

But don't make the mistake of substituting any other cookie for NABISCO SU WAFERS . . . they're unique in cookiedom. So always look for the famous NABISCO Seal. It's your assurance of the luscious best!

I REMEMBER IN MY CHILDHOOD DAYS

how cookies and the cookie jar always went together. But nowadays I've learned how well cookies and CELLOPHANE go together too! In the first place, you can see what you buy . . . tell whether the cookies are chocolate or oatmeal, and whether the filling is lemon or vanilla. Secondly, DU PONT CELLOPHANE keeps them fresh and full of flavor—for today, most bakers use moisture-proof CELLOPHANE to seal in oven-freshness and bring cookies to you at their best—appetizing and delicious. And last, but by no means least, DU PONT CELLOPHANE protects cookies from dirt and handling . . . a vitally important factor since cookies go into mouths (mostly children's!) and should be completely pure and clean. CELLOPHANE is your guide to quality, freshness and purity . . . so look for CELLOPHANE-packaged cookies.

THE VOICE OF EXPERIENCE—is it te you to give up iced coffee?—but a dreading a change in daily habits, ing to yourself "don't bother"? you certainly need a cool, summer fresher" . . . so let me tip you off easy, pleasant way to heed the goo vice of that voice . . . switch from tea or coffee ICED POSTU It's a delicious lightful change and helps make feel so much be You see, both c and tea contain caffein. And many people can drink them wit ill-effect, others are caffein-suscep and suffer nervousness, indigestion sleeplessness. That's why I recomm 100% caffein-free ICED POST a tempting breeze-cool refresh Dissolve 4 level tablespoons INST POSTUM in ½ cup of boiling w Add 4 cups water. Pour over cracke in tall glasses. Add sugar and cream sired. Serves 4. Youngsters love it!

by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

rie or cosmetics wrapped separately in tissues or washcloths) fit them singly, soles to lining, around the sides of your bag. roll or fold bathing suits, sweaters, slips and anything that won't kle into the semi-circle made by shoes . . . and put belts, gloves nankies into crannies. Last come suits and dresses . . . stuff sleeves shoulders with tissue, place skirt in first and fold with tissue r in all folds.

Y MONA LISA'S SECRET will n a secret . . . but I can tell he secret of how you can a wave that feels as soft as ally curly hair, looks as and lasts as long as a $20 anent . . . yet costs only $1! is it? TONI Home anent . . . for its exclusive, gentle- creme waving lotion was espe- created to give you a frizz-free that looks, feels and "acts" like ally curly hair. This explains why I is the only wave which has given over 67 million lovely, long-lasting waves for women with every type hair . . . even gray, bleached and baby-fine. And here's something else you'll like about TONI . . . it's the only wave that gives you Midget SPIN Curlers. They make it far easier and faster to have perfect neckline curls . . . a "must" these days of short hair-do's. So get the new Combination TONI Refill Kit with 6 Midget SPIN Curlers today . . . a $1.50 value for only $1.33!

HER STROLLING DOWN COUNTRY or dancing the whole night gh . . . you can't afford the il hurt of a corn. And there's no n why you should . . . especially BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters give uick relief—safe removal. Just one around your sore toe at the first sign of a corn . . . see how it instantly ends agonizing shoe pressure. Then Nupercaine, a BLUE-JAY "exclusive", speedily soothes away surface pain . . . while gentle ation loosens the corn's hard o that you can easily lift it out ew days. And BLUE-JAY stays cause it wraps on! It's safe, quick! If the corn is on your toe, use BLUE-JAY Little Toe Plasters . . . for they contain all gular BLUE-JAY features . . . e especially designed to fit your oe. So be foot-loose and fancy Get both kinds of BLUE-JAY Plasters. At drug counters every-

TRAMP STEAMERS make a vacation paradise . . . but here, as on the "floating palaces" or however you travel, NYLON Stockings belong.

So let me remind you again that many factors will affect their wear . . . such as fabric construction, proper fit and length, care of handling, proper garter placement and denier. Denier, you know, is the weight and thickness of each thread of NYLON yarn in stockings . . . so the higher the denier number the stronger the thread . . . which means that a 15 denier is only half as heavy and half as strong as a 30 denier. Before the war most NYLON Stockings were 30 and 40 denier . . . yet today many women prefer the lovely 15 deniers because they're so sheer and flattering. DU PONT makes the NYLON yarn in stockings . . . over 600 manufacturers make the stockings. For other facts about the care of stockings, write Nancy Sasser, Dept. J, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, for FREE Nylon Booklet.

IN ROME DO AS THE ROMANS! Particularly when the fashion is becoming . . . today's trend to new short hair-do's certainly is to most n. Yet it presents a challenge . . . for short hair means frequent shampoos and short ends often seem to become rittle and unruly. What to do about it? Why, use new ML Shampoo . . . for unlike shampoos with drying in- nts, it has a natural oil base. This caresses your hair to softness . . . leaving it a-glow with natural highlights ach once-stubby end feathery-soft and angelic to man- And KREML Shampoo's magic new ingredient, an", has special cleansing qualities . . . makes your hair r by getting it cleaner. Naturally, then, you can and use KREML Shampoo often to keep your short hair-do picture pretty.

A TICKET to delightful smoking enjoyment? Then I suggest you get CAVALIERS . . . for this distinctive new King-Size cigarette is the surest "route" to your destination. At the very first puff, you'll discover you're on the right track, because CAVALIERS combine extreme mildness with smooth, mellow flavor. And the reason is this; they're a special, modern blend of fine, light tobaccos of the original Colonial type, which are naturally mild and mellow. Furthermore, you'll find that CAVALIERS offer you a "passport" to popularity, too . . . just extend that smart, white to anyone . . . and see how quickly the "talk-ball" starts rolling as you enjoy nger, more leisurely smoking of their mild, flavorful goodness. CAVALIERS iced no higher than other popular brands . . . so when you pack your bags, a carton inside . . . and always serve them to family and guests at home.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME after all . . . but it's up to Y-O-U to make it lovely as it is cozy and comfortable. How? By accenting the loveliness of your living room, foyer (any room!) with a CAVALIER Cedar Chest . . . this exquisite Lowboy from the CAVALIER Decorator Group, for instance. It's smartly styled and made of Honduras mahogany veneer with delicate carvings and carved ball and claw feet, then hand-rubbed to bring out the mellow glow of the beautiful cabinetwood. The body, of course, is ¾ inch thick protective Tennessee aromatic cedar. That's why this CAVALIER Lowboy "makes" a room . . . especially when ornamented with your most prized figurines or candelabra. Of course, these traditional decorator designs aren't the only CAVALIER Cedar Chests . . . there are many stunning modern Console styles, too. See them at your Furniture Dealer's or write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Avenue, New York 16, for FREE illustrated folder.

PUT ROMANCE IN YOUR SUMMER TRIP... by taking a tip from the world's most beautiful cover girls. Beauty is their business, you know . . . and 9 out of 10 of them tell me that SWEETHEART Soap is their beauty secret. And it's easy to understand why . . . for SWEETHEART Care reveals your complexion's true, sparkling loveliness . . . giving it a radiant freshness and rose-petal clearness men admire and other women envy. It happens so quickly, too . . .

in fact, in only one week after you change to thorough care—with SWEETHEART Soap—your skin will be softer, smoother and younger! And, I can assure you that pure, mild SWEETHEART is the soap that agrees with your skin . . . has a mild, creamy lather that's so gentle it's safe for even a baby's tender skin! Beauty is as much your business as it is a cover girl's, so share the secret of these American beauties and give your skin SWEETHEART Care. For economy, get the new, large bath size.

WHAT WOULD SUMMER BE without picnics? What would picnics be without lemonade? And where would Mother be without REALEMON to save her time and energy making that lemonade! With REALEMON'S help there's no fuss or muss making enough lemonade to go around at any picnic. Lemonade takes just fifteen seconds with REALEMON. For a full gallon dissolve 1 cup of sugar (or 2 cups for extra-sweet) into 2 cups of REALEMON BRAND LEMON JUICE. Add water and ice. That's all there is to it. I've been keeping extra bottles of REALEMON on hand during the lemonade season, so I'll have plenty for all my lemon juice needs—cooking, baking and flavoring. I just can't tell you what a boon it is to have zesty, tangy lemon juice in a bottle—all ready to use. And have you tried it as a hair rinse yet? Ask for REALEMON!

IT'S A LONG JOURNEY AHEAD for the youngsters before they reach "adult-land"... so give them a good start by helping them develop strong, healthy teeth. And the best "passage" you can buy is IODENT No. 1-plus-A Toothpaste . . . and the reasons are many. First, it's the only dentifrice made by a dentist especially for children . . . and second, it contains all the superior brightening qualities of the regular IODENTS . . . plus Ammonium Compounds. These fight decay through their killing action against germs which science believe cause tooth decay. I'm sure you realize that it's in a child's early years that decay fighting action is most important . . . so get IODENT No. 1-plus-A, with its special new flavor children love, today. I recommend IODENT No. 2-plus-A for the grown-ups . . . because it, too, contains Ammonium Compounds AND helps "erase" ugly smoke tar deposits from hard-to-brvten teeth. The cost? No more than the Regular IODENTS.

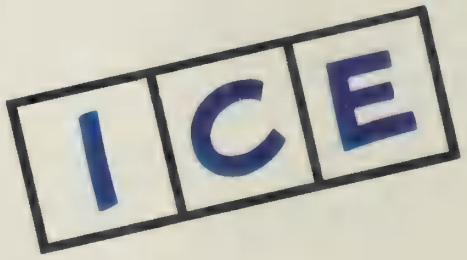
THE GREAT OUTDOORS beckons come the good old summertime . . . your "cue" to pack a lunch and go picnicking. So I'd like to call your attention to the perfect "twosome" for a perfect lunch:

One, the A LA CARTE PICNIC HAMPER . . . a handsome, roomy basket with a Fiberglas-insulated compartment on each side made of VINYLITE BRAND PLASTIC sheeting. It's a sturdy, versatile material that's waterproof, easy-to-wipe clean and doesn't absorb food odors or grease spots . . . and all seams are electronically sealed to keep air out. Two, the PAILMASTER . . . also made of VINYLITE PLASTIC sheeting with Fiberglas insulation. Holds plenty of cold drinks and ice cubes or hot beverages . . . with a top that zips closed for airtightness.



Both are made by PLASTIC SHEET FABRICATORS, INC., New York City. And don't forget . . . you can depend on 'em to last a long, l-o-n-g time . . . "thanks" to tough, durable VINYLITE BRAND PLASTIC, a product of Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation.

What Three-letter Word Solves All Overcrowded Refrigerator Problems?

Here's the perfect, economical answer to your n for more refrigerator space: genuine ice—in a bea ful, handy auxiliary ice chest.

An ice chest keeps vegetables garden-fresh vitamin-rich. It holds plenty of bottled beverage quickly chills more if they are needed in a hurry

And you never run short of genuine ice for and every occasion—genuine ice, the pure, crys clear, taste-free, slow-melting kind that only an company can make.

An auxiliary ice chest is inexpensive to buy economical to use. Ask your local Ice Comp about one today.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ICE INDUSTR
Dept. BR, 1706 L Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C

Genuine ICE FILLS EVERY COOLING NEED

Special For Hosts

Don't let your friends call you an "ice miser." Get plenty of ice cubes from your local Ice Company—genuine cubes . . . pure, taste-free, slow-melting.

Home-Made Ice Cream

Old-fashioned, velvety ice cream made with genuine ice in a home freezer has a texture and flavor no "still-frozen" substitute can equal.

When You Entertain

Use crushed ice generously in serving appetizers, fruit juices, salads and sea-foods. And be sure to have plenty of genuine ice on hand for beverages. Your local Ice Company can supply you with genuine ice for every occasion.

When You Shop

Get your money's worth when you buy vegetables! Up-to-date stores always keep their vegetables garden-fresh by displaying them in crushed ice.

Free Money-Saver

Send a postcard today for your free copy of "Money-saving Tips on Marketing"—a complete guide to buying vegetables, poultry, sea-food.

1850—ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF ICE PROGRESS—1950

SYPHILIS: HOW IT SPREADS

(Continued from Page 41)

a slender girl in a dirty housecoat an-ed, her hair done up in curlers. He called Martha, taking a long guess, and sug-ed she step outside a minute. She hesi-d, and then, closing the door behind her, ed him on the porch.

e gave her the story rapidly, but in a lensed version. He said he'd heard that ontagious disease" was going the rounds ng Al's patrons and that he thought d better get a blood test. He didn't men- Harrison's name; you never mention a act's name even when you are sure—all rmation is held confidential.

lartha nodded in a scared sort of way and she'd get up to the health department ıy. The investigator went back to the noted developments on the Harrison , and moved on. That evening he mailed report to the center. It beat Martha there bout four days; she was found to have ıilis in a highly infectious stage.

leanwhile, at the center, there had been r developments. A young man, black of and eye, had arrived from Sandusky. was listed on his entry blank as a lk-in"—which meant he had arrived at local health department asking for a d test voluntarily. Sandusky was one of state's many cities that last summer had nonth-long educational campaign on real disease. Thousands of match s had been distributed, each of them ying a message of warning against ıilis. There had been a daily barrage of o commercials, some shows on the sub- and countless newspaper stories. There even been a tent show at the nty fair, with free movies, and a side full of pamphlets. The information had k in the man's mind, and when he noticed there was a sore on his penis which 't go away, he'd gone to his local health artment, and then to the rapid treat-t center.

t the center, however, he had to be per-led that it was friendlier in the long run im to reveal the girls he had been with to try to give them the false protection lence. He was asked to go back in his d over the last six months. He then gave names of three girls. The first was a high-ol girl he'd been going with and whom aid he'd only kissed. The second was a ress at the diner where he usually ate er; it was near the factory where he ed. The third was almost unknown to —she was a girl he'd met at a church so-one night, not very pretty, he said, but g, who walked with a slight limp. All new of her name was "Molly."

s interview took place on the same day public-health nurse received the in-igator's report on the Harrison case. The ription of the two Mollys added up: ooked as though they were the same also looked as if Martha might be a hilis Sally"—a girl so promiscuous that she caught syphilis you couldn't catch with it, even though you might catch up n her.

he public-health nurse had to have more one interview with her before she'd , however. Even seated in front of the in a comfortable chair with a cigarette he hand, she was sullen and scared. The e was understanding; she saw only too y battered and bewildered teen-agers. started out by saying her record showed tha was from a decent family and she t feel pretty bad about her life. Martha ed that she did, although she added gerently that her family hadn't been decent to her, that her father was pretty h when he got started. She poured out a y of trouble and wound up by saying she planning to get married soon, but her é was a married man and "couldn't seem reak loose." The interviewer suggested it would be a terrible thing if he had ıilis and didn't know it. Martha was ady educated to this remark by the center movies of what ravages syphilis wrought. She broke, saying she'd tell anything that would help, if they'd promise not to get anyone into trouble. She listed five men at the first sitting, and a day later she came back in and named one more. The public-health worker had a feeling that perhaps there was at least another one. The Kinsey report indicated that promiscuous males averaged seven contacts in six months, but the center had a hard time getting more than four usually, and the U. S. Public Health Service only asked officially that they get two.

Martha's six included her "fiancé"—a truck driver whom she saw in Riverton—a boy she knew through her sister on Lake Erie, the man she picked up in Sandusky (she remembered his name: most women know more about their contacts than men do of theirs), three boys she'd met in Al's Place, and Harrison. Epi slips—the nickname for epidemicological reports—were sent to the health departments of all areas mentioned, giving them the names of the contacts and asking for blood-test results.

Meanwhile, the report from her Sandusky pickup's contacts had come in: his high-school sweetheart did not have syphilis; his waitress date did.

The epi slips on Martha's friends, however, got reports very slowly. The truck driver who she thought "couldn't break loose" had separated from his wife. His wife wouldn't give any forwarding address; she said she didn't know what had happened to him and didn't care, either. A request for his home address was sent to the company he worked for, but because of the public-health department's confidential role in the proceeding, it was written on plain paper with the return address that of the investigator's home. It received no answer. A carefully worded phone call was then made, and it turned out that the man was believed to be living in Columbus, at a rooming house many of the truck drivers used. He was, however, at the moment in Indianapolis on an interstate run. An epi form was dispatched to the Indianapolis public-health department, but it arrived too late—he was on his way back to Columbus. When he got back to Columbus, he went to a different rooming house. Finally, however, he was picked up by a veteran investigator at a bar where many of the bus and truck drivers hung out. His blood test showed he had syphilis; his interview showed he had probably caught it from Martha, but he listed two other girls: one in Indianapolis, and one in Columbus.

Of Martha's three home-town boy friends, one was found quickly at Al's Place, the other two had left town. No one seemed to know what had happened to them; the information on them was filed in the "case open" file for the time being. The one at Al's Place was found to be negative.

By this time, the Harrison case had brought eight patients to the center (including the Harrison baby), but the truck-driver's Columbus girl friend rapidly swelled the number of cases found. She was a well-dressed, well-spoken girl, with pretty red hair and a nice face. She had come to Columbus from a small town in Kentucky, eager to "make something" of herself. She had become a clerk in a small dry-goods store and had persuaded her employer to let her redecorate his windows. She had done a good job and had been promoted rapidly to a title of "decorator"—but her salary of $18 a week had not been raised. Although it was never proved against her, it appeared that she added to this by a mild trade in pickups on the side. She frequented two bars: the easy-going bar where the bus and truck drivers hung out, and where she could always find a bored, homeless man who wanted to kill an evening; and another bar, a hotel bar, where, late at night, the bartender welcomed unescorted girls as an aid to business. The city had cracked down on organized houses of prostitution, but the pickup girls had proved too slippery a problem to whip. They were hard to spot, hard to get evidence against, and hard to catch when once known. The more obvious were warned, but the subtle girls, like red-haired June, often managed a thriving business before getting into trouble.

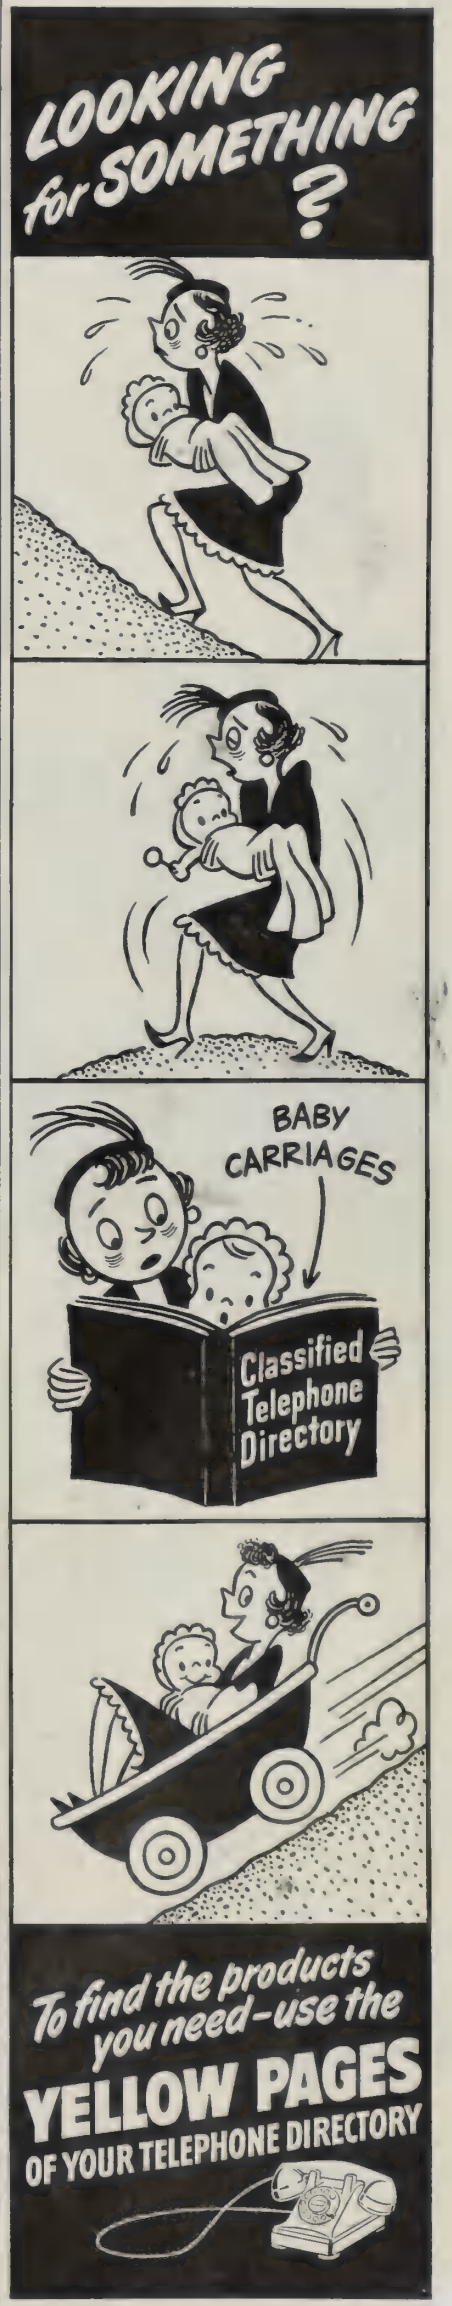
JUNE never admitted to prostitution but, being intelligent, saw quickly the need for the blood testing of her contacts, and produced what information she had. Her clues to identity and permanent address were slim, however: out of the list of nine she named, only three were located. Five of the six not found were from out of town, and the meager information she gave was forwarded with small hope to Chicago, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. The sixth was a student at Ohio State University; though she thought she had his name and address, it turned out that no such name was listed at the university and the street name he had given her did not exist. The department and the university both worked hard trying to turn him up because of the danger both to him and to the other students who might be his contacts, but it was futile. In attempting to protect himself from scandal, he had failed to protect his health.

The three men found all had syphilis; one was a businessman, one a teacher, one a bus driver. All went to private doctors for treatment, so it was never known what their contacts might have been; private doctors do not always try to find out, and when they do, do not always report their findings to the public-health department. They are required by law to report all syphilis cases, but many doctors think this—and contact interviewing—is an invasion of the patient's private life.

As for the diner waitress whom the man from Sandusky had named as one of his friends, she turned out to be a woman in her forties who had been deserted by her husband some ten years before, and left with the support of a daughter now fifteen years old. She was a hard-working, well-meaning woman, but not too well educated and quite ashamed of her syphilis and the casual relationship in which she had caught it. She was quite relieved to discover that she could not have passed it along to any of her customers through the food and dishes she handled, and vowed that the young man was the first man she had gone home with in over a year. She took a serious interest in studying the disease while at the center, and went home with a group of pamphlets which she said she was going to show her daughter so that such a thing might never happen to her.

With her treatment, the Harrison file was closed. If there were more investigators, perhaps a few more of the unfound contacts might have been found. If there were some way to persuade more private doctors to take a public-health view on private patients, perhaps a few more contacts might have been revealed. If there were more widespread knowledge of the disease, there might have been more voluntary co-operation. And if there were better sex knowledge, a greater amount of emotional maturity and a higher moral standard, there probably would have been no case at all.

Those, however, are the "ifs." The thousands of cases like the Harrison case that occupy our public-health workers every day are the actuality. THE END



★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Vision

By Walter de la Mare

"I see no sense in poetry," says
Glimm;
And poetry, it seems, stirs none in him.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

NOW! NO FEDERAL TAX ON Durkee's Own (AA) Yellow Margarine

Is that poster really true?

Yes, since July 1st Durkee's yellow Margarine is absolutely tax free!

That's right, ladies. Durkee's Own Grade AA Margarine in yellow quarter pound prints is NOW TAX FREE!

Mild, sweet Durkee's is made from selected vegetable oils and pasteurized fat-free milk. Every pound enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A. Lucky housewives in 33 states can NOW buy Durkee's Own Grade AA Margarine—as established by our own research and control laboratories—already colored yellow at no extra cost.

Durkee's is available three ways:

1. WHITE . . . in the Economy-Package
2. WITH CAPSULE . . . in Color-Ease bag
3. YELLOW . . . in ¼-lb. prints where its sale is permitted.

LOOK FOR THIS SEAL!

© 1950, The Glidden Company

Quick and Easys for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

THE most exciting thing in life for Peggy and Joe is their baby, born last month. Peggy says she thought she was busy when she was a secretary at the JOURNAL, but a baby is a whole new career.

Fortunately, she concentrated on learning to cook in the early months of her marriage. "It was fun—even the flops," Peggy says. "Now I cook the quick and easy way and have extra time for the baby, which is even more fun."

SUNDAY DINNER
Doubles for Company
Broiled Chicken
New Potatoes and Peas
Green Salad
Ice Cream
with Chocolate Macaroons

"Broiled or fried chicken still means Sunday dinner to us. We have it for company, too, which is quite often. I've made quite a reputation for myself with the chocolate macaroons. Being a beginner cook and not having too many specialties in my repertoire, I always make the macaroons when we have first-time guests. It's not only flattering to have everybody like them—but they usually ask for the recipe."

CHOCOLATE MACAROONS

Beat 2 egg whites stiff. Add ¼ teaspoon salt and ½ cup sugar gradually—that is, a tablespoon at a time—beating well after each addition. Meanwhile, melt 1 package semisweet chocolate bits in top of double boiler over boiling water. Keep the lid on to speed things up. When the melted chocolate is cool, fold it into the meringue. Then fold in 1 package shredded coconut and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Lay brown wrapping paper on your cooky sheets. Drop batter by heaping teaspoonfuls onto the paper, several inches apart. (Do not grease the paper for these.) Bake in a moderately slow oven, 325°F., about 13 minutes. Cool slightly a couple of minutes before removing cookies from the paper. Makes 30–40 cookies. They keep well in a tightly covered tin box.

MONDAY
Our Toss-Up Meal
California Omelet
Our Salad Special
Cantaloupe

"I now turn out a pretty goo omelet and enjoy experimentin with added bits of this and that fo new combinations. It's a dandy wa to use up leftovers. A lone leg Sunday's chicken, for instance, us ally ends up in an omelet when the isn't enough for anything else. Joe a green-salad fiend, too, so when th rest of the meal seems sort of lea we make lots of salad—nothin fancy: lettuce or other greens, o ion, green pepper, sometimes tom toes, blue cheese or whatever w have. Joe just won't go for jellie fruit creations. Fruit for us has i place before breakfast and as a de sert, but not combined with lettuc no matter how much some peop may like it.

"I'm true to the garlic-rubbe salad bowl, chilling the greens, an waiting to make the dressing ju before dinner. We never make quantity of dressing in advance an never use exact measurements. It the only thing I've become accom plished enough to manage withou a recipe—and believe it or not, always turns out okay. After mix it, Joe tastes. If anything amiss, he knows what it is an doctors it up!"

CALIFORNIA OMELET

Beat 3 eggs thoroughly. Add 2 tabl spoons water or milk, ½ teaspo salt and a good dash of pepper, tablespoons diced avocado, 3 tablespoons minced chicken and tablespoon minced chives. Heat 1 tablespoons butter or margarine an 8-inch skillet. When good an hot, pour in the egg mixture. Tu down the heat. Now and then r spatula under omelet so liquid pa runs to bottom of pan. When almo but not quite set, fold over in ha moon shape and turn out on h platter.

TUESDAY
More Than Likely—Hamburger
Chile Favorite—With Rice
Big Salad
Cold Grapes

"Tuesday nights we have a l steak or chops, if the budget's ahe that week. But more than likely isn't, if we've had guests Saturd or Sunday, and I do something wi hamburger, which we like in manner of ways. A kind of chile our favorite."

PHOTO BY STUART

gy and Joe like to top off dinner with ice cream and chocolate sauce.

ILE FAVORITE—WITH RICE

wn ½ pound ground round steak tablespoon bacon fat. Add 1 on, chopped, 1 carrot, grated, ½ n pepper, minced, ½ teaspoon 1 eight-ounce can tomato sauce, teaspoon pepper, ¼ teaspoon e powder and ½ teaspoon Wor-ershire sauce. Then add 1 bouil-cube dissolved in ¾ cup hot er, and 1 cup canned kidney ns. Simmer 10 or 15 minutes.
e on rice.

WEDNESDAY
My Day "Out"
Steak Sandwiches
ozen French Fries (maybe)
Sliced Tomatoes
Ice Cream with ld-Time Chocolate Sauce

Wednesday is my off-the-record
—no work. In the afternoon I etimes help with a Brownie Girl ut troop—or do my shopping le someone takes care of the y. Dinner has to be truly quick easy that night. To me, this is it. What's more, it satis-a hungry husband. I buy the en sandwich steaks and take n out of the freezing compartt at noon. We like them on t with pan gravy. I usually have cream and chocolate sauce on
d. The sauce is the real old-time
d. They used to serve it hot on cream when I was a youngster.
drips down over the ice cream sort of hardens. We love it."

D-TIME CHOCOLATE SAUCE
(for ice cream)

3 squares unsweetened choco-, ¼ cup butter or margarine, 1½ s confectioners' sugar and ⅝ cup small can evaporated milk in top of a double boiler. Cover and t over boiling water. Stir together when chocolate melts. Cook 30 utes, stirring now and then. This ount almost fills a pint container.
here's plenty left over to store in refrigerator for another time.
eat each time before serving.

THURSDAY
We Like Casseroles
Chipped-Beef Casserole
Corn on the Cob
Cucumber-and-Onion Salad
Watermelon

"Thursday night we have a stew or casserole dish. Even in warm weather, Joe wants something hot and filling. At dinnertime, he wants dinner; I've never been able to get away with serving a cold salad as the main attraction, no matter how appetizing and decorated it may be. This casserole is easy to make and has only a short stay in the oven, so it doesn't heat up the kitchen much."

CHIPPED-BEEF CASSEROLE

Shred one 3½-ounce jar chipped beef. Frizzle it in 1½ tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 1 can cream-of-chicken soup, ½ cup milk, 2 cups diced cooked potatoes. Heat, mix well, season with pepper, 1 teaspoon grated onion, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard and 1 tablespoon crumbled blue cheese. Pour into casserole. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake 20 minutes in moderate oven, 350°F.

FRIDAY
Simple Arithmetic
Fish Creole
Spinach
Raspberry Sherbet with Peaches

"It took me a long time to discover the right amounts to buy for two. When I was first married I bought a whole crate of Baldwin apples because it was a bargain (half price)! After eating apples every day for six weeks—one week I made four pies—I learned that apples by the crate were not such a bargain after all! Fish baffled me too. Even though we like fish, I soon learned that two lbs. fillet of flounder was too much of a good thing for just two of us."

Tomato Soup Salad

WITH CRISP VEGETABLES

2 envelopes plain gelatin
½ cup water
1 can Campbell's Tomato Soup
2 3-ounce packages cream cheese
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup salad dressing or mayonnaise
½ cup diced green pepper
½ cup finely diced celery
¼ cup minced onion

Soften gelatin in water. Heat Campbell's Tomato Soup in a double boiler; add gelatin, stirring until it dissolves. Remove from heat; add cream cheese; beat with rotary beater until smooth. Cool; fold in lemon juice, mayonnaise and vegetables. Grease lightly a 1½ quart mold; pour in salad mixture. Chill 4-5 hours. Makes 10 servings.

Here's how to be sure it's FLAVOR-RICH

DELICIOUS AS A SOUP... AS A SAUCE AND IN COOKING

Flavor is so important—and so easy, if you know how!... The flavor secret of this grand Tomato Soup Salad is Campbell's Tomato Soup. No tomato sauce you can buy can give you the delicious flavor of Campbell Tomato Soup. For Campbell's is double-rich... double-thick... a velvety-smooth purée of choice, red-ripe tomatoes, creamery butter and seasonings. It's a zestful, complete sauce, of full body and texture.... Try it today!

Yes... CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP IS ALSO THE FINEST TOMATO SAUCE YOU EVER TASTED!

FREE COOK BOOK
50 PAGES
99 DISHES
FULL COLOR

Mail coupon now to:
Campbell Soup Company,
Dept. L7, Camden 1, N. J.

NAME_____
ADDRESS_____
CITY_____
ZONE_____ STATE_____

The finest  ever made!

Two dainty chocolate cookies . . . and a rich vanilla icing . . . deliciously combined to give you a cool, fresh chocolate flavor no other cookie offers. Enjoy HYDROX often.

Sunshine
Hydrox cookies

THE ORIGINAL CREAM-FILLED CHOCOLATE COOKIE

From the Thousand Window Bakeries of

SUMMER'S BARE NECESSITIES

(Continued from Page 53)

BOTTLED BEAUTY. Summer "stockings" and "tans" come in bottles too! For town or evening, an opaque leg make-up can look like the sheerest nylons. For casual wear a clear, tinted color doubles for a tan. Both are applied this way: Begin at your toes, and with a sponge, cotton or finger tips and palms, spread the liquid lightly and evenly up toward your knees. Allow to dry—then smooth off excess with tissues. "Set" the make-up on very warm days by gently blotting your legs with absorbent cotton wrung out in cold water or iced skin astringent.

BACK TALK. If skin irregularities on your back, chest or shoulders make you shy away from beaches, do this: apply a good protecting sun lotion and begin your sun bathing in the privacy of your own back yard for the first few days or week. Absorption of the sun's rays—in moderate doses—is one of the fastest-acting prescriptions for skin eruptions. Soon you'll be warm-toned and ready for public appreciation.

DO YOU KNOW . . . lipstick applied slightly beyond the natural contour of your lips will help protect them from blistering . . . waterproof mascara is pretty-eye insurance . . . there are new bathing caps with inner devices to defeat the possibility of water's seeping in . . . squeezable, nonbreakable plastic bottles in pretty colors are available in a variety of sizes and shapes . . . washable, rubber-lined beach bags will quickly recuperate from spilled lotions or make-up smudges . . . beach sandals with flexible leather soles are porous, minimize perspiration, give you foot privacy.

AND SO TO BED. Because prolonged sun bathing tends to dry up the body's natural oils, it is wise to give yourself a two-minute nightly creaming for your face, neck, arms and shoulders. It will soften your skin—help prevent peeling!

MELODY

(Continued from Page 35)

came up which required a certain amount of tact and . . . well, tact.

The top letter on the pile was a bill—and the next one was a bill—and the next . . . must do something about that one at once. The fourth one—he lifted it to a fastidious nose—yes, scented. He laid it down, unopened, on top of the bills. The next was addressed in green ink. It joined the others.

Roberts came in, set something on the table with a small air of triumph.

Adrian beheld it incredulously. "Is that an egg?" he said.

"Yes, sir. Mrs. Gordon's compliments. They are just back from the country. There are six of them, sir."

"Six all at once? Wonderful. Who's Mrs. Gordon?"

Roberts indicated the unfinished portrait on the easel.

"Oh, Gordon! Is she coming today?"

"Ten-o'clock sitting, sir."

"Well, mustn't complain, I suppose. Paid my price without a quiver. And now eggs. Jolly good one too." His eyes wandered back to the letters and he nudged the next one off the remaining pile. "Wonder who that is. Never saw it before. Open that one."

Roberts slit the envelope neatly, extracted the letter, handed it to Adrian, just as the telephone began to ring.

Horse sense is what keeps horses from betting on what people will do.

Dear Mr. Locke: You must receive a great many letters beginning "Do you remember?" but there is no other way to begin this one. Therefore—Do you remember Alison Safford? I would much rather you made no reply at all than some vague, polite effort to recall a woman you may not have thought of for nearly twenty years. . . .

Dimly he was aware of Roberts' smoothest voice somewhere saying, "Good morning, my lady," into the telephone, and then, "Yes, my lady," and "Yes, my lady," again.

"No!" said Adrian in a frantic stage whisper, gesturing with the letter to catch Roberts' eye. "Say no!"

"Mr. Locke has not come in to breakfast yet, my lady," Roberts continued without hesitation. "I don't think in the circumstances I had better disturb —— No, my lady. I quite understand. I will inform Mr. Locke. Thank you, my lady." He hung up.

"Don't tell me," said Adrian, reading the letter. "Why can't they learn not to ring up? Anyway not at breakfast."

He finished the letter, laid down the neatly written sheets of notepaper beside his plate and said rather suddenly, "Roberts, do you remember Mrs. Safford?"

"Oh, yes, sir," said Roberts with some tenderness. "Quite well."

"What a beautiful woman she was. Not many really beautiful women, Roberts." He sat a moment, dreaming at the letter still. Alison Safford was there, in his memory, as though she had always been there, and always would be, a part of his blood and bones and heart. It was not love at first sight between them, because his love for her had had no beginning that he recalled, and no end that he recognized. He was born with it, and he doubted if it would die with him. "She had a daughter," he heard himself saying to Roberts.

"Yes, sir. Miss Monica."

"Yes. How old would she be now, do you think?"

"Well, perhaps thirty, sir."

"What, Monica? She was only a kid."

"It must be twenty years since we last saw Mrs. Safford, sir."

"Yes, it says so here. Twenty years and a bit. This letter is from the daughter. She says they have been living in America ever since they left London—and that her mother has died out there." The words had no reality as he spoke them. "Mr. Safford has been dead for some time, apparently. The kid has come home to England. Thirty, you say? Not married, so far as I can tell by this. Funny thing, her coming back this way."

He consulted the letter again.

I am staying with a friend at this address. We met last year in New York and she invited me to stay with her if I ever came to London. And so here I am

It is reassuring and somehow exciting to find by consulting the telephone book that you are still living in the same beautiful little house I once visited with my mother. I remember it and you quite well, as I had never seen a real painter at work before—or since. Can you tell me what became of the portrait of my mother you were working on at that time? I never saw it. I wonder if it would be possible to see it now. . . .

"But there wasn't a portrait, Roberts, only studies for one. I never did the portrait. She ought to know that. Or would she? Obviously her mother must have told her something. About me, I mean. Or she wouldn't have written this letter."

"Yes, sir," said Roberts.

"I can still put my hand on the charcoal studies."

With quick, easy movements, Adrian Locke crossed the room to where big black portfolios leaned against the wall. He carried one to the writing table, to turn through portrait studies till he came to a girl with short, chestnut hair, grave eyes and a wide, sensitive mouth which made her look as though she was just ready to smile, or had just done so. And yet the face in its repose was somehow tragic and defenseless, as though she had been crying, in an entirely becoming way. He had kept on drawing her

(Continued on Page 84)

Nourishing MEAT

HITS

IN SAUSAGE

GOOD NUMBERS TO KNOW ON YOUR SAUSAGE HIT PARADE: 1—Liver sausage (Braunschweiger). 2—Salami (hard). 3—Thuringer summer sausage. 4—Lunch tongue. 5—Souse (head cheese). 6—Pressed ham. 7—Minced ham. 8—Bologna. 9—Pickle-pimento loaf. 10—Luncheon meat. 11—Salami (cooked). 12—Boiled ham.

Yes, they're hits on the home plate, hits on the picnic. They perk up appetites when hot weather slows 'em down.

There's more though than just the fun of eating these good-and-easy meats. It's that abundance of complete, high-quality protein—the kind that children must have to build the sturdy bodies you want them to have. The kind of protein that repairs and puts ready response into your own muscles.

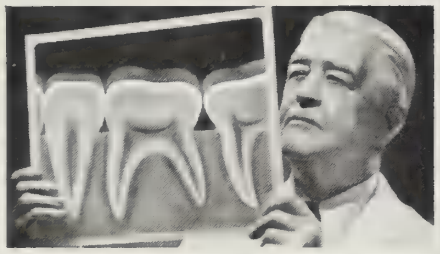
Whether the thermometer falls to zero or zooms to one hundred, your body's daily need for protein stays the same. That's why you're always right in liking meat.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

This Seal means that all nutritional statements made in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

AMERICAN MEAT INSTITUTE

Headquarters, Chicago • Members throughout the U. S.



NOW! Dental Science Shows That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Reports in Authoritative Dental Literature!

2 years' research at 5 great universities—case histories of hundreds of people who used Colgate Dental Cream right after eating—shows the Colgate way stops tooth decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene known today! Yes, both clinical and X-ray examinations showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

(Continued from Page 82)

as though she had just been crying. She had told him that the portrait, when he came to it, must not look that way.

"Oh, she was a lovely thing," he said quietly. The telephone rang. "No, Roberts, tell her no, not today!" he cried, his quick, short-lived irritability flaring. "You would think at my age," he muttered absurdly, "and at breakfasttime, too, I might have a little peace and quiet."

"Yes, madam," Roberts was saying at the telephone. And again, "Yes, madam." Roberts covered the mouthpiece. "It's Mrs. Forbes, sir."

"Oh," said Adrian. "Oh. All right." He took the telephone from Roberts' hand. "Hullo, Madge," he said, not very cordially.

To Roberts' experienced ear, the ensuing conversation followed a familiar pattern, and its conclusion was foregone. Mrs. Forbes was one of the few women Roberts had ever really dreaded, for he believed that in a general way Adrian was quite capable of taking care of himself. He allowed women to take advantage of him, and always had—that, in Roberts' view, was just his kind heart. Adrian knew better than to marry one of them, no matter how they tried to wangle it.

Roberts had nothing against Mrs. Forbes, either, that you could put your finger on, beyond that brisk possessiveness, that assumption of amused authority. She was a handsome lady, a widow, more subtle than most. She had a certain humor and a certain charm, Roberts was quite prepared to concede, and she dressed well according to her style. She might have made some man a very good wife in her way; but not Adrian Locke, who liked to live on the spur of the moment, and was accustomed to make his own decisions and know his own mind and—very definitely—wanted his own way about things and got it most of the time.

Meanwhile the wholly predictable conversation at the telephone was going on.

"Yes, dear.... I know, yes....M'm-h'm.... Oh, I dunno, got a sitting at ten, you know.... Yes—all right.... No, no, on the contrary, I'll be delighted to see you.... Right-o, darling."

As he hung up, he caught Roberts' understanding eye and nodded.

"Tea," he said, returning to the drawings on the table. "Remind me, will you?"

Roberts carried the loaded tray to the kitchen and returned at once. Adrian spoke thoughtfully. "You know, Roberts, I've managed to stay single all my life, but by the time I was fifty I'd begun to wonder if it was worth the struggle. Another ten years and I'll give in, so help me."

ADRIAN stood idly turning through the drawings. Now that he had seen them after so long, he couldn't stop looking, and an old, familiar ache was stirring at the back of his consciousness. She was different from all the rest, but he couldn't marry her.

"Roberts, do you think it would be a good idea to have this Safford kid to lunch or tea or something? Let her see these, anyway? There's a telephone number on that letter. Let's ring up now and see what happens."

He was at the telephone, letter in hand. He called the number, asked for Miss Safford, and she was speaking.

"Good morning, this is Adrian Locke," Adrian was saying in his light, gay voice which always turned a woman's heart clean over if she loved him. "Well, but didn't you expect me to?... Of course I remember her, one of the loveliest women I ever saw.... Now, look here, she never told you there was a portrait. I never painted it. Come and have a cup of tea and I'll tell you all about it." He listened, smiling, tender. "That's very nice of you. We never knew each other very well in the old days, did we? No, you were a bit young then. How about tea this afternoon?"

Roberts, on his way out of the room, was making negative signs from the doorway. "Mrs. Forbes, sir."

"Oh. Oh, blast.... Sorry, Monica, can we make it tomorrow instead?... Yes, that's wonderful."

He hung up slowly, trying to recall the sound of Alison's voice, wondering if Monica's was like it. Voices left one, at least until heard again. Faces, no. The mind's eye was faithful. The ear's memory was shorter. Hence the reprise in music, perhaps, recalling a half-forgotten melody. At least Monica didn't sound like an American.

He surveyed the unfinished canvas discontentedly, changed into the ancient jacket he always wore to paint in and began to put paints on the palette. By the time he had got rid of Blanche Gordon, his morning would be gone. They should never arrange to sit in the mornings after a certain age. On account of the light. Terrible.

HIS eyes were drawn back to the open portfolio on the writing table. He could hear water running as Roberts washed up. When the water stopped, Adrian raised his voice a little.

"Roberts, did the kid look anything like her mother?"

"I can't just remember, sir."

"Nor can I," Adrian confessed, drifting back to the easel. "She sounded very... surprised, I thought."

"Well, it was quick, sir. Letter in the morning post—telephone call before ten o'clock."

"I suppose I did right," said Adrian, painting. "Asking her to come here. But why was she so surprised? Perfectly normal thing for me to do, wasn't it? Ring up and say come for a cup of tea—see the drawings—all that? It was what she asked for in the letter, more or less. But she sounded completely bowled over."

"With Miss Monica, sir, it might be more of a... sentimental feeling, if I may say so, sir."

"How do you mean?"

"Well, sir, if her mother had often spoken of you, you would become a sort of legend, you might say, sir."

Adrian winced visibly. "Am I as old as that, do you think? Besides, I doubt very much if Alison would ever ——"

The doorbell rang.

"Oh, no, not already!" Adrian cried, exasperated.

The drawings still lay there in the open portfolio as Blanche Gordon entered the room.

Roberts left them alone together with no misgivings whatever. Mrs. Gordon was one of the ones there was no need to think twice about. That inclined-to-be-coy, we-understand-each-other-don't-we manner of hers was really fatal, one of the things Adrian couldn't take.

"Good morning, my dear Adrian, I hope I haven't kept you waiting," she was saying, breezy and confident and redolent of Chanel.

"No," Adrian murmured, shaking hands with her briefly, the palette still on his arm. "As a matter of fact, no—I was just ——"

"Oh, you've done the pearls since I saw it last—lovely! It's coming on quite fast, isn't it?"

"I hope so," said Adrian.

Blanche Gordon gave him an intimate, red-lipped smile, and said rather archly, "You know, I shall miss coming here for my sittings. Are you starting another picture straight off when you finish me?"

"Yes, about next Monday, I think. Caroline Manning."

"Oh-ho!" said Mrs. Gordon; and gave him a look. Caroline Manning was a very young, very blond new actress, who seemed to have something which disarmed even the critics. "For her publicity, of course," Mrs. Gordon guessed shrewdly. "A young woman of that type has no interest in art."

"Why jump on this poor girl for a simple, aboveboard motive like publicity?"

"I honestly believe you're doing it for nothing, just to help her out!" she suggested.

"Now, I didn't say that. I only ——"

"Adrian, you're hopeless! You've let her talk you into hundreds of pounds' worth of work just because she gave you what in America they call 'a line.' And they call people like you 'sugar daddies.'"

Adrian shuddered. "I'm not keeping the girl, if that's what you're driving at," he Kept smooth and hair-free longer . . . by Nair . . . the safe, odorless depilatory lotion . . . that removes leg hair quickly, easily . . . leaves legs smoother . . . more exciting . . .

Lady, throw your razor away—use Nair, new cosmetic lotion that keeps legs hair-free longer! Dissolves hair skin-close — no ugly razor stubble. Easy to use—rinses off quickly. No clinging depilatory odor, no irritation to normal skin. For "second look" legs—get Nair today! For free sample, mail this ad before Nov. 30, 1950, to Dept. 56, Nair, 53 Park Pl., N. Y. 8, N. Y. Offer good in U. S. A. only.

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair safely

FOR LEGS THAT DELIGHT USE NAIR TONIGHT 79¢ plus tax

INGROWN NAIL Hurting You?

Immediate Relief!

A few drops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO toughens the skin underneath the nail, allows the nail to be cut and thus prevents further pain and discomfort. OUTGRO is available at all drug counters.

SITROUX SIT-TRUE TISSUES

softer, finer, stronger than ever said bluntly. "She's a nice, bright little thing, plenty of personality. I suppose if I'd told you I had hired her as a model your attitude would be quite different."

"I hate to see you taken advantage of, that's all." She turned away to lay down her gloves and handbag on the writing table. "Oh, sketches!" she cried, catching sight of them. "What a pretty girl! Who is she?"

"Her name was Alison Safford. It's just some of my earlier work I was turning over. Shall we begin?"

"Early Locke? How exciting! She looks so gay, it cheers one up just to see her."

"Yes, she was gay, most of the time," he said briefly.

"And of course terribly young," she continued, fingering the drawings. "That little throat you've got here—it makes her look pathetically young. This one is dated October twenty-fourth, but there's no year." She looked round at him inquiringly.

"They were all done about twenty years ago, more or less."

"Oh, well, then, of course she's not like that now, is she?" Mrs. Gordon remarked with satisfaction.

"Will you take the pose, please?" Adrian suggested, containing himself.

She gave him a sharp look, seated herself in the model's chair.

"Head a little more to the left, please," he said patiently. "And the left hand a little more relaxed—allow me. Chin to the left, please—thank you. Let me know when you feel tired, won't you?"

His sitters always found it difficult to adjust themselves to the change from the easy, amusing, casual Adrian to the concentrated, withdrawn and somewhat short-tempered painter at work. His quick, impersonal eyes, his lack of response to conversation, when their expression was of no consequence at the moment to his work, unsettled and confused them.

But because the man was made of charm and kindness, it was not in him to let a woman feel herself forgotten for long, and it was quite beyond him to let her know she bored him. So after an interval of scowling, intent silence, he now said, "By the way, I must thank you for the eggs. It was very kind of you."

"Fresh eggs are a pleasure these days, aren't they?" she agreed.

"Chin round a little more to the left? Thank you."

There was another long, busy silence.

"You won't forget my party, will you?" he ventured at last.

"Party?" His brush did not pause. "I don't seem to remember ——"

"Really, Adrian, I can't think why we put up with your absent-minded ways! I told you about it the last time I was here, and the reminder must have been in your post this morning."

"I'm afraid I don't always take things in when I'm working. And I hardly looked at my letters this morning."

"Well, in that case"—for she wanted to believe him—"but the party is tomorrow afternoon."

"My dear, I can't possibly."

"But I understood you to say that you would be free tomorrow afternoon."

"I'm terribly sorry, really I am, but I hadn't got it written down, and this most unavoidable thing came up very suddenly."

"Very well, Adrian, if you can't you can't. But I've told everybody you're coming, and they'll be very disappointed."

The fact that she had used his name as bait for other guests increased her dissatisfaction with him, for she was one of those lucky people who can never blame themselves for anything.

Blanche Gordon sat nursing her good intentions and her manufactured grievance, but Adrian was working on the left hand and took no notice of her face. He knew the routine by heart: "I've got a few people coming in a week from Thursday, won't you join us for a drink?" . . . "I'll have to look it up, but I'm afraid Thursday is impossible." . . . "Well, do try, I'll send you a card"; and then, too late, in tragic tones, "But you promised, and I've got all these people expecting to meet you!" No, my dear, it won't work.

"Safford," Blanche Gordon was saying. "Anything to do with Walter Safford, the violinist?"

"His wife."

"Oh," she murmured, groping about in her mind. "He's dead now, isn't he?"

"Yes."

"And did he really knock her about, as they said?" she inquired brightly.

"Who said?" Adrian's brush was very busy.

"Oh, I don't know, everybody, I should think. I always heard he treated her like dirt, and even threatened her life in his rages, and she was so in love with him she didn't care, just followed him about anyway, like a little dog."

"Anyone less like a little dog than Alison Safford I can't imagine," he said impatiently.

"I suppose if you're married to a man like Walter Safford you will put up with quite a lot because of who he is. Wasn't there a child?"

"Yes, there was."

He wasn't very forthcoming, was he? Blanche tried again. "And was the portrait a great success?"

"What portrait?"

"The one you did of Mrs. Safford."

"Oh, I never painted it."

"What happened?" Her head turned toward him in her growing curiosity.

"Really, Blanche, if you can't hold the pose how do you expect me to go on working? You do nothing but shift about today."

"Did you fall in love with her too?" she cried with incredulous pleasure. "She never looked twice at anyone but her brute of a husband. At least that's what everyone said. What became of her after he died? Do you know?"

"Yes," said Adrian quietly. "I know. She's dead." He stood perfectly still, holding the palette and the brush, and staring at the canvas in front of him. "I hadn't quite realized it, till now. Alison is dead."

"Oh—I didn't know."

"Will you take the pose again, please, Blanche? Let's get on with it."

Once more the formal, professional silence settled between them as he worked, absorbed again in the detail of the left hand. But this time he made no effort to entertain her. Entrenched behind his painter's tools, preoccupied, intent, defensive and wholly enigmatic, Adrian worked on.

The telephone rang, and Roberts came in to answer it. "Yes, my lady . . . well, I'm afraid he's engaged at the moment, my lady. He has a sitting going on. . . . Well, he isn't as a rule disturbed during a sitting."

And Adrian, painting viciously, brilliantly, at a bit of canvas which would never have to be touched again in its perfection, was thinking, Another half hour of this, at least, before I can decently turn her out.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Mother of the Silences

By Joseph Auslander

I strain towards you out of the dust and heat:
The eagle has his crag beneath the sun;
The diver climbs for breath; the fox's run
Is finished . . . I am hallowed at your feet.

It is forever enough so to have found
Silent, unaltered as love's miracle,
Peace that is deep and inexhaustible,
Touch without contact, music without sound.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Suffering from "9 o'clock curfew?"

IF YOU ARE A DATE-LESS DREAMER — ASK YOURSELF WHY!

Is it something you don't realize that others notice? Perhaps it's the subtle all-over body perspiration odor that haunts even the most fastidious. You can be guilty—and not know it! For old-type soaps merely wash away past perspiration odor which can start again immediately.

But why take chances when FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap has a patented ingredient which actually prevents the odor of body perspiration from starting. Its protection grows and grows—actually building up a resistance to the cause of perspiration odor. Yet FRESH Soap has no strong hospital odor and is perfect for complexions.

20 times more effective than any other type soap in preventing body perspiration odor.

FRESH Soap is the only Deodorant Bath Soap guaranteed by a leading deodorant manufacturer.

For Special underarm protection . . to stop perspiration . . use FRESH® Cream Deodorant.

Van Camp's helps me get many a quick tasty meal

QUICK—
Ready to heat . . . eat . . . enjoy

TASTY—
Rich with flavor through and through.

It's always a picnic to serve Van Camp's, for all the work is done for you.
First step in planning your summer picnics is to have plenty of Van Camp's Pork and Beans—all your Van Camp's favorites—on hand.

NOW . . . for greater convenience . . . variety . . .
Van Camp's in the new just-right size for the small family.

HEAT EAT ENJOY
these other delicious
Van Camp's Foods

Van Camp's SINCE 1861 • Stokely's *Finest SINCE 1898 • Honor Brand *Frozen Foods SINCE 1933

He was almost glad when the doorbell broke the silence again.

"How can you work with bells going off all over the place all the time?" Blanche inquired sympathetically. "Telephones—doorbells—people running in and out; I should think you'd go mad."

"Oh, I outgrew any artistic temperament I may have had, some years ago, and no longer require a padded cell to work in. So long as they don't come charging in during a sitting ——"

But that was exactly what Caroline Manning did just then, if an entrance so airy and full of premeditated spontaneity could be described so harshly. She had slipped past the disapproving Roberts in the doorway and stood poised effectively on the threshold of the studio, genuinely young, genuinely blond, although her whole performance of the irresistible pert young thing was pitched a trifle too high, just as her clothes were too smart, and her heels too French, and her make-up too heavy for the morning hours. She carried a large dressmaker's box under her arm.

"Hullo, Adrian. Roberts tried to stop me, but I came in anyhow. Don't fire him, will you?" She planted an informal, smacking kiss on his cheek. "I've got the dress, and it's too divine. I couldn't wait to show it to you." She appeared to perceive Mrs. Gordon for the first time, with a deliberate schoolgirl embarrassment and good manners. "Oh—good morning!"

Adrian performed the introduction, which was coolly received, and Caroline went on:

"Adrian, would I be a dreadful nuisance if I went in there and slipped this on?" She indicated the bedroom door with purposeful familiarity.

"Yes," said Adrian. "You would."

"Now, don't be cross, darling, you said you wanted to see the dress as soon as I found it, and here it is. If it's not right, and we have to look for something else, I must get at it, mustn't I, if you're going to begin painting me on Monday? I'm sure Mrs. Gordon won't mind. It's only little me." And she waltzed off into the bedroom with the box, closing the door behind her.

"She's not very well brought up, I'm afraid," Adrian admitted with indulgence. "Doesn't mean any harm."

"That's what you think," said Blanche Gordon, and rose. "I'll go now, Adrian, if you don't mind. Better luck next time."

"There's just this bit here to do," he frowned, pecking at the canvas.

"Yes, all right. Next time." Gathering up her gloves and handbag, she cast a long, speculative glance at the bedroom door. "I don't have to tell a man of your experience, do I, that that's a very dangerous young woman?" she asked.

"Perhaps, my dear, you had better stay and protect me."

"Perhaps, but I'm not going to. If you're not able to take care of yourself now, you never will be."

She was gone. Adrian stood looking after her a moment, and then crossed the room to open the bedroom door, without looking into the room, and returned to the table for a cigarette.

"Come out of there, will you?" he said, over his shoulder. "Hurry up."

Caroline appeared in the bedroom doorway at once. Her head was bent so that her honey-colored hair cascaded forward along her cheeks. She was clad in a revealing yellow evening dress which fastened with a zipper up the back so that she must hold it up at the shoulders in a becoming pose.

"Have you got rid of her?"

"She's gone," he corrected. "Now, look here ——"

"I can't reach that thing, myself," she interrupted, squirming inside the dress and presenting her back to him. "You'll have to."

"How does it go?"

"Just pull that thing up. It's very simple."

Cigarette between his lips, he zoomed the zipper into place. "Now, look here, Caroline, you cannot come barging in here ——"

"Like it?" She was posing before him like a little girl in a new party frock.

"Yes, it's very good." He surveyed briefly with an appraising but imperson eye. "But you should not have brought it here this morning. Mrs. Gordon ——"

Caroline giggled.

"I'm serious about this, Caroline. I dor want it to happen again, do you hear?"

"Well, let's tell them at once and sa trouble," she suggested with a reckless a

"I did tell her I was going to paint yo but that doesn't excuse ——"

"Well, tell her the rest of it, why dor you?"

"Rest of it?"

"That we're going to be married, I mean

Adrian stood very still where he was. "A we?" he asked quietly.

Caroline gave him a glance under lon veiling lashes. "Well, after last night ——

"Now, wait a minute, I must have miss something, because I don't quite know wh you're talking about."

"Well, after what you said last night, thought ——" Doubt, apprehension, trage passed swiftly across her expressive fa "You mean you don't want to?"

Adrian passed a soothing hand across head. "I was perfectly sober last night. had dinner with one bottle of wine and liqueur. We talked a lot of delightful nonsen I agreed to paint you in a yellow dress, a then I took you home in a cab to your fr door and left you there."

"It wasn't nonsense!" she cried passi ately. "Oh, Adrian, I'm so humiliated. I lieved every word. I've been so happy. thought you meant it. Oh, what shall I do And she flung herself down on the sofa a burst into tears.

"Now, don't cry, Caroline." He sat dow beside her. "Caroline, stop it, I never mea to make you cry, I ——"

The moment he touched her she cast he self sobbing into his arms. He found th rather pleasant in a way, at first anywa and held her patiently while she played o her scene.

"Adrian, you can't do this to me. Y can't go back on it now. I've told people!"

"Told people what?"

"That I was going to marry you and your inspiration!"

"Did they laugh?" he asked calmly.

"Darling, they were green with envy. W would they laugh?"

"Well, the difference in our ages, for o thing. It's rather absurd, you know."

"Oh, who cares about ages when they're love! You're much the most fascinating m I've ever met."

"Well, thank you very much, you pretty fascinating yourself, but ——"

"Then it's all right? We're going on wi it?"

"Now let's be sensible, shall we? I do want you to ——"

"Oh, Adrian, last night you were so diff ent—the things you said, and the way y looked at me ——"

"Well, all right, now, tell me," he sa still sanely. "What did I say last night, a how did I look? Did I ask you to mar me?"

"Adrian, what a question to ask me no Not in so many words, of course, but ——

"Well, then, don't you think we had b ter just forget the whole thing, and ——"

"Oh, how can you? Now they will lau at me!" She hid her face against him with wail. "They'll say you were just playi with me and I fell for you, they'll say y jilted me the very next day ——"

He sat up, holding her away from hi shaking her a little to bring her roun "Caroline, listen to me. Stop howling, you hear? Stop it. This is ridiculous." I waited unappreciatively while she gulp childishly and struggled for composure, eyi him piteously through her tumbled hair. don't want to hurt your feelings, but y evidently misunderstood."

"Well, couldn't we just be engaged for little while, anyway?" she suggested hop fully. "And then we could sort of break off—gradually—and they'd forget about it?

"Now, Caroline, you go along and chan back into your street clothes and get out e," said Adrian, as though speaking to a all, recalcitrant child.

To his surprise, she rose obediently. "But u'll do the portrait, Adrian?"

"Yes, I'll do the portrait. Now run along, e a good girl."

"You said last night you'd pay for this ess."

"I will. I remember that much, anyway. in along."

Caroline presented her back to him mat-'-of-factly. "Unzip me," she commanded, d when he had done so, she trotted off into e bedroom. After a moment her voice ated out from there. "May I leave the ess here till this afternoon?"

"Why?"

"I've got to see a man about a job, and I n't want to be carrying this great box. I'll me back for it."

"Why not just leave it here till we start rking next week, and not go lugging it out?"

"Oh, I want to show it to somebody else night."

"You can't come back this afternoon. 're got an appointment here. You must not on running in and out of here, Caroline."

"Just this once, darling. I'll put it in the x and Roberts can just hand it out the or to me." She came in, wearing street thes. "About five o'clock," she said, put-ng on her hat in front of a mirror. "I won't me in here, I promise, if you'd rather not."

"Very well, I'll give it to Roberts. And u are not to come in here, do you under-and?"

"Yes, Adrian," she said meekly, and came to him, her face lifted ovocatively. "Will you something for me?"

He looked down at her utiously. "Depends hat it is."

"Well, just let it go on it is for a little while—st while we're doing the rtrait—so I won't have take back what I said—I say it's a secret."

"No."

"Most people wouldn't consider it a hard-ip to have me in love with them for a hile," said Caroline, piqued. "Most people ould be rather pleased."

"Yes, I quite realize that, my dear, it ——"

"Besides"—she smiled at him ravish-gly—"you might even get so you liked !" And she gave him another smacking ss and went.

Y FOUR O'CLOCK ON THAT SUMMER'S DAY, drian Locke had lunched at his club with l the usual people and then had walked wn Piccadilly to where, before the blitz, t. James's Church had stood in its small, aste beauty. He had paused for some time the paved courtyard where nowadays wers bloomed. He felt a need of the church day because of Alison. He felt the impact change as never before. A sadness and tiredness and an oldness had come upon m, for so much was gone of what he had ved in his youth. Now Alison, too, was ne, and while he had long ago ceased to ink even of seeing her again there was a nality about it now.

He had not thought of her for a long time. ut he could think of nothing else this after-oon, and his heart was aching. She was the ne who had shown him humility in love. he was the one who had never wanted any-ing from Adrian Locke, the successful ainter, had never paraded him through the Vest End at her chariot wheels, had never sked him to do a favor for a friend, or lend is prestige to a private enterprise. She was he one who said, "If you like," and, "Would ou mind?" before he could, and meant it.

She was more fun than anyone he had ever nown, quicker to laughter, happier in love, ith a childlike willingness to be amused and n intelligent interest in anything presented o her notice. She was never bored, had never een disenchanted with life, whatever it did o her. Old-fashioned, embarrassing, out-of-date words came to mind to describe her—"gallant" was one, and "romantic" was another.

Now he stood in the little backwater off Piccadilly, aching for her in the old way, and to his own amazement. It was impossible to feel like this about a woman he had not seen for twenty years, and when he was so much younger. Nothing ached like this after fifty. You had a right to expect a little peace and quiet. You had a right to forget things. But not, apparently, if you had loved Alison.

He turned and walked quickly out of the churchyard, caught a taxi and was driven home. Roberts was laying out tea. Adrian realized as he waited for Madge that he would be very glad to see her today.

She was punctual, wearing a linen suit and a green hat with no nonsense about it, looking cool and competent. They were old, old friends, and if she bullied him in a nice way he was used to it, for he had a strangely docile streak in his complicated nature. They appreciated each other's humor too. Madge and Adrian had ragged each other without mercy for years, and nobody's feelings were ever hurt.

She poured out his tea this afternoon without asking him how he liked it, and she didn't tell him all the bad news she could think of as soon as she sat down. Adrian drank his tea comfortably and began telling her in humorous detail all about Caroline and asking her what he should do.

Madge laughed at him, as he had expected. And when she learned Caroline was coming back for her dress, she suggested at once that he leave the whole thing to her.

"You are wonderful, Madge," he said with sudden affection.

"I've hauled you backward out of more scrapes than I, for one, care to remember, if that's what you mean."

He rose, and wandered across the room to get his pipe, and stood filling it, thinking hard. Madge drank her fresh cup of tea and watched him out of the tail of her eye. It must have been ten years ago, he was thinking—that awkward business with What's-her-name. He had really been for it that time, though it was all a mistake, and the woman had willfully misunderstood him—or pretended to.

Sighing impatiently, he swung round and Madge said, smiling, "All right, Adrian, you clear out now and give me half an hour alone with her when she comes for the dress. I can probably bring it off again if I try."

"It's an awful bother, isn't it?" he admitted, pacing gloomily in a fragrant wreath of smoke. "But honestly, Madge, I wish you would do something about it. I said everything I could think of this morning, without being downright rude and hurting her feelings." At her expression he added with some haste, "I know what you're thinking, and perhaps it's only my conceit, but there is just the off chance, isn't there, that she does really mean it, for the moment, anyway, and seriously sees herself as the prop and joy of my declining years? '

"Yes, dear, and if you had only begun visibly to decline a little I might be more sympathetic," Madge said. "Now I think it would be a good idea if you took your hat and your pipe and went round to the club for a while."

"Well, all right," he consented. "But don't blacken my character more than necessary, will you?"

"Ask Roberts to bring a fresh pot of tea as you go," she suggested. "And don't come back till about six."

So it came about that, when Caroline rang the bell at half past five, Roberts stood as though expecting her to enter and proceed to the studio as usual, and she passed him jauntily with a tingle of excitement and triumph. Perhaps Adrian's guest had already gone, and he was willing that she should linger a while after all. Young as she was, she knew

(Continued on Page 89)

He that ventureth on matrimony is like unto one who thrusteth his hand into a sack containing many thousands of serpents and one eel. Yet, if the Prophet so will it, he may draw forth the eel.

—PERSIAN PROVERB.

FREEZ-TAINER is the container PRE-TESTED* and . . . DEMANDED by REAL homemakers EVERYWHERE . . .

. . . for frozen foods

- FREEZ-TAINER seals perfectly!
- FREEZ-TAINER is transparent!
- FREEZ-TAINER uses less space!
- FREEZ-TAINER is reusable!

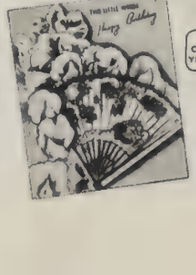
. . . for leftover foods

- No Ice Box Odors with FREEZ-TAINERS!
- See the Contents in FREEZ-TAINERS!
- Save Space with FREEZ-TAINERS!
- Store Tea, Coffee, etc., in FREEZ-TAINERS!

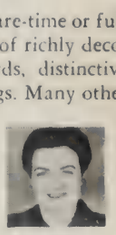
* Now Used By Millions of Homemakers.

CROWN CORK SPECIALTY CORP.
Division of Crown Cork and Seal Co., Inc.
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

DISTRIBUTED IN CANADA BY PERCY HERMANT CO., TORONTO, ONTARIO



NO WONDER SO MANY FOLKS



Make Good Money!

. . . These Exquisite Doehla Greeting Card and Stationery Assortments Sell on Sight!

HERE'S a friendly way to make a fine income, spare-time or full time. Show lovely Doehla Box Assortments of richly decorated Christmas and All-Occasion Greeting Cards, distinctive "Name-Imprinted" Stationery, gay Gift Wrappings. Many other Doehla items so exceptionally beautiful that your friends, neighbors, and co-workers will be delighted to give you big orders. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED- our FREE BOOK shows you easy ways for any beginner to make money! You make up to 50¢ on each $1 box, even more on bonus orders. Mail coupon now—without money—for sample boxes on approval, including new "50-for-$1" name-imprinted cards. No obligation. HARRY DOEHLA Co., Studio L17, Fitchburg, Mass. (If you live west of Rockies—mail coupon to Palo Alto, Calif.)

Makes Money—and Friends Too

"The cards were so attractive they sold on sight. Friends gave orders unhesitatingly. I'm making friends, aside from my regular duties." —Mary Pasciucco, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Copyright 1950, Harry Doehla Co.

HARRY DOEHLA CO., Studio L17, Fitchburg, Mass. (or Palo Alto, Calif.)

Please rush—for FREE TRIAL—sample boxes on approval, money-making plan, extra-profit cash bonus offer. Also send FREE Book of easy ways for anyone to make money.

Name.....
(Please Print Clearly)
Address.....
City.....State.....
Please state Zone No. (if any)

Oh, what dream cakes...

from these 2 SWANS DOWN-WONDERFUL MIXES!

The new deeper chocolate Devil's Food Mix

YES, now there's another sensational Swans Down Cake Mix.

Devil's Food! Makes an impressively beautiful cake—with deeper, richer chocolate flavor—melting-fine as smoothest fudge.

Walter Baker prepared a brand-new blend of cocoa beans for this Mix, and a new formula holds fragrant chocolaty richness right through oven heat.

Swans Down milled a special "devil's food" cake flour, and famous Swans Down Instant Cake Mix shared its wonderful special egg whites, with the delicate, spring-fresh flavor.

Everything is right in the Mix, nothing to do but add milk, beat, and bake!

Snowcap Fudge Nut Squares

Use Fudge Nut Cake recipe on Swans Down Devil's Food Mix package. Spread Snowcap Frosting on top and sides of cake.

Snowcap Frosting

1 egg white, unbeaten
¾ cup sugar
Dash of salt
3 tablespoons water
1 teaspoon light corn syrup
½ teaspoon vanilla

Combine egg white, sugar, salt, water, and corn syrup in top of small double boiler. Beat about 1 minute, or until blended. Cook over rapidly boiling water, beating constantly 4 minutes, or until frosting will stand in stiff peaks. Remove from boiling water. Add vanilla and beat 1 minute or until thick enough to spread.

Swans Down Devil's Food Mix

COMPLETE: Just add milk-no expensive eggs!

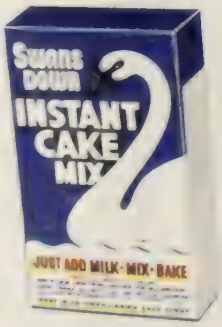
The famous all-variety Instant Mix

Makes the most delicate, mist-fine white cake. Dozens of other favorites, too—orange cake, spice cake, upside-down cake, brownies, cookies. (Recipes with the box.)

The only cake mix made with Swans Down Cake Flour . . . and the one more women choose than any other white cake mix in America!

Fresh Peach Summertime Cake

Use one layer of Swans Down Instant White Cake. Top with ice cream and sliced fresh peaches. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired.



Fresh Raspberry Summertime Cake

Substitute raspberries for peaches in preceding recipe.

Lemon Coconut Cookies

1 package Swans Down Instant Cake Mix
⅓ cup milk
3 tablespoons softened shortening
½ teaspoon lemon extract
1½ cups Baker's Shredded Coconut

Combine ingredients and beat 1 minute. Drop from teaspoon onto greased baking sheet. Decorate with candied cherries, if desired. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 8 minutes. Makes about 5 dozen.

Swans Down Instant Cake Mix

Swans Down Cake Flour and Cake Mixes are products of General Fo

(Continued from Page 87)

round well enough, and it was an nfatuation in its way. And Caroline ns.

s in no sacrificial frame of mind that determined to annex Adrian Locke rest of his natural life, and to hold ainst all comers. She was shrewd to realize that, as his bride, however ted, and later as his discreet widow, position in society would become in assailable. She was willing to learn, uld play any part he required of her. neither of them could lose.

as rather surprised to find the studio d only by a middle-aged woman who very much at home there, smoking a e and turning over the leaves of a ne in an armchair by the tea table. s of Adrian at all, and the dress box n left conspicuously on a chair near r.

. came for my dress," she announced hint of challenge in her young, well- voice.

nterloper looked up with a pleasant How do you do?" she said, as though ned the place. "Do come in. Adrian o have gone out and forgotten that he ne to tea today." Madge reached for pot, saying with a spider-to-fly cor- "Well, come and have a cup with l we can amuse each other till Adrian on't mind if I do, though I promised ——" Caroline hesitated, visibly d.

mised Adrian?" Madge prompted y.

ll, I promised I wouldn't interrupt his is afternoon, but if he's not here I'm errupting, am I? Oh, cake!" Caroline ed, approaching the table. She helped to a slice of cake, accepted her cup Madge's hand. "I suppose you've Adrian a very long time?"

e before you were born, probably." 't he funny, the way he gives himself out his age?" Caroline confided in a zing tone. "I never think of Adrian's ny older than anybody else. Isn't he us?" s, he is quite marvelous," Madge as- her. "Generations of women have t so."

w do you think it happens that he ot married before now?"

ink everybody tried too hard." Madge long enough to allow a look of confu- grow on Caroline's face. "You see, if ied to marry Adrian, he was off like a hey not only didn't get him for a hus- hey lost him as a friend."

course a lot would depend on the kind an it was," Caroline explained helpfully. "Adrian would never be happy with the stuffy kind of marriage people used to have. With Adrian you'd have to keep him amused all the time." She licked the tip of one pink finger delicately.

"That's true of any man, I thought," said Madge.

"Yes, but look at the dull women they marry." Again the wide, innocent stare encompassed Madge. "Are you married?" asked Caroline with the directness of an uninhibited child.

"My husband died years ago," Madge told her.

"Oh, a widow." Caroline's soft voice was full of a ready compassion. "That's tough."

"More tea?"

"You know, I oughtn't, really." Caroline passed her cup. "Adrian would probably give me thunder for sitting here like this. He's starting my portrait on Monday."

"Is he?" said Madge, with a sprightly interest which she considered well beneath her. "What fun!"

"In a yellow dress. Would you like to see it?" Caroline jumped up and ran to the box and shook out the dress, holding it up to herself. "There. Isn't it lovely? It's a present from Adrian."

"Very nice," said Madge kindly. "You're a lucky girl, aren't you?"

"I understand him." Caroline laid the dress carefully across the chair and returned to her fresh cup of tea, speaking in lowered, friendly, woman-to-woman tones. "You see, I think he's getting an absolute inferiority complex about his age, and I intend to get him out of it."

"How?" said Madge, with interest.

"I'm in love with him," Caroline announced with a little lifted air of pride and defiance.

Madge's first reaction was a desire to laugh in the poor child's face. "Aren't we all!" she said only.

"You too?" Caroline gave her a suspicious, are-you-kidding kind of look.

"I thought I might as well be frank too." Madge said lightly, and began to play her cards in earnest now. "Are you surprised?"

"Well, I'm not surprised, exactly, but—does he know?"

"Oh, yes," Madge assured her casually.

Caroline suddenly recognized an adversary. "Have you got claims on him?" she demanded with a certain hostility.

"Well—in a way, yes." Madge was almost ashamed of herself by now. It was really too easy, the girl was so young and inept. She had a core of honesty and reality that disarmed and disconcerted. Madge began to see why Adrian had been so unable to cope with the situation himself.

"Has he ever asked you to marry him?" Caroline was saying.

"Are you sure you heard one of them laughing?"

The great new protein cereal that helps you have a fine body

ENJOY KELLOGG'S CORN-SOYA, THE NEW TOASTY-TASTING CEREAL WITH THE HIGH PROTEIN FACTOR

No other well-known cereal, hot or cold, is so rich in protein—the master body-builder.

You read it, and you wonder. "Can a cereal help me have a fine body?"

It can. And it will. This is more than a cereal. Kellogg's Corn-Soya is in the same family of foods as meat and eggs and milk—the master body-builders. For this is the new protein cereal.

Protein that helps build firm flesh and solid muscle and fine bodies. Complete, high-quality protein when served with milk. True, Corn-Soya tastes just grand, and has B vitamins, iron and energy value, too. But remember Corn-Soya for protein. The protein that has what it takes to help build a fine body. For you and yours.

ATHLETE'S FOOT*?

Effectiveness of Absorbine Jr.'s

WET-DRY ACTION

proved in scientifically controlled tests

*To help relieve Athlete's Foot misery—use Absorbine Jr. quick! Its time-proved "Wet-Dry" action kills all the Athlete's Foot fungi it can reach. Helps heal open cracks and promote regrowth of a smooth unbroken skin-barrier against reinfection! In carefully checked clinical tests, 3 out of 4 cases responded favorably.

←EXAMINE the skin between your toes tonight. When open cracks appear it means that Athlete's Foot can strike. Swab skin with cotton soaked in the famous Absorbine Jr. Its "wetting" action removes the flaky dead skin and dissolves the stale perspiration products on which Athlete's Foot fungi thrive.

NOW POUR ON some→ Absorbine Jr. Its "drying" and fungicidal action inhibits growth of all the infecting fungi it can reach. If your Athlete's Foot persists, see your doctor. Guard against reinfection. Don't share towels or bathmats. Boil socks for 15 minutes to kill the micro-organisms. Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold . . . $1.25 a bottle . . . Introductory Size 15¢.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

ABSORBINE Jr.

America's No. 1 Athlete's Foot Stand-by!

"Well, not in so many words, perhaps," Madge admitted easily, replying with satisfaction to the exact cue she had been fishing for. "But we have what I suppose one might call . . . an understanding."

"When?" Caroline demanded tensely. "When did that happen?"

"Oh, ages ago."

"So that's what it was," said Caroline.

"What was, my dear?"

Caroline sat biting her red underlip. Obviously it was Adrian's loyalty to this middle-aged, possessive woman which stood in the way of his accepting her own freely offered devotion. Obviously it was her own duty now to make the woman see that Adrian must be free to make his own choice of wives. Adrian was so kindhearted he would never be able to tell a woman like this that something had happened now and that he wanted to marry someone younger and prettier.

"But of course you would release him, wouldn't you, if something extraordinary came into his life?" asked Caroline kindly.

"Extraordinary in what way?"

"Now, I'm afraid this may be something of a shock to you," Caroline began tactfully. "But the fact is, Adrian needs somebody like me, and I have decided to devote my life to him."

"Oh?" said Madge faintly. "Does he know?"

"Well, the fact is, he's still—still ——"

"Holding out?" suggested Madge, and Caroline glanced at her incredulously, for instead of being hurt, or fighting back, or any of those things, she seemed totally unable to realize ——

"I knew there was something on his mind, you see," said Caroline, deciding to be brutally frank. "And it must be this thing with you. So if you could ——"

"Bow out?" suggested Madge, with that same maddening air of humoring one as though one were a child ——

"Well, you aren't getting anywhere with it, are you?" cried Caroline, her amateur offensive cracking.

Madge laughed. "The things I have let myself in for because of that fantastic man!" she said. "Hadn't you better take the dress and go along now, before he comes in?" she continued in that unruffled way. "What would he think if he found us sitting here together discussing him?"

Caroline felt the sharp sting of tears behind her eyelids, and set down her cup again with a little jolt. "Would he be cross?" she asked, knowing the answer perfectly well.

"Probably." Madge had no mercy now. The girl must learn this time, once and for all.

"He's been pretty cross with me once already today; perhaps I'd better ——" Caroline rose and put the dress back in its box.

"You don't catch me running away from his bad tempers," the cool, challenging voice pointed out.

"He scares the daylights out of me when he's cross." Caroline paused, the yellow bodice shimmering between her hands. "When he says, 'Now, look here ——' What do you do then?"

"I thought you understood him," Madge remarked heartlessly, but she relented, crossed the room to stand beside Caroline. "My dear, you're very young, and very . . . brave. I think Adrian is a fortunate man to have anyone like you devoted to him. I'm not so old myself but that I can remember how the young hate advice, but I'm going to give you some all the same."

"Oh, I know, fall in love with some nice young man, and marry him!" Caroline interrupted bitterly. "Not me. If I can't have Adrian I'll just concentrate on my career."

"Then you'd better get on with it, because Adrian won't marry you. Adrian will never marry anybody as long as he lives."

"Well, of course, I haven't been trying anything like as long as you have," said Caroline unpardonably.

Before Madge could reply, the outer door closed gently and Adrian was there.

He had not, as Madge advised him, gone back to the club. Instead, he had gone gloomily down to the Embankment and mooned about there in the twilight, killing time the hard way, by doing nothing.

Almost as soon as he left the house behind, the immediate bother about Caroline receded and the stirring of old memories haunted him more and more. He dreaded Monica's visit tomorrow, wished now that he had never replied to her letter. He hated the idea of having to hear how Alison had died. She had been so much younger than himself that it had never occurred to him that he might have to live in a world which was empty of her.

He stood gazing blankly out across the river, entertaining a vague idea of leaving Roberts tomorrow afternoon to admit Monica, make her free of the portfolio, and show her out again in his absence. And then he would wonder for the rest of his life what she was like, and what she might have told him that was comforting instead of sad. Perhaps it had not been so bad for Alison as he had imagined it, after all. Surely he wanted to hear, didn't he, that Alison had got along well enough without him, as was quite possible if Safford had only behaved himself once in a while. There had never been a written line between them after she left England. But Monica would know. Monica could fill in the gap. Monica might even, as she grew older, have been her mother's confidante.

His spirits lifted again, as they always did in time to meet a crisis, and he almost began to look forward to the interview he had wanted to escape. He must try not to go on thinking of Alison any more. He must get on with his life, start an absorbing piece of new work ——

That portrait of Caroline.

He took his elbows off the wall and looked at his watch. Too soon. He must give Madge a chance. Should he take her out to dinner later, to celebrate?

He sighed, turned, began to stroll back toward the house. A young woman passed him, and her eyes lingered on his slim, understated elegance, his generous mouth, his hooded, dark blue eyes. He was vaguely aware of her, vaguely thought, Yes, one could make quite a lot of mistakes these days, and drifted on, preoccupied, wondering what sort of story Madge would have to tell him.

He felt very kindly toward Madge tonight. She had taken charge, not for the first time, when he was really up against it. Madge was the best of the lot, he decided. Madge had put up with him for years. Of course she did think she knew it all, but then again sometimes that came in very handy. Like this afternoon.

He fell to wondering, with conscious whimsey, what it would be like to be married to Caroline. After the first instinctive tingle down the spine, he amused himself all the way to the corner of Tite Street by picturing exaggerated horrors of such a life.

When he opened the door of the studio they were both there, and he had to put on some sort of hasty act for Caroline's benefit.

"Hullo, Madge, I'm terribly sorry I wasn't in when you came," he began, with a fair appearance of guilt. And then, turning on Caroline a semblance of severity, "What on earth are you doing here?"

"I came for my dress, remember? And then I had a cup of tea, if you don't mind." He knew that look on her face so well—misty-eyed, and a hurt, pouting mouth. But she said good-by to Madge quite nicely, and added, "Thanks for everything."

"Well?" Adrian said anxiously, when he had returned from seeing Caroline to the door, for Madge seemed to have nothing to say at all.

"You know, Adrian," said Madge, lighting a cigarette with her back to him so that he could not see her face, "she's rather pathetic, really."

Because he had been thinking the same thing himself, he said irritably, "Did I come back too soon?"

"No, I had time enough. But nothing I said seemed to quite find its mark. I suppose it's because she's so terribly young."

"I thought she looked a bit shaken, poor kid."

RELIEVES PAIN OF HEADACHE • NEURAL NEURITIS FAST

The way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend

Anacin® relieves headache, neura neuritis pain fast because Anacin is a doctor's prescription—that is, it con not just one, but a combination of ically proven, active ingredients in to-take tablet form. Thousands have introduced to Anacin through their dentist or physician. If you have used Anacin, try it yourself for increa fast, long-lasting relief from pain. wait. Buy Anacin today.

UNWANTED HA FORMULA IR THE OF PRONOUNCED "EYE-AR HAIR REMOVING LOT

The new ZiP Formula is the last wo hair removers. Removes every trace o Fragrant. Pleasant. Effective. Econo Oversized bottles 25¢ & 69¢. Good s

Hi-A... beauty bra by Marja

You're young and lovely in a Hi-A figure making brassiere ..with round stitched cups for uplifted beauty, and double bottom stitching for permanent support. A, B, C cups. Sizes 30-42. Pima Broadcloth, $2.50 Nylon Satin, $3.50

Marja Brassieres • Jacksonville,

CORN

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

remov MOS

ROUND UP EXTRA CA

SELL WESTERN ART CHRISTMAS

No experience needed. Friends buy new $1 Assortment fast from samples we se approval. You make up to 100% cash pr 100 boxes! Amazing value Name-I Christmas Cards SELL ON SIGHT fr Samples. Extra money from Gift Wraps, Stationery, Everyday, many more. Send fo

WESTERN ART STUDIOS, 257 S. Sp DEPT. 62 · LOS ANGELES 12

SELL EXCLUSIVE SUNSH CHRISTMAS CA

EARN EXTRA MONEY IN YOUR SPARE T

Showing Smartly Exclusive Sunshine line to Friends QUICK SALES! SEND FOR SAMPLES ON AP DETAILS OF $1,000.00 SALES CONTEST.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS Dept. LE-7, 115 Fulton St., Ne suppose you couldn't call off the por-ob?"

o, have to go through with that, I'm
. It's had too much publicity. But on ntly more formal basis, what?"
don't think you'll have much trouble
now on," Madge said.
m very grateful to you, my dear, for to all this bother," Adrian told her
ely. "I've had a very narrow escape.
nother thing, Madge, do you realize I have been married to you all this time that business with what's-her-name, if been cad enough to cash in on it?"
hat makes two narrow escapes, doesn't Madge said pleasantly.
ou know, at that, I don't believe I d have minded it with you—much," he ssed, contemplating her from across the
"I was saying only this morning, an-ten years and I don't care what hap-I'm actually beginning to wonder what with my evenings."
ne does, doesn't one?" she sighed.
Mean to say you've noticed it too?"
began to wander about the room, his astray in new, disturbing channels.
hat are you doing now?" she asked hinking." He had come to the writing where the portfolio lay, reached out to e rusty black strings with gentle fingers.

was gone. He would never see her . He had never expected to, but it was olate sort of feeling, all the same.
dge," he said, "we've been friends for a ime, haven't we? You never got on my s the way the others did."
ou're very complimentary this after-Perhaps I'd better
fore you spoil it," she
"I've got a bit of a r on about the flat.
ease is up, you know.
e agents are the awful fools; they'll you anything, and money for it!" She and picked up her s and handbag.
ou mean you're turned out?" Adrian orrified.
ractically. I've got a month to find thing."
Well, why not move in here, my dear?
y of room. I only use this one and the om and bath over there."
e moved toward the door. "Thank you the same."
Now, wait a minute. Don't rush off like You mean you think if you came to live s house we ought to get married first?"
t's customary," she reminded him.
re you cross with me about something?"
ked, a little befogged.
ery cross," she assured him, both laugh-nd exasperated. "You treat me like an hoe!"
've practically asked you to marry me.
people would have been rather pleased,
uld think!"

T stopped her in her tracks. She had ys known what she wanted, and here it belatedly, unexpectedly, left-handedly, reely offered at last. Even now, it was le hard to believe.
Adrian, are you serious about this?"
Of course I'm serious. Marriage is noth-o joke about!" he said irritably.
You are proposing to me, Adrian—like
"
Like what? I can't go on my knees to at this time of day! You said you've got lace to live, and I said why not come and here, and you said people will talk if e not married, and I said, 'All right, let's married.' There. Might as well go the le hog, I suppose, while we're at it."
Oh, Adrian, you are a darling. You've e me very happy." She went to him, ant, and a little triumphant, too, for a kiss. "I'll ring you up tomorrow morn-—or shall I just run in?"
Well, I've got a sitting at ten, you know.
mustn't come then.
Oh, no, I'm much too discreet to come
!" She blew him a kiss from the doorway. "When shall I see you again? Dinner tomorrow?"

"Not tomorrow, no—got a fellow at the club. The night after."

She waved at him gaily, and was gone. Perhaps it was rather an abrupt way of getting engaged, she thought, going down the carpeted stairs, but theirs had never been a demonstrative friendship.

SHE paused on the way through the lower hall to push open the door of the drawing room and peep in. The blinds were down, the furniture was swathed in dust sheets, but she could remember a time when the room had blazed with lights and sparkled with laughter and wit, and with a little management it might be so again. Adrian could still afford to entertain a bit now and then, in a small way. A clock on the landing struck and she closed the drawing-room door and hurried on, hoping for a taxi.

Adrian's pipe had gone out. He made rather a business of lighting it again, avoiding the sight of the portfolio while he did so. Then he sat down on the sofa and passed a hand across his hair. He looked a little dazed, and not altogether happy. His mind was chaotic. Now, how on earth did that happen? he thought.

ADRIAN WOKE THE FOLLOWING MORNING with a distinct impression of hang-over, and lay for some minutes reconstructing the past twenty-four hours and their mounting toll of disaster, past and impending. He had lost Alison forever—again. He had invited Monica to tea today. He had reached an impasse with Caroline. And in attempting to deal with that, he had let himself in for marrying Madge. It hardly seemed worth while to get up at all.

Roberts came in with tea, and a further dilemma at once added itself to the list. Roberts would have to be told about Madge, and Adrian suspected that he would not be pleased.

One ought at least to hear a little melody every day, read a fine poem, see a good picture, and, if possible, make a few sensible remarks.

—GOETHE.

It was while Roberts was laying the table in the studio for Monica's afternoon tea that Adrian began to wonder if he already knew something was to be broken to him. Roberts was especially on his dignity. As he came and went from the kitchen to the table, his carriage was noticeably ponderous, and his silence was portentous.

Adrian sat in the armchair with a sketch pad and pencil, drawing exquisite little figures, several to a page, often only a dozen lines each, and the page, when full, was torn off and cast aside and another begun.

Finally Adrian was driven to make an opening. "What is it, Roberts? I can feel your discreet silence way over here, like a draft," he said, without looking up.

"I'm very sorry, sir, I ——"

"I suppose I've got to know sooner or later. Is it the plumbing or the laundry this time?"

"Neither, sir."

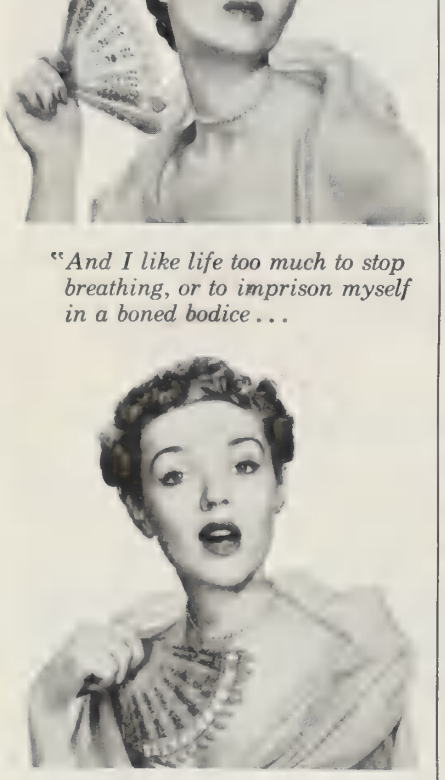
"Worse, eh? Well, let's get it over."

"Have you seen the Evening Banner, sir?"

"You know I haven't. What do they know now?"

"On the theater page of today's noon edition, sir, there is a picture of Miss Manning in evening dress, alongside an exhumed-looking photograph of yourself from what I believe is called the newspaper's morgue, sir. And underneath, it says: December-May Romance, interrogation point." Adrian's pencil had not paused and his disciplined face showed no sign that a cold wind blew through him. "Bring it here, will you?" He went on sketching.

Roberts went out to the kitchen with his most unhurried tread and returned presently carrying a picture newspaper, folded open at an inner page. He handed it silently to Adrian, who began to read: "'Miss Caroline Manning, the delightful young actress, is sitting for a portrait in oils to be painted by the elderly R. A., Mr. Adrian Locke. It is rumored that Mr. Locke is taking something more than an artistic interest in his beautiful blond subject, and they have been seen



"I like a dress cut down to there, providing it stays up . . .

"And I like life too much to stop breathing, or to imprison myself in a boned bodice . . .

"For glamorous comfort—give me a strapless dress with LASTEX in the top—either knitted, shirred, or embroidered.

"You know what LASTEX is. It's an elastic yarn with a gift for giving any fabric gentle stretch and glorious fit."

Lastex

...the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
1230 Avenue of the Americas ▪ New York 20, N. Y.

together ——'" Here he fell to mumbling, until he came to the end. His comment then was brief and articulate. "Damn," he said distinctly.

"Yes, sir," Roberts agreed at once.

"Who's to blame for this, I wonder? The thing seems to have got right out of hand. It's awkward just now, too, I ——" He decided recklessly to lay all the cards on the table. "Roberts, I may as well tell you now, I've asked Mrs. Forbes to come and live here." And then, as there threatened to be a pause, he added hastily, "As my wife, of course."

"May I offer my congratulations, sir?" said Roberts. But it was as Adrian had feared. Roberts was not pleased.

"I suppose you may, but this sort of thing has got to stop, hasn't it?"

"Of course, sir—we mustn't forget that your marriage to someone else will automatically ——"

"But there's no rush about that. Isn't there some easier way?"

"Well, then, if I might suggest—since the portrait is not yet actually begun ——"

"Cancel it?" he said. "No, couldn't do that. Too hard on the girl. Means a lot to her professionally. Of course I can stop being seen round with her."

"I'm afraid Miss Manning is under the impression that she is of considerable importance to you, sir."

"She really was so perishing young, I never took the thing seriously at all," Adrian said. "But apparently she did."

"It's a weakness of the young, sir," Roberts remarked tolerantly. "To take things seriously."

"Well, I dunno, I don't think I ever did."

Roberts was about to reply with a slight whimsey of his own when the doorbell rang.

"That must be Miss Safford," said Adrian hopefully.

While he waited for Roberts to lead Monica up the stairs to the studio door, Adrian remembered how Alison used to arrive—breathless and shining and truant, but not guilty, only glad, with her perpetual overflowing joy at just being with him again, her childlike ability to live the next hour or two as though it need never end, her touching confidence in the mere sanctuary of his presence. He was always enchanted by Alison's simplicity, which allowed her to take nothing—not even her welcome here—for granted. It was always a fresh miracle to her that he had time to spend on herself, and that he enjoyed her company as she did his. Alison had always run up the stairs, usually with her hat in her hand by the time she reached the top. And then there would be that moment at the doorway, to make sure no one else was there, and that single questioning glance to see if it was still the same with him, and then Alison was in his arms again.

But it was Monica on the threshold now, hesitating there, slender, quietly dressed, wearing a disfiguring hat which was no doubt very smart in America, black, with a broad, slashed brim tilted grotesquely so that it came down over one eye—a hat which required a prima donna to stand up to it. And this timid-seeming, thirtyish woman, whose whole appearance was anything but dashing, was totally eclipsed by it.

"My dear Monica, I was delighted to get your letter," he said warmly, advancing to meet her. "It's very nice of you to come and see me."

"It was good of you to ask me to come, Mr. Locke." Her voice was very low, her hand was slim and quickly withdrawn. For a moment her face, shadowed by the fantastic hat, was lifted to his, then she turned away to look with curiosity around the big, diversely furnished room, workshop and living quarters in a somehow harmonious whole. It was a dull, showery day, and already the daylight around the easel had turned gray and the corner farthest from the windows, where the tea table stood, required a light. "You must receive dozens of such letters."

"There was only one Alison."

A strong resemblance was here in the daughter, but the girl seemed lifeless and old before her time. Her slim shoulders drooped; she had never learned to make a first impression; she had never, apparently, found her personality at all. There was none of Alison's blazing vitality, no warmth, nothing given out at all.

"Then you do remember her?" asked Alison's daughter, sinking without grace into the chair he indicated near the tea table.

"Remember her? No one could ever forget her. You said in your letter that she had died," he went on, anxious to get that part of it over. "When was that?"

"About three years ago."

"As long as that? It doesn't seem possible, somehow. I feel as though I should have known."

She added nothing, and he turned a chair a little to face her, and sat down.

"Well, let's have a look at you, my dear. You're very like her in a way, aren't you? You must be older now than she was when I knew her. How strange that seems. Let's see, you were what then—five or six?"

"I was ten when she knew you."

"But I thought . . . but she wasn't old enough to have a ten-year-old child!"

"It was one of her little vanities to knock a few years off my age. I was small, you know, and she never looked anything like as old as she was, right up to the end."

"Yes, I always told her that. The planes of her face were exactly right. There was nothing to go hollow or sag."

"I'm not like that, as you can see," Monica said matter-of-factly. "We used to look rather alike, but I've had a long illness. Don't bother to be kind about it. I know I look older than I should."

"Can't see as much as I'd like for that hat." He couldn't resist taking a shot at it, it was so violently unsuitable. "Would you like a cup of tea?"

"Yes, please," said Monica without enthusiasm.

He handed her a cup, offered a plate of bread and butter, which she refused. "Cake?"

"Nothing, thank you. Just tea."

"Your mother always ate like anything at teatime. I had to go to all sorts of trouble about it, because I never care myself."

Monica smiled faintly, and hid behind her cup.

"You know," he went on, determined to break down this absurd shyness, "you're sitting now just where she always sat. Heredity, no doubt." He thought, as he watched her cup return to its saucer, that her hands we shaking. "I can't help but wonder what s could have told you about me, because y seem frightened to be here, and I'm not a dangerous, really."

"When you've heard about a person your life, and . . . thought about him, it's bit . . . overwhelming when you finally me him. You're just—just the way she alwa said."

"What did she say? I'd like to know th Did she talk about me much? After you went out to America, I mean?"

"Not at first," said Monica careful "But the summer after father died, we ca to England for a few weeks and ——"

"Without looking me up? I like that "I wanted her to, but she said you w much too famous and busy, and she did want you to have to be polite to someo you'd known very briefly and would ha forgotten all about. We went to one of yo shows—at a gallery in Bond Street. Y weren't there that day."

"Wish I had been. Tell me, why did y think there was a portrait? I never got chance to begin one."

"I don't quite know," she confessed, loo ing down at her cup, apparently absorbed its pattern. "I understood her to say th you had painted her. I suppose it was t drawings she meant, and I got it wrong. M I see those?" As she reached to set down t cup on the small table beside her chair h eyes fell on the newspaper where he h thrown it, folded back so that his portr and Caroline's looked up at her. "And th I really must be going," she added. "I taking up too much of your time.

"In a minute," he answered easily, sitti still. "I've got all the time in the world anything to do with Alison. Tell me m about her. Was she happy in America, you think?"

"Yes, I think so. Homesick, of course, n and then."

"Why did she stay on there after your ther died?"

This was one of the questions which ke nagging at him. Once Alison was free to co back to him, why had she not done so? would have been easy enough for her to d cover that he had never married. She mig have given him a chance. Unless —— Th was what he wanted to know and was afra

(Continued on Page 95)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

What Have You Done All Day?

By MARJORIE LEDERER LEE

By the time he comes home in the evening,
My hero, my Man of Affairs,
I have laundered three loads in the washer,
I have made thirty trips up the stairs,
I have vacuumed the rugs and the sofa,
I have waxed the linoleum floors,
I have spent an approximate lifetime
Getting fingerprints off of the doors;
I have eight times rediapered my daughter,
And eleven times lifted my son,
I have kicked him his first little football
At the point of his first little gun;
I have battled the beds and the bathrooms,
I have mastered the mop and the broom,
I have fixed me a lunch for a princess
Which I somehow forgot to consume;
I have vied with a traveling brush man
And two sellers of new magazines,
I have broken the bank for the butcher,
I have patched me a hole in my jeans;
I have soothed, I have salved, I have bandaged,
I have darned, I have knit, I have purled
By the time he comes home in the evening,
My hero, my Man of the World;

And it's then that he kisses my forehead
In his tenderest, gentlest way,
And I listen with love and compassion
While he tells me he's had a hard day. . . .

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

(Continued from Page 92)

ask. He was never the only man who uld have been glad to take her away from alter Safford. There must have been plenty America who felt the same way. He would ver hold it against her, but he would like know.

"We were very hard up then," Monica is saying. "She had to get a job."

"But your father was a rich man!" he ed incredulously.

"And a careless one. He left very little." e glanced again briefly at the folded news- per, and said, "Mr. Locke, may I see the awings now, please? Then I really must ."

"Yes, of course." But he sat very still a oment longer, watching her averted face. hy was she nervous and almost hostile, un- lling to meet his eyes, seemingly unwilling en to discuss her mother with him? Why d she come, then? What had she ex- cted? What did she want? Only the draw- gs? He rose and went toward the writing ble and turned on a shaded light there. Will you come over here, please? I've laid em out for you."

UT before she followed, she picked up the wspaper as though compelled to do so, and ad the brief paragraph below the two notographs. "This is a rotten picture of u," she said and laid down the paper and me to him at the table. "Mother said the ople who sat to you always ended by fall- g in love with you—that is, unless they re already in love with you."

"What a horrible thing to say about any- dy!" he objected in some surprise. "I n't want to brag, but I can paint, too, you ow."

"Yes, we know that, even in America," e said gently.

"I was there once," he remarked experi- entally. "Your father was alive then, you ow."

"Didn't you like him?" she asked.

"Not particularly." He handed her a awing from the portfolio. "There. Did she ll you I was terribly in love with her?"

"I guessed that you were."

"She never admitted it?" he insisted.

"The way I heard it—she was in love with you."

"Well, my dear, perhaps I shouldn't talk about it to you, but you're not a child any longer. And you probably haven't any illusions, have you, about your father?"

Instantly the door closed between them again.

"I'd rather not talk about him, Mr. Locke. He was a great musician. They're likely to be difficult to live with, aren't they?"

"So I've heard. He was a brilliant fellow, certainly. None more so." Rebuked, he returned to the drawings. That was like Alison; she would never hear criticism of her husband. In all their intimacy, she had never allowed, without protest, any open denunciation of his atrocious ways. Even when he was giving her a particularly bad time, any comment by Adrian would instantly drive her to Safford's defense. "We used to laugh quite a lot, she and I," he said, handing her another drawing. "I never quite caught it there, but I kept on trying. Are these things like her, do you think?"

"Very," said Monica, looking down.

"You know, you could almost have sat for that one yourself," he said of the third. "She wasn't laughing that day." Even as he spoke, something stirred at the back of his brain—a sudden, increasing desire to see Monica without that hat. The resemblance was stronger than he had first thought. He bent to look under the hat's brim, but a slight shift of her head interposed it again. "I wish you'd take off that thing you've got on your head," he said irritably.

"Take off my hat?"

"Yes. I'm interested in faces, naturally, and I can't see a thing but hat. Besides, you must know it doesn't suit you at all." The doorbell rang sharply across his words, and Monica gave a quick, apprehensive glance over her shoulder exactly as Alison had used to do. He heard himself saying, just as he had said so many times to Alison, "There's no one else coming. That's of no importance. Roberts will see to it."

"Well, I really must be going now. I only ——" She laid down the drawings, though she had not yet seen them all, and began to back away from the table.

"But I wanted to talk to you!"

"Well, you see, I didn't expect you to give me so much of your time, and so I made another engagement ——"

"Oh, now, that won't do at all," he complained lightly. "You and I have a lot to say to each other. You haven't told me half the things I want to know yet. Have you come back here to live?"

"No, I don't think so, if . . . it's all very uncertain, really ——"

"Do you have to find a job if you're going to stay here—I mean, you have to earn your own living, I take it?"

"Well, yes, I . . . haven't much money, of course."

"Can I be of any use?" he persisted, detaining her in the middle of the room by sheer will power. He could not let her go just yet. He had to watch, he had to listen, standing very still behind the table meanwhile for fear she might take actual flight. "What is it you do? Music?"

"Oh, no, I . . . didn't inherit that, unfortunately. I . . . don't do anything well, I'm afraid."

"What sort of job did you have in America?"

"Well, the fact is, I just . . . sold things across a counter."

"What sort of things?"

"Costume jewelry—ladies' handbags; I was in a big department store. Sometimes it was babies' wear. That was more fun."

"But can you live like that?"

"I have to."

"But, my dear girl, we must do something about this. You must let me ——"

"Oh, no, thank you Mr. Locke. It's very good of you, but ——"

"Nonsense, you don't expect me to let Alison's child walk in here and out again as though she was a perfect stranger, do you? Are you all right for a place to live?"

"Oh, yes, Mary's very good. She says I may use her guest room as long as I like, but ——"

"Now just let me get this straight," said Adrian. "You're quite at a loose end here, and need to earn some money, I take it, and ——"

"I have my passage back to New York, Mr. Locke."

"Please say Adrian. She always did."

"Thank you—Adrian."

"But surely, if you found something suitable to do here, you wouldn't choose to go back there alone, would you?"

"Well, I could always go back to the store, I think, they ——"

"But what sort of life is that?" he argued, and dared to move toward her at last. "No, no, that won't do at all. Just you give me a little time, I'll think of something. Now come over here and sit down and tell me ——"

"I must go now, really." Monica balked there in the middle of the room.

"Well, if you must, but come and dine with me here and let's have a real talk about things." And he added quietly as she seemed to hesitate, "Oh, perfectly respectable, I assure you. Roberts will be here, you know."

He was standing quite close to her now. For a moment her face was upturned and his heart skipped a beat. Seen like that, she was so very like her mother. Then the ridiculous hatbrim came between them again, and she took a few steps away from him, saying, "She always said you were the kindest creature she ever knew." Her eyes were caught again by the newspaper, lying in the seat of her chair. "That's how you were always getting into trouble, wasn't it? People taking advantage of your kindness, and trying to turn it into something else? Like that girl there, perhaps?"

"Oh, that," said Adrian, dismissing it. "There's nothing in it, you know. I'll handle it."

"And without hurting her feelings," she murmured.

"Oh, yes, no fun in that, is there?" he said. "Now, when can you come and dine with me?"

Caution descended over her like a fog. "I'm afraid I can come only at teatime. Perhaps someday next week ——"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

A WOMAN whose plants bloom profusely gives her secret: "I just go around every morning and tell them how nicely they're doing."

Man proposes
Then he dozes.

An old-timer is one who can remember when gold wedding bands wore thin on washboards.

The safest risk in a marriage partner is one with enough faults to offset your own.

Give a parent enough rope and he'll make a swing for his child.

A lie leads a man from a grove into a jungle.

With children, the better the meal the shorter the blessing.

To newlyweds: Jealousy is stooping to be conquered.

Small boy's comment on chess set: "Looks like a graveyard to me."

The difference between the weight of the seed catalogues and our harvest is only a few pounds.

Adolescents need to be told what not to do so they will know what to do.

When our telephone bill goes over a certain amount, extra calls are paid for out of the allowances of the most frequent offenders.

Instead of going through the proper procedure, our idea of raising a female dog is to stand in the yard and throw rocks at the males, which somewhat compares with the old-fashioned idea of how to rear a daughter.

The big difference between girls in mother's day and in ours is that yesterday's girl had doubts.

Courage: what a woman needs when she cleans out the refrigerator.

"When I have a house of my own," threatens a young daughter, "I won't have curtains or trimmings, and all the floors will be mud-colored."

As sad as the empty slot in the toothbrush holder when a child has left home for the first time.

Daughter with big news: "The kids say I'm the best pitcher because when I throw the ball they all can hit it!"

A mother of nine well-adjusted children explains how: "I always find out what each one wants to do and then try to let him do it."

In tears over crusty pans?

BRILLO

gives TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

New "Scorchy Pan" Tests prove Brillo outshines other types of cleansers tested! Actually gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time! A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off crust. Makes pans shine! Fine for stoves, too!

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

RED box — soap-filled pads
GREEN box — pads and cake soap

NEED EXTRA DOLLARS?
Sell Friends Christmas Cards, Gift Items
Even beginners make extra cash showing new "Christmas Pearls", Metallics, Hankie assortments, Gift Wraps, Kiddies' Books, big line Novelties. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Experience unnecessary. Write for FREE samples Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Stationery and Feature boxes on approval. Special offers.
PILGRIM GREETING CARD CO.
111 Summer St., Dept. L-4, Boston, Mass.

FREE SAMPLES
50 For $1.00
25 For $1.00
25 For $1.95
25 For $2.50
Name Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS

WANT CASH QUICK
Sell only 100 Ass'ts — make up to $50! Complete line Xmas, Everyday Cards. New "Spang-l-ettes" and Famous "Prize" Ass'ts; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up; Stationery; Wraps; Notes; etc. Up to 100% profit. No risk... Money back guarantee. Request "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on approval.
30 FREE SAMPLES
HERTELART, 305 W. Adams St. Dept. P-9, Chicago 6, Ill.

YOU MAY BE THE NEXT TO MAKE $100
Selling Christmas Cards

Many women make big money regularly this easy way. You can too — without experience. Just show friends, relatives, co-workers FREE SAMPLES of richly designed exclusive Personal Christmas Cards, 50 for $1. On boxes of 21-Card $1 Assortments you keep $50. Gigantic line of 164 money-makers, including Gift Wraps, Religious, Everyday Cards, Stationery, Plastic Gifts. Extra Cash Bonus AND valuable Prizes.

Exclusive Designs WITH NAME 50 FOR $1 AND UP

SEND NO MONEY for SAMPLES
Send just your name, address for Free Samples of Personal Christmas Cards. Also get beautiful Assortments on approval and big money-making kit. Organizations: write for special fund-raising plan. ACT NOW!
WETMORE & SUGDEN, INC., Dept. 21-F.
749 MONROE AVE., ROCHESTER 2, N. Y.

Co-o-l Salad Magic

"makes" summer meals!

BRING OUT EVERY GOOD FLAVOR WITH LIGHT, DELICATE WESSON OIL!

SERVE SHRIMP SALAD
in cool-as-a-cucumber ring—with Wesson's 2-Way Dressing

2 teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons sugar
¼ teaspoon pepper
⅔ cup Wesson Oil
¼ cup vinegar
1 lb. fresh, cooked shrimp* or 2 5-oz. cans of shrimp
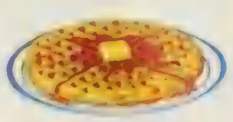
¼ cup sweet or sour cream
Dash paprika

*Such as Blue Plate, Gulf Kist or Palm Brand Canned Shrimp

For dressing, beat together the first 5 ingredients. Marinate shrimp in ⅓ cup of dressing. Chill. To rest of dressing, add cream; sprinkle with paprika just before serving. The mild, ever-so-light flavor of Wesson Oil makes this dressing truly delicious. For all tempting homemade salad dressings, pure, delicate Wesson Oil is America's all-out favorite. Make gelatine ring as follows:



1½ tablespoons gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1 No. 2 can crushed pineapple
2 cucumbers, medium
¼ cup lemon juice
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Salad greens

Soften gelatine in cold water. Drain pineapple; save syrup. Peel cucumbers; put through food chopper, with pineapple. Save juices and combine with lemon juice and enough pineapple syrup to make 1½ cups liquid; bring to a boil. Pour over gelatine and stir. Add sugar, salt. Cool until slightly thickened. Add cucumber and pineapple; turn into an oiled ring mold. Chill until set; unmold, fill center with marinated shrimp. Serve with remaining dressing. 6 servings.

Saves Chiffon flavor

Betty Crocker of General Mills uses delicate Wesson Oil for the distinctive, delicate flavor of Chiffon Cakes.

Safe for digestible frying

Wesson heats higher than high-grade solid shortening—without smoking or burning.

Saves mixing time

Pour Wesson to measure—and to mix for delicious muffins and waffles.

Wesson Oil

America's Favorite Salad Oil

Cookbook with over 200 recipes! Send name, address, 25¢ in coin to the Wesson Oil and Snowdrift People, New Orleans 12, La.

"Next week be blowed. What about tomorrow?"

"It's very good of you to take so much trouble about me, Mr. ——"

"Adrian," he corrected.

"Adrian," she repeated rather breathlessly, backing away from him toward the door.

"Tomorrow, same time?" He followed casually, not stressing it. "I'll have some ideas by then, no doubt, about something to keep you here, where you belong, where we can look after you a bit." He touched a bell, and Roberts appeared, to guide her down the stairs to the street door. "Oh, and don't wear that hat tomorrow, will you?" Adrian called from the threshold.

He turned back into the studio, stood gazing at the writing table where the open portfolio lay. His face wore a baffled, intent, listening look, for he was still quite incredulous of the idea that was beginning to form in his mind.

The door opened behind him and Roberts said, "Excuse me, sir, but will you see Miss Manning now? She's been waiting in the drawing room."

It was really the last straw, to have Caroline turn up now. With a wrench, he brought his mind back to that exasperating story in the Banner. "I suppose I've got to deal with it," he said unhappily.

"Sooner or later, sir, I should say," Roberts remarked unfeelingly.

"Sooner, then, but I've not had time to work it out. Clear those things away, bring some sherry or something."

While Roberts collected the tea things on a tray, and brought sherry and glasses, Adrian wandered restlessly about the room, with now and then an irritable glance at the newspaper in the chair where Monica had left it. Had Caroline come about that, to explain how it got there, perhaps? Caroline must kill that rumor. He realized, as Roberts set the sherry on the table, that nothing had occurred to him of any value. He might as well get on with it.

"All right," he said tersely. "Show her in."

Caroline was overdressed as usual, but rather stunning all the same. Her face was the proverbial thunderclou à la the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, and she attacked from the threshold before he could speak.

"That Roberts has a nerve, making me cool my heels downstairs all this time. Who was here?" she demanded, all in one breath.

"Sherry?" Adrian murmured, turning from the table with a full glass in either hand.

"Thank you, darling."

She lifted her glass to him with a radiant, forgiving smile, and sipped. Adrian downed his, poured out another, picked up the newspaper.

"Have you seen this?" he asked severely.

"Yes. It's a foul picture of you, isn't it?"

"Who is responsible? Surely you gave them no authority to print stuff like that?"

"Are you cross about it?"

"Of course I'm cross about it! It makes me look a fool."

"Oh, Adrian, how can you say that? Everyone I know is thrilled! I came to tell you, I ran into Bert Myers at luncheon today—you know, he owns the Regent's Theater—and he gave me two stalls for tomorrow night and asked me to bring you to a party at his house after the show."

"But I can't go, I've got someone dining here," he said firmly. "Now, look here, Caroline, you must not go round giving an impression that you and I are—are "

"Oh, where's the harm, Adrian? People are beginning to take notice! Why are you so upset about it?"

"Because I am going to marry Madge Forbes."

For a moment she blinked at him uncomprehendingly, and he felt as though h had slapped her face. But she must bear the consequences of her ruthless meddling.

"Who's she?" asked Caroline stupidly. "The one that was here yesterday afternoon?"

"Yes."

"But, Adrian, she's too old for you!" cried Caroline. "Now that's just what I was afraid of when I left here. She tried to warn me off, but I thought I'd settled that!"

"Really, Caroline," he told her, "you're an appalling young woman, do you know that?"

"Adrian." Caroline came up to him, quite serious now, with all her pouting and coquetry and impudence put aside. "You think I'm just a silly kid, don't you? And she thinks I'm a fly-by-night. You're both wrong. You think I'm just trying to get what I can out of you, don't you? But it's not all, honestly it isn't. I think you're wonderful. You make all my boy friends look like silly little pip-squeaks. Whatever it is, you've got it and they haven't. I'll stick to you, Adrian, and don't let that woman tell you different."

For a moment he stood silent, swamped in compassion. All his tact and experience swung promptly into action now. He set down the sherry glass slowly, took both her hands in his.

"My dear Caroline," he began in his tender voice, which made a caress of a woman's name, "you have just paid me one of the greatest compliments I've ever had. At the same time, I realize that the main trouble with those boy friends of yours is that they're young, like you. Don't you think, if you picked out the best one of them, and really went to work on him, that in a hundred years' time you could turn him into a fair imitation of me?"

"You mean you don't w-want me?" cried Caroline, gazing up at him with great tears rolling down her cheeks.

"Oh, my dear ——" He ran one hand across her face gently, and his fingers came away wet and cool. "You're very sweet, and I appreciate what you've said more than I can tell you. But don't let's be tragic about it. Let's just pretend that none of it ever happened, shall we?" He turned away, taking refuge in a cigarette. "Now, when you come in on Monday morning for your first sitting, we aren't going to refer to any of this again, are we?"

She stood there piteously, in the middle of the room, where he had left her. "You mean you'll do the portrait anyhow?"

"Why, of course." His tone was deliberately casual, scrupulously friendly. "But no more of that stuff, please," he added, pointing at the paper. "And no parties. Just the portrait, like a good girl."

Caroline swallowed hard, and managed a tremulous smile. She felt a little flat, but not at all humiliated. Paradoxically, she was fonder of Adrian than she had ever been. She felt an immense tenderness for him, and wanted terribly to do something, say something, give him something to remember her by.

"Oh, Adrian, there'll never be anyone like you!" she cried, and threw her arms around him with a sweet, childlike kiss, and ran out of the room and down the stairs.

After a moment Adrian drained his sherry glass. Already his willful mind had deserted Caroline and gone back to Monica and tomorrow afternoon. He drifted to the portfolio again, stood staring down at the topmost drawing. "You might have sat for that one yourself," he had said. If Monica looked like that now, had Alison looked any different at the end? His heart skipped a beat again. How would Alison look, after twenty years of unhappiness and daily humiliation?

His heart had quickened like a boy's. But why? Why wasn't it Monica, if she said it was? There was no conceivable reason for any concealment now; there was simply no point in Alison's signing a letter to him with Monica's name. It had to be Monica. But next time he would see her without that hat and in a good light. And if he still wasn't sure, there were other ways. She was bound to give herself away somehow. He would have to be clever. He had been clever with Alison before now. And if it were Alison, she could never fool him about anything, for long.

He fell asleep devising conversational pitfalls for Monica, and awoke to begin the same thing again, recalling things he had not thought of for years, briefing himself like a lawyer for the teatime encounter. It occurred to him that she might not turn up at all, and sured himself with the address on her which he intended to investigate per- if she did fail to appear. Meanwhile as nothing to do but wait.

n Blanche Gordon arrived early in the on for her final sitting, she found him minded and apparently absorbed in g.

st he laid down his brush and said, , that's the best I can do."

ally finished?" She rose, and went to n front of the easel. "You know, I still here's something just a little wrong he mouth."

e human mouth is the most mobile, ve, changeable feature in the face. r brush nor camera can ever catch it it looks to everyone the way it does is being used."

," said Blanche, impressed. "I should hought the eyes would be the hardest but you've got the eyes wonderfully. re my husband will be very pleased. has been fun, Adrian. I shall miss our essions here."

s, so shall I," he said automatically. doorbell saved him from any more of was not yet time for Monica, but he keyed up to her coming that he had o jump at every ring since noon. This was Madge. She had rung him up mes already, about this and that, and d on the whole rather as though he was ow on accountable to her for how he is time.

llo, Adrian, I was in the neighborhood t ran in to tell you the Perrys are back" she began cheerily, as though the were any use. "Just off the Queen had the most wonderful time —— Oh, Blanche, you were rather round the I didn't see you."

e knew Blanche would be there for the he thought. He had told her so on the ne not three hours ago, and also that an engagement for tea.

—wonderful time, beautiful food," she the Perrys' story. "You ought to see ps there, and everyone was marvelous n. They have asked me to come and th them for a bit in the country, and I t if you wanted to come along they'd t the chance to have you."

, no, not just now. You go along and ll about it," he said hastily, and e Gordon had to put her oar in. u know, Adrian, I should be very an- if you'd said yes, because I've been for ages to get you down to our place."

ll, perhaps this is a little different, ," Madge began almost too sweetly, se you see ——" ve a look at the picture, Madge, and what you think of it," Adrian re- d quickly. She came to the easel and l there critically, her head a little on le. "Oh, it's good, Adrian, very good indeed," she decided. "And of course you know, Blanche darling, that you must never say anything about the mouth; it drives any portrait painter wild. Are we dining out tonight, Adrian, or having a bite here?"

"Oh, here, can't we?" He began to scrape and clean his palette, not paying much attention to either of them, for Madge was behaving in the most atrocious female way.

"Oh, yes, somebody coming to tea, isn't there?" Madge recalled knowingly.

"Yes, dear. Nobody you know."

"Can I drop you, Madge? I'm going straight home from here," Blanche suggested.

"Yes, that's a good idea, you just go along together," said Adrian, laying down his tools and wiping his fingers on a paint-stained cloth.

"Aren't you in rather a hurry to be rid of us?" Madge objected, watching him fondly.

"Not in the least, but you'll have to talk to each other if you stay, because I've got things to do before my next appointment."

But even then they dallied on the way to the door, talking nonsense until, as Adrian had dreaded and they had intended all along, the bell rang again, and Madge said, "I fear his next appointment has come upon us. No doubt we can find a taxi in the King's Road."

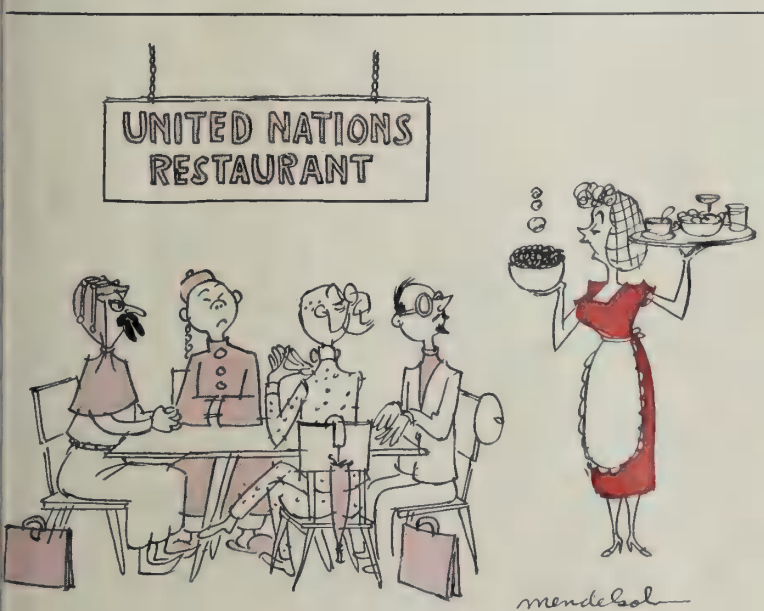
But before they could go, Monica had to come in and she paused, paralyzed. She was wearing a different dress, but the same infuriating hat.

Adrian rose to the occasion and commended her for being on time, and performed the introductions. "Miss Safford has come to see some studies I made for a portrait of her mother, some years ago. As the portrait was never even begun, they have a certain . . . interest."

At which point the telephone created a further complication.

"Why do you have that beastly thing in here, Adrian?" asked Madge. "It rings all the time. I should think you'd go out of your mind."

They all stood in the polite hiatus a telephone conversation in the same room always imposes.



"Who?" said Adrian unencouragingly to the unknown caller. "No—no, would you mind ringing up a little later? Mr. Locke is engaged at the moment. Thank you."

"Sketches?" said Blanche Gordon. "Are those the ones I saw the other day, Adrian? Oh, my dear"—she turned a beaming smile on Monica—"they are charming. I'm sure you will find them a great inspiration and comfort."

"Yes—thank you," Monica murmured. "I ——"

"I often used to hear your father play," Blanche continued. "Brilliant, my dear, too lovely for words. Such a handsome man—such a dominant type. Are you musical too?"

"No, I—unfortunately not ——"

"Who gets braised camel?"

*Tray on a terrace — colorfully cool with DOLE Pineapple Chunk taste-tempters: tropic-gold chunks and stuffed olives nudging each other on toothpicks; more chunks wrapped in bacon—all broiled or browned to a turn. And plenty of chunks to dunk in grated cheddar cheese. Piquant? Perfect—thanks to that famous DOLE flavor!

DOLE summer-ways with

*Cheese Circle Salad—a tasty ring of cottage cheese atop a thick slice of rosy tomato, well-chilled, then glorified with a DOLE crisp-cut Crushed Pineapple topping. Instead of being mashed or shredded, DOLE Crushed comes to you in tiny, juice-laden cubelets—bright as jewels!

*By Patricia Collier
DOLE Home Economist
DOLE, 215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, Calif.

pineapple & fruit cocktail

*Rainbow Pie — new DOLE Fruit Cocktail refrigerator dessert! Mix well 1 cup finely crushed cornflakes with 2 tbsp. sugar and 4 tbsp. melted butter. Press into 9" pie pan. Chill well. Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatine in ¼ cup syrup drained from a No. 2½ can DOLE Fruit Cocktail. Bring remaining syrup to boiling point; add softened gelatine; chill until partially set. Fold in drained fruit; heap in pie shell; chill until set.

ONLY ODO-RO-NO CREAM GIVES YOU ALL THESE ADVANTAGES!

1 Stops perspiration quickly and safely.

2 Banishes odor instantly.

3 The only cream deodorant that guarantees full protection for 24 hours.

4 Never irritates normal skin—use it daily. Can be used immediately after shaving.

5 Absolutely harmless to all fabrics.

6 New, exclusive formula. Never dries up, never gets gritty or hardens in the jar as ordinary deodorants often do.

7 Double your money back if you aren't satisfied that this new Odo-Ro-No Cream is the safest, most effective, most delightful deodorant you've ever used. Just return unused portion to Northam Warren, New York.

Don't trust your charm to outdated, ineffective deodorants. Rely on the new Odo-Ro-No Cream, made by the leader in the deodorant field for more than 30 years.

New ODO·RO·NO CREAM

The deodorant without a doubt

GUARANTEED FULL 24-HOUR PROTECTION!

More cream for your money.
New 25¢ and 50¢ sizes, plus tax.

"That must have been a great disappointment to him," said Blanche benignly. "You really must get Adrian to show you those sketches someday, Madge. They're out of his very best work, even all that time ago."

"What happened about the portrait, Adrian?" Madge took it up. "You don't often get as far as studies without ——"

"They went out to America unexpectedly, and forgot to come back," he explained briefly. "And then Mrs. Safford died. Now, Madge, darling, I'm sorry I can't ask you both to join us at tea, but we shall get reminiscent about people you didn't know, and it would be very dull for you."

"I'm sure it would," she agreed with more than enough understanding. "Well, I shall see you here at seven, then, shall I?" She came up to him to bestow a light, possessive kiss, making quite certain the other two would realize how things stood. "So long, darling, as they say in America."

Then Madge and Blanche Gordon had gone away together, almost arm in arm, new allies against the common enemy, the silent, slender creature in the atrocious hat.

When the door had actually closed behind them, Adrian stood a moment thinking, before going back into the room where Monica remained motionless, and strangely quiet.

"You know," he said casually, breaking the silence between them, "even after all these years, women astound me. Sometimes I wonder if it isn't just because I seem to be so comfortable here. And then again, they do seem to be fond of me too. And as for you," he added, coming suddenly into focus, "you're wearing that ghastly hat again when I particularly asked you not to! Now, will you take it off or shall I?"

"You're a very irritable man, aren't you, Adrian? I remember—she said you were always barking at people, but it didn't mean anything."

"It means that hat is coming off today. I warned you." He advanced on her.

She stepped back and pulled off the hat, revealing soft, short hair. "Oh, all right, Adrian—there."

He stood a moment, looking at her, feeling surer every moment. "Come and sit down." He indicated the sofa, and moved a chair to face her, picking up his sketch pad and pencil. Settling himself, he began to make his quick, unfinished drawings as they talked. It gave his eyes a chance to go to her hands, her hair, her face, with an impersonal freedom. "Don't mind this, will you? I always do it," he said easily. "Doesn't matter how much you move about, I'm just as happy. We'll have tea in a few minutes."

Roberts was moving quietly about in the background.

"You asked on the phone the other day why the portrait was never painted," Adrian was saying, "and Madge asked me the same thing just now. I think you have a right to the real answer."

"Well, I'm sorry I brought it up, it was impertinent, perhaps you'd rather not ——"

"It's a perfectly natural question and I'm quite willing you should know." But if there had remained much doubt in his mind, he would not have said what he was going to say. "We were very deeply in love, she and I, and it seemed to me that her life as she lived it then was impossible for anyone to endure. I tried everything I knew to get her to give it up and come to me, once and for all. There would have been some brief unpleasantness, it's true—very unpleasant, your father would have made it, I'm sure. But once that was over I could have married her and looked after her. You, of course, were included in my plans. And you would have grown up under my roof in a normal, happy household, instead of being dragged all over the world at his chariot wheels ——"

"Oh, I enjoyed the tours, really," she broke in, obstinately loyal.

"I'm sure you did," Adrian agreed, with a sudden edge to his voice. "And you must have enjoyed the rows he made, too, didn't you, and the public scenes he made with waiters and people who couldn't hit back, and the way he spoke to her and the things he said to her before strangers, and the humiliations she endured without protes save his face. All that must have been entertaining for a sensitive child, and w have taught you to look forward to a riage of your own, with or without mu genius to enliven it. Have you ever marrie

"No," said Monica inaudibly.

"That's very odd, isn't it, considerin you must have seen to recommend it du your father's lifetime? I can see that taught you her own blind, quixotic loyalt him. It was the only stupid thing about that she could not see that apart from own happiness and mine, she was sacrifi a child to darkness and fear by stickin him. You were afraid of him, weren't yo

"Yes," said Monica inaudibly. "He worse as time went on."

"Of course he did. There was nothin stop him. I even argued with her that shock might bring him round a bit, if left him. She was always afraid it m push him in the other direction, into do right madness. We shall never know, n which of us was right. But I tried to save She must have told you that."

"It was always you she talked about, ing the bad times," Monica said slowly, most unwillingly. "You've the right to k that now, I think. You see, we hadn't g very good picture of you, only one cut o a newspaper, and I had seen you only tw She was always afraid I might forget yo think it was as much to keep up her courage too—to convince herself again you really existed in the same world."

"If she had only come back to me," said, his pencil never pausing. "But I her that, before she went. I told her alw to come back, if it got too bad."

"But no woman in her right mind wo have held you to that!"

"I went right on being a bachelor, did I?" he pointed out gently. "Anyway, you know why the portrait was never do I loved her so much that I drove her a from me. I didn't try to break up her m riage, mind. It was already in pieces whe met her. If it had been a usual sort of ho with a child in it, I could have held tongue. We might even have achieved so kind of friendship out of so much love. when I saw, again and again, what it doing to her to go on living with him would try once more to convince her that must break away, if only for your sa Finally it got too much for her and she England with him, for the American to I've often wondered if she knew then t they would never come back."

There was a silence. Monica had opinion to contribute. He pulled a sheet f the pad, dropped it on the floor beside chair and began another.

"Are you staying in London for a whil he asked casually, preparing to come a from another angle.

"I haven't really made any plans yet.

"It seems to me, my dear, that you being purposefully vague with someone is an old friend and anxious to do anyth he can for you."

"That's very kind," said Monica.

"Have you got enough money to live on

"Yes, thank you."

"'Yes, thank you—that's very kind'; s it!" he cried irritably. "Compared to y mother, my girl, you're a rotten conve tionalist. We argued sometimes, but at le she was always entertaining!"

"I'm sorry, Adrian, it must be exasper ing to you." She leaned forward, smil locking her hands loosely round her kn suddenly dropping her defensiveness, se ing also to drop ten years of her age. " only that when a miracle happens bef one's eyes, it's a bit frightening, and doesn't know quite ——"

"What miracle?" said Adrian, pretend that he had not noticed the swift transfor tion, making no response lest it vanish ag as quickly as it came.

"You," said Monica, and her voice low and warm. "To find you like this, j the way she said you would be, not chan a bit in all these years. I keep trying to mind myself that we are strangers after at I don't know you nearly as well as do ——"

ell, don't remind yourself. After all, known each other for twenty years.
old friends, don't you see? And I feel me way about you because you are so er," he added cunningly. "So why we just relax a bit and say what we each other?"
caught her eyes then, for almost the me, and she gave him a rather doubtile before she looked away and down;
mething inside him shouted. "It is!"
omething else cautioned quickly,
. Don't scare her off. Make sure," and ered his own gaze to the pad in his nd the pencil began to move again.
e said you sketched like this while you
," Monica was saying. "I expected it—comes true. Except when it was some-very important, she said, you always erything aside and listened with every you, as no one else knows how to do.
id you were the kindest, gayest crea-the world, and that just being with as like sitting in a warm, lighted room storm outside. She said you never misunderstandings, or moods, or si-because when you loved a woman you give her the moon to make her —and that you had the inborn art of ness, which few men can even learn."
an kept his eyes on the pad, kept his moving, but there was a tightness in oat, and an old, remembered singing lood. He waited, not glancing at her, usting himself to speak for what like minutes, arranging his next laying out his campaign, for she ot suspect yet that he knew. She must on, nearer and in a delusion of se-
She must be con-
of her own success,
t she would go on to him like this,
ng like this, slip-ack into his love
is, until there would be no denying.
as exactly like the first time, he was
g. There she had sat, Walter Safford's erene with a beauty that was like a unruffled, inland lake, cool and pure approachable, with snow-clad peaks
. He remembered his first incredulous e of the hidden storm and fire within d recalled with a certain satisfaction ct and patience and love he had then ed on winning the confidence she had given anyone before, until quite sudthere she was, in his arms.
, he had done it before, and he could gain—he could teach her again that en them no deception was possible.
owly. Carefully.

used to talk to me like that, and it made me want to cry," he said at last, ently absorbed in his sketch pad. "And you have had from me so far is bad r and impertinent questions. . . .
you mind keeping your hands just as re for a minute more? . . . I think per-n view of what I knew about your r's married life, she was inclined to te common decency in anyone who her. I still can't understand why she with him. Tell me how she stuck it!"
e had a sense of the greatness in him—sic—as a sacred trust," she explained lly, with words like a lesson learned.
was upset he couldn't play. She be-that the greatness of the music in him lanced the humanities, and that he all to blame for his moods."
ian started sketching on a fresh sheet.
is it that you are using almost the words I heard from her when she broke e about the American tour?"
ou can't remember the actual things id to you, so long ago!"
y dear girl, I can safely say that there n hour of the time I spent with Alison n't as fresh in my mind now as it was y after it happened."
t—that's not possible!" she faltered.
ything was possible with Alison!" he mpatiently. "Shall I start reciting to you now? But not many of the things I said to her would sound familiar to you, would they? I remember that last day I wasn't kind, though. I got very angry with her because she wouldn't come and be happy with me. I made her cry. I've never forgiven myself for that. I kissed her tears. But I had made her cry."

"But you didn't stay cross. That was the lovely thing about you. You always kissed and were kind."

"How did you know that?"

"She told me."

"WHAT else did she tell you?" he asked. "Tea has arrived and we'll have it in a minute, but would you lay your right hand across your left again, the way you had it just then? . . . Did she ever tell you about the day we went to Richmond Park, and walked deep into the trees off the road, and sat on the grass, and managed to believe for as much as an hour that we could begin again, and not ever have to go back? Do you remember a play called Dear Brutus? No, you wouldn't. Well, we gave an excellent performance of the second act of Dear Brutus that afternoon. I hope I never again see a woman cry as she did that day—no noise, no fuss, no sobbing, no faces, just tears, raining down her cheeks faster than I could wipe them away. Do you think Walter ever got any ideas into his head about you and me?" he asked, with no change of pace or tone.

And she answered. "I never could be sure. He never said anyth——"

And then her hand went to her mouth, as she discovered that she had been hypnotized and the Monica pretense was gone for good. Adrian sat very still for a moment, watching her, and when he spoke it was gently, as though awakening a victim of nightmare.

"I knew I could do it if I kept on trying," he said. And then, as she put both hands up in front of her face, he threw aside the pad and pencil, moved to sit beside her on the sofa, took her hands in his and held them very quietly in her lap. "Alison," he said. "Did you take me for an utter fool?"

It was exactly like the first time, she was thinking, sitting with her head bent and her cheeks hot with embarrassment, while his kind, warm hands held hers. She had been so proud, in the old days, of her performance as Walter Safford's wife, serene and unruffled in the face of his perpetual tempests, smiling while he scowled and sulked silent while he roared and ranted, never goaded into self-defense or retaliation, never raising her own voice in reply, never bursting into tears. It amused her to see other people look at her with puzzled resentment, so calm and sure of herself, when everyone else was being battered to pieces.

So the legend grew up that the devotion between them transcended his tantrums, left her untouched and secure because of the mystic bond of their love and his dependence on it. The belief survived that she could always "handle" him, because no word of weariness or defeat ever crossed her lips to contradict it. Except here.

She could not remember any more how it came about that Adrian had first suspected that she often felt as though she were bleeding to death inside. She could only recall the reckless sense of relief of not having to try to fool Adrian any longer. He saw through Walter to the bone, and through her. He knew exactly what she had to put up with, and he had only compassion and patience with the half-demented creature she suddenly became once her defenses were swept away. She had never forgotten the feel of his shoulder and how he had waited, and waited, when any other man would have moved, and spoken, and driven her ——

He was waiting now. But it was not quite like the other time. This time the masquerade had no dignity. "I shouldn't have come back this afternoon," she said. "It was all right yesterday."

"It was not all right yesterday. I began to suspect you after the first five minutes," he

It is a long journey by precept, a short one by example. —SENECA.

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON

MRS. OAKLEY RHINELANDER, beautiful young society hostess. Discriminating in her choice of cigarettes, Mrs. Rhinelander says: "When I entertain, I always need extra cartons of Herbert Tareytons."

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because they pay no more for this better cigarette. They appreciate the kind of smoking that only a genuine cork tip can give . . . the cork tip doesn't stick to the lips, it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND - ABOVE ALL - SAFE!

RAILROAD TRAVEL AT ITS BEST

© 1950, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

said promptly. "But I had to make you give yourself away. Now, will you please not cry like that, without a sound. No other woman but you can do it, and you know what it always does to me."

She rose swiftly, snatching up her hat and handbag. "Oh, Adrian, I feel so ashamed. It was such a silly, romantic, schoolgirl sort of thing to do. But I was so sure it would be safe for just a few minutes, which was all I meant to stay."

"Come and sit down, darling." He was standing with both hands held out to her.

"No, I feel such a fool, I ——" She brushed one hand across her face. "I should never have come at all. I never meant for you to find out I wasn't Monica, and by Monday I would have been gone again."

"Gone where? Alison, why did you do this? Why couldn't you just walk in here and say 'Here I am,' and leave the rest to me?"

"But you can't just walk back into a man's life after twenty years and say Here-I-am-Adrian! Besides it did occur to me that you might be involved with somebody else. And you are. It's always too late for you and me. I thought I had got used to it. God bless you, Adrian." She turned quickly in the doorway and fled from him.

"Now, Alison, wait. Alison!"

By the time he reached the top of the stairs she was at the bottom, and as he started down, the heavy front door swung open and she was in the street. He returned slowly to the studio. One could not pursue her down the Embankment, pick her up bodily and bring her back. The telephone began to ring.

Ignoring it, he moved to the sofa, sat down, thinking hard. He still had her address, which was good for a few hours anyway. She would have clothes and luggage there; she couldn't just disappear. And he would have to get himself unengaged from Madge.

Roberts put his head round the door to see why the telephone had not been answered. "Let it ring," said Adrian abruptly. "Let it ring, I said." Roberts retired and eventually the telephone fell silent.

Adrian put his elbows on his knees and his head in his hands. Madge had always laughed at him heretofore. But now it was not going to be so funny.

ALISON REACHED THE EMBANKMENT SHAKEN and out of breath, and paused there to put on her hat. Walking eastward above the river, she kept her head down and strove to steady herself before seeking out a bus or a taxi—and anyway, she could not go home like this and face the kindhearted Mary.

She had needed all her courage to take Mary up on that invitation, so sincerely given last winter in New York, to use the flat as a home if ever she returned to London. She had no money, beyond the few hundred dollars she had drawn on to pay her passage, and what she earned each week behind the counter of a Fifth Avenue department store. Neither she nor Monica had ever received any training during Walter's lifetime which would fit them to support themselves. When the necessity came, Monica was sensible enough to go to a secretarial school and become a first-rate typist. By pooling their money and living together in rather shabby furnished rooms and cooking their own meals, they managed to have enough between them to dress well. Illness or extravagance would have pushed them over the edge of solvency into debt or the necessity of drawing on their small bank fund.

THEY had already done that once, the summer after Walter died. It had been a crazy thing to do, for the two of them to come back to England like that. But Alison was worn out and homesick, and she had always said that it would be easier to be old in England than in America. She had always meant to be old in England, when the time came. And she would have stayed there, perhaps standing behind a counter at Selfridge's instead of the one in New York, except for Monica and the war.

She often wondered what it would be like now if they had stayed through the war. But Monica was turning eighteen in 1938, and had grown up in America, and wanted to go back. She threatened to go alone if Alison would not come and you couldn't let her set out alone, at eighteen, with her living to earn.

Why had they come to England at all? Monica wondered. Alison knew why well enough. They had come because she had never forgotten Adrian Locke, and wanted to see him again. And now she was leaving, almost a fugitive, without having seen him except at a distance. He had not seen her.

She had planned it so differently. She knew of several ways a chance encounter could have been arranged. And she had meant to greet him casually, with grace and humor, so as to judge by his face and the way he spoke how much he remembered, and to put no obligation on him, and thus save whatever Walter had left of her own pride.

First they went to the gallery where he had a one-man show. But it was not one of the days he happened to drop in. The portraits spoke for him, though—those poised, charming, pampered women—and the landscapes done at expensive, exotic places on the Continent. When she left the Bond Street gallery that day she was glad to escape without having to face him, for the portraits made her feel shabby and faded and out of style. The atmosphere of success and affluence in the gallery left her an outsider. Better not to see him now. Much better just to let it go.

Even then Alison might have stuck it out and made sure, might have given him the benefit of the doubt, might have got into touch with people she used to know. It might have happened the way she had intended it to, at a tea or a reception—the quick glance across the room, the quick, welcoming steps toward her, the warm, kind hand closing on hers, the light, unemphasized voice saying her name—it might have happened like that, given a little more time, but as the Sudeten crisis developed everything fell apart socially, and Monica began to fret about the daily news from Czechoslovakia and to argue that everyone who could do so was getting out of England. When Alison remarked that if there was going to be a war they might stay and try to be of some use, Monica's only reaction was to say that in that case she would go back to New York alone, as they already had their return passage and hundreds of people would give their eyeteeth for it.

And so, unwilling but a little numb, Alison found herself at sea again, westward bound.

It was not a very cheerful or very comfortable life that she and Monica evolved together in New York. Worst of all, they were not congenial, for Walter's child had inherited his moody, unloving ways and were hard to live with. But a junior executive in Monica's office wanted to marry her, and Alison felt that if Monica were free to make a choice, she would marry. Monica, of course, earned more than Alison could. It was Alison who could not have lived decently on what she earned.

THERE was little news of Adrian during the war years, though Alison often turned through the English illustrated weeklies for a mention of him. Then the war ended and life in London began to return to normal. When she found him represented by two magnificent portraits in the Royal Academy issues of this year, she was in a low mood after an attack of influenza, and the memory of Adrian as he had been when they were in love began to glow again at the back of her mind until the idea of another visit to England became a secret obsession. All the old-time boats were running now, with tourist passage that didn't cost much. And then Mary, an English war bride who was returning home after her husband's death, had said, "Come and stay with me in London. A change would do you good." Mary's address was in Chelsea, with a Flaxman telephone number, like Adrian's.

And Alison thought, I could go and stand there on the pavement and see him come out of his door—he needn't know. It would be like the other time—he wouldn't see me. And she thought, I could go and see the pictures at Burlington House—he wouldn't be there. And then—Oh, this is childish, it's been so long, why shouldn't I just see him face to face? Why shouldn't I ask to see him, if he remembers me at all? It's been so long now, she thought, and hid her face in her hands, he won't even remember me, and there have been so many younger women.

But she knew, when she looked in the mirror, that her beauty was still there, and that her face did not show the twenty years that had passed. She had changed—but she was remarkably little aged. Something—perhaps her unfinished dream with Adrian—had kept a softness and a sweetness in her eyes and mouth that time and tears had not stolen from her. Beside her own daughter, Alison looked inexperienced and trustful and young. "You could pass for your own daughter any day," May had said once.

Better if I had gray hair and wrinkles and a bulge, Alison thought recklessly. Then

(Continued on Page 102)

"Yes, thirty-two hundred is very reasonable. You understand that's payments, not dollars."

Are you always Lovely to Love?

Suddenly, breathtakingly, you'll be embraced . . . held . . . kissed. Perhaps tonight.

Be sure you are always lovely to love; charming and alluring. Your deodorant may make the difference. That's why so many lovely girls depend on FRESH Cream Deodorant. Test FRESH against any deodorant—see which stops perspiration . . . prevents odor better! FRESH is different from any deodorant you ever tried—creamier, more luxurious, really effective!

New... for head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap. Used regularly, it is 20 times as effective as other type soap in preventing body perspiration odor.

also in a new handy tube

(Continued from Page 100)

could haunt him and he'd never think twice about it. Would he know me? But he might think —— Oh, no, I wouldn't want him to think —— But the idea had possession of her now. I could dye my hair, she thought, or bleach it, and wear dark glasses—or I could face it out, if he ever looked twice, and say it was a mistake, and I was someone else entirely—or I could say—it burst like fireworks in her mind—I could say I was Monica!

From then on, she knew no peace. "You could pass for your own daughter any day." I could say I was Monica. If she said Alison was—was dead, and her daughter had come back —— After these twenty years, how could he tell, for sure, at once? Would he even try?

The thing dwelt always in her mind, waking and sleeping. He would receive Monica, for Alison's sake, but without obligation or embarrassment. What would Monica use as an excuse to see him—or what would she use, in Monica's place? And that, too, answered itself in a blaze of light. The portrait that was never painted. With both Walter and Alison dead, might Monica not ask about the portrait of her mother?

She knew that it was madness, but she could not stop thinking about it. Monica might go to London and write a letter asking to see a portrait which did not exist. But he would answer the letter. And if she pulled her hair back, and didn't look her best, and never smiled, and said she was Monica—perhaps he wouldn't suspect, because it wouldn't matter to him any more.

You're out of your mind, she would say to herself firmly, and then begin to scheme about the money to buy a passage, tourist class. There was enough money for that in the bank, but it was equally Monica's, and only for illness or emergency. But she had also the diamond ring, and that was hers. Walter had given it to her when they got engaged. Perhaps Monica would take it and let her use the bank fund, which was less than the ring was worth. And that very morning, before they had even had breakfast, she heard herself asking Monica if she would rather have the ring or the money in the bank.

Monica stared at her, looking very unattractive in a mussy dressing gown and no lipstick, and Alison wondered again what the junior executive could be thinking of.

"You mean you want to go back there again?" Monica asked, and Alison heard herself saying that she did, as soon as possible. "But you won't have enough to eat," said Monica.

Alison said she didn't think she'd mind.

"But why do you want to go back?" Monica demanded, with her father's scowl. "Surely everyone you used to know is dead by now."

"Well, I'm not," Alison pointed out mildly. "It's only about twenty years. And besides ——"

"But after the raids and all," said Monica vaguely. "Have you heard from anyone over there lately?"

Alison admitted that she hadn't.

"Then what on earth has got into you?" said Monica angrily. And even more angrily, "Now, mother, you can't still be thinking about that man!"

ALISON said she wasn't thinking of anyone in particular, she just wanted to see England again, since the war, and before the next one began.

"But you'd come back here," said Monica.

"Well, yes, I thought a round-trip ticket ——"

"But what about the store?"

"I've already asked, and they said a month this time of year would be all right—they'd find something for me when I got back."

"You've already ——" Monica was nearly speechless. "How long has this been going on?"

"Well, I—ever since travel began to be normal again. I—I suppose you wouldn't care to go too?"

"And spend all that money twice over? Certainly not. Besides, that would settle it with John!"

"Why don't you settle it the other wa and marry him?"

Monica's face took on a calculating, secu tive look. "I think perhaps I will," she sai

"You mustn't think about me, you know said Alison. "I'll be all right on my own

"You couldn't keep this place up alone Monica told her.

"I'd take a smaller one. One room wou do, with an electric plate." She glanced aga at Monica's withdrawn expression. " wouldn't expect to live with you after yo were married, you know. I've told you th before."

"I know," said Monica briefly, for sh hoped that Alison meant it. "I should go working, of course. For a while, at least."

"Well, I should think John was makin enough now ——"

"IT isn't that," Monica broke in curtl "I can't see myself asking any man for p money—not from the word 'go,' anyway. remember too well what you always wer through with father if we wanted so much a pair of shoes. I'm used to buying my ow things now, without being beholden to an body. And of course if you're going to use our backlog ——"

"You take the ring for your share," Alis said quickly, for Monica was just like Walt about money and didn't seem to know "Shall I sell it and give you the cash—would you rather wear the ring? It's wor double what's in the bank."

"And then suppose you get ill again something?"

"I'm much more likely to get ill if I do take a holiday."

"You could take a much less expensi holiday here," said Monica, but she took t ring and slid it on her finger, and Alis therefore felt free to make out her travele checks at the bank and visit the steamsh office.

Monica decided that very same evening marry John sometime in the autumn a Alison sailed with a sensation of burn bridges behind her and a strange new fre dom ahead.

The first evening in London she looked Adrian's number in the telephone book—a there he was. The next day she walked pa his house—it still stood. That night she wro him a letter, and signed it with Monica name, and tore it up, and went to bed a lay awake all night. I only want to see hi she thought, in the dark. I only want to him go by—she smiled, and cuddled into h self, relaxed and happy because he was n so near—like the King, she thought, a slept.

But it was not enough, and he was not King; she had never loved the King.

SO ONCE MORE IT HAD NOT GONE QUITE T way she had planned it. Sitting on a ben in the gardens above the Embankment in t long summer twilight, when the children w played there had all gone home to supper a bed, Alison reflected that she had never be much good at stage-managing her effects.

What floored you with Adrian was alwa his unexpected kindness and penetrati Adrian took no pleasure in stripping do your pretenses, and was often unaware th he had done so. He simply saw through the as though they weren't there. He had r been fooled for long into thinking that s was happily married to Walter in the beg ning, and he had not believed yesterday th she was Monica. It was never any use w Adrian, she should have known better th to try. But Adrian was so kind, he wou feel so sorry for her, and it would be ve awkward for him all round, just as she h feared, because of his obligations to Mac Forbes. It was perfectly natural that should have some such obligations, so taci admitted by him, and she must make him that. She must make herself see it, too, b cause nothing had been farther from h intention than his suggestion that she simp walk back into his life and say "Here I am She had gone to all this fantastic trouble a foolishness to avoid doing just that. She h been wrong to run away today, too, bef she had explained to him calmly and sensib

...y she had come to do such a stupid, mala-...d it thing. She would have to go back.

...he stood up. Well, here goes, she ...ught. Adrian, I have been a fool again—...ember how much of a fool I am? No, ...hing about remembering, all that must ...left out. Adrian, I'm just a fool, please ...k nothing of it, I —— But what could ... say to him now that wouldn't make ...gs worse, or seem to ask for sympathy? ...had always got everything out of her. He ...ld get it out of her now that she still ...shiped him.

...h, how I've bungled it, she thought furi-...ly, while her unwilling feet carried her ...k toward Tite Street. With Adrian I was ...ays just a schoolgirl in love. Well, hardly ..., either; he wouldn't have cared much for ...t. It wasn't calf love between us. It was . . . ...y kind rolled into one, fresh and new and ...iting, like the first time, and yet full of ...wledge and forbearance too.

...s she reached the bottom of Tite Street ...rian's door opened and he came out and ...ned up the street, away from her, moving ...though he was in a hurry. She stood and ...tched him go—

...ich is what I should ...e done in the first ...ce, she reminded ...self hopelessly. ...w I shall have to ...te, or phone. It's ...t as well. I haven't ...idea what I was go-... to say. I should ...y have made things ...rse tonight.

...Mary would be out ... dinner, and the ...pty flat would be ...pearable in Alison's ...sent state of mind. ...e followed Adrian ...a safe distance to-...rd the King's Road ...d there took a bus ...the West End and ... through a film, ...her blindly, killing ...ne till Mary's cheer-... presence and un-...ling small talk ...uld keep the flat ...m echoing.

...HILE ALISON STILL ... in the gardens, ...rian had rung up ...e telephone number ... her letter and got no reply. She had not ...ne straight home, then. Or else she was just ...ting the thing ring. Pretty soon he tried ...ain, with the same result.

Roberts came in to clear away the un-...ched tea things. Adrian said irritably, "Well, what do I do now? She's bolted."

"You have the address, sir."

"Yes. Don't know how much good that is, ...she really wants to hide. That's not Mon-..., that's Mrs. Safford—as though I wouldn't ...ow!"

"Indeed, sir."

"You don't sound a bit surprised."

"No, sir, it sounded a bit fishy from the ...ginning, if I may say so, sir."

"That's very clever of you," said Adrian ...ther dryly. "When I finally caught her ...t, just now, she was very upset. Bolted. ...on't answer the telephone. I suppose now ...ve got to go camp on that doorstep ——"

... rose and started briskly for his hat.

"And what about dinner, sir? Mrs. ...rbes, sir."

...DRIAN stood a minute, poised for depar-...re. "I shall have to think of something."

"I wouldn't do that if I were you, sir."

"But it's Alison Safford. I can't lose her ...w!"

"I realize that, sir."

"Put dinner back an hour. Say that I was ...ddenly called away and will return as soon ... I can. Have a couple of stiff drinks wait-...g. But first I'm going round there and ring ...e bell till somebody comes."

Mary had already gone out to her dinner ...hen Adrian began ringing, and Alison was in a bus bound for the West End. Adrian hung about, smoking cigarettes and walking round the square, till it was nearly dark. He had to walk all the way back to Tite Street, hungry and in need of that stiff drink, aware that Madge would be waiting and that explanations were in order on a very empty stomach.

FOR the first time he was thoroughly annoyed with Alison. If she had not written that fool letter saying she was Monica, none of this would have happened. All she had to do was let him know she was in England. But no, she had to go and dream up that idiotic fable of her own death. And then she had come wearing that infernal hat to confuse him, and behaving like her own second cousin once removed. He would tell Alison a thing or two when he got hold of her again—and he would get hold of her. Once in a while you had to put your foot down, even with Alison. The only other time he had tried it with Alison she had gone to America and stayed twenty years. This time she wouldn't have any such luck. This time he meant to be obeyed. Loved, honored, and obeyed. But not by Madge, he promised himself, skipping up the steps of his own house at last.

MADGE HAD ARRIVED, very much on time and conscious that she was looking rather well, to find the dinner table laid for two, Roberts wearing his blandest stage-butler face, and Adrian mysteriously called away.

She sat down thoughtfully and lighted a cigarette. Something going on here. Her eyes went speculatively round the big, untidy, picturesque room. Doubtless wanted a good turning out. All those old portfolios. Surely there was a cupboard somewhere for those. Roberts kept the silver and brass bright, she would say that for him. She wondered what the kitchen was like. Later. They couldn't go on picnicking up here in the studio, of course. She could remember when Adrian would have raised the roof at any domestic activities taking place in the room where he painted. And now he had brought in a sofa, and upholstered chairs, a rug even. All that bosh one used to hear from him about dust and clutter—sheer temperament. It took the war to show what you could put up with.

Well, now the war was over, and Adrian must be brought to see the whole house was still there, to be made use of. He had lacked the impetus so far, of course, but she could supply that. In the meantime ——

She sat smoking her cigarette and brooding unhappily at the defenseless room. Adrian would scream blue murder if one suggested changing things here a bit, but how if he were presented with a fait accompli? He had kept the best part of the room for his painting mess, which put the fire at the wrong end entirely, if you were going to make the most of it, and the table was so far from the light that on a dark day you couldn't see to put milk in your tea without lighting a lamp. The window seat, if only you could get to it without running into the easel, would be a wonderful place to sit at teatime, with the lights coming on again, but the table would have to be brought much nearer. The sofa was certainly not doing much good where it was, and surely he never used the writing table much, and it could quite well go over against the wall.

She rose and pressed the bell in the mantelpiece and Roberts appeared at once in the

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

My Love's Young Face

By Elizabeth McFarland

Not the mythological bough of antique art,
Not the apples of legend, Diana's pears,
Nor the silvery glade where she split her heart
Dancing in moonlight with moon-white bears.
Not Venus's woods, nor Jason's grove,
Not the Hesperides glinting like stars down the west,
Nor the golden fields where the lost gods rove
Through jewel-stiff orchards, do I find blest:
But a warm green elm tree whose living grace
Dapples with dayshine my love's young face.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

the NEW SHAPE
is the
NEWS

The new-shape overskirt . . . news because of its extravagant draping. Designed with one idea in mind . . . to lend silhouette drama to a little slip-of-a-dress.

The new-shape Modess box . . . news because of its one wonderful purpose. Designed to resemble many other kinds of boxes so closely that, when wrapped, it hides your secret completely. Another thoughtful Modess feature . . . boxes are now pre-wrapped before they even reach your store.

Same number of fine napkins. Same price. Regular, Junior, and Super Modess sizes.

Only Modess comes in the new-shape, secret-shape box...pre-wrapped!

And—

New tests by leading skin specialists PROVE the amazing mildness of Cashmere Bouquet on all types of skin!

Yes, in laboratory tests conducted under severest conditions on normal, dry and oily skin types . . . Cashmere Bouquet Soap was proved amazingly mild! So use Cashmere Bouquet regularly in your daily bath and for your complexion, too. It will leave your skin softer, smoother . . . flower-fresh and younger looking! The lingering, romantic fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far costlier than you would expect to find in any soap. Fastidious women cherish Cashmere Bouquet for this "fragrance men love".

Cashmere Bouquet

—In a New Bath Size Cake, Too!

Now—At the Lowest Price In History!

doorway, looking ready to deny everything. How they hung together, these two. Perhaps—it was just possible—Roberts had been here long enough. Servants got so they thought they owned you.

"Roberts, I've just been thinking—the table would look rather nice over there by the window. If you'll just shift the easel back out of the way, I'll give you a hand with the table myself, and we'll see how we like it."

"Before Mr. Locke comes in? The easel has always stood where it is, madam."

"Yes, I know," said Madge, with a bright, confidential smile. "Time it changed, don't you think?"

"Well, madam, I'm sure I can't say if Mr. Locke would ——"

"Oh, I'll take the responsibility, Roberts. I'll say you only did what I asked you to. Now, come on, just put the easel over there for now—and that stool, and the rest of the painting mess."

It was not the sort of work Roberts usually did without putting on a baize apron—rolling up the rug and that—and he was dressed now to serve dinner. Moving in a sort of outraged, refrigerated dudgeon, he did what Mrs. Forbes asked him to for half an hour by the clock. When they had finished, the room was well balanced, comfortable, convenient, tidy—and quite unrecognizable as a place to paint in. Everything about it had been changed end to end. Light fell evenly and softly from well-disposed lamps over cozy conversation groups of furniture, and you could see to eat or read anywhere. Only the telephone was too much for her, and stood firmly where it had always been.

"The only thing we really need now," she said with satisfaction, "is some flowers."

"Mr. Locke can't abide scented flowers in the room, madam."

"So I've heard," she commented dryly. "We shall have to begin in a small way, downstairs first, perhaps. I suppose Mr. Locke has told you that we're going to be married?"

"Yes, madam. May I take this opportunity of wishing you every happiness, madam?"

She allowed him to escape back to his kitchen, where he sat down on a high stool by the sink and reviewed the situation. There was one thing Mr. Locke would not stand for and Mrs. Forbes had done it. She had presumed. She had gone too far. To break off his engagement with her would have taxed Adrian's diplomacy and ingenuity to the outermost limit—until now. But Mrs. Forbes had committed the fatal mistake they all made sooner or later. She had not waited to marry him before she started rearranging his life.

BALANCED on the kitchen stool, Roberts gave himself up to pleasant anticipation. When he heard Adrian come in he rose promptly, recalling the anxieties of Adrian's errand. He honestly hoped for the best with Mrs. Safford, and the best would be that she had been found and persuaded that she was entirely welcome in their lives. He was waiting just outside the studio door to receive Adrian's hat and whatever news was forthcoming.

"Nothing," said Adrian briefly. "Nobody answers the bell. We'll try the telephone again in a little while ——" He paused on the threshold while his eyes traveled incredulously round the violated room. "What has been going on here?" he said, and as Roberts did not feel that the question was addressed to him, he withdrew.

MADGE WAS NOT A WOMAN TO EXPERIENCE qualms of any description, and she had expected Adrian to make a fuss till he got used to it.

"Well, darling, you must admit that it looks much better this way."

"Who did this?"

"Roberts and I."

"Roberts!" roared Adrian. "I'd like a drink."

"Yes, sir," Roberts agreed, retiring again.

Adrian advanced into the room and pointed accusingly at the armchair. "You've moved that chair!"

"Yes, dear—not that it hadn't taken root where it was."

"But you don't live here yet!" Adrian reminded her, as frank as an angry child.

"Adrian, are you going to be the kind of husband who shouts at his wife when he comes home hungry?" Madge inquired humorously.

"I'm not shouting." His tone became excessively reasonable. "But I come home to find everything all turned round so that I can't find anything. I can't paint here! Look at the easel! What about light?"

"Well, don't you think, since you've finished Blanche's picture ——"

"But I'm starting a new portrait on Monday!"

"Well, you can't very well do that, dear, because I've told the Perrys you'll come down there with me for a week at least. They're delighted."

"I won't stand for it!"

"Oh, nonsense, darling, just to please me," Madge said.

"Roberts!" Adrian lifted his voice again. "Where's that drink?"

"Coming, sir."

ROBERTS brought in a tray with two pink gins on it. Adrian stood in the middle of the floor with his glass. "I've got nowhere to sit, like this," he said pathetically.

"There are exactly the same number of chairs and sofas as before, they're simply in different places," she pointed out. "You're a bit late, aren't you? And you do look tired. What have you been doing with yourself?"

Adrian sat down grudgingly in a displaced armchair and sipped his drink. "I've lost that girl," he said.

"The one that was here this afternoon?"

"Yes. I've been round to the address on her letter, and she's not there. At least the door is locked, and nobody answers the bell. Roberts!" he called, and emptied his glass.

Roberts appeared like a genie with two more pink gins. Madge shook her head at a second, and Roberts set the remaining drink beside Adrian sympathetically.

"If it was anyone else, I'd say she was just playing me up," said Adrian, beginning on the fresh drink. "But she meant business. I suppose I might have that place watched. Nasty sort of idea, though."

"What are you talking about?" Madge inquired.

"I suppose she won't think to eat any dinner, wherever she is," Adrian speculated gloomily.

"Well, come along and eat your own, anyway, and tell me all about it," said Madge in a soothing way.

Adrian watched Roberts seat her with some ceremony. He drained off the second glass, collected the third and brought it along to the table with him.

"Are you going to drink that one too?" Madge asked, surprised, but even more amused.

"I don't feel a thing yet."

"What went on here after I left?" Madge wanted to know.

"What went on here after I left, that's what I want to know," Adrian countered. "Look at the place!"

"Rather nice, I think. I've been itching to get my hands on this room for years."

"Well, it can't stay this way. I should never be able to get anything done. I work here, I ——" With a sort of groan he attacked his dinner.

"You're behaving very strangely tonight, Adrian. Had you had anything to drink before you came in?"

"How could I? Nobody answered the bell," he answered logically. What a wifely tone she takes already, he thought. I never thought to hear that from anybody.

The telephone rang. He leaped for it, and Madge frowned. "The next thing I shall do is get that beastly thing moved out of here!"

"Over my dead body!" he replied with emphasis. "Hullo—yes." (But it was not Alison.) "Yes, all right. . . . No, no, not now, I'm at dinner. Some other time, old boy." He hung up with a snap, and returned to his place at the table. "Some newspaper fellow. Wants my views."

vas not Alison. He sat staring down at ate, wondering where she could have , picturing horrors.
ow, come along, Adrian. You're not anything, and Roberts has done rather considering the time he had to keep hot."
erts came in to pour the wine, and waved him away.
l stick to this stuff tonight," he said, fond eye on the third pink gin which waited him. "Roberts, you don't
. . . she might do anything foolish, upset like that?"
ould you like me to go round to that s again, sir—when I've brought the
"
s. I think—well, try the telephone first."
re was a stage wait while Roberts the number—a long pause —— rian, I think I shall burst if you don't what all this is about," said Madge, interested in spite of herself.
s, I will. I must."
answer, sir," said Roberts, and put he phone and went out.
t she'd have to go back there, if o pack!" said Adrian to no one in lar, after a nt.
no would have
where to pack
You're being tiresome, you
" Madge red him.
ell, you see—strange thing ppened," he uneasily.
now, Adrian,
ain, I don't it!" Madge ll inclined to a humorous

, as a matter
, it's a little nt this time."
ry well. I'll t seriously."
lled her face t with a vis-fort. "What ou want me about this ell, you see—that's not Alison Saf-daughter," he told her, "that's Alison It's rather . . . an unbelievable story, aid."

ell, go on with it, Adrian. I'll try."
u see, I almost believed it myself for
. I mean I should have done. I mean, d have been true, you see."
on't see anything at all, my dear, but s, I realize that. I hardly know where

n. I had a letter from Monica—I mean, from Alison, saying she was Monica—of course, not having seen her yet, I ieve."
s, I've got that," said Madge, going on er dinner.
ell, then she came here wearing that purpose to confuse me. I thought it odd sort of hat, but I didn't suspect ng just at first."
was very odd. Yes."

no idea what it was that made me twice," he labored on. "It just began n on me that something was going on.
of vibration."
s, dear. I know," said Madge.
t you see, I couldn't ask her straight he was lying to me, because she would ave said a flat no, and we'd have been re. But every time I tried to pin her she got more and more evasive—till I re I was on the right track."
d it matter a lot?" She had begun to him now.
atter?"
you. Which one of them she was?"
s, it did, rather. You see, in the old lison and I were terribly in love."

"And now she's come back," Madge said thoughtfully.

"Yes."

"Adrian, you really are the most incurable romantic!"

"Am I? I mean, shouldn't I be? Is that very disgraceful of me?"

"Yes, it is," said Madge, leaving no doubt. "What happened?"

"She went off to New York with Safford on one of his tours and ——"

"I don't mean in the old days. I mean this afternoon."

"She ran away. She seemed to feel she'd made a fool of herself, pretending to be Monica ——"

"Yes. By the way, where is the daughter all this time?" Madge demanded at a tangent. "What's become of her?"

"You know, I never thought to ask," he confessed. "What worries me now is Alison. She's had a rotten time since Safford's death. She's got no money to speak of, beyond her passage back to New York ——"

"Oh, she's got that, has she?" said Madge. "Well, why did she come here with that story about the portrait, do you think? She knew very well that there wasn't one."

"That's what I wanted to ask her," said Adrian simply.

"But why the deception?" Madge persisted. "Why did she use her daughter as a blind? Did she think you might refuse to see her?"

"Those are the very things I want to know myself."

"Well, if you want to know what I think," said Madge, "it was one of two things. Either she wanted to find out if you were still . . . available, or she wanted to lay a ghost."

"What sort of ghost?"

"She's an attractive woman still. Something might have happened in New York—some sort of offer that she couldn't be sure about until she had seen you again. But she came prepared, didn't she, if she had her passage home!"

"Do you really think that's it?" Adrian asked.

"I'm only guessing, naturally," Madge conceded broad-mindedly. "But if she came back here just for love of you, there was no point in her running away, was there, when you found her out?"

"No," said Adrian, reflecting. "None at all, on the face of it. Except for one thing ——"

The doorbell rang, and rang again, and he was on his feet.

"That will be Blanche and Denis and the Allens," Madge said calmly. "They were all dining together, so I asked them to drop in here for a nightcap later."

"You what?"

"I thought it might be rather jolly. And of course I had no idea that we would be as late as this with dinner."

There were jolly voices on the stairs, and people streamed into the room. Only four people, but Adrian had seen enough of Blanche Gordon for a while, and Denis Gordon was never his idea of a good companion. The Allens were hearty and harmless, but Rupert had a tiresome way of dropping off to sleep just anywhere when he got tight.

The invasion eddied round its semiparalyzed host, producing ceremonial bottles of champagne, demanding glasses and corkscrews—entirely unofficial, old boy, we quite understand all that—half the women in London bound to go into mourning or on binges when they heard the news, by Jove—never thought Madge would be the one to bring it

NEXT MONTH

She let him kiss her.

"We're good for each other, Lydia," he said. "We need each other."

She shook her head. "You'll never need anyone but yourself, Martin." Then, in a matter-of-fact voice, "Now you must take me home."

BEN was away, of course, playing golf somewhere, or fishing. He didn't know their three months on a Vermont farm were supposed to work a miracle. He didn't know their marriage needed a miracle.

A SUMMER IN THE COUNTRY

By Anne Homer Warner

Novel complete in the August JOURNAL

Dream girl, dream girl, beautiful Lustre-Creme Girl

Hair that gleams and glistens from a Lustre-Creme shampoo

Tonight!...Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Exclusive! This magical secret-blend lather with LANOLIN!
Exciting! This new three-way hair loveliness . . .

Better than a soap! Better than a liquid! Kay Daumit's cream shampoo with lanolin. Jars: $2, $1. Jars and tubes: 49¢, 25¢.

1 Leaves hair silken soft, instantly manageable . . . first wondrous result of a Lustre-Creme shampoo. Makes lavish, lanolin-blessed lather even in hardest water. No more unruly, soap-dulled locks. Leaves hair soft, obedient, for any style hair-do.

2 Leaves hair sparkling with star-bright sheen. No other shampoo has the same magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin to bring out every highlight. No special rinse needed with Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

3 Leaves hair fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff. Famous hairdressers insist on Lustre-Creme, the world's leading cream shampoo. Yes, tonight, show him a lovelier you —after a Lustre-Creme shampoo!

Portrait by Alfred Freudemann

"Avon cosmetics, like a lovely melody, are always welcome"

says Risë Stevens

of the Metropolitan Opera

Risë Stevens selects her favorite Avon cosmetics from Mrs. Virginia Maloney, an Avon Representative.

"Avon cosmetics blend so harmoniously with one's own skin tones..." says Risë Stevens, "I prefer them always. And I welcome the friendliness of a beauty talk with my Avon Representative when she comes to my home."

You too can have the perfectly blending cosmetics you have always wanted, when the Avon Representative comes to your home...

Welcome her when she calls.

Some of the Avon Cosmetics purchased by Risë Stevens.

Avon COSMETICS

IN RADIO CITY, NEW YORK

©

off—hardly thought she was in the running at all, the way the wind blew lately—and what about the one with all that yellow hair? While corks popped, bottles gurgled, a glass was put into Adrian's hand. Rupert was trying to make a speech and Madge was trying to stop him when the telephone made itself heard.

"I promise you, Adrian, that thing has got to go!" Madge's voice rose above the others.

"Hullo," said Adrian inaudibly into the instrument, deafened on his side by the celebrants, who took no notice of the interruption. The person at the other end was hesitant and faint. "What?" said Adrian. "Speak louder, I can't hear a thing. . . . Alison! I've been out of my mind!"

"Come on, Adrian, time for a toast. . . . Drop it, Adrian, tell her some other time. . . . Tell her it's all off now, Adrian—break it gently, old boy, but be quick about it."

Adrian signaled despairingly for silence, set down his glass to cover his other ear, and spoke urgently.

"Look here, I must see you," he said. "I spent the evening on your doorstep ringing the bell; where were you? . . . Yes, you did behave very badly indeed, but that wasn't what I wanted to tell you. . . . Can you speak a little louder? There's the most awful row going on here. . . . Darling, I simply must see you again. . . . I can't hear! Well, never mind that, you must come to breakfast tomorrow morning, there will be nobody here then. . . . Breakfast. . . . Yes, I do think you owe me an explanation, several of them, but it's no good now. . . . What? Oh, hang it all, come to breakfast and we'll talk sensibly. Nine o'clock. . . . I can't hear a word you say, but I'm glad you rang up. I shouldn't have slept a wink otherwise, and I'll expect you here at nine o'clock in the morning. Bless you. Good night."

As he hung up he found Roberts at his elbow with a trayful of freshly filled glasses and a question in his eyes.

Adrian accepted a glass and said briefly, "It's all right, I think. We'll know in the morning. Have one of these yourself, Roberts."

Neither of them noticed that Madge stood watching them. She was too far away to hear what they said, but she could read their faces. Her own was enigmatic.

IT WAS ONE OF THOSE NIGHTS WHEN ADRIAN hardly slept at all. He had not got rid of his guests till all hours, and there had been the usual complications about convincing Rupert Allen that he was not already at home in bed. This time he was not left in peace on the sofa till morning. Adrian had been heartless about that.

When they had actually gone and Roberts started to wash up the glasses and ash trays, Adrian began absent-mindedly to restore objects to their rightful places in the dislocated room. Before either of them went to bed, every last thing was back where it belonged.

BUT as Adrian watched while dawn fingered the edges of his bedroom curtains, he was tired and baffled and uncertain. For the first time, his insight was clouded with regard to Alison. He kept wondering if Madge had guessed right—if there were someone in New York with whom Alison would be safe and happy. If this were so, he might as well let things ride between himself and Madge, the way she wanted it, and save everybody's face. . . . If only Madge hadn't made herself so immediately at home in his affairs. If only Madge hadn't taken possession of him like a steel trap.

His bachelor gorge rose again at the thought of the desecrated studio. That in itself was grounds for divorce before one began. And so as the sun came up his beset and bewildered spirit stiffened. Promising a week of his time to the Perrys like that too. It was a highhanded sort of thing to do, even if he had not specifically said to blazes with the Perrys. The sort of thing he particularly hated. Arbitrary. Madge ought to know by now, if she knew anything, that he would not be dragooned into doing things he had said he wouldn't.

By the time Roberts brought in morning tea, Adrian had begun to feel that he had a case against marrying Madge, quite ap from Alison's return. He had never had use for any man who allowed himself to dictated to by his wife. If Madge thou that from now on he was going to have mind of his own whatever ——

He rose and marched aggressively tow his bath, fatigue and confusion overlaid b militant sense of righteous indignation. son didn't have to come into it at all. room had been put back the way it had ways been, and was not to be disturb again. And he was not going to visit Perrys. He would continue henceforth make his own decisions and to be left peace with them. And by the time they finished with that, Madge wouldn't want marry him. . . .

IT was not until he saw the breakfast tab laid for two, that he began again to think Alison. Here he was, all steamed up to d with Madge, and in the meantime th would be Alison, who required an entir different sort of treatment. Alison, too, sinned, but not in arrogance. Women. stood still in the middle of the room, rev ing with a conscious effort his immedi mood. You mustn't come at Alison full She had had more than enough of that sor thing. Alison was very easily driven into shell. Let's think, now, how do we go about thing with Alison, having, as it were, one h tied behind our back?

He drifted to the breakfast table, there beside his plate lay the usual pile letters which had arrived in the morn post. He picked up the pile, glanced bri at the top envelope, which conveyed no ing to him, and with a magnificent gestur bad temper flipped them all into the air o his head like a pack of cards, and moved leaving them on the carpet behind him.

And the doorbell rang.

Yes, it was Alison, wearing a soft b dress, and a small blue hat with a wisp veil, and a look of childlike anxiety. At o his heart failed him, and he held out b hands to her, smiling, from the middle of room. You couldn't scold anything so h less and brave and upstanding as Alison, even if she wrote idiotic letters and then away and left you to the consequences. held out both hands to her, smiling, from middle of the room, and she came and both hers into them.

"You always did forgive me, didn't you she said simply.

"Now, that thing might pass for a ha he said. "Only just. Take it off."

"I d-don't think I'd better, I only —

"Take it off, Alison." He watched w she took it off. "You can't eat break wearing a hat."

"I've had breakfast, Adrian, and I came round here because ——"

"Well, I haven't. Come and pour my t

Silently she followed him to the table took the chair he placed for her.

"I like this, you know," Adrian s "Let's make a habit of it."

"Darling Adrian—I'm sailing tomorro she told him gently. "My job is waiting New York, you know."

"But then why did you come?" He show his honest bewilderment and exasperat plainly. "If you didn't mean to stay mean."

"I never intended to tell you that," answered slowly, and her face was emb rassed, and honest, and a little frightene an expression he was already long fami with. "I thought I could carry it off, and j be Monica for a few hours and then —

"By the way, where is Monica?" he manded at a tangent.

"In New York. She's going to get m ried."

She seemed to have nothing more to a Instead she picked up the teapot, poured a cup for him.

"Not a child any longer?"

"No."

"Nothing, in fact, to do with the cas "No."

"Did it ever occur to you," he began ca ally, because he really wanted to kn "that to tell me Alison was dead, had b ee years, was a pretty brutal thing sorry, Adrian. I thought Alison was neone you had known a long time

."

loved," he reminded her quietly.
—you surely didn't expect to see her nyway, and so I thought . . . it matter to you very much if ——" ter? It knocked the bottom out of ng, that's all!" And as her startled, gaze met his at last he leaned forolding her with his own eyes. "No,
I didn't expect ever to see her again ife, but so long as she was there—ere—I didn't miss her so much. See ean? But the letter didn't work, did through you."

the first time," she said, and re-ittle in her chair.

t about the first time, my dear?"
never believed any of that careful
I had built up about being happy lter and devoted to him. It took you afternoon, once you started, sketch-ere in the studio, to get the whole t of me."

laughed in spite of himself.

did, Adrian. My face might just as e been plate glass for all it concealed
u. You looked at it, and the first knew, you had got hold of the girl
."

know, in the beginning I even won-there was anything there to paint, yourself so well hidden," he con-
'But your eyes gave you away—like a frightened child's. Until sudsaid to myself, 'It's all a bluff.' And t we were done, weren't we?" He waiting, and she
ed at him ruefully,
not speak. "Now,
ison—I want to
hy did you come?"
he answered, look-n at her clasped
the table again, to have to meet his eyes, "It was a pilgrimage. I'll never make you un-
, I'm afraid," she sighed.
e I ever let you down?"
no, Adrian, it's only ——"
did you come?" he repeated,
again.
wanted to see you."
Go on."
. wanted just to stand in the street you go by. I wanted to hear your . You see, Adrian, I . . . have very nceit left in me nowadays. And so I ven sure you would remember my the letter."
n." He was listening with every inch ow, watching her averted face.
as a long time ago, when all's said e, and . . . it hadn't lasted very long had it—and you had been very . . .
ce then ——"
ight, I deserve that. Go on."

ER knew another man who was as s you—or as lighthearted. And . . .
I just couldn't do with less, and dear," he said quietly. "Tell me."
me," she repeated mistily. "You ald that. Nobody else says that. You ime went on it began to seem more re impossible that anyone like you happened to me—or that there was like you." Her voice broke, her oved helplessly in appeal. "Please ake me go on; it's very difficult to say ounds so ——"
on, my dear," he said, motionless.
must believe that I had no idea of back into your life in the old way, I
——"
I'd rather not believe it." He rose, ved his chair round the table so that beside her, and took her hands.
making very hard work of this; let's can help you. There are still one or ngs I need to know. Now—you to see me again, that's all right. But earth did you begin by saying you onica?"

"Because I didn't want to embarrass you, and I thought that way I could come and go away again without ——"

"And you'd actually got so little confidence left in yourself or in me, or in anything, that you were driven to this silly game—it was a silly game, wasn't it—for fear of being hurt once more?" he said compassionately, while it dawned on him. "But really, my dear, you might have thought a little better of me than that!"

"I ——" Her head came up defensively, but somehow she could think of nothing to say.

"And if it had worked out as you planned it—what would you have done then?"

"Just what I'm going to do now. Sail for America tomorrow."

"And what was to become of me when you had gone?"

"You would have been no worse off than if I hadn't come."

"I should like to know one thing more, very definitely." He looked down at their locked hands for a long moment. "Isn't there someone in New York that you might marry and be happy with—if I didn't exist at all?"

"But I've just been telling you, Adrian—I had to see you because it was so desolate not to see you. That was all. And I suppose you had the right to know that from the beginning. I'm sorry I made a mess of things." She tried to smile.

But he only sat very still, looking down at their hands. "There's no sense to it, you know," he said slowly. "As a matter of fact, there never was any sense to you and me. At least you should have outgrown it by now."

"You always said I'd outgrow it. You were so wrong."

He looked up at her suddenly, his doubt dispelled, his natural exuberance reasserting itself. "Now, Alison, if you start crying like that again I'll smack you! I simply can't bear it, especially at breakfast!" A bell rang briskly somewhere, twice, and Alison jumped as she had always done, and Adrian sprang up, crying, "Roberts! Say I'm dead! Cremation! . . . He'll deal with it," he reassured her, as he always had. "It won't be anybody to see me at this time of day. Alison—you can't possibly sail tomorrow, no matter what happens. You've got to give me a little time to undo the crazy things that began happening to me. It was all your fault, anyway," he reminded her without animus. "You and your anonymous letters! If I hadn't believed that Alison was dead ——"

Roberts' face appeared at the door, looking a little scared. "It's Mrs. Forbes, sir," said Roberts, and Madge walked into the room.

Nature is in earnest when she makes a woman.
—OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

It was unusual for Madge to have a bad night. She would have said that her digestion was good, her conscience was clear, and that she was grown up, so what was there to keep her awake?

But when the Gordons had left her at the door of her little flat in a mews near Berkeley Square, she switched on the light and paused to look round the familiar room which had remained intact all through the blitz and the V-bombs, and was soon to be as lost to her as if it were just an open space like other flats belonging to people she knew. They were all her own things, anyway, and they all had associations—mostly things from the country house they had had to sell before Gerald died. She supposed that there would be room for them somewhere in Adrian's house, even though it was well furnished without them.

I wonder, said Madge to herself as she switched the bedroom light on and the living room light off and began to undress, if I am marrying Adrian just because I'm turned out of here.

And although she was not much given to introspection, she continued to dwell on the idea as she made her leisurely preparations for bed. It was a nasty shock to learn that

(Continued on Page 109)

ALL OVER THE WORLD—

Say it with FLOWERS-BY-WIRE

The meaningful remembrance of FLOWERS-BY-WIRE can be speeded anywhere to relatives and friends.

Our 15,000 Interflora members give worldwide service.

Prices as low as $5.00.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY
Send Flowers Worldwide
INTERFLORA

Look for this Emblem. Your Satisfaction Guaranty!

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, 200 Lafayette Building, Detroit 26, Mich.

"JUST TRY IT!" Exciting events are taking place everywhere . . . as more and more dogs and cats try Ideal. You'll like to feed Ideal . . . it's so clean and wholesome. And you'll be sure your pet is being best fed.

42 BEAUTIFUL PREMIUMS are featured on the inside of Ideal labels. Two shown on each label—different labels have different premiums—a total of 42 money-saving values.

PEARLS & JEWEL CASE. Famous Jewel Pearls. Rhinestone clasp. In beautiful jewel case. 50c and 2 Ideal labels.

6-IN-1 UTILITY SET. All metal. Four screwdrivers fit in handle of hammer. 50c and 8 Ideal labels.

MANY DIFFERENT PREMIUMS ARE OFFERED ON IDEAL LABELS
LOOK FOR MORE OF THESE MONEY-SAVING VALUES

CONVENIENT ORDER FORM — WILSON & CO. INC.

Ideal Premiums
549 Washington Blvd., Chicago 6, Illinois
Please Print Plainly

Enclosed is $ and Ideal labels for items checked:
Pearls & Jewel Case 6-IN-1 UTILITY SET

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... Zone State .....

Ideal

The "7-Course Meal" feeds in all 7 ways

Two important reasons why more and more women prefer Ideal are—1. Ideal's clean, wholesome, meaty aroma makes it pleasant to feed. 2. Ideal is best for the dog or cat because it feeds in all 7 ways for:

1. Strong muscles and growth
2. Vitamin balance
3. Clear eyes and glossy coat
4. Strong bones and teeth
5. Vitality and nerves
6. Strong sinews and tendons

7. Energy. Try Ideal. Watch your dog or cat go for it.

With Dehydrated Extracted LIVER

A Dog's Best Meal is Wilson's Ideal, Cat's too!

WILSON & CO. INC.

ANOTHER WILSON QUALITY PRODUCT

(Continued from Page 107)

e couldn't do anything about the lease ng up, and had to go.

I wonder, said Madge to herself, as she nk gratefully into bed, if all these things uld fit into one of Adrian's guest rooms. I ppose he won't want anything changed there her. But, to come right down to it, I suppose hall have to fit into one of his guest rooms, a manner of speaking.

She lay in the dark, with her eyes open, ntemplating the prospect. Well, she said to rself, he certainly can't object to my bringing own bed. And he certainly can't be so firmly ached to all the guest-room furniture as he is he studio itself. I had better look in there in morning and tell him it was only an experi- nt and help him put it back as it was.

On that magnanimous conclusion, she uld have been able to drop off. But some ie later her eyes were still open in the dark d now she was contemplating Adrian.

He looked easygoing and manageable ugh but, unlike poor Gerald, he had an stinate streak. Living with a man like rian—in wedlock, of course—was a very ferent thing from humoring him now and n at a distance.

I wonder, said Madge to herself, as dawn gan to creep through the curtains, if this ng is going to work out.

Take incidents like the Manning girl. One s used to that, of course, and would know w to deal with it, particularly if one had advantage of being his wife. But you'd nk it would end somewhere, wouldn't u? You'd think Adrian would be allowed now to settle down a little. But now there s Alison Safford. It could get fairly tire- ne, particularly if one was his wife, always be brushing off women who thought they re in love with him.

He thought back, very clearheadedly for t time of day, over the anxiety which had rmeated the studio last evening before t telephone call came through, and the lef on Adrian's face when he did hear from son Safford. What had she said on the ephone to explain away his fears? Was she ning back? Was she going to stay in Lon- n? Because if so ——

Madge then began to think about the rty last night, which had not gone off as intended. It was entirely Blanche Gor- don's fault that they had all jumped to con- clusions like that and made a Thing of it, and brought along champagne and behaved like idiots. Adrian had been the least bit cool about it. If Adrian was going to be too diffi- cult ——

She dozed a little, after that, until the rheumatic charwoman who looked after her came creaking in with a cup of tea—and Madge pulled herself together and ate break- fast, and put on her newest dress and hat and set out for Tite Street. Perhaps the first thing was to see how he felt this morning about the way the room looked now, and about going to the Perrys.

And then, coming up the stairs, she had heard Adrian's voice from the studio saying, "If I hadn't believed that Alison was dead ——" And the room, she saw at a glance as she entered it, was already exactly the way it had been for years, as though she had never touched it. They must have worked all night. And Alison Safford was there, sitting at the breakfast table with her hat off.

"Well," said Madge as they both stared at her, exactly like children caught at the jam, "the early bird is already here, I see." Her eyes rested a moment longer on Alison, who was trying to pretend that her face was not wet with tears. "And you, my dear Adrian, must be the worm," she suggested, with a penetrating glance in his direction.

Even in his exasperation and embarrass- ment, Adrian was able to realize that Madge could hardly have been asked to wait in the drawing room downstairs, or have been told that he was out. But here she was, without warning, and all her meddling with the room tactlessly undone, and another woman— though obviously not a Caroline Manning— sitting at the breakfast table. It was not at all the way he had meant to break it to her.

He had Alison's word for it now that there was nobody in New York, as Madge had suggested there might be, and he knew that Alison was actually fool enough to be in love with him still, and that he was still fool enough to want her to be, whether it made sense to anyone else or not. He knew that they shared an indestructible mutual lunacy upon which neither time nor common sense had any effect. And by some fortunate freak of circumstance in this disintegrating world, they had been given a second chance.

He had meant to try to explain all this to Madge in such a way that she would compre- hend that he was not just caught out on a limb again. He wanted her to realize that this had nothing to do with the way he had felt about her three days ago, or with his past record of narrow squeaks. He was very sorry that Madge had got involved to her own possible discomfiture, but he had no delusion that she was ever in love with him as he and Alison measured love. That was a thing which happened to any man just once in a lifetime.

But while he stood there fumbling in his mind for anything at all to say, Madge spoke again.

"So you have put everything back exactly where it was?" she said in a challenging sort of way.

"Yes. Roberts was very upset about the whole thing, and I thought we'd both sleep better if order was restored."

"And did you?" asked Madge.

"Did I what?"

"Sleep."

"No—not very much. I can't speak for Roberts, of course." And with the feeble joke his eyes met hers hopefully, for they always enjoyed each other's nonsense, and there was something very disarming in the way he counted on her, even now, to fetch up a smile.

Looking back at him as he stood there, negligently on one foot, drooping a little, not knowing quite how to handle it, Madge felt in comparison—well, no, not old, but very adult. And a little tired. And a little disin- clined to risk such peace of mind as she had contrived painfully to assemble over a period of years. Madge stepped back, as from a moving train.

"Never mind, Adrian," she said lightly. "I really came to say that it would never do for us, you know. We'd be at each other's throats in a week."

"You mean you're jilting me—at this time in the morning?" He was still puzzled, but hopeful now.

"Well, as a matter of fact, I've found the most delightful little flat, just the other side of the King's Road," said Madge, for she al- ways did things well when she once began. "I'm on my way round there now, to settle it. Good-by, Miss—Mrs. Safford. No doubt we shall meet again soon. You know, Adrian"—her wise, amused gray eyes came back to him—"I can't help feeling rather like the fairy godmother in the pantomime!" And as she went away quickly, down the stairs, she said to herself, Why on earth did I have to lug in the King's Road? Now I'll have to find something there at once or he'll know I was lying.

"Well," said Adrian rather vaguely, still looking at the empty doorway when she had gone, "that's that. Saved me a lot of bother, her finding that flat."

"Adrian."

"Yes, my dear?" His whole attention came back to her then. He took the three handkerchief from his breast pocket and be- gan to wipe her face while he waited for what she was going to say.

"Would you mind very much ——" But she stuck there, and walked away from him in an embarrassed silence, and sat down again in her chair by the table.

"Whatever it is, I'm sure I wouldn't mind at all," he said comfortingly, and then had a qualm. Suppose now she said, "Would you mind very much if I go back to New York tomorrow anyway?"

"Only if it's convenient, of course, and you don't have to be polite about it ——"

He went to lay his hands on her shoulders from behind her chair. "Tell me," he said, and she raised her head to look up at him, under his hands.

"May I stay here—now?"

And for just a moment he had thought—— Would he never learn, about Alison? His hold on her slim shoulders tightened, but he was laughing down at her.

"Well, you know," he said, "if you're go- ing to live here, in this house, we'll have to get married first, or people will talk."

He felt her cheek, and then her lips, against his fingers on her shoulder. THE END

Katydid Joe, the Fiddler

By VINCENT McHUGH

Now Katydid Jill met Katydid Joe
Under a snowbank at six below.

"Oh, woe is woe,"
Said Katydid Joe,
"I'm as cold and as cold and as cold as the snow.
Oh, couldn't you keep me warm,
My pretty?"

"Yes, I could and I will,"
Said Katydid Jill,
"For your gold and your gold and your gold will fill
My maidenly heart with love,
My pretty."

So Katydid Joe married Katydid
Jill
In the whippoorwill's house at Locustville.

"To the south we go,"
Said Katydid Joe,
"And I'll fiddle and fiddle and fiddle-de-do
All day in the cottonwood tree,
My pretty."

"I suppose you will,"
Said Katydid Jill,
"But you're terribly, terribly, terribly
shrill
With that rusty old fiddle of yours,
My pretty."

But Katydid Jill and Katydid Joe
Had thirteen children all in a row.

"Fiddle and bow!"
Said Katydid Joe.
"And we'll play and we'll play in our green calico,
And we'll march in the Katydid
Band,
My pretties.

"Laces and Graces!" said Katydid
Joe.
"Wash your faces and toe to toe!"

"Away with a will,"
Said Katydid Jill,
"And I'll twiddle and twiddle and
twiddle my frill,
And I'll lead the Katydid Band,
My pretties."

"but NO TELL-TALE LINGERING PERFUME!"

● Discriminating women like you voted that they'd like their favorite household aid, Sani-Flush (wizard cleaner of toilet bowls) to carry a fresh, pleasant fragrance in action—but not a heavy lingering perfume. Here it is —safe in any toilet system. Cleans and disinfects quickly. Just follow direc- tions on can. At your grocer's; same price. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

in the familiar yellow can
NOW FRESHLY FRAGRANT

MONEY FOR YOU—SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS—UP TO 100% PROFIT
FREE SAMPLES 50 FOR $1 NAME PRINTED CARDS, NAPKINS & STATIONERY
Make Money Easily. $50 profit selling 100 Feature Boxes. Complete line big value, fast selling plastic, metallic Christmas and everyday cards. Smart gift items. Em- bossed designed cards, stationery, napkins, coasters with name 50 for $1 up. No money or experience needed to start. Fund raising plan for churches and clubs. Special bargain offers. Cash bonus. Write for samples on approval.
EMPIRE CARD CO., 215 Fox St., Elmira, New York

WANT $50 QUICK
Nationally advertised Card Ass'ts — sell only 100 — make up to $50! Complete line Xmas, Everydays, Wraps, Stationery. Also novel "Spang-l-ettes" and "Prize" Ass'ts; Notes; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up. Up to 100% profit. Money back guarantee. Request "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on approval.
30 FREE SAMPLES
CHILTON GREETINGS, 147 Essex St., Dept. P-11, Boston, Mass.

don't live in a bughouse! get K-M HIGH PRESSURE MAGIK MIST INSECTICIDE SPRAY Kills Fastest, Easiest, Surest TRIGGER ACTION DISPENSER
16 Ounces.. $2.95
NEW K-M AIR MAGIC
MAGIK-AIRE Deodorizer $1.89
MAGIK-GLO Spray Wax $1.89
REPEL-A-MIST Chases Bugs $1.95
Each in Trigger Action Dispenser
KNAPP-MONARCH CO., ST. LOUIS 16, MO.

Elsie Plans a Platter Party

Candy...cookies...a quickie drink
The "kids" can make 'em in a wink!

Magic Truffles

Super-Smooth Chocolate Candy Made With

Borden's Eagle Brand

In Just 12 Minutes! No Beating!

1 package (6 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces
Dash of salt
⅓ cup Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
½ teaspoon vanilla or imitation rum extract

Melt chocolate in top of covered double boiler, over boiling water. Remove from heat. Stir in salt, Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk and flavoring. Pour into shallow pan and press into block 1 inch high. Cover with waxed paper. Let stand until firm at room temperature or in refrigerator. Cut into serving pieces and store in covered container. Makes more than ½ pound. Nut Variation: Add 3 tbsp. ground nut meats after flavoring. Reduce flavoring to ¼ tsp.

Recipe checked in Good Housekeeping Kitchen

FREE! "Eagle Brand Magic Recipes." Send a postcard to Elsie, Dept. J-70, P.O. Box 175, New York 46, N. Y.

The "2-way better" Chocolate Drink

Borden's Hemo

A tasty treat...
A body builder

Borden's Hemo is two-ways good for kids — and a big help to Ma and Pa, too!

First, it tastes so swell! Like a rich, chocolate soda! Watch the kids ask for more!

Second, it's so good for them. Every luscious glass of HEMO with milk is just teeming with nourishment. It gives them 8 vitally important vitamins and minerals they need to grow and work and play and sleep.

So get hep to HEMO today, Mom. Give the youngsters an extra boost in nourishment—and a whoppingly wonderful chocolate drink at the same time!

Fruit Surprise Cookies

Made with

Borden's None Such Mince Meat

Easy to make—Economical

3¼ cups sifted flour	1½ cups sugar
½ teaspoon salt	3 eggs, well beaten
1 teaspoon soda	1 9-oz. package None Such Mince Meat
1 cup shortening

Sift together flour, salt and soda. Cream shortening; add sugar gradually; cream together until fluffy. Add eggs; beat until smooth. Add mince meat broken into small pieces. Add flour and mix well. Drop by teaspoonfuls, 2 inches apart, on greased baking sheet. Bake in moderately hot oven (400°F.) about 12 minutes. Makes about 48 cookies, 3 inches in diameter.

© THE BORDEN COMPANY

IF IT'S BORDEN'S—IT'S GOT TO BE GOOD!

"The best kind of town, with the best climate anywhere." Not reserved for vacations only, sun, sand and sea are an everyday part of the Coeys' chosen life.

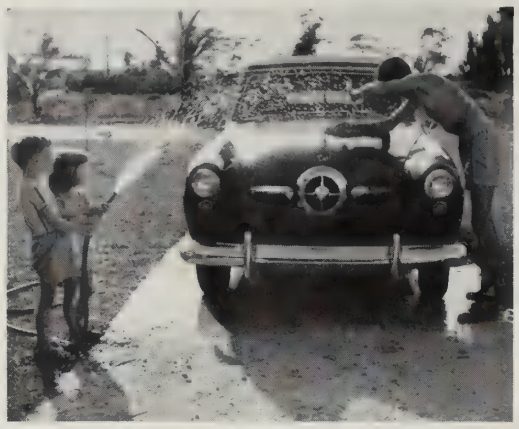
"We knew what we wanted"

Meet the Coeys, of Delray, Florida

By BETTY HANNAH HOFFMAN

Almost every morning, winter or summer, Mary and Stewart Coey waken to sunlight streaming into the pale-gray-and-aqua bedroom of their Delray Beach, Florida, home. From the hibiscus hedge comes the song of the mockingbird, and the scent of gardenia drifts headily in the window. Whether January or July, pint-sized Mary will slip into shorts for the day; her rangy, good-looking husband will select slacks and a sport shirt for his accountant's job. The Coeys' two flaxen-haired moppets will spend part of almost every day at the beach; winter temperatures at Delray average 76 degrees, in summer Gulf Stream breezes keep the mercury at a comfortable 80. There are no heating expenses on the Coeys' budget, no outlay for snow suits or heavy coats, no galoshes or even Northern necessities like stockings or hats for Mary—her short, red-brown curls are uncovered the year round, her legs bare and very brown.

Just as soon as he can spurt home from work, Stewart's gray-blue convertible is parked outside their watermelon-pink front door, for the Coeys are a spectacularly devoted and home-loving pair. "I was never one of those women who wish their husbands out of the house," says Mary. Ever since she suffered a serious back injury, Stewart has attended to the vacuuming, window washing, and the daily marketing which he enjoys immensely, rushing from store to store on the scent of bargains like a Dalmatian after a fire truck.



Visitors to the Coeys' beautiful new modern home are impressed with the evidences of wealth: lush Orientals, elegant Hitchcock and Sheraton furniture, lovely Dresden vases and Meissen porcelains, old silver gleaming softly against dark mahogany and stark white walls. Actually all the housefurnishings, the silver, the stacks of beautifully hand-monogrammed linens came from the mansion in Bronxville, New York, where Mary was raised. The Coeys manage to live graciously and debt-free on their $6000

PHOTOGRAPHS BY SUZANNE SZASZ

"We knew what a home should be." After two disappointments, the Coeys' dream becomes reality; house blends modern lines with heirloom furnishings.

Rule 1 for the Coeys: "Talk things over." Stewart says Mary was "impossibly spoiled" when they met; "but dynamite," he adds.

Coeys' new car "costs less than the old one." Gas and servicing, $5 a week. Peter and Clare lend help with the wash jobs.

During 6-month Florida season Stewart earns $60 a week as accountant for local produce firm. Mary inherited $4500 a year.

"When we chose Delray we knew it meant no high-income job for Stewart."

combined income only with the most astute figuring; Stewart spends less than $20 a week to feed the four of them (quite a trick with Florida resort food prices), and is still transplanting small trees with a trowel, as he can't bring himself to the extravagance of buying a shovel.

When the Coeys chose Delray as a permanent residence, they did it with the full realization that Stewart would never be able to make much money at a Florida East Coast resort. The local people, about 10,000 of them, exist largely on the tourist trade which floods the place during the three or four winter months; there is no industry, and even farming and the big gladiolus business are seasonal. Yet in terms of healthy, happy, casual outdoor living, which they both love, they figured that Mary's $4500 annual income would go farther in Delray than anywhere else. At first they intended to live on her income alone, and Stewart looked forward eagerly to having the time to write and paint. Then a series of minor but expensive illnesses (their doctor charges resort prices the year round, $8 for a house call, $13 if he treats both children) upset that dream. When the Coeys found their medical and drug bills running into $1000 a year, Stewart looked for work. He earns $60 a week as accountant for a local produce broker, a job which lasts only six months a year and presents no great challenge for a man already forty, but Stewart took it gratefully.

It amuses them that friends are so patently glad Stewart "at last found a job" following four years of joblessness after his Army stretch. Stewart frankly works because he needs the money, not to occupy his time. A tireless personality, with great drive and a range of interests which includes politics, gardening, photography, modern architecture and—first and foremost—his family, he is the type who will lug three-month-old copies of magazines over to the beach on Sundays to catch up on his reading.

The fact that Mary's income provides their main livelihood bothers neither of them a whit. "It isn't as if I earned it by the sweat of my

In childhood Mary was alternately indulged—at 16 she had her own car, $75 a month spending money—and ignored in favor of her younger sister; intelligently avoids any possible favoritism between Peter, 4, and Clare, 3.

"If we hadn't had Peter we would never have had Clare." Childless for 9 years, Coeys adopted Peter, had Clare 14 months later. Told his "adoption story" on fourth birthday, Peter said to friends, "I'm mother's wonderful adopted boy."

Coeys like Delray best in summer months when it's home town, not a resort town. Cowboy suits date from California stay.

Stewart does the shopping ("a thrifty buyer," Mary says), but the children beg for visits to the fruit store—and the birds.

Peter's the dreamer, Clare "the squeaky wheel that gets the grease." Children have different temperaments but share real love.

brow," Mary explains. "It's just there, something I was lucky enough to inherit, and as far as I'm concerned, it belongs to the family.

She can still vividly remember painful scenes over money between her wealthy, spoiled mother and her handsome West Point father, from whom she learned the virtues of prudence and thrift which she practices today. "You have one chiffon grandmother, and one gray-corduroy kind," her mother used to tell her.

The "chiffon" grandmother, on her mother's side, acquired her wealth through the business acumen of J. J. Vandegrift, one of the early founders of Standard Oil. A matriarchal type, extremely charming, the "chiffon grandmother" would not tolerate anything around her which was not beautiful. Every night of her life she would phone each of her four children from Evanston, Illinois, no matter where they might be. They were never out of the country, as she had ruled that she would never be separated by an ocean from any of her offspring. "She had the money and she called the shots," Mary recalls Coeys seldom have an evening out: cost—including baby sitter—$20.

3-year-old Clare ("Chere") "started talking when she was 9 months old and hasn't stopped since." Puppy, 10, "all-American mongrel" shared Coeys' wartime travels over 39 states; gets ice cream (favorite food) for birthdays.

"It seemed like a gate to heaven," Mary said when she met Stewart's happy, easygoing family. Qualities of security and closeness are a vital part of the home they are building for Peter and Clare.

"You should spoil those you love; providing it's a treat and a pleasure."

feelingly. Her grandmother on her father's side was the "gray-corduroy kind," who, whenever she received anything beautiful, carefully laid it away and never used it.

When Mary was about ten she overheard an adult say, "What a pity Mary is such a plain child, when her baby sister is so beautiful!" After that Mary understood why, when she came to her mother with face streaked with tears, her mother would jeer, "You're your father's child. Go to him! Go away!"

As Mary grew up, her mother's obvious favoritism for the younger, prettier sister became more apparent. They were dressed identically in hand-smocked shoulder-yoked dresses until Mary was fourteen, and feeling absurd in the same babyish things as her (Continued on Page 128)

School's fun in the sun, with classes held on the beach. In many ways life is different in Delray—no neons, no night clubs, and at Christmas Santa comes down the canal in a boat.

Famous cosmetic deodorant instantly stops perspiration odor...checks perspiration moisture

Fashion's taken away your sleeves, left you needing more than ever this famous cosmetic deodorant. It instantly stops perspiration odor . . . checks perspiration moisture! Tussy Cream Deodorant is antiseptic, keeps you so sure of yourself—throughout the longest, hottest days.

Created by beauty care experts, Tussy Cream Deodorant has a fragrant, fluffy vanishing, cream base—disappears without a trace. Actually smooths and soothes your skin . . . can't harm the filmiest fabric. Tussy Cream Deodorant comes in economical jars and tubes—50¢ and $1 plus tax.

NEW—Tussy Liquid Deodorant in plastic squeeze bottle—$1 plus tax.

TUSSY cream and liquid deodorant

Only Real Mayonnaise is good so many ways!

AMERICA'S FAVORITE MAYONNAISE! Delicious served plain, as shown in Chicken and Fruit Salad. Delectable, too, varied with milk, fruit juice, ketchup, French dressing. Real Mayonnaise never turns thin-tasting! Unlike ordinary salad dressing, it contains no starchy filler. No matter how you blend it, the sunny flavor and smooth texture always come through. It can't be beat—even by homemade mayonnaise.

EXTRA GOOD! Hellmann's or Best Foods Real Mayonnaise eliminates the time and effort of "cutting in" the shortening—and gives Biscuits a tender golden richness. In your favorite biscuit recipe, substitute ¼ c. Real Mayonnaise for the shortening—and taste the delicious difference!

CREAMY—AND QUICK! Real Mayonnaise is an important ingredient when you want a sauce to have "company coming" tastiness. Try Mayonnaise Cheese Sauce over lima beans: Blend ½ c. Real Mayonnaise, 4 tbsp. flour, 1 tsp. salt, 2 c. milk. When thickened add 1 tsp. grated onion and 6 tbsp. grated cheese. Cook over low heat about 10 min. (Serves 6-8.)

BEST FOODS
Real Mayonnaise
HELLMANN'S

IN THE EAST
IN THE WEST

Mary ceremoniously serves the salad of the day to Stewart and a guest

Salad Days

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

THIS is the time of year when salad makings are at their best, so give your salad bowl a real workout. Living in Florida as they do, the Coeys have salad meals all year round. They have an interesting philosophy about salads. "We hardly ever have the same salad twice," Stewart explains. "Ours is a basic salad with variations—like a basic-fashion wardrobe with accessories. Mary and I collaborate on it. I'm the V. P. (vegetable preparer). I have everything ready. She presides over the dressing and the tossing."

"I plan on a hearty salad with garlic bread for our main course at least once a week," Mary continues. "Peter and Clare like salads too. I make a salad specially for them, without dressing, that they can eat with their fingers.

Salads for Peter and Clare

"For their plates, I include pineapple sticks, grapefruit and orange sections, small bunches of grapes, pitted dates stuffed with cream cheese and topped with a raisin. Sometimes I grate fresh coconut and sprinkle it over the grapefruit and oranges. The children pretend it's make-believe snow—just like they have up North.

"For their vegetable salads, I usually include wedges of tomato, carrot sticks, strips or the hearts of celery, whole cooked green beans, whole cooked or canned baby beets and one whole radish. Peter considers this a great treat. Strangely enough, they both like scallions too."

THE COEYS' TOSSED SALAD

Greens are the groundwork of any good tossed salad. Mary prefers to use romaine and lettuce. For variety, she adds any of the following or a combination of several—in fact, whatever Stewart has prepared: tomatoes, sliced cucumbers, radishes, sliced hard-cooked eggs, grated carrot, sliced avocado, slivers of cheese, cubes of cold meat, raw spinach leaves, slivers of raw cauliflower, diced scallions, diced celery and water cress. Occasionally, she adds sliced cold beets to please Stewart, even though she doesn't like them herself.

THE DRESSING

Mary has definite ideas on how the salad dressing should be made. Having tried it, I think she has a mighty good idea worth adopting in your own salad-making. Fir of all, she never rubs her salad bowl wi garlic. Instead, she prefers to make pungently flavored garlic salad oil to co bine with fresh lime juice, herbs and se sonings. Limes are plentiful and cheap Florida, so Mary uses the juice in preferen to vinegars or lemon juice. To make t garlic oil, she peels a whole bud of garlic not just the usual clove—chops it all fi and adds it to one quart salad oil. She le the oil stand at least twenty-four hou before using. It's always on hand—not on for salad dressing, but for browning the p roast or basting a lamb roast.

Mary makes the dressing right on t salad. Sprinkle two ounces of the gar oil over the crisp salad greens, vegetabl or whatever combination the salad of t to have. Sprinkle the juice of half a ver that. Salt and pepper heavily dd a pinch of crushed dill seed, a of marjoram and one of an herb-d salt. Mary warms the herbs gently n her fingers before adding them to ads. This helps bring out the flavor.

salad does not include hard-cooked
Mary breaks a raw unbeaten egg over xt comes the toss-up, a reseasoning e and perhaps a bit more lime juice st, but not least, a handful of pumper-croutons which Stewart makes. With toss, it's ready to serve.

TEWART'S PUMPERNICKEL CROUTONS

ices of stale pumpernickel bread into h cubes. Toast in hot oven, 400° F., inutes. "The drier they are, the ," Stewart says. "They add a won-nutlike flavor to our salads; we n't be without them." Store in covar and keep handy.

hough variations of this one-bowl are most popular with the Coeys, er is the time for all manner of salearty enough to take over the main e, either for luncheon or dinner.
up to your salad meals with a good

Making the garlic bread is Stewart's department.

oup and finish them off with refresh-uit or ice-cream desserts, unless the happens to be a fruit one. Prepara-or most main-dish salads can be done
e the sun gets high. Your refrigerator over from then until mealtime.

LEAVES FOR YOUR SALAD NOTEBOOK

icken Salad is classic when made with a chicken, light on celery. Add toasted, red almonds, a little minced onion curry powder to the mayonnaise and ve an elegant number to serve gar-ed with cold sliced tomatoes, each ed with a spot of chutney.

ell-seasoned Deviled Eggs are delicious things to come upon in a tomato as-
Mold the aspic in a ring. If this doesn't seem hearty enough, fill the center of the tomato-egg ring with potato salad. Buy it at the delicatessen to save time.

SEA-FOOD SALADS ARE SUMMER'S FAVORITES

There are more ways than one with the big three of the season: crab, lobster and shrimp. Here are three you may not have thought of:

Shrimp: Combine 2 parts cooked shrimp with 1 part diced cucumber, just a little celery and onion. A lemony mayonnaise for this (just mayonnaise thinned a bit with lemon juice). Garnish with anchovies curled around capers, if you happen to have them.

Crab: To 3 parts picked-over crab meat (you're on a bone hunt) add 1 part diced, ripe avocado, a little celery for crispness and a mustard mayonnaise for combining (flavor mayonnaise to taste with prepared mustard).

Lobster: Combine 3 parts lobster (go bone-hunting again) with 1 part chopped water cress. Season mayonnaise with chili sauce, Worcestershire sauce and Tabasco. Combine with lobster and cress.

FRUIT WITH CHEESE

Dissolve 1 package lemon-flavored gelatin in 1 cup hot water. Add ¾ cup pineapple juice and juice of 1 lemon. Stir in ½ cup drained, crushed pineapple or stemmed, seedless grapes, and 1½ cups chopped water cress. Pour into ring mold. Chill until set. Turn out on greens. Heap cold cottage cheese in fluffy mound in center. No dressing is needed.

CHEESE WITH FRUIT

Beat 2½ cups creamy cottage cheese with ½ cup blue cheese, crumbled. The electric mixer or rotary beater is best for this job. Add ½ cup thin cream or top milk gradually. No seasoning is necessary. The cheese does it. Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Dissolve over hot water and stir into the cheese mixture gradually. Pour into a small ring mold or individual molds. Chill until firm and turn out. Serve with fruit of your choice. Again, no dressing.

STUFFED TOMATOES

The stuff of the stuffings can be different every time. Just plain cottage cheese, flavored with minced chives, is a perennial favorite with waistline watchers. . . . If the dressing's a good one, nothing makes a nicer filling than coleslaw. This dressing for coleslaw is the best we've hit on yet: Beat 3 egg yolks slightly and add gradually to ¼ cup cider vinegar. Then add ½ teaspoon salt, a dash of cayenne, 2 tablespoons sugar and ½ teaspoon dry mustard, mixed with a little cold water. Cook, stirring constantly, in small saucepan until slightly thickened. Chill and fold in ½ cup heavy cream, whipped stiff. Mix with finely shredded crisp cabbage just before serving. Add slivers of ham or tongue on occasion for a more filling salad.

★ HOW AMERICA LIVES ★

Now.. right in your own home.. enjoy this famous

PALACE COURT Salad with Tuna..

by LUCIEN
Chef of San Francisco's fabulous Palace Hotel

RECIPE Salad base is shredded lettuce cut very fine... use scissors. Make a ½-inch mattress of shreds. Center on this a thick slice of tomato, on top of which place a large heart of artichoke (you can buy them canned) with "cup" side up. Add some diced celery to Chicken of the Sea Brand or White Star Brand "Bite Size" Tuna with just enough mayonnaise to hold mix together. Fill the cup of the artichoke heart with the tuna mixture and build up tower spoonful by spoonful. Garnish with pimento strips. Serve with either Thousand Island or French dressing.

A coup de maitre only if made with "BITE SIZE" Tuna!

For decades "The Palace" has been a mecca for world travelers and San Francisco society; the lunchtime rendezvous of the city's business leaders. Of the scores of tasty dishes on its menus, its Palace Court Salad is, by long odds, the greatest favorite.

Now, through the courtesy of this noted hostelry, Chef Lucien's Palace Court Salad with Tuna is yours to enjoy in your home. However, Lucien warns that only by using the delicate, delicious light meat of quality tuna can you be sure your Palace Court Salad with Tuna will be a coup de maitre!

So, insist upon these famous brands of "Bite Size" Tuna . . . ideal for every tuna recipe . . . hot or cold!

★ This famous tuna also available in solid pack style.

Trademarks of Van Camp Sea Food Co. Inc., Terminal Island, Calif.

HAPPY MRS. A- "I ALWAYS BUY THE BRANDS THAT MADE TUNA FAMOUS!"

SAD MRS. B- "I BOUGHT A SUBSTITUTE AND IT RUINED MY FAVORITE RECIPE!"

THERE'S NO HALFWAY QUALITY IN TUNA!

Mashed potatoes or meat are twice the treat when the gravy is rich-as-can-be . . . full of flavor! For years, the world's finest cooks have used zesty, tangy Lea & Perrins Sauce to make their brown gravies, cream sauces that good! Try it—you'll see!

LEA & PERRINS
Sauce
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE
A favorite for over 100 years

FREE! Recipe Book. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc., 241 West St., New York 13, Dept. L-7

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
ALWAYS POPS BETTER

QUICK CASH for ALERT WOMEN
BIG VALUE 4 NAME-IMPRINT BOXES 50 for $1.00 and up
50 BIG MONEY MAKING CHRISTMAS ASSORTMENTS . . . Show America's outstanding Christmas & Everyday Cards to friends, neighbors. Up to 100% profit. Samples on approval. PEERLESS GREETINGS, Dept. L-1, HIGHLAND PARK, ILLINOIS DeLuxe ALBUM PERSONAL GREETINGS

$50 IS YOURS SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
Up to 100% profit! Over 100 assortments, including name-imprinted cards—all guaranteed to sell or money back. Write today for free samples. Special plan for organizations. Style Line, 200-202J Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis 1, Minn.

MAKE SYRUP... ONLY 9¢ A PINT
MAPLEINE

EXTRA CASH Is Yours!
Sell CARDINAL EXCLUSIVE
Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards
50 for $1 and up WITH NAME
Write For FREE SAMPLES
Bigger cards, bigger values bring you bigger earnings! 21-Card Assortment pays you up to 100% PROFIT! EXTRA CASH BONUS! 101 and more fast-sellers. Money-back guarantee. Assortments on approval.
CARDINAL CRAFTSMEN, Dept. S-37, 1400 State Ave., Cincinnati 14, Ohio

EASY MONEY FOR You!

YOU'LL earn money . . . yes, even if you've never tried it before . . .

Because people want to buy! Never has there been a greater demand for good reading . . . never have folks been so eager to subscribe for magazines. They have the money . . . they want to buy! All you need to do is to make the calls.

Join our Subscription Staff now. We'll give the help you need . . . furnish supplies without cost. Spend a penny for a postal giving your name and address and we'll do the rest. Mail that card TODAY to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
Box 325, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

THE RING

(Continued from Page 37)

in the act. The thief had killed the man and knocked the boy senseless, and had managed to escape. There were men sent out to all sides to catch him, but nobody had seen him.

Lise wanted to hear more about the horrible event and for her benefit old Mathias went through it again. There had been a long fight in the sheep house, in many places the earth floor was soaked with blood. In the fight the thief's left arm was broken; all the same, he had climbed a tall fence with a lamb on his back. Mathias added that he would like to string up the murderer with the two hands of his, and Lise nodded her head at him gravely, in applause. She remembered Red Ridinghood's wolf, and felt a pleasant little thrill running down her spine.

Sigismund thought of his own lambs, but he was too happy in himself to wish anything in the universe ill. After a minute he said, "Poor fellow."

Lise said, "How can you pity such a terrible man? Indeed grandmamma was right when she said that you were a revolutionary and a danger to society!" The thought of grandmamma and of the troubles of past days again turned her mind away from the gruesome tale she had just heard.

The boys brought the sick lambs and the men began to examine them carefully, lifting them up and trying to set them on their legs; they felt them all over and made the little creatures whimper. Lise shrank from the show and her husband noticed her distress.

"You go home, my darling," he said, "this will take some time. But just walk ahead slowly and I shall catch up with you."

So she was turned away by an impatient husband to whom his sheep meant more than his wife. If any experience could be sweeter than to be dragged out by him to look at sheep, it would be this. She dropped her large hat on the grass and told him to carry it back for her, for she wanted to feel the summer air on her forehead and in her hair. She walked on very slowly, as he had told her to do, for she wished to obey him in everything. As she walked she felt a great new happiness in being altogether alone, even without Bijou. She could not remember that she had ever before been altogether alone. The landscape around her was still, as if full of promise, and it was hers. Even the swallows cruising in the air were hers, for they belonged to him, and he was hers.

She followed the curving edge of the grove and after a minute or two found that she was out of sight to the men by the sheep house. What could now, she wondered, be sweeter than to walk along the path in the long meadow grass, slowly, slowly, and let her husband overtake her there? It would be sweeter still, she thought, to steal into the grove and to be gone, to have vanished from the surface of the earth from him when, tired of the sheep and longing to be with her, he turned the bend of the path to catch up with her.

An idea struck her; she stood still to think it over. A few days ago her husband had gone for a ride and she had not wanted to go with him, but had strolled about with Bijou to explore her domain. Bijou then, gamboling, had led her straight into the grove. As she had followed him, gently forcing her way into the shrubbery, she had suddenly come upon a glade in the midst of it, a narrow space like a small alcove with hangings of thick green brocade, big enough to hold two or three people in it. She had felt that she had come into the very heart of her new home. If she could now find the spot again she would stand perfectly still there, hidden from all the world. Sigismund would look for her in all directions, he would be unable to understand what had become of her and for a moment, for a short moment, he would realize what a void, what an unendurably sad and horrible place the universe would be when she was no longer in it. She gazed gravely at the grove to find the right entrance to her hiding place, then went in.

She took great care to make no noise at all, therefore advanced exceedingly slowly. When a twig caught the flounces of her ample skirt she loosened it softly so as not to crack it. Once a branch took hold of one of her long golden tresses; she stood still, with her arms lifted, to free it. A little way into the grove the soil became moist; her light steps no longer made any sound upon it. With one hand she held her small handkerchief to her lips, as if to emphasize the secretness of her course. She found the spot she sought and bent down to divide the foliage and make a door to her sylvan closet. At this the hem of her dress caught her foot and she stooped to loosen it. As she rose she looked into the face of a man who was already in the shelter.

He stood up erect, two steps off. He must have watched her as she made her way straight toward him.

She took him in in one single glance. He was a terrible sight. His face was bruised and scratched, his hands and wrists stained with dark filth. He was dressed in rags, barefooted, with tatters wound round his naked ankles. His arms hung down to his sides, his right hand clasped the hilt of a knife. He was about her own age. The man and the woman looked at each other.

This meeting in the woods from beginning to end passed without a word. What happened could only be rendered by pantomime. To the two actors in the pantomime it was timeless, according to a clock it lasted four minutes.

She had never in her life been exposed to danger. It did not occur to her to sum up her position or to calculate the time it would take to call her husband or Mathias, whom at this moment she could hear shouting to his dogs. She beheld the man before her as she would have beheld a forest ghost: the apparition itself, not the sequels of it, changes the world to the human who faces it.

Although they did not take their eyes off each other's face she sensed that the alcove had been turned into a covert. On the ground a couple of sacks formed a couch, there were some gnawed bones by it. A fire must have been made here in the night, for there were cinders strewn on the forest floor.

After a while she realized that he was taking her in as she had done him. He was no longer just run to earth and crouching for a spring, but he was wondering, trying to know. At that she seemed to see herself with the eyes of the wild animal at bay, in the dark: her silently approaching white figure which might mean death.

He moved his right arm till it hung down straight before him. Without lifting the hand he bent the wrist and slowly raised the point of the knife till it pointed at her throat. The gesture was mad, unbelievable. He did not smile as he made it, but his nostrils distended, the corners of his mouth quivered a little. Then slowly he put the knife back in the sheath by his belt.

She had no object of value about her, only the wedding ring which her husband had set on her finger in church, a week ago. She drew it off, and in this movement dropped her handkerchief. She reached out her hand with the ring to him. She did not bargain for her life. She fearless by nature, and the horror which he inspired her was no fear of wh might do to her. She commanded him besought him to vanish as he had com take a dreadful figure out of her life, so it should never have been there. In the d movement her young form had the authoritativeness of a priest conjuring some monstrous being by a sacred sign.

He slowly reached out his hand to his finger touched hers, and her hand steady at the touch. But he did not tak ring. As she let it go it dropped to the gr just as her handkerchief had done.

For a second the eyes of both followe It rolled a few inches toward him and stop before his bare foot. In a hardly perceiv movement he kicked it away and a looked into her face. They remained that she knew not how long, but she felt during that time something happened, th were changed.

He bent down and picked up her hand chief. All the time gazing at her, he a drew his knife and wrapped the tiny b cambric round the blade. This was diffi for him to do, because his left arm was bro While he did it his face under the dirt sun tan slowly grew whiter till it was aln phosphorescent. Fumbling with both ha he once more stuck the knife in the she Either the sheath was too big and had n fitted the knife, or the blade was m worn—it went in. For two or three m seconds his gaze rested on her face, then lifted his own face a little, the stra radiance still upon it, and closed his eyes

The movement was definitive and unc ditional. In this one motion he did what had begged him to do: he vanished and gone. She was free.

She took a step backward, the immoval blind face before her, then bent as she done to enter the hiding place, and gli away as noiselessly as she had come. O outside the grove, she stood still and loo round for the meadow path, found it and gan to walk home.

Her husband had not yet rounded the e of the grove. Now he saw her and hellоed her gaily; he came up quickly and joined

The path here was so narrow that he k half behind her and did not touch her. began to explain to her what had been matter with the lambs. She walked a s before him and thought, All is over.

After a while he noticed her silence, ca up beside her to look at her face and ask "What is the matter?"

She searched her mind for something say and said, "I have lost my ring."

"What ring?" he asked her.

She answered, "My wedding ring."

As she heard her own voice pronounce words she conceived their meaning.

Her wedding ring. "With this ring" dropped by the one party and kicked aw by the other—"with this ring I thee we With this lost ring she had wedded herself something. To what? To poverty, perse tion, desertion. To the sorrows and the sin ness of this earth. "And what therefore hath joined together let man not put asunde

"I will find you another ring," her h band said. "You and I are the same as were on our wedding day, it will do as w We are married still, I believe."

Her face was so still that he did not kn if she had heard what he said. It touched h that she should take the loss of his ring much to heart. He took her hand and kis it. It was cold, not quite the same hand as had last kissed. He stopped to make her st with him.

"Do you remember where you had ring on last?" he asked.

"No," she answered.

"Have you any idea," he asked, "wh you may have lost it?"

"No," she answered, "I have no idea all."

THE E

Misapplied Energy

By Jeanne-Alix Maisonville

Keeping up with the Joneses isn't so hard:
You invite them here, they invite you there.
The same perseverance applied to a goal,
And, boy, you would certainly get somewhere!

Two Big Reasons Why

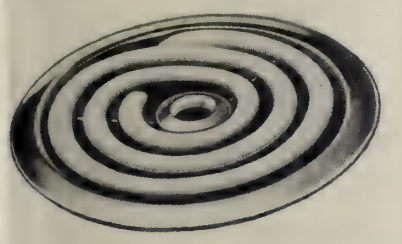
You can't match a FRIGIDAIRE Electric Range!

1. The "Thrifty-30"
   —Biggest Little Range in the World!
2. The DeLuxe 75
   —Finest Range Money Can Buy!

1. New Giant-Oven Range! Amazingly Low-Priced! Compact! Thrifty!

Got a small kitchen, a small budget, a big family to cook for? Then here's the range for you—the wonderful new Frigidaire "Thrifty-30!" It's just 30 inches wide—and sensationally low-priced. Yet its Thrifty-Giant Oven is the biggest in any household range—holds 6 eight-inch pies or a complete holiday-size meal! And it cooks with amazing economy! Moreover, you get four Radiantube Cooking Units—the fastest and thriftiest in Frigidaire history. There's Lifetime Porcelain inside and out, and all white porcelain surfaces are acid-resisting Lifetime Porcelain—one-piece Flowing Top—waist-high High-Speed Broiler—smart Raymond Loewy styling—genuine Frigidaire quality construction throughout. Many other important features of costly ranges! See it today!

$169.75*



2. America's Most Beautiful Electric Range—Has Two Big Ovens!

Yes, this range has every cooking convenience you've wanted. You get two big Even-Heat Ovens—so you can bake and broil electrically at the same time or oven-cook an extra quantity of food at once. You enjoy the famous Cook-Master Oven Clock Control that lets you cook whole meals automatically. You have the Triple-Duty Thermizer—equally handy as a small oven, a Deep-Well Cooker or an extra surface unit. And you get the new thriftier, faster Radiantube Cooking Units—Raymond Loewy styling—Lifetime Porcelain surfaces—full-width Fluorescent Cooking-Top Lamp—new 6-60 Automatic Time-signal and many other time-and-work-savers. Ask for a complete demonstration soon!

$349.75*

Learn about ALL 9 Frigidaire Electric Ranges—every one an exciting big-value!

NEW RADIANTUBE COOKING UNITS —fastest and thriftiest in Frigidaire history!

These new cooking units actually cook food faster with less current! That's because they're flatter and wider than before—so more heating surface comes in contact with utensils. Moreover, they give you a choice of 5 exact, controlled heats—so you get the same grand results every time. And they distribute heat evenly at all switch positions!

*Prices quoted in this advertisement are manufacturer's suggested cash prices. They include delivery and placement, warranty and Federal Excise Tax. Local Tax and special wiring (if any) extra. Prices subject to change without notice.

This emblem on a Frigidaire Electric Range is your assurance of the same measure of convenience, economy, dependability and beauty that has made Frigidaire America's No. 1 Refrigerator.

FRIGIDAIRE Electric Ranges

Visit your Frigidaire Dealer—see the latest Frigidaire Appliances for better kitchens and laundries. Look for your Frigidaire Dealer's name in Classified Phone Directory. Or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Electric Ranges • Refrigerators • Automatic Washer • Clothes Dryer
Electric Ironer • Food Freezers • Electric Dehumidifier
Electric Water Heaters • Kitchen Cabinets and Sinks • Air Conditioners

Are you in the know?

Should you talk to a house-party guest you haven't met?

☐ Check with your hostess ☐ Give him the deep freeze ☐ Defrost

He didn't happen to be around when introductions were going on. So now, when he speaks—you're a snub-deb. Defrost! According to Emily you-know-who, it's correct to talk with any guest. Even if you haven't met officially. You can talk back to your calendar, too (when it taunts you with "outline" qualms.) Just remember, Kotex has flat pressed ends that prevent revealing outlines. Definitely. Lets you stay in the party picture . . . fluster-proof; self possessed. And the extra protection you get with that special safety center of Kotex adds scads of extra confidence!

How should you greet your date mate?

☐ Dash out when he "honks"
☐ Ask him into the house
☐ Take your own sweet time

"One toot and ye're oot!" (As the Scottish lecturer said—to the old lady with the ear trumpet.) Does the toot of your joe's jalopy send you scurrying out? That's unsmart. Ask him into the house for a word with the family. Then leave promptly, on your merry way. Even on "difficult" days you'll be poised, comfortable. For Kotex gives softness that holds its shape—because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it!

What helps, if you've that "lobster" look?

☐ Antiseptic lotion
☐ Tinted makeup base
☐ A flame-colored formal

So you got yourself barbecued just before the big dance! And with white marks left by your swim-suit straps and bracelet. Next time, take your sunning sensibly. Meantime, ease the broil with antiseptic lotion; plus a tinted makeup base, to cover up. The first two answers above are right. Always right for your sanitary protection needs is one of the 3 Kotex absorbencies. Why not learn which is suited to you?

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

3 ABSORBENCIES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

For extra comfort on "those" days, should you—

☐ Stay in bed ☐ Go square-dancing ☐ Buy a nylon belt

Comfort doesn't call for coddling—or "square" fests. Your best bet's a new Kotex Wonderform Belt. It's made with DuPont nylon elastic—non-twisting—non-curling! Gives 118% stretch, yet it's strong, smooth-feeling; wisp-weight. Dries fast. Stays flat even after many tubbings. And see how much easier, quicker the new firm-grip fastener is to use! For extra comfort, added protection—buy the new nylon elastic Kotex Wonderform Belt.

2 TYPES: Pin style and with new safety fastener

Kotex Wonderform* Belt . . . Buy two—for a change!

THE CRISIS IN AMERICAN EDUCATION

(Continued from Page 12)

designs for the remodeling of my own home, I would be flummoxed by any problem in higher algebra. But what I did learn was to make an effort. What I did learn was how to learn. And I thank that college from the bottom of my heart, for teaching me how to go on learning and how to educate myself in those things that I have subsequently wanted or needed to know. I can, for instance, make a rapid and accurate précis of any book or document—a most valuable capacity for a journalist or publicist, more valuable, if I may say so, than a course in the "techniques" of journalism. I do know something about the roots of words, and about language as structure, acquired largely through the study of Latin.

Now, you may say, "But all that is book learning. Book learning isn't everything."

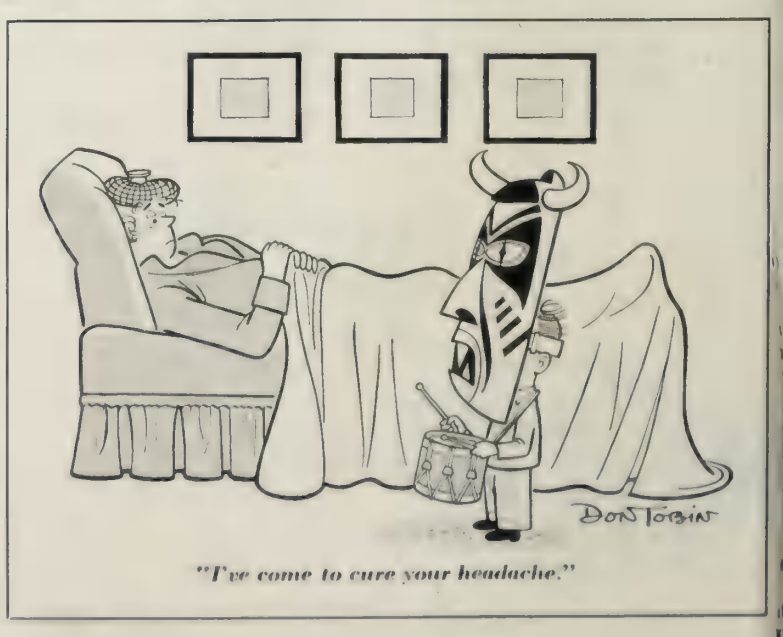
Indeed, it is not. And I have known people who deserved the name "educated" who possessed no Latin or Greek, and little book learning at all. For what is an "educated" person, at any level of life?

An educated person, as I see it, is one who is able satisfactorily to perform all the duties of life—to be a competent father or mother, to do a job of work as well as it can be done, even if it is so humble a task as making a bed, or driving a truck, or cooking a meal, or mowing a lawn. An educated person is one who knows how to treat his fellow men according to their deserts, without obsequiousness or truculence, and to win from them the response of their esteem for himself, not only for what he does but for what he is. An educated person is one who does not depend on others, above all upon crowds or canned amusements, for his primary satisfactions; who is not afraid to be a nonconformist; who is not easily swayed by slogans; and who can endure to be alone. In short, it is a person who has found inner poise, inner peace, a purpose for his existence beyond money and material things, and a philosophy to guide him through the inescapable hazards and griefs of life.

I have known farmers and craftsmen, the latter particularly in the countryside, who could barely read or write, but whose joy in their work, and struggle after its perfection, whose simple acceptance of all normal responsibilities, and whose natural courtesy set them apart as educated souls, competent minds, and gentlemen, in the exact meaning of that word.

And, personally, I do not believe anyone is educated who cannot use his or her hands. For there is a direct connection between hand and brain. The girl whose mother insists she learn to cook, and get a meal on the table at the proper time and in proper order; to wash and iron and care for her own clothes; to keep her home, or part of it, in order and according to an organized routine, is training her daughter's brain, a very important part of the brain that we think with; and the training will not only make her a better but a better secretary, or writer, or ex tive, or artist.

America—particularly its great cities full of people with lopsided brains, inc petent to survive any drastic changes of cumstance; hysterical if divorced from s minute process which is their job.



Finally, there is no education that not include moral training. Jefferson "training in virtue" as the first ste primary education. Washington (in Farewell Address) uttered grave d whether morality could ever be inculcate a people without religion—a doubt I sh

And in moral training even manners h a role, superficial as we have come to sider them. Perhaps manners are just outward assumption of a virtue which not really exist, but we do tend to become way we behave.

The boy and girl who are taught to and give their seats to an older person, o obviously tired person, in a crowded bus, the child who is not allowed to monop conversations or show off, are simply b taught to practice consideration of ot The boy and girl who observe affection reticence between their parents in their homes will unconsciously copy them an less likely to become "problem child than those who hear coarse words, s voices, and see day by day selfish or modest acts. Every cultivated foreigner visits America is struck by the unmann ness of Americans, particularly of Amer youth. And if this unmannerliness, origin due simply to lack of restraint from infa onward, degenerates into delinquency actual crime, the development is not natural. There is certainly something w when a people with the most schooling duce the largest number of juvenile d quents of any civilized country, and hav adult population notable for alcohol emotional instability, psychiatric diso and a curiously adolescent attitude bined of real and imaginary fears.

Perhaps the most outstanding Amer characteristic is dislike and distrust of thority. But it is impossible to have a civil society without authority. From the of the Greek city states until modern ti tyranny has been the result, not of order of license.

Authority must either come from with from the father and the mother in the h the teacher in the school, the discipline work and effort, the refinements of man and tastes, and the ethics of morals an ligion—or it will certainly and inevitabl imposed from without. Training for sla begins with training in self-indulgence there is one constant pattern in human perience, in every age, it is the histo proof that the price of freedom is volun acceptance of moral restraints. THE

"I've come to cure your headache."

WHERE IS THIS GIRL?

(Continued from Page 39)

"Youth," muttered Robert Coe with a is. He nodded his head austerely at Bob Gland, the Journal-American critic, and th the house lights dropped and the curtain sli up.

his particular musical comedy had gernated in Los Angeles, among some struggl g movie adolescents who had wearied of w ing for calls from Central Casting and ha moved East to pick up another collection of trugglers. Two feminine movie colum-nis had raved about the West Coast versio. The critical approach of Robert Coe Wtson would be somewhat sterner.

specially his approach to the tall, almost rely blond girl who played what you would ha e to call the second feminine lead. In the glom of the Music Box, R. C. Whitson bent ov his program, deftly flicked on his foun-tai-pen flashlight and read the brief biography of said reedy blonde:

Leila (Lally) Pate has been attempting for ear or two now to overcome the twin dissers of an education at Smith and a childhood as he heiress to the steel millions amassed by a grandfather, Manton Goodrich Pate. Her w king career to date has included a session as a aitress on Cape Cod, which she ended ruefu because too many of her friends thought sh was being cute, and several appearances in off Broadway productions. This is her first Br adway show, but not, Robert Coe Whitson th the eight other old men willing, her last.

R.C.W. eyed the last sentence medi-tively. Then he raised his eyes once more to the stage of the theater, where Lally Pate was eng aged in racing through a blackout skit wh two of the other grinning young things wi h waving arms and legs.

She was, of course, being entirely too ma tic; she was racing through her lines like a lo soul who had lost contact with time and spa ce. But in the seat in front of R.C.W., Cri ic Watts was scribbling "Interesting—may be good one day" next to her name on the program. In the seat in back of critic
Wa tts, Robert Coe Whitson was underlining Lal y Pate's name with a thick black pencil, som hing more or less.

The producers of You've Had It, Baby! had n't hoped too deeply that Mr. Whitson wou l would be in his seat for the second act—he rarely was, except for a Shaw revival or a my production of a Sean O'Casey play—and the y were not disappointed. At 10:03 Mr.
Whitson was on his way downtown to the Morning Mail office in a cab.

In the hours just before and after midnight, there is a peace in the city room of a New York newspaper that virtually is unequaled, and so it was with the Mail as Robert Coe Whitson emerged into it. There was a seedy kind of dignity to the place, and for some reason that did not fit in with the set of his character, Robert Coe liked it. A hiker bound for Cathay hooted in the dark night outside as he sat down, removed his jacket carefully, turned up his cuffs and inserted paper in his typewriter. Then he peered around for the program of the show, opened it and placed it carefully on his desk.

The darkly underlined name of Leila Pate glared up at him. There was a moment's silence, as he whetted and stropped the razor. Then:

This is a day and age when the drama critic who has a little of the stage-door John in his make-up is at a complete disadvantage. Time was when the first-nighter could sing love songs to his reviews, like the gentleman who saw Ethel Barrymore do a Sir James Barrie play and wrote, "It is not that I love Barrie less, but that I love Barrymore." And Alexander Woollcott's literary love affairs with Mrs. Pat Campbell, Minnie Maddern Fiske and Eleanora Duse are milestones in the art of affectionate drama criticism.

These historic amours were recalled last night with rue by your writer as he had the misfortune to view Coles and Franklin's new musical, You've Had It, Baby!

Ensconced in one of the leading female roles was a caricature of an actress—an awkward, frill, psychoneurotic type of woman, who charged through her performance like a water buffalo. Investigation disclosed her name as Leila Pate, an heiress. Miss Pate: You have enough money. Please leave by the side door.

There were paragraphs more. Robert Coe finished, finally, and took his copy over to Finnegan, the night feature editor. Finnegan looked up from his egg sandwich. "How?" he asked. "Any of the kids promising?"

"None."

Finnegan paused with a wry grin. "You aren't killing the young birds in the nest again, before they get a whack at using their wings, are you?"

Robert Coe looked indignant. "I never stifle young talent," he said defensively. "I didn't see any tonight."

FINNEGAN chuckled and returned to his bread and egg. Robert Coe stood there for a moment, mildly riled, then put on his jacket and went out into the night, bound for East 50th Street and a few pages of Aristotle before turning out the bed lamp.

EVEN THE LESS THEATER-MINDED OF YOU MAY remember that year—the famous, famous year of Robert Coe Whitson's review of You've Had It, Baby! There have been more bitter reviews, perhaps, for R.C.W. wrote not with malice but with the frightening detachment of a master surgeon, but none with such sheer devastation. No one connected with the enterprise escaped his scalpel, but Lally Pate suffered most.

It was about a week after this masterpiece of invective that Robert Coe was busy at work writing one of his three favorable reviews of the season. Maurice Evans had presented an Ibsen play.

"Here," he already had typed, "is the theater at its incomparable finest. Here ——"

At night, it is rare that there is a receptionist around to halt strays who want into the city room of a newspaper. The Morning Mail was no exception. Lally Pate, twenty-three years old, a blonde with the aroused fury of a redhead, burst in like Zacchini out of a cannon and went past the startled old copyreaders until she drew up in front of the drama desk.

"You," she announced loudly, "belong up at Harvard in a bottle."

Robert Coe Whitson came back from Ibsen to reality with a jolt. "Harvard?" he said automatically. "Why, I went there for ——" He looked up. "Who in the name of Sam Hill do you think you are?" he asked, as irritated as a man can be.

She snorted. "I'm Lally Pate and You've Had It, Baby! closed tonight. Twenty-two kids are out of a job. Are you happy now?"

Robert Coe stared. "It seems to me, young lady," he said, "that you are ascribing too much influence to a single drama critic. As I recall, none of my colleagues was overimpressed with your carnival show."

She shook her head impatiently. "We'd have gotten by with their reviews," she said. "But you! You, you ——"

Mr. Whitson was, at all times, a dignified man. For a moment he had been unnerved—it could have been Lally Pate's violent entrance . . . or her blue eyes—but now he steeled himself.

"It was a miserable show and, all things considered, you are a miserable performer. These facts are incontestable."

She stood there for just a second. Even in the harsh fluorescent light of the Mail city room, there was a beauty in her white, tightly drawn face. Her cheekbones were high, her mouth long and straight and her eyes angry, in the way that always intrigues men. This was no movie queen, no assembly-line cutie. When she spoke again, it was more quietly.

"I can't stand people who never admit they can be wrong," she said. "You said I was a misfit as an actress. I will prove you wrong." She turned on her three-inch heels and click-clacked through the assorted burn-scarred desks and out into the corridor and was gone.

(Continued on Page 125)

"My bulges made me miserable . . . until . . . MY SPENCER MADE ME OVER!"

In ordinary foundation, she looked bulgy; felt dull and dragged-out.

Now she's trim, poised, confident — in her Spencer Body and Breast Supports.

Are you, like so many women, discouraged about your "problem" figure? Do you keep trying foundation after foundation — without getting rid of that sagging abdomen, that bulge in back?

A Spencer designed just for you will solve all your problems—completely, comfortably, economically! No more sags. No more bulges. Enjoy relief from backstrain and nervous fatigue—gain the zest and sparkle that come with better health!

All this is yours from the moment you put on your Spencer Body and Breast Supports — because they are guaranteed never to lose their shape!

Write or Phone for FREE Information

MAIL coupon below for fascinating 16-page booklet showing how a Spencer will help you! Or PHONE nearest dealer in Spencer Supports (look in yellow pages under "Corsets" — or in white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" and "Spencer Support Shop.") No obligation, of course!

Doctors Know!

Doctors prescribe Spencer Supports to improve general health by improving posture; to aid treatment of back derangements—arthritis and other chronic diseases—displaced abdominal organs — breast problems — maternity — post-operative and other conditions.

To SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn.
(In Canada—Rock Island, Quebec) 7-50

Please send your FREE booklet. I have marked my posture problem at left. (Print your name and address.)

MISS MRS.
ADDRESS
CITY & STATE

Want to Make Money in a professional type of business? Experience not needed . we train you. Profitable — interesting. Check for information ☐ individually designed SPENCER SUPPORTS

Take a minute to look!

Before you buy a cotton, take a minute to be sure it will be safe from shrinkage woes forever. Take a minute to look for the word "Sanforized" on the label.

A cotton dress can be a woeful loss if shrinkage gets it! Be sure it's got a "Sanforized" trade-mark instead.

Buy sportswear and playclothes that will keep their easy fit, washing after washing. Does the label say "Sanforized"?

Be smart about slips! Ask the salesgirl to show you the "Sanforized" trade-mark.

Keep children's clothes from getting outgrown before their time! That word "Sanforized" says they'll never shrink out of fit.

Seeing is believing! Make even your favorite salesgirl show you "Sanforized" on the label!

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE MARK

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

(Continued from Page 123)

ert Coe Whitson sat there, only faintly of the wispy trace of lavender still in r. Finnegan lounged over. He had a ish on rye in his right hand.
ou didn't make sure that one was killed nest," he commented. "She must have ed the massacre."
ert Coe shook his head, at last, and
ed. "She's crazy," he said.
negan nodded. "Could be," he said.
as he drifted back to his desk, "She'll e prettiest one in any madhouse they ner to, though."
ert Coe Whitson thought on that for a nt. He looked at Finnegan, and then at the corridor door. "She's crazy," he his typewriter, but that instrument, what less intellectual than Finnegan,
o comment.

N THE SPRING COMES, THE NUMBER OF theatrical productions coming into way thins out and then disappears ly.
s leaves the critics of the drama in a on somewhat similar to that of sports
s when the Rose Bowl football game een played on New Year's Day. There w or no plays for them to review, so find themselves wandering off to sumtock or Greenwich Village playhouses night clubs.
casionally the saloons present someone art may transcend the world of the -dollar minimum: the pantomime of y Savo, the earth-shattering didoes of y Durante, the fey singing of Edith Then the critics come out of their ivory
s and into the land of the smoky room he toy wooden hammer on the table.
it was in June of that year, when Lally appeared next on the professional scene.
had woven together a group of mono-s and character sketches, and the man-ent of the Waldorf-Astoria, a little duly, had booked her into one of its smaller s, where the clientele consisted mostly rly wealthy young couples who were in and didn't demand too much in the way tertainment. Happily for Lally, on the night of her engagement there, one of ouples in attendance comprised one of nine cold men of the theater—not rt Coe—and a twenty-two-year-old ue whose favors he sought.
e drama critic's passion for his profesrises above even his passion for passion.
way through a Scotch-on-the-rocks, our looked up slowly at the tall, slender l girl out on the floor. She was imitating arine Hepburn, but instead of doing it e broad burlesque manner of most night-performers, she was playing it straight doing a scene from Morning Glory, the re for which Hepburn won an Academy
d. There was about her the same bed love for life that made strong men e and poets fall silent, and the old man of isles—perhaps helped along by the four s he had had—was caught in the mood.
ingénue was irritated more than somewhen he hauled her back to the office him instead of moving on to El Morocco, he made her sit patiently by while he ed out a column about the talent of a g actress he had seen in a saloon.

ST of the other cold men took his tip and to see her, and they, too, wrote that was a young girl to behold. All except ert Coe Whitson.
It is impossible," he told Finnegan when d, "for that girl to improve. It is obvious foolish colleagues have watched her ugh the bottom of one drink too many."
Why don't you just look in some night?"
negan asked.
obert Coe shook his head. "It'd be a e of time."
innegan sighed. "Column tonight?" he d.
.C.W. nodded. "I thought I'd do a piece ut the relation of Ellen Terry to the ure, if you can call it that, of the modern ess."
innegan grinned. "Personally I liked stature of that Pate girl," he said.

Robert Coe Whitson just raised an eyebrow wearily—a little too wearily, come to think of it—and returned to his desk.

HE SUMMERED, AS USUAL, ON CAPE COD, THAT year. He was rereading the Greek drama and he enjoyed it almost as of old—but it wasn't enough. Nor were the evenings with acquaintances in their cottages, cool evenings with a drink and the symphonies coming into the darkened rooms over the radio, and the good talk. As Robert Coe neared the autumn and his thirty-seventh birthday, he became aware for the first time in his meticulous life that there was something missing.

But summers end. "Seats on sale now for the next six weeks," the ads in the Sunday drama sections said one week, and the season had begun again.

For two weeks Robert Coe fulfilled his chores and then he came down with pneumonia. Not the dark, serious kind, but the kind that lays you up for a bit. He still was strapped to bed when the new Walter Ferry play came along with Lally Pate playing the

---

"That government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." It is commonly supposed that Lincoln originated the immortal phrase which closed this (Gettysburg) address; but did he? Herndon, his law partner, had given Lincoln, several years previously, a copy of Theodore Parker's addresses. Lincoln read and underscored in this book the words "Democracy is direct self-government, over all the people, by all the people, and for all the people." Theodore Parker may have borrowed this phrascology from Webster, who had said, four years earlier, in his famous reply to Hayne: "The people's government, made for the people, made by the people and answerable to the people." Webster may have borrowed from James Monroe, who had given voice to the same idea a third of a century earlier. And to whom was James Monroe indebted? Five hundred years before Monroe was born, Wycliff had said, in the preface to the translation of the Scriptures, that "this Bible is for the government of the people, by the people, and for the people." And long before Wycliff lived, more than 400 years before the birth of Christ, Cleon, in an address to the men of Athens, spoke of a ruler "of the people, by the people, and for the people." And from what source Cleon drew his inspiration is a matter lost in the fog and night of antiquity.

—DALE CARNEGIE:
Public Speaking and Influencing Men in Business (Association Press).

---

part of a girl who married out of her religion and suffered the peculiar misery that such things so often and so unfortunately bring, and finally killed herself.

In the wrong hands, the role could have been burlesque and insufferable. Miss Pate's hands, the nine cold men—less one—decided, were the right ones. The heel-clicking was general. In Robert Coe's enforced absence, his assistant covered the show and followed the general suit. He loved her.

The play had been on for three weeks and was playing to standees when Mr. Whitson returned to his daily labors and dropped in to see Lally Pate.

Who is there to say that by this time his judgment had warped? Is there one of us can detect the fine line when sharp, impersonal observation becomes something different? Robert Coe wrote, that night in the solitude of the Mail city room:

It is a gaudy part and Miss Pate plays it for all it is worth. But whether it is acting, I am not prepared to admit, I do not think so. I remember Alice Brady too well, and Hayes and Cornell and Nazimova. Miss Pate is not an actress.

IF YOU ARE OF A ROMANTIC TURN OF MIND, AND even if you are not, there are few places in God's world with the fatal fascination of the oily, scummy East River on a fall night. When the moon is bright and the windows of the building in which you sit are opened, South Street has more wonderful mystery about it than Soho, more charm than Montmartre. The street lamps are the spotlights for the stage, and the strolling players come into its soft beam for a second and then vanish. The smell of the sea drifts up and the whistles of the ships keen with their acute melancholia.

IT was so, when Robert Coe Whitson stood looking out at it one night. Old songs. Little White Lies. "The moon was all a-glow, and heaven was in your eyes. . . ." They went through his head and for a second he never had gone to Harvard, and Ibsen was a name in a book. No man is an island, they have said.

"It took me a week to make up my mind to come here again," Lally Pate said, behind him, "and you probably think what isn't true—that I can't take it. But I don't care."

He turned and she still had on the faint stage make-up, and her blue eyes were angry. "I never thought I'd see you here again," he said. George S. Kaufman was not writing his dialogue.

"Maybe you were right the first time," she said, "but you've lost perspective. I'm not as bad in this play as you wrote."

"It's my privilege to think so," he said.

"I thought newspapermen all were high-minded and idealistic and felt they had a duty to their readers." The knife caught him between the second and third ribs.

"Holy smoke," he said, marking the first time that archaic term ever had been used by a Harvard man, "you can't stand there and tell me you have a better perspective on your acting than I have?"

She shook her head impatiently. "I know I'm not a bad actress," she said. "I'm not a good one, yet, but you can bet your last stuffed shirt that when I tell you you're out of focus now, I know what I'm talking about."

For a moment, he was halfway receptive. For a moment, he meditated and she stood there and looked at him and even his short hair didn't look bad. But thirty-seven-year-old drama critics are not prone to retracing their steps and correcting them. He looked away from the girl and out into the foggy river night.

"Well," he said, "we have a difference of opinion. And that, I guess, is that."

Behind him, for one outraged moment, Lally Pate became like every other female. She stamped her foot. "Oh, how I detest you!" she said, and when Robert Coe heard the catch in her voice he had to turn around, and when he did, he saw the tears starting from the corners of her eyes. "Ever since I've been old enough to stop reading Winnie the Pooh," she said, "I've wanted one thing in life—to be a great actress and to have you write that I was. Other teen-age girls get crushes on actors, but me, no, I have to be intrigued by a drama critic. And I never got over mine, the way the other girls get over Clark Gable. And now you turn out to be such a stinker and ——" but she couldn't finish. She turned and ran from the city room and again he could hear her heels click-clacking down the hall, until she was gone.

Outside the open window, the mists swirled and a foghorn sobbed. Robert Coe Whitson stood there shaking his head slowly and wondering what it was that was mixing up his orderly life. A slim girl with long blond hair who, if she forgot and became too excited, waved her elbows around so they looked quite angular. A skinny girl with blue eyes who, now that he finally could put his finger on it, was the one who had been walking across the front of his mind last summer on those Cape Cod nights when he should have been listening to the good conversation of his friends and savoring the excellent brandy.

THE PATINA OF OLD-MANISM THAT COVERS A thirty-seven-year-old who has been doing the same thing for fifteen years is not scraped off in a night by the flash of blue eyes or the sound of an angry voice. R. C. W. did what

Pad instantly relieves painful shoe pressure — Medicated Disk quickly removes Corns, Callouses

NO OTHER METHOD DOES AS MANY THINGS FOR YOU AS DR. SCHOLL'S!

1. Instantly Allays Pain—No Faster Relief Possible This Easy Way . . .
2. Quickest Corn and Callous Removing Action Known to Medical Science . . .
3. The Only Method That Stops Corns, Callouses Before They Can Develop

No wonder Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are the world's largest selling reliefs for corns, callouses, bunions and sore toes—for no other method does as many things for you as Dr. Scholl's. So join the millions who already enjoy instant relief this modern, scientific way. Get a box of Zino-pads today! Sold everywhere.

NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE
Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1
50 WITH NAME IMPRINTED
Pen-'n-Brush STUDIOS

EARN EXTRA $$$ NEW BONUS PLAN earns you up to and OVER 100% PROFIT

$50 & MORE. Yours for selling only 100 startling new boxes. Other AMAZING profits with surprise items. You take NO RISK. Send postal card today for samples on approval. You also get free samples easy-to-sell personal Christmas cards, stationery, napkins. It costs nothing to try. Write TO-DAY.

PEN-'N BRUSH, Dept. L-7, 139 Duane St., N. Y. 13, N. Y.

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Hair Remover. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

It's easy to earn extra money. All you need is a little spare time and samples of PHILLIPS Christmas Cards and Gift Items to show your friends! Beautiful designs, smart new ideas, big values produce orders fast!

I HAVE $50.00 FOR YOU!

Just sell 100 gorgeous 21-Card $1 Assortments. Make up to 50c per box on quick sales! Also show Gift Wraps, Everyday Cards, Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards as low as 50 for $1. New Children's Books, Address Book, and over 70 fast selling items including many gift items for all members of the family. No experience needed. Extra Profit Bonus Plan! FREE Booklet shows you how! Coupon brings you everything you need to start you earning at once. Send no money.

MAIL COUPON!

PHILLIPS CARD CO.
359 Hunt St., Newton, Mass.
Rush FREE Booklet and Imprint Samples, and Assortments on approval.

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... Zone ..... State .....

No other Deodorant gives you this thrilling

6-POINT PROTECTION

You're Lucky In Love When You "DEW"!

"DEW"®

SPRAY DEODORANT

JUST SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW" SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

Only "DEW" Gives You All 6 Important Advantages

1 STOPS ODOR INSTANTLY! Yet is absolutely safe. Can't irritate normal skin. "DEW" protects you, protects your clothes.

2 CHECKS PERSPIRATION! Keeps you socially secure 24 hours a day.

3 CONTAINS RETSELANE!® Only "DEW" can use this amazing new ingredient.

4 SAVES MONEY! Year's supply only 98¢ plus tax—less than 2¢ a week!

5 DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! Not messy. Never touches hands, nails. Dries quickly. Men, too, like "DEW".

6 MAGICAL SPRAY BOTTLE! Unbreakable, squeezable.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

WHEN YOU "DEW" YOU DON'T OFFEND

SAFE EYE-GENE

EYE-OPENING TEST THRILLS MANY!

Eyes so tired you want to close them for relief? . . . Clear, expressive eyes are fascinating. 2 drops of soothing EYE-GENE in each eye floats away that tired, strained, irritated look and feeling in seconds—dramatically lights up your whole expression! Safe EYE-GENE is like a tonic for your eyes. Use it every day. 25c, 60c, $1 in handy eye-dropper bottles at Druggists.

2 drops make this striking difference in SECONDS!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

he might be expected to do. He made his way carefully through the rest of the season's first nights, and when the winter began to draw to its fretful close, he boarded a ship for Paris.

What he expected there, he had no idea. He thought it would be a dirty city and he found he was right, and he thought he would be different from the Parisians, in an oil-and-water way, and he was right. But there was no place in New York for him, just then, so he got used to the muddy coffee in the morning and he found that sitting along the quai and watching the incredibly dirty Seine wander casually along to its destiny in the English Channel could be soothing.

The warm, humid summer replaced the unbelievable and outrageous spring, and as in New York, the citizens cleared out of Paris. The city was empty and on a Sunday Robert Coe Whitson would walk slowly through its streets and lose himself a little in its hoary age. He could meditate too. So it goes, when you go three thousand miles away from a girl and try to get things straightened out in your mind, things like whether she could act and just how did it happen that you never had been involved deeply with any particular girl and was she really as important to you as she seemed sometimes when the night came down and Paris murmured a little of her casual hysteria in your ear, and you were lonely.

There was a night when the thing had him pretty well in its grip and he hunted out a hotel where he could send a cable. But, while he finished it and came passably close to sending it, he couldn't imagine what her address was or where he could send it, and he finally stuffed it into his pocket and went back into the night. He read it the next morning and it made him uneasy as well as bewildered—it really didn't make too much sense—so he burned it.

The summer ended. Paris was gone, and the potted plant on the window sill in the living room of the East 50th Street apartment still lived (courtesy of the cleaning woman), green and bright against the gray of the days and the East River. The season began anew.

And, sandwiched in with one morning's mail on the big, cigarette-burn-scarred desk in the corner of the Mail city room, the news from one of the press agents that there was to be a Juliet this season. The press release stated baldly:

> Rehearsals begin next week. It's the big step in the career of Lally Pate, who played the sensitive Mary Farrow in Star of Morning—played it so well, you remember, that the wager takers have erased from their books any odds on her missing fire as Juliet. She could do it, the feeling is.

A girl with blue eyes and bright blond hair that took to stringiness in the rain, doing Juliet. Juliet—of them all. The chink in the Harvard armor of Robert Coe Whitson. To say he knew Juliet was something of an understatement. Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops: I must be gone and live, or stay and die. . . .

Finnegan stopped by. "The scuttlebutt in Shubert Alley is ——" he began.

"Yes," Robert Coe Whitson said.

Finnegan pondered. "It sounds a little ambitious for her," he said finally.

Robert Coe stared up at him. "Ambitious," he repeated. He pounded the space bar on the typewriter a couple of times with his right thumb. "It's impossible! Doesn't she know how long it took the good ones—Jane Cowl, Ellen Terry, all of them—before they even dreamed of Juliet? Why, she'll ruin her career, and besides ——"

"Don't tell me," Finnegan said, moving along. "Tell her."

R.C.W. sat there, miserable at his typewriter, for a long time. Tell her. He knew there was nothing he would rather—and yet how could he? This time, they would all belt her. All nine of them, old and cold. The dogs. Drama critics. Dear heaven.

IT WAS THE FIRST TIME IN THE MEMORY OF the oldest first-nighters in the business that Robert Coe Whitson had turned up for an opening in a dinner jacket ("I think Shakespeare is a relative by marriage of Whitson's," an unemployed actor in the audience cracked to his companion. "He's just showing family respect."), but everything else was the same. There was no one in the seat next to him on the sixth-row aisle and he was as glum as ever. More so. Oh, yes—one difference. He slumped. Robert Coe Whitson always sat up straight and reasonably attentive, even if he planned to walk out in the middle of the first act. Now he slumped, an inch deeper in his seat with every passing minute before the curtain went up in the Majestic.

John Chapman turned around, looked speculatively at Robert Coe and then whispered to him, "How come they didn't bar you from this one?"

"Funny like a crutch," R.C.W. replied sourly.

Then there was the sound of the string trio, busy with Elizabethan music from somewhere in the hall behind a box, and finally the lights blanked out and two girls came out in front of the curtain and spoke the prologue about the star-cross'd lovers. They exited, right; there was a momentary hush and then the curtain went up and the first-night audience was transported to Verona and the clanking of swords and bucklers.

If you remember your Romeo, you know that it is Scene III before the nurse mumbles, "Where's this girl? what, Juliet!" and the loveliest of the Capulets and of Shakespearean heroines enters and asks, as they say in Lindy's at high noon, what's cooking.

Until that moment, that night in the Majestic, there were ten or fifteen minutes of good but unspectacular Shakespeare. The Benvolio was a skilled one, the Romeo a fair one. They gave the play a reasonable start—while everyone waited. You watch Macbeth to see his witchy lady scrub her hands in psychopathic terror. You watch Othello for the moment when the room is cleared and Iago sidles up to the footlights and in five minutes of warped malevolence explains just how he is going to stir things up. For Romeo—ah, for Romeo you watch for those magical few moments when Juliet first appears, and you must make up your mind if she is fourteen and is in love. If she fails, your play is gone and you might just as well finish out the evening in the little bar at Sardi's, brooding.

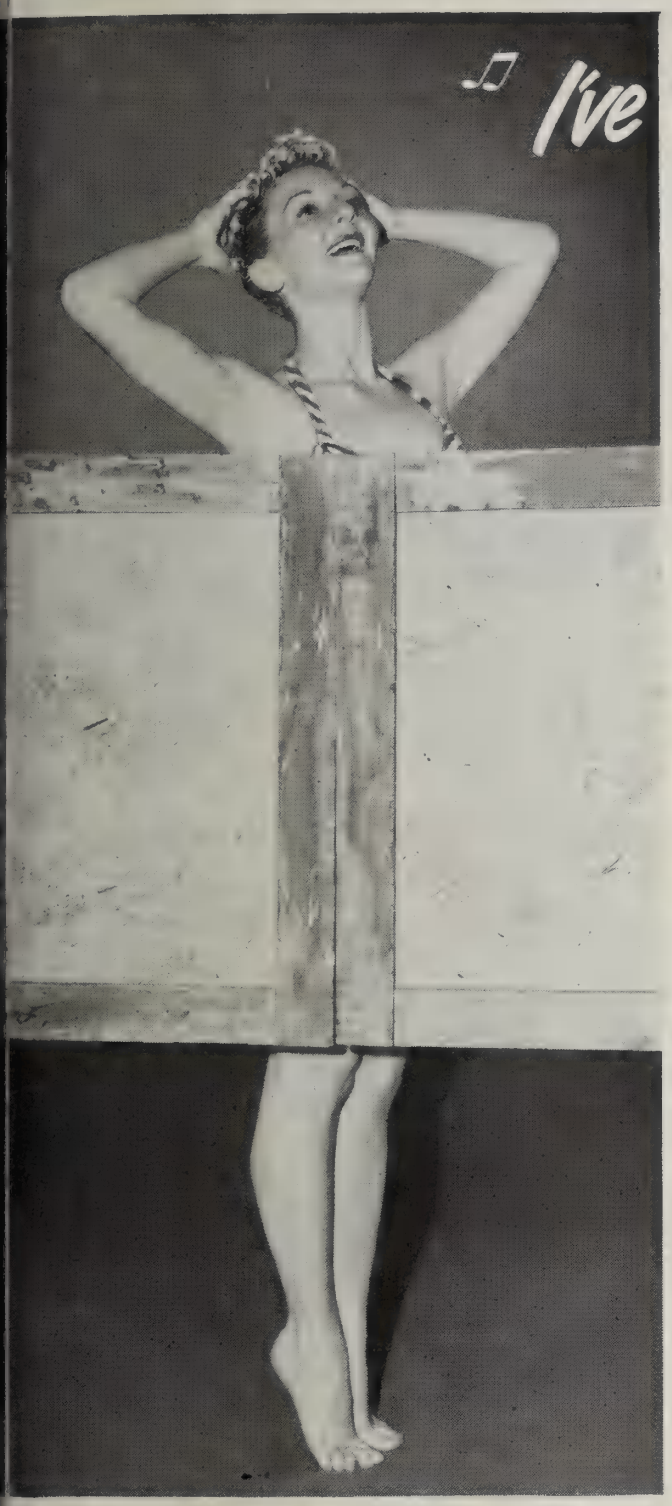
Robert Coe Whitson came up out o seat, up from the slump, when Lally Pat swered her nurse and came onstage. A few minutes later when she appeared a window and implored Romeo to be but s her love, he was joined by anybody an erybody in the audience who had slur more than three inches since the curtain up.

At one time or the other in the theate eryone from Stanislavsky to Stinky Shorty of the burlesque wheels has tri explain the meaning of good acting, bu one ever succeeds. Was Barrymore a actor or just a great personality? There answer—and there was no answer, this n if you wondered just what it was Lally was doing on the stage of the Majestic.

That which we call a rose . . .

There was a girl on the stage who was and beautiful and very much in love, and were right up there with her, suffering tortures of the damned. Whatever it wa caught you and held you tight and it n the tears come to your eyes in a sudden

It made the tears come to the eye Robert Coe Whitson, something that n had happened in his sixth-row aisle sea fore, and when Escalus bowed his head ended the story of woe, and the curtain scended, there was nothing for him to d rush up the aisle and out into the raucous tinny fall night of Broadway, the roar o plause fading from his ears as the doors c behind him. In the cab downtown wrestled with himself, and Daniel We never had a rougher time with the devi



Robert Coe Whitson knew that his derful, his masterful impartiality was go he were a judge, he would have disqual himself from the case. But he was the dr critic of the Morning Mail and he had hour and twenty minutes to tell tomorr newspaper readers whether it was w while to send in their checks to the Maj box office for the coming weeks' performa

Finnegan said hello to him when he into the city room, but he only nodded went over to the burn-scarred desk. He for fifteen minutes, his back to the room, his eyes looking out into the East River n sharp this evening and clear and expect

(Continued on Page 128)

"Sure I still love you. I love your every gesture—the way you cook, the way you keep house, the way you darn socks."

I've found me a wonderful WAVE!

Says MARY MARTIN of "South Pacific"

"Six nights every week and twice on Wednesdays and Saturdays—my hair gets this sudsing," says Mary Martin, "and all it gets afterward to make it presentable is a few quick licks with a brush. That's why this Rayve Home Permanent is so wonderful—it really does make my hair behave as if it were naturally curly."

Her RAYVE HOME PERMANENT: vital part of every costume she wears in the show.

Mary Martin has considerably shorter hair than you probably have. Though a Rayve wave is extra long-lasting—it doesn't mean a lot to her. Yet Rayve's longer-lasting curls are a big plus with most women.

Energetic as the rest of her, Mary Martin's curls grow so fast that in order to be short enough for that on-stage shampoo, they must be cut weekly, permanented every 3 weeks.

"You wouldn't think I'd have any hair left, would you?" she inquires in that warm, confiding voice of hers. "But the truth is, my darn hair has never been healthier! Rayve is very, very easy on your hair. I've tried them all, believe me—and really and truly there's a difference between a Rayve permanent and the rest. You really do get a softer, more natural curl.

"Honest—your hair actually has a sheen afterwards! Almost as if you'd been using a hair conditioner, instead of putting in a permanent. I don't know too much about chemistry, but I understand Rayve waving lotion is unique—a different creaming agent, a different wetting agent, and so forth. Anyhow, I know the results are unique . . .

"Well! As you might gather, I'm delighted with Rayve. You see what you think of it!"

ıtly Mary Martin shampoos her celebrated crop with real suds ıe sings "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair." inspired "business" was, believe it or not, her own idea!

Rayve Refill, $1 (use any plastic curlers)
Complete Rayve kit, $2 (with 60 plastic curlers)

Money-Back Guarantee! Yes, your money back if you don't agree with Mary Martin that Rayve gives the softest, most natural wave you've ever had at any price.

The dress that needn't have been so beautiful

THERE'S NO REAL REASON for a girl to have the most beautiful dress in the world. Even my daughter Sally. Even if she has her heart set on it.

But—I bought it. And when I paid the bill, I whistled! Partly with the well-known father's bill-shock. Partly for happiness. Because, Sally was right—there never was a prettier dress to get married in.

It's times like that—when we can buy something really important even if it is a luxury—that I feel like such a lucky guy.

I know the luckiest day of my life was when I signed up to save regularly through the Payroll Savings Plan at the office. I'd tried every which way to save before, but, brother, this automatic way is the only way that works—for you—all the time!

Buying U. S. Savings Bonds . . . whether by the Payroll Savings Plan or the Bond-A-Month Plan . . . is the safest, "foolproofest," easiest method of saving since money was invented. And every $3 you invest will turn into $4 in 10 years.

Automatic saving is sure saving—
U.S. Savings Bonds

Contributed by this magazine in cooperation with the Magazine Publishers of America as a public service.

(Continued from Page 126)

Finnegan finally called over. "Forty minutes, Bob," he said. That was all. The Irish are wise and all-knowing.

Robert Coe shook himself, with a little start, and then put paper and carbon into his typewriter. He wrote his review of the production of Romeo and Juliet in thirty-six minutes. Then he put on his topcoat, shrugged it closely around his neck and left.

"Going home, or would you like to have a hamburger downstairs?" Finnegan called.

"I'm going to join the merchant marine and sail around the world," Robert Coe replied. Then he was gone, leaving Finnegan to meditate on the similarity of symptoms between hasheesh smoking and love.

A tug breasted through the black silk waters of the river, her riding lights moving steadily. The nose of a rusted banana boat loomed in her slip, and a convertible with a couple of high-school couples humming I Wanna Go Home With You rumbled over South Street's cobblestones. Robert Coe Whitson stood for a moment in the doorway of the Mail building, darkened except for a single lamp in the lobby. It was as he turned to look up the street, finally, in search of a cab, that he saw Lally Pate, who had just emerged from one. She was walking toward him, sans Juliet's flowing robes, her white death-mask make-up looking strange and eerie against the light tweed topcoat she wore.

"I was wondering," she said and t stopped, not quite sure.

"How much difference does it make time, what I write?" he said, and this t they were not firing the talk at each other making it naturally, as if they had kn each other for a hundred years.

"None," she said. "None at all." looked at him. "I'll go on trying to be actress," she said, "no matter what. know you can't change that." She tu away from him, looking into the river, of beauty and hooting little sounds water lapping against the pilings.

He took the carbon of his story from hi side jacket pocket and put it into her h It was a nice hand and he held onto it f moment; then he tucked it up under his and started her walking north with him.

"The first love letter I ever wrote in life," he said, shaking his head, "and million and seventy-five thousand newspa readers are going to get a look at it." looked down at her and grinned. "Well," said, "there's no sense in doing things h way, is there?"

She didn't look up, but the nice hand ti ened on his arm and she skipped her fe little to get into step with him. They pa under the spotlight of a street lamp on corner and then they were gone into the River night. Will you ring down the curt please, professor? I thank you.

"WE KNEW WHAT WE WANTED"

(Continued from Page 114)

six-year-old sister. Mary was given extraordinary freedom, allowed to come and go as she liked with no questions asked. When only sixteen, she spent six weeks alone in Bermuda. The same year she acquired her own yellow Chrysler convertible and $75-a-month spending money. After that, she was rarely home with her quarreling family. It still hurts to remember, however, the time she came down with typhoid the evening her mother was planning a lavish dinner party for her younger sister. "Oh, Mary," exclaimed her mother, "how tiresome of you! Go to your room and lock the door." None of the guests at the gay party that evening suspected there was typhoid in the house.

After Mary had graduated from Holton-Arms, a finishing school in Washington, D.C., she underwent a serious thyroid operation. To overcome her extreme self-consciousness about the scar, the doctor advised her to get a job which would force her to mingle with people. She became a stock girl at Altman's, thrilled at becoming a member of a group and at last accomplishing something on her own. As she acquired confidence, she began "working up Fifth Avenue," with the dream of becoming a store buyer.

John Haines, mayor of Chicago during the Civil War, was nicknamed Copperstock Haines after his fondness for copper stocks. By a process of abbreviation, familiar to Americans, the policemen who were on his force came to be called "coppers." The expression caught on and was further abbreviated to cops, which is now common.

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

In the meantime, Stewart had worked his way through Amherst on scholarships. "The eager-beaver type" (he says), he excelled equally at track and English lit, washed windows and stoked furnaces for pocket money. Graduating in 1931 at the depth of the depression, he became a Macy's sales clerk and a connoisseur of the 15-cent dinner at the Automat: 10 cents for a bowl of soup, five cents for a roll, and a free piece of lemon to float in his water for lemonade. While his Glen Ridge, New Jersey, family vacationed at their camp in Maine, he scrounged through the family jewel boxes for old broken pieces of gold to sell. Although Stewart's grandfather had made a fortune in the linen-thread business, his father, an inventor, had failed to inherit his practicality about money and it was generally feast or famine in the Coey family. But even on a pittance, Stewart managed to cut a swath as a gay blade about town. He could be seen in tails at New York's brilliant debuts, stuffing up on pheasant and champagne, with a nickel in his pocket subway fare to work the next morning. typical of Stewart's flair for the good that he learned to ski on the borax slid Saks'! Soon after, impeccably attired Saks' best ski togs, he directed their train up to the Adirondacks for exhilara week ends.

Stewart's and Mary's paths crossed Saks' one day when she tangled up a check and sought out the section man for help. He saw a little five-foot gi blue piqué with a white collar, very di blue eyes and freckles. He made a few castic remarks about her addition, and replied that she wished she had never Best's, where the section managers were gentlemen. Whereupon Stewart said, you little flower!" He picked up a ch bonnet, rammed it over her head and st off, leaving her choked with rage.

That very even however, he asked to a party at his ap ment. After a crisp gument about tr portation, Mary h ing out for a taxi, the impoverished S art for a subway, compromised, and w on a bus.

"She was impos spoiled," recalls S art, "but even so, clicked immediat She struck me lik small package of dynamite." Seven w later they were married.

They honeymooned in Maine, vis friends in Vermont and then quite sudd decided that department-store careers not what they wanted out of life. Betw them they had about $1500 in savings. T quit their jobs at Saks' and took of Mary's car for Vermont to buy a dese farmhouse. By this time, however, late tumn was setting in and the New Engl landscape was acquiring a pinched and b look. Nor was Stewart able to find any of job. They motored down to Connecti and through a friend's introduction Stew was hired as a teacher at the Fairfield Co try Day School. Mary was more than d ous about how they would live on his $15 month salary, but with characteristic they managed to rent a charming hous Aspetuck Corners for $35 a month.

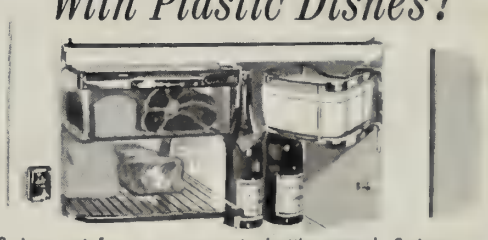
(Continued on Page 130)

Deepfreeze TRIPLE Feature Refrigerator!

TRADE-MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF

STAR PERFORMER IN ANY KITCHEN!

The new Deepfreeze Refrigerator wins "Oscars" from homemakers . . . America's most important audience!



1 The ONLY GENUINE Deepfreeze Freezer Compartment!

The makers of the world's first and finest home freezer have put the same skill and quality in the Deepfreeze Freezer Compartment of their refrigerator.

2 SWING-SHELF With Plastic Dishes!

Swings out for easy access to bottle space! Swings back automatically! Equipped with plastic dishes for food-saving food storage!

3 EXCLUSIVE Handy-Bins in Dual Vegetable Crispers!

Quick-reach Handy-Bins make "small" items easily accessible! These special hinged-lid compartments in the front of your Deepfreeze Refrigerator are ideal for eggs, radishes, lemons, etc.! Plenty of room in the back of the Crispers for larger items.

EXTRA ATTRACTIONS!

Butter Box with Spread Control
Dry Storage Bin • Plastic Meat Tray • Interior Light
Ice Trays • 5 Year Warranty

Your Deepfreeze Refrigerator has a space and place for everything! Five models, one for every family. See yours today!

GO BUY THE NAME-Deepfreeze REFRIGERATORS

HOME FREEZERS • REFRIGERATORS
ELECTRIC RANGES • ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS

Only products of the Deepfreeze Appliance Division, Motor Products Corporation, North Chicago, Illinois, can carry the trade-mark Deepfreeze, registered in the United States Patent Office.

Colgate Guarantees:

Veto Gives You Double Protection

Against Underarm Odor and Perspiration!

1. VETO STOPS ODOR INSTANTLY!

Colgate guarantees it! Used daily, Veto protects against underarm odor night and day, safeguards your daintiness from bath to bath.

2. VETO CHECKS PERSPIRATION!

Works quickly, effectively. Veto smooths on and is absorbed as easily as vanishing cream. Won't cake or dry out in jar. Has a delightful fragrance. And it's mild, safe for normal skin, safe for clothes.

If Veto isn't all we say it is, we'll gladly give your money back, plus tax and postage. Simply return unused portion to Colgate, Jersey City 2, New Jersey.

Veto Says "NO" to Perspiration and Odor!

(Continued from Page 128)

Stewart was appalled at his bride's complete ignorance of all housewifely tasks. "She not only couldn't boil water, she didn't even know how to use a can opener. Every time she had a button to cope with, she was used to ringing for a maid." He taught her how to make scrambled eggs, presented her with a copy of Fanny Farmer, and hoped for the best. The first cake she tried, she melted chocolate over boiling water, then dumped all the other ingredients into the double boiler with it. She stirred briskly until it began to harden, then popped it into the oven, with the most astounding and inedible results.

Then, across their laughter, tragedy struck and revealed in Mary depths of fortitude she never knew existed. After driving Stewart to his job one October morning, when roads were slippery with wet leaves, she skidded and stalled and was hit broadside by another car. Their own car was demolished and Mary a broken heap on the floor, with her teeth jarred loose, all her ribs on one side shattered, and a broken back.

After weeks in the hospital, she was brought home to Aspetuck Corners in a Bradford brace, a steel spine with claws to clutch her shoulders and belts to go about her middle. Once in it, Mary was helpless to get out or do anything except barely totter around. When Stewart left for school in the morning, he would belt her into it, and all day she would sit in the lonely cottage, watching the snow pile up against the windows, the pressure of the brace becoming increasingly intolerable until she was in tears of agony when he came home again at six-thirty. For eight months she endured this, trying to distract her mind from the pain and the loneliness by reading cookbooks (the basis, no doubt, of her excellent herb cookery today) and writing poetry (see poem at right, Aspetuck). Periodically her mother would arrive in a chauffeur-driven limousine with baskets of delicacies and beg her to come home to Bronxville. Mary, however, sensed that this was the real test of her marriage and refused to return to the undisciplined and unhappy life of her childhood.

Aspetuck

By Mary McKay Coey

And will the fires burn another year,
And curl the leaves with flames as fierce as these;
And will the far procession of the clouds,
Serene across the heavens, wind a frieze
Of majesty across the distant hill?
As long as time goes on and seasons pass
The farmer will immortalize the grass
In fragrant mounds of hay, his barn to fill.
The leaves will fall and yield their precious mold
That next year's birches, too, may drift in gold.
Strange magic alchemy distilled by frost
Will tell the flowers when their day is done,
Release the chestnuts from their prickly bur
And call the roll of apples, one by one.

She made a remarkable recovery except that she still cannot do heavy work (their only paid help today is a woman to do the ironing, Stewart cheerfully attending to the rest). Soon after, they moved to New Haven, where Stewart got an excellent job with the Bell system doing statistical research. "I have a facility for figures," he says, "but actually they bore me." While living there, they received the news that Mary's mother had taken a blanket and without waking the household had tiptoed down to the cellar and quietly turned on the gas.

Stewart continued to work at the New England Telephone Company until Pearl Harbor. One of the first in the company to enlist, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army Air Forces and immediately ordered to Miami. The evening the news came, a group of friends helped pack up their eight-room house; by noon the next day they were off. As the daughter of a West Pointer, Mary was convinced that they would have quarters on the post, and insisted upon packing into the car a silk and ten-foot flagpole which stuck into shoulder blades all the way to Florida.

For eighteen months Mary and Pu their all-American mongrel, followed S art throughout thirty-nine states. F Sacramento, California, he got his order overseas and Mary sadly returned Puppy to a hotel room in New York. Sh once signed up with the Red Cross. Sw to absolute secrecy, on call twenty- hours a day, she was chosen for troop-tr port work. As the ships were always loa at night, this meant seven or eight hou running up and down the freezing docks coffee and doughnuts, returning to her r at dawn in a state of physical and emoti exhaustion.

One very cold night in December sh turned to her room at four A.M. and Puppy out for a walk as usual. She sta crying from the cold and loneliness; tears froze on her cheeks as they fell. next day, still feeling wretched, she tre herself to a hair-do and facial, only to when she came ou the drier that she a temperature of

A long and l bout in the hos with pneumo complicated b blood condition nally sent Mar search of rest an warm Southern She chose Delra cause some fa friends were g there, soon fell in with its frien small-town atm phere. She rente house on the ca and as her he improved busied self with USO w Stewart, meanw was with the ser command of the N Air Force, static in England, Fr and Luxemburg. kept a diary so he could go over Mary every day their two-and-a-h year absence f each other; in meantime they w daily.

Finally he go thirty-day leave, orders to proce the Pacific. D his stay, V-J Da curred and his was deactivated. He had been back from seas barely a month when an extraordi thing happened. Mary's younger sister, had been living in Montreal, wired tha was arriving at the Coeys' with a sixt day-old baby. Mary and Stewart met at the airport with supplies of bottles formula and diapers; a wise precaution the sister had simply thrown away e bottle and diaper used on the trip. After days, the sister departed without the l and hasn't been back since. Neither she her divorced husband appeared intere in Peter, so the Coeys, who adored him f the start, began legal proceedings to a him. Then Mary, who had longed for dren during the nine childless years of marriage, found she was pregnant. The just fourteen months' difference bet Peter, now four, and Clare, three. They both blond and blue-eyed, and look much alike (they are, of course, first cous

On Peter's fourth birthday, Mary w him a little story telling him about adoption. There was no reaction until eral days later when they overheard him someone on the beach, "I'm mummy's derful adopted boy!" Both Clare and P are now thoroughly familiar with the t and have "adopted" playthings. When ake Your Mirror ... and Decide for Yourself !

you have hair on your lips, chin or eks which may what otherwise would be vely, satin-smooth skin? Are you as con- us of this blemish as those who greet ? Do you know that ZiP Epilator is as for the face as for the arms, legs and y because it is so bland in composition, the fastest way to remove hair?

quickly as you can say

ZiP

the hair is gone—

only off the surface but actually out of hair duct—hundreds at a time. It's so ple. The growth is retarded, the effect is ger lasting and you are free of the em- rassment of superfluous hair. Used for r 30 years at our New York Fifth Ave- Salon, it is time tested and the choice of criminating women everywhere. And it's easy to use at home—no odor, no harsh micals. Just ask at your favorite toilet ds counter for

ZiP Epilator (No Fed. Tax)

'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Hi-Life DOG FOOD

Hi-Life

NOW! COMPLETELY VITAMIN FORTIFIED

NON-SLIP

CAT'S PAW Rubber HEELS & Soles

oin The Thousands Who Make EXTRA CASH In Spare Time!

Sell ARTISTIC Christmas Cards

his easy, proven plan bring YOU dollars, too! Just take orders xquisite EMBOSSED NAME- RINTED Christmas Cards at or $1. These amazing-value sell on sight, your spare-time e grows by leaps and bounds.

MAKE $50 EASY!

ust 100 gorgeous 21-Card $1 tmas Assortments. Sell on ; pay you up to 100% CASH FIT! Also Religious, Metal- Gift Wraps, Everyday, more money-making As- ents. Imprinted Notes, onery, Napkins and Book hes. All are FAST-SELLERS pay you BIG PROFITS!

XPERIENCE NECESSARY

ANIZATIONS & CHURCHES aise money this friendly, way! Send for Assortments APPROVAL and FREE nt Samples. ACT TODAY.

NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED

FREE IMPRINT SAMPLES

SEND COUPON NOW!

TISTIC CARD CO., INC., 912 WAY STREET ELMIRA, N. Y.

TISTIC CARD CO., Inc., 912 Way St., Elmira, N.Y.
YES! Rush Assortments ON APPROVAL
d FREE Imprint Samples.

me_____ dress_____
y_____ Zone____ State____

old enough, the Coeys intend telling him the whole story, but meanwhile his real mother to Peter is simply the Mimi in his prayers.

With two babies added suddenly to the household, the Coeys definitely needed bigger quarters, so with money inherited from both their families they built a $30,000 house in Delray over by the canal. They no sooner moved in than they realized the location was a costly mistake. Mary hates isolation; she likes lots of houses near her with doors and windows open so she can sense life going on inside; she likes to see cars go by and wave to people in them. Their new canal house was surrounded by winter-visitors' homes, boarded up except for a few months a year. She began to think about how much they had loved California during the war, and when they sold their new house, they decided to try living there.

This, too, was a mistake. Stewart, with the promise of a job with the telephone company in Los Angeles, bought a house in exclusive Brentwood, where many movie stars have their homes. Every morning they awakened to fog; the ocean was too cold for swimming; Mary saw no one on the streets but yardmen cleaning out the swimming pools. Worst of all to Mary, "Only one window in the whole house faced the street!"

NEXT MONTH

"LIFE is too wonderful to pass up for routine," Lucile Sheheen declares. "I have four sons, 15 to 7, and a perfect husband. Together we all fish, picnic, enjoy square dancing. My husband is on every committee in town, I am active in the American Legion Auxiliary, yet we always find time for baseball with the kids too.

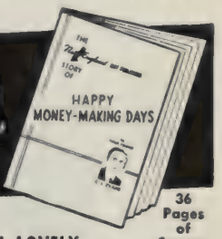
"I'm known as a good housekeeper, for we have family teamwork, everybody helps, and we have a home we are proud of."

Meet the Austin Sheheens, of Camden, South Carolina, in

IT'S ALL IN THE FAMILY

By Earl and Dorothy Selby

How America Lives in the August LADIES' HOME JOURNAL



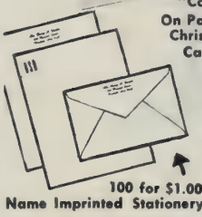
After six months they were ready to reappraise Delray as a permanent home: the wonderful, year-round warmth and sunshine; the informal friendliness of the people; the confidence they felt in Dr. Graham King, who was friend and mentor as well as doctor ("After all, we were pretty old to start raising two kids, and took it much too seriously"). Stewart drove back across the country so fast that Mary, occasionally noting the speedometer from the back seat, would call out, "Please, Stewart! Can't you slow down to a hundred?"

Their present home is all that the Coeys could desire. They built it a half mile from the ocean on a street where year-round residents live. Designed by architect Richard Hanna, it is striking enough in a community of beautiful ranch-type homes to attract half-a-dozen sight-seers to the front door daily. Considerable savings were made by leaving the concrete-block walls unplastered; outside they are coated with a weather-resistant paint in pale French gray, inside they are a stark white. There are no window sills, no baseboards, no doorknobs (circular metal inserts saved them $10 a door to install, say the Coeys). The open-beamed ceilings of this three-bedroom, two-bathroom house are painted pale aqua throughout and the floors are all terrazzo, an effect created by embedding white pebbles in concrete and grinding the surface to a marblelike finish. Aside from being a beautiful, light, airy house, it is a miracle of easy housekeeping. Nine big closets and built-in cupboards everywhere

FOUND! OVER 100 WAYS TO MAKE EXTRA MONEY and FRIENDS

C. L. EVANS SAYS: MY NEW FREE BOOK "The Story of HAPPY MONEY-MAKING DAYS" —SHOWS YOU HOW

36 Pages of Success Hints



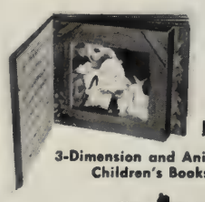
SHOW YOUR FRIENDS AMERICA'S OUTSTANDING VALUES IN LOVELY GREETING CARDS, GIFT WRAPPINGS AND STATIONERY

It's easy — profitable — fun! Friends, neighbors, tradespeople will be happy to give you orders. Show newest Metallic, Comic, 21 for $1.00 assortments for Christmas and all occasions. Children's "Action" Books, Gifts, Novelties. Sell full or spare time. No experience needed. Profits to 100% plus cash bonus. Joyce Carol Avery, of Conn., writes: "... my orders were my sole income for food, oil and doctors bills. I have had to support myself."

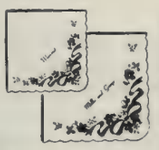
RAISE MONEY For Yourself, Your Club or Church

"Comics On Parade" Christmas Cards

100 for $1.00 Name Imprinted Stationery



Metallic Christmas Cards



FREE SAMPLE PORTFOLIOS NAME IMPRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1.00 AND UP

TAKE EASY ORDERS POCKET BIG PROFITS

Don't send a single penny. Rush coupon for Feature samples on approval, FREE samples Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Stationery, Napkins, FREE 48-page Catalog, FREE Selling Guide, special offers and full details of my wonderful extra money plan. ACT NOW!

3-Dimension and Animated Children's Books

Personalized Napkins

New England ART PUBLISHERS NORTH ABINGTON 273, MASS.

MAIL THIS COUPON NOW TO:
C. L. EVANS
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 273, Mass.

Please send me at once Feature samples on approval, free samples Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Stationery, Napkins, free Catalog, Selling Guide, special offers and all details of your wonderful plan.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
YOU TAKE NO RISK

Five Alarm SUNBURN?

Rush Help to Fiery, Painful Skin

Send Oil-O-Sol to the rescue for double-quick relief in sunburn. Soothes, cools, comforts, helps prevent blisters. This germ-arresting antiseptic used by thousands to help ease pain, head off infection, speed healing in non-poisonous insect bites, cuts, scratches. Oil-O-Sol, at your druggist today.

Fast Way to MAKE MONEY! Sell Christmas Cards

It's easy! Just show FOUR big NAME-IMPRINTED lines to friends—low as 50 for $1. Make up to 50c on 21-card $1 DeLuxe Box. EXCLUSIVE SECRET PAL, EASTERN STAR, Also Catholic, Birthday, Gift Wraps, Scented Stationery, Kiddy Pop-Up Books, Gift Items, Monogrammed Matches. Nation's Largest Line. New Party Plan! Write for details, FREE Imprint Samples, 2 Feature Boxes on approval. MIDWEST CARD CO., 1113 Washington. Dept. A-5, St. Louis 1, Mo.

50 for $1 With Name

GET FREE Samples

Don't worry Mom, I'm "Moisture-Proofed"!

Thanks, Mom ... for keeping me "Moisture-Proofed" with Fletcher Z.B.T., the baby powder made with Olive Oil. It gives me real protection from prickly heat, diaper rash and urine scald ... as this simple test proves:

Smooth Fletcher Baby Powder with Olive Oil on your palm ... sprinkle with water. See how Fletcher resists moisture— keeps skin dry and protected. Compare with ordinary powders.

Fletcher (Z.B.T.)®

The "Moisture-Proof" BABY POWDER WITH OLIVE OIL

Made by the makers of Chas. H. Fletcher CASTORIA

LITTLE LULU

Kleenex* comes in a "pocket edition," too!

Little Lulu says: YOU CAN TAKE IT WITH YOU— THE HANDY NEW KLEENEX POCKET-PACK TISSUES! SAME SOFT, STRONG KLEENEX TISSUES IN A NEW TINY PACKAGE. SERVES ONE AT A TIME! 24 SHEETS (12 PULLS) – 5¢ make up for lack of cellar or attic; the pale gray woodwork resists fingerprints; the terrazzo floors never need wax or varnish, never suffer from sand or water during hurricane weather. The house cost $16,600 to build, about one third less than comparable new homes in the area. The architect's fee plus the lot and landscaping brought the total cost to $23,000. It is completely paid for, although the Coeys have by this time exhausted their reserves and Stewart is wondering how they will last out his firm's May-to-November closing.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO. ★T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

He is always delighted, however, for an excuse to be with his family. The children, reflecting the devotion all around them, have never shown a spark of jealousy, although Clare, a charming and determined young lady, "is the squeaky wheel that gets the grease," says Stewart. Peter is an angelic child who can dance on his toes and sings like a lark. Both highly imaginative, they will not answer their mother until she recalls what characters they are pretending to be at the moment, from Virgin Mary and Joseph to sailfish.

Far from leading indolent lives in the sun, the Coeys budget every moment of the day, trying to crowd in just as much living as possible. Because the daily routine is so well planned, with Stewart pitching in to bathe or feed the children, or sewing on his own buttons in a pinch (Army style), Mary has time for a nap every day and is at the beach at least four mornings a week. Part of her strict daily ritual is writing in her diary, reading the New York Herald Tribune and writing to one of her sixty regular correspondents.

HOW THE COEYS SPEND THEIR MONEY

Food	$990
Milk	142
Car payments	888
Car upkeep	181
Electricity and gas	265
Water	97
Household help	325
Doctors and dentists	826
Medical drugs and hospital (Peter's tonsils)	261
Clothes	234
Entertainment	504
Newspapers and magazines	75
Peter's school (private)	375
Charities and gifts	156
Telephone	84
Insurance	260
Taxes	169
Miscellaneous	160
	$5992
Mary's income	$4535.37
Stewart's income (six months' work)	1497.60
	$6032.97

Slowly the townspeople of Delray are beginning to accept these "Northerners" as part of the real core of the town; Stewart is an usher at the Episcopal church. Peter and Clare are caught up in a whirl of birthday parties, Mary is getting interested in the Garden Club. It is hard, perhaps, to believe that with a background of impeccable family connections and solid business success, the Coeys deliberately ignore these things and make no pretense at keeping up with their rich Northern friends who breeze into Delray during the season.

In fact, Mary and Stewart prefer this Florida town in the summer when the society folk are gone from the beach, the specialty shops boarded up, and Fords replace the gleaming Cadillacs on the streets. Then Delray becomes, not a fashionable resort, but a small, friendly, forward-going American town, concerned with its churches and schools, band concerts, and football team. The best kind of town, the Coeys feel, with the best climate, to be found anywhere in the world for them and their children.

THE END

LOOK..

Percale Sheet

HERE'S how you can earn th lovely all-combed-ya sheets of a well-known ma They come two in a package, color is white and the size 81 99". They are yours if you send four 2-year Ladies' Home Jour subscriptions or two 2-year S urday Evening Post subscriptio which you sell to persons livi outside your home at the full s scription price. Renewals co the same as new subscriptio (2-year subscriptions L.H. $5.00; 2-year S.E.P. subscr tions, $10.00.)

Write subscribers' names and dresses on plain white paper a mail to address below, toget with your name and address a check or money order for total amount. In return we send you your two percale shee

This offer is good in Continen U. S. only, until September 1950. Your own or your perso gift subscriptions will not cou Sorry, we cannot sell these she

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMP

Box 324, Independence Square, Phila. 5,

Welsh The Original and Only "BOODLE-BUGGY" Ideal for Travel

Save the expense of renting a crib—take your own Travel Bed wherever you go! Use it in the car, on train or 'plane—in tourist camp or hotel! Take your "Boodle-Buggy" everywhere.

AT LEADING STORES

WELSH COMPANY

Largest Manufacturer of Folding Baby Carriages

1535 S. Eighth St. St. Louis 4, Mo.

It's Safer to MARK EVERYTHING You Own

For Camp and Vacation

Protect against loss, identify quickly, personalize distinctively—at home, school, traveling, etc. Insist on Cash's quality.

with Cash's WOVEN NAMES

CASH'S HUGH NEEDHAM

12 Doz. .$3.50
9 Doz. .$3.00
6 Doz. .$2.40
3 Doz. .$1.80

NO-SO Cement 25¢ (to attach without sewing).

Ask your dealer, or write for samples Cash's So. Norwalk 4, Conn.

Your child?

discourage THUMB SUCKING IF PROLONGED AND PERSISTENT

USE THUM TRADE MARK

JUST PAINT ON FINGERTIPS

50c and $1.00

AT LEADING DRUG COUNTERS

NEW METALLIC Christmas Cards

YOU MAKE $37.50 CASH

On Only 50 Boxes

You make 75c on every box of Metal Foil name-imprinted Christmas Cards you sell friends and others. They buy this new sensation on sight . . . Over 50 other Christmas and Everyday assortments. Name-imprinted Christmas cards, 50 for $1, up. FREE Personal Samples. Assortments on approval. Write now.

CHAS. C. SCHWER CO., Dept. 16-K, Westfield, Mass.

Extra Money Time Is Here!

Earn easy dollars in spare time now till Christmas! Take orders from your friends for Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards at 50 for $1 to 25 for $2.50. Generous cash profits. Keep up to 50c on $1 Boxed Christmas Assortments. Choice selection of 100 fast-sellers. Amazing Premium Bonus Plan. Write for Assortments on approval, Imprints FREE.

Sell CREATIVE Christmas Cards

CREATIVE CARD CO.
2505 Carmak Rd., Dept. D-10, Chicago 8, Ill.

Pro·tek·tiv

for children's normal foot growth

Style 5962

Helps keep ankles from turning in because there's a wedge built in the heel.

Curtis, Stephens, Embry Co., Inc., Reading

MODERN AGE and OFFICIAL GIRL SCOUT

PLENTY OF CASH FOR YOU!

Make big spare-time pay! Sell SOUTHERN Christm Cards. Gorgeous Folders low as 50 for $1 WITH NAM IMPRINTED in Brand New Way. Sensation of 195 Sell on sight from FREE SAMPLES. Also show on-approval sample of new "Southern Beauty" 21-Card $1 Assortment. Make $50 CASH PROFIT on 100 Boxes! 40 other fast-sellers including Gift Wraps, Religious, Everyday Boxes. EXTRA CASH BONUS. Don't delay. Write for samples NOW

SOUTHERN GREETING CARD CO.
215 S. Pauline, Dept. E-21, Memphis 4, Tenn.

MAKE MONEY FAST

SELL NOVEL GREETING CARDS

Samples on approval

It's easy! Sell novel Christmas and everyday cards and assorted specialties. No money needed to start. Write for samples and free Selling Plan today to Dept. LJ.

BIG PROFITS

PERSONAL G'T'S CARDS, INC., 1170 B'way, N. Y. 1

MATERNITY DRESSES

Dressies & suits for morning, street, afternoon, or sports, $2.95 to 22.50. Also maternity corsets & lingerie. Catalog mailed in plain envelope.

CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A 720 Balt., Kansas City

He is well and brimming with energy, but mothers should guard their children against overexertion during the summer "polio months."

Protecting Your Child From Polio

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

he season approaches when the occurnce of poliomyelitis increases in some mmunities and mothers naturally come apprehensive, I am asked hunof questions:

all I keep Jimmy home from the ound and from the movies?" . . . "Is ing dangerous?" . . . "May we have over to play?" In short, "How can ect my child against getting polio?" se questions are natural and proper. to reply, however, that it is impossigive answers that will be right for all en in all places, for much depends the situation in your own locality.

For instance, if no polio has been reported near you, there is no sense in restricting your child with regard to ordinary play and amusements. But if there is an epidemic, the case may be quite different.

This does not mean, though, that there is nothing you can do to safeguard your family during the "polio months"—July, August and September—whether cases have shown up in your vicinity or not. There are several rules which I would like to emphasize strongly to all mothers for careful observance during the next three months.

The first is cleanliness. Take special pains, in particular, to see that your children wash their hands before eating. Do everything you can to get rid of flies and other insects. It has not been established that flies disseminate polio, but neither has it been established that they do not. Ridding your home and neighborhood of flies is an excellent health measure, and may have some effect upon polio.

Second, be watchful to prevent fatigue on your children's part, or chilling. Guard against all forms of overexertion in these danger months. Allow no swimming in very cold water, especially when a youngster is overheated.

Third, if symptoms of a cold, nausea, fever, stiffness or muscle soreness appear, call the doctor at once. Do not take a child with these symptoms to the doctor's office—if it is polio, you would thus endanger others—but ask the doctor to come to the house. An examination will usually tell quickly whether or not polio virus is present, and cases caught early are frequently cured with no bad effects whatsoever.

It is when an epidemic threatens that the time has come to think of further pro-

RATEFUL young mothers from aine to California tell us that octor Bundesen's baby booklets ve been of the greatest help to em in caring for their own babies. he first eight booklets cover your by's first eight months. They sell r 50 cents. The second series of oklets covers the baby's health om nine months to two years—ven booklets for 50 cents. A mplete book on the care of the by, a necessary supplement to e monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, o. 1345, is 50 cents. A booklet breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S RST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 46, sells for 6 cents. Information prenatal care is given in BEFORE E BABY COMES, No. 2383, which priced at 50 cents. Address all quests to the Reference Library, ADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelia 5, Pennsylvania.

Are You a Quiz Kid on babies?

1. What can a new baby do that a 6-month-old baby can't?

A newborn can grasp your finger strongly enough to support his weight—an older baby can't. But don't let proud Daddy wake him up to do it; Baby needs his sleep. And to help prevent skin irritations that disturb sleep, apply pure, soothing Johnson's Baby Oil, after his bath and at every diaper change.

2. Should a baby go without clothes in hot weather?

Many babies are dressed too warmly on hot days, doctors observe. A diaper and sleeveless shirt are often enough—and sometimes Baby feels less prickly without the shirt. For another routine that helps end chafes and prickles . . . give silky sprinklings of Johnson's Baby Powder after frequent cooling baths.

3. May older brother or sister play with the baby?

Let brothers and sisters "help take care" of the baby, say the psychologists. Jealousy is forgotten when children can stand by importantly, handing Mother the Johnson's Baby Oil or Powder, and watching for Baby's smile when he feels that comforting, satiny smoothness on his tender skin.

20 YEARS ahead of its time!

✓ NO OTHER FREEZING SYSTEM is so efficient, so modern as the Jet Freeze in new Servel Gas refrigerators. The secret? Just one tiny jet of Gas flame! It does the whole job . . . turns heat into cold directly . . . without motors or a single moving part!

✓ CHANGES WITH THE FAMILY! Servel's exclusive new interior shifts in 90 seconds from extra space for children's milk to extra shelves for party fixings. Classic simplicity of new "Long Life" design outside matches Servel's longer-lasting service inside!

CONSTANT—SILENT—COLD! No on-and-off noise! No up-and-down cold! Jet Freeze is a never-ending cycle. Gives you continuous healthful cold from the top of the frozen food compartment to the bottom of Servel's Special dew-action fresheners!

CONSTANT—LASTING—ECONOMY! No moving parts in the freezing system to wear down or grow noisy. That's why Servel—and only Servel—operates just as efficiently after 20 years as on the day it's installed. Buy yours at your Gas company or neighborhood dealer's, today!

Operates with the same high efficiency even after JET 20 YEARS

tective measures. Only the doctors and public-health authorities in your community are in a position to judge when that time has arrived. Usually they issue public warnings and instructions for mothers, who should also feel free to call upon their own doctors for advice when they have any doubt as to what to do. Your doctor would rather answer questions of this kind than have to treat youngsters afflicted with polio. Close touch with your own physician where there is an epidemic, or a threatened one, is the best protection we now know against this disease.

It is also advisable to avoid crowds. Health authorities will decide whether or not to keep open schools, movies and playgrounds, but it is your job to keep your children off crowded busses, trains, beaches and other places where they will mix with strangers, if there is any polio about. As for play with neighborhood children, ask your doctor about this. He will advise you from his knowledge of local conditions.

All the foregoing measures are accepted generally by health authorities and concurred in by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. However, on one of the questions that come up most frequently, not all authorities are in agreement. That is the familiar one as to whether or not it is wise to have a child's tonsils and adenoids removed during the summer months, when polio is most likely to occur. Many mothers have been warned that this is dangerous and wonder whether or not the operation would actually increase the chances that the child will get polio.

Since we have made a special study of this subject in our own Chicago Health Department, our opinions may be helpful to mothers everywhere. After reviewing our records as well as all the evidence in the medical literature, our doctors and other experts on the subject have concluded there is no proof that children who have had recent tonsillectomies are more likely to get poliomyelitis than those who have not. However, the studies that have been made do point to one significant fact: among children who get polio, those who have had tonsillectomies within the past few weeks are twice as likely to get the deadly bulbar type that affects the throat and the upper respiratory area. As most mothers know, children with bulbar polio are in much greater danger than those with other forms of the disease. The fact that a polio epidemic may strike quickly and without forewarning during the months from July to October might thus expose to this added hazard the children who had been operated on within recent weeks, at a time when no apparent danger of polio existed.

What does all this add up to? Is the danger great enough to rule out tonsillectomies altogether during the summer months, even in areas where the incidence of polio is only normal?

A few years ago, when evidence of a connection between tonsillectomy and polio was first appearing and looked even more damaging than it does today, this was thought to be so. In Chicago, for example, we suggested that hospitals might aid in against polio by discontinuing all tomies and adenoidectomies du "polio season," and that all but necessary tooth extractions be avoi

Later, however, additional evide to believe that the situation was n gerous as it had at first appeared. I what our policy should be, we ha into consideration the fact that some reasons favoring tonsillect summertime. In the first place, t time of year when there are the fe and other infections of the nose a making it the safest time for opera that important standpoint. In mos our country, too, the climate is suc child is usually at his peak of gene robustness and resistance to infec other indication in favor of "sum gery." Finally, the very practical schooltime must be considered; du mer vacation the period covering and convalescence does not mean from study and other school acti important consideration, as every a school-age child knows.

How can mothers interpret all t ingly contradictory facts and indic decide what is best for the childre

The answer we have arrived at i suggests that here again, the prob be decided on the basis of the need. "Unless required as therape gencies, tonsillectomies or othe throat operations or any operative on the mouth, nose or throat had be done in the presence of an incre dence of poliomyelitis in the comm what we tell hospitals and doctors about our Health Department poli This means that the individual do talk over each case with parents, out the possible dangers involved i ation and taking into consider child's condition.

Unless the tonsils and adenoids enlarged so as to make breathing an ing difficult, I don't believe that remo sils and adenoids should be consider peutic emergency. If any poliomyel curred in the community I would r postponing tonsillectomy until later when new cases of polio have stopp ing.

If, in the opinion of the family d child's tonsils cause suffering or general health, then I would ap decision to operate at any time ex new cases of polio are emergin enough to make avoidance of expo disease uncertain.

In such cases, mothers should cially alert in observing the rules earlier in this article for avoiding and for reporting danger signals t tor immediately.

By following these rules and touch with the doctor when any occur, mothers need have no gre the safety of their children as an season approaches.

THE LITTLE PRINCESSES

(Continued from Page 44)

moving and appealing." Those words might have been written of Lilibet.

It was clear she was not happy about the South African trip. She would have liked to have matters fixed, and to be properly engaged before she went away, I know. Four months is a long, long time to a girl in love. Prince Philip was not in London at this time, but he rang her up every evening. She would grow restless as the hour they arranged came near. Then she would say to me, "Someone is going to phone me, Crawfie. I must go."

He came to the palace still. Sometimes they would walk in the gardens together. Often he was one of a theater or dancing party at which other young people, and usually Margaret, would also be present. They had very little time alone. I often felt that very few young people, in love as they two were, would have behaved with such self-control and discretion as they d time.

Prince Philip must have spoken ings to the King and Queen, and they had told him that they felt i best if they did not see each other There was to be nothing definit until after the South African visit Margaret's life held no complic was still only a schoolgirl, but wa put her books away for a time a world, and she was wildly excite never been out of the British Is were new clothes to buy, a thing greatly enjoyed. Both Princesses pon allocation for this trip, tho by no means a lavish one.

This was the first occasion on w garet was given some real latit choice of her outfit, and a very g of it. The pink wool coat that was far and wide by teen-agers of all was her own choice, as was the smart at with its two jaunty feathers.

e wardrobes were essential on this ecause of the different climates they move in, one day cold, the next few very hot. The official evening dresses ook with them were really beautiful. e frocks they were mostly, with wide and the lovely embroideries at which artnell excels. They also had two very nautical outfits for wear on the Van- with brass buttons and round sailor came the maps of Africa, and we went er over the whole ground they were to and read up on all the places they visit. A special very beautiful train, The White Train, was to be their uarters while they were in Africa. It rranged something like the Royal n England, but more elaborately.

royal family were to sail from Ports- on February 1, 1947. At one time had been the idea I might accompany and I longed to go. My own romance, stponed, depressed me, and I thought ge would be wonderful. No one quite until the last possible moment just who be chosen to go, and there were many earchings and false hopes.

nzied ladies in waiting often came to om in those days to see if I knew any f what was in Their Majesties' minds hey did. "No one knows what to do, e. Whoever is finally chosen won't time to get their clothes. The King ueen don't realize fficult it is."

ssmakers in those were harried, short- d, coupon-conscious fficult. The ladies in g finally chosen to d great difficulty in g their clothes to- , just as they feared. also needed consider- ardrobes because of riety of climates.

King and Queen, about a month be- ey left, came up to the schoolroom and scussed various matters to do with aret, and both said they had been very d with the progress she had made. think we both realize that this break in e is perhaps a pity," said the Queen, t seemed too bad to separate the fam- t now."

s was the first and only intimation I ad that Their Majesties had faced the at a final break was coming.

one time we thought of taking you s, Crawfie. But Margaret would have time for lessons, and we have decided ust have a well-earned rest while we ay."

o you think, ma'am," I asked, "that ps the time has come to make a break ther? Margaret is growing up. On her from this trip I do not feel she will o schoolroom routine easily again."

awfie, don't suggest such a thing! Of she must go back to her lessons." The looked horrified.

y own mind I thought Her Majesty ot relish the thought of having to deal with what might prove to be a spoiled isorganized young girl when the party ck. I believe at that time I did not en- relish the prospect myself. Margaret lways had so much more of her own and so much more freedom than her In my own mind I had come to the sion that this very grown-up trip be the last straw. She was always l and headstrong. When she comes back ll this, I thought, she will not settle down. as wrong. Margaret's character is like l-cut diamond. It has facets in every ion which reflect all kinds of light.

eryone assembles in the Bow Room in alace when the family is going on a ey. Relations see them off from railway n or quayside.

The Bow Room is a very large state apartment on the ground floor. It has a big bow window that gives onto wide steps leading to the gardens. It was remodeled in 1844 and is done up now in red and gold.

The King and Queen came in, wearing their traveling clothes. The King had on his naval uniform and looked, I thought then, desperately tired. The Queen looked very sweet and pretty in her favorite blue. Lilibet was sad. We all thought she was loath to leave England. Margaret, very grown up in her pink coat and gay hat with its little feathers, hugged me hard.

"Write often, Crawfie," she said. "We look to you for news of the dogs and horses."

At the doorway she turned again for a moment and gave me a little look and a wave. I was very surprised to see there were tears in her eyes.

How empty and still it was when the cheers from the waiting crowds outside the palace gates had died away and they were gone!

Sir Harold Campbell and I were the only people left in that part of the palace. We both felt very sad. He too would have liked to go with them. He was utterly devoted to Lilibet, and bothered about all that had come and gone. He paced the floor, his hair ruffled, his hands behind his back.

"If they are to become engaged, it is a pity it could not have been announced before they sailed," he said. "I disliked seeing that dear child go away unhappy."

I have wondered since whether the King and Queen thought that maybe a trip abroad and the new sights and adventures to be found there, would make Lilibet forget what was, after all, her first love affair. She was so very young. Other parents have staked everything on the foreign journey and the long separation, often with some measure of success. They had nothing against Philip; indeed, they had always liked him, though whether or not he would have been the husband of their choice for Lilibet is a different matter. But they wanted her to be quite sure.

I am sure that nothing has such a decisive influence upon a man's course as his personal appearance, and not so much his appearance as his belief in its attractiveness or unattractiveness.

—LEO TOLSTOY.

There never had been any doubt in my mind. I knew she would not change. Where Lilibet gives her love and affection, she gives it once and for all.

She wrote him constantly. Her letters were sent back to him in the royal mailbag. No obstacles were ever put in her way. She had Philip's photograph with her on her dressing table or bureau throughout the whole trip. When her lady in waiting asked her once whether or not there was any truth in the stories that went around of a probable engagement, Lilibet told her to "wait and see."

A picture of them all on the Vanguard leaving England on February first shows the King and Queen looking pleased at the prospect of two weeks' rest at sea. Margaret, obviously very gay and excited, is beside them. Lilibet is standing at the ship's rail looking back sadly toward England.

About three weeks after they had left, there descended on England a winter we shall none of us forget. Everything froze. Temperatures were lower than in the memory of any living man. Roads became impassable with snow, and later icebound. Plumbing went out of action for weeks on end; water sources froze solid. To increase the general misery the fuel crisis, when the coal supply gave out, cut down still further our chances of keeping warm, or even for long spells every day doing any cooking. The wireless would issue its hateful message every morning, "There will be a fuel cut between the hours of -- and —" after which all current would be cut off.

I remember writing to Margaret and telling her I had cut my face on an icicle which had formed on my sheet in bed from my own breath. Food, never good since the war, became alarmingly worse. The cold weather

Hi-C

The WHOLESOME Family Drink:

Its refreshing Fresh Orange Tang makes you Glad you're Thirsty!

Drink all you want

. . . it's enriched with Vitamin C

These summer days . . . keep plenty of delicious Hi-C in your refrigerator. Children love its fresh orange tang. Grownups love it, too.

So Delicious...So Wholesome. And no wonder. Hi-C is made from juicy, tree-ripened oranges. It's enriched with Vitamin C and dextrose. One 8-oz. glass gives you 30 milligrams of Vitamin C—daily minimum requirement for an adult.

Just chill and pour . . . Hi-C is a ready-to-serve drink. Always ready for the picnic basket . . . for guests who drop in . . . for summer's many "thirsty" moments. Best of all, you can let the whole family (even the youngest of them) drink all they want. Hi-C is not carbonated.

Your Grocer has Hi-C—the original orangeade in handy cans, in two sizes: a big, economical 46-oz. can, serving 8 or more . . . a 12-oz. can, just right for two. Better buy Hi-C by the case—or you'll wish you had.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Hi-C

Non Carbonated...
Ready to Serve...
Economical!
(96 big glasses per case!)

Another Clinton Foods Product . . . Packers of Famous Snow Crop

Golden Corn glorified with...

that fresh sweet taste of DELRICH

What a flavor feast! The delicious taste of Delrich on garden-fresh corn! Two gloriously good flavors that blend to perfection... make even little appetites big! Do try Delrich... on every vegetable... as a rich, smooth spread... and in all your baking, too. In states where colored margarine is not available, enjoy Delrich in the famous, original E-Z Color Pak. Always delightfully fresh and delicious.

OUR 60th YEAR 1890-1950 CUDAHY Plus Flavor VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

Golden Yellow QUARTERS

- New foil wrapper!
- Parchment inner lining!

TASTE PROTECTED!

© THE CUDAHY PACKING CO., OMAHA, NEBR., 1950

stopped hens laying, food ships were held up in dock, and lorries could not get along roads. The country shops emptied because no one could get supplies to them. Trains did not run, or took several days on the way. In the worst of the blitz we had never had to endure anything like the discomfort and cold of those February and March days.

I was in Scotland at this time. Here things were even worse than in England. I wanted to go to Edinburgh to do some shopping. The journey normally took three quarters of an hour. But on this day the points on the railway had frozen, and the train stood on the Forth Bridge for two hours, unable to move. Down below, the Forth looked extremely uninviting, with ice forming on the water. The skies hung over us like a chill gray tent, and one got to the pitch of almost feeling the thaw would never come and the Ice Age had commenced.

I KEPT my promise and wrote regularly and fully to the Princesses. I gave them accounts of our somewhat macabre existence and the life we were leading. I sent them copies of the Aberdeen papers with pictures of sheep frozen stiff in the fields close to Birkhall.

The letters I got back were a great pleasure to me. They were also a wonderful picture of the different make-up of the two sisters. Margaret wrote with her usual gaiety, all about the fun they were having, how beautiful The White Train, which they used for their journey over Africa, was, how warm the sun, how wonderful the food.

"Nobody but you has written us," she said plaintively. "Papa has just written to Ulick to tell him to write at once and let us know how the horses are."

Lilibet wrote, immensely distressed by all that was going on in England in the bitter weather. It bothered her to feel she was far away having a good time, in a land so full of everything. She felt she ought to be at home.

Here is one of her letters:

H.M.S. Vanguard

15th Feb. 1947

Dear Crawfie: I thought I must write you just one line to let you know how we're getting on.

. . The first two days we went through a pretty bad time, and I for one would willingly have died, I was so miserable. I wasn't actually seasick but everything hurtled about so much, I found my eyes gave out, and it was exhausting trying to keep one's feet! However, as soon as I could stand upright without too much effort, I was perfectly all right and now with the sun and the lack of anything in particular to do, we all feel much better.

. . . The officers are charming and we have had great fun with them—I believe there are very few nasty Naval officers, as they would not be tolerated by the others in such close quarters. There are one or two real smashers, and I bet you'd have a WONDERFUL time if you were here—especially as there are three delightful Scottish subs!

. . . We hear terrible things about the weather and the fuel back at home. While we are scorching in the tropics, it makes it difficult for us to imagine exactly what is going on, and yet sometimes we feel (I say we but I really mean I) rather guilty to be right away from it all and that we should be enjoying ourselves so much.

. . . My heart rather sinks when I think of what is ahead of us we received the programmes by air today, and it is absolutely staggering how much they expect us to do and go on doing for so long at a stretch. I hope we shall survive, that's all!

Even after a fortnight I miss all the familiar things, and I should think we shall begin to long to be home again quite soon.

Do write to us—it's lovely to hear news from home 14 days without it is a long time so we've got to make up for it. I'll write again when I get the chance.

With love from

Lilibet

They sent me copies of the Cape Town Argus every day while they were away, so that I was able to keep in touch with

It was while the family were away o South African trip that my own affairs again filled my horizon, and I decided the time had come when I could, in all ness to the King and Queen, and the cesses, arrange for my own marriage to place as soon as the royal family retu from South Africa.

I did not quite know how I was to b this news to the King and Queen, who, well aware, relied on me to take char Margaret on their return.

I determined to confide in Queen M and to ask her advice. So I wrote and her of my decision, and the day before family were to get back I went to te Marlborough House. I was shown into garden with its neat lawn and pretty, kept flower beds. I made my deep curtsy kissed the Queen's hand. She then raised and kissed me on both cheeks.

"Come now, Crawfie, sit down and tel all about it," said Queen Mary in her way, meantime spearing for me a muffin small silver fork. Her Majesty never tou any food with her fingers.

I told her I was very well, and that I come to ask her advice, as I wanted to married. Queen Mary's first reaction w typical one. "My dear child. You can't l them!" she said, shocked.

I then told her the whole story, how I shelved the matter during the war y feeling it was my duty then to stay. E said surely the time had come when I n look for a life of my own.

"Princess Margaret is growing up fast now," I pointed out, "and I think w know in our own minds that it will no very long before Princess Elizabeth r ries."

"You think so? You think Lilibet marry him? I know nothing. No one has me. He seems a good boy, I think. Tell Crawfie, you who know her so well, wou be a success?"

I told her I thought they were very de in love, and that for the Princess there w never be any other man she would feel same for.

The old Queen sighed. "Well. We n wait and see, and hope for the best," she s She had lost her own eldest son throug love affair, and I think perhaps it had d lusioned her a little with romances of kind. Later she was to become very fon Philip.

As to my personal problem, Her Maj advised me to speak to the Queen when royal family got back, and see what he actions were.

"But," added Queen Mary, "I don't how they could manage without you. I d think they could spare you just now."

THERE is no doubt whatever that the can trip was a very great strain on the w family. For Lilibet it had been a long anxious separation from the man she lo It was four months since she had seen Ph For the King and Queen it was a great of journeying and exhausting work con on top of the strain of the war years, and Margaret it was a trip I considered her ther old enough nor strong enough to un take at that time. It had been too much all of them.

From Princess Elizabeth's lady in wait who was my dear friend Lady Marg Egerton, I learned that during the trip whole family were often quite ill. Someti Margaret would be so exhausted that would fall fast asleep when some appeara was due.

I shall never forget the shock I had w we all assembled at Buckingham Palace a to welcome them on their return. It wa exciting moment, watching them get ou the cars. We were all in the Grand Hal meet them. I had their pet dogs, who, after manner of dogs, seemed to have sensed e that morning that something was afoot.

I was horrified to see how thin Lilibet gone. She had also lost all her pretty c and looked pale and drawn. But she of a them had a sort of inner radiance, doubt ons of her own. The lady in waiting that as the Vanguard steamed into she had danced a little jig of sheer de- being home again.

King and Queen looked positively ıt. I thought at first the King's hair ıe quite gray in his four months' ab- ater I saw it was just bleached by the . Margaret looked ill and tired out. ked the worst of them all, and I was very anxious about her.

gay they all were, and how happy to . The two Princesses hugged me and ne, and everyone seemed to be talk- nce. There was so much to tell, so ings to show me. The diamond com- of South Africa had given both the ses some very fine diamonds, and et had already made little sketches hers would be made up and what she lo with the two large diamonds left m a bracelet which was too large for e was a pile of letters waiting for Lili- l she soon went off to her own room them and, I've no doubt, to telephone p. He did not appear at all at the re- ebrations. But later he came to din- small sports car was again to be seen tly at the side entrance. The old rou- an. Surely, we all thought, something arranged now.

not only on Lilibet's account that I hose days worked up and excited. I own problem. Presently I sent a note the Queen asking her if she would n a very urgent and important mat- personal nature.

t to Her Majesty's sitting room with graph of my husband-to-be under my nade my usual deep curtsy, and then ed the photograph to the Queen.

s, ma'am," I said, "is the urgent per- atter I have come to see you about." Queen took the photograph from me. obviously very surprised and some- sconcerted. She asked me his name, old her that it was George Buthlay t he came from Aberdeen.

tood for a long time saying nothing er. I broke this uncomfortable silence y and told her how at the start of the ad wanted very much to marry, and done so because I felt I had a duty to Majesties, and considered it would be f me to leave the Princesses when they most needed me. But now, I said, the time had come when I wanted a life of my own.

The Queen said gently, "Why, Crawfie, that was a great sacrifice you made. Does this mean you are going to leave us?" the Queen asked me. "You must see, Crawfie, that it would not be at all convenient just now. A change at this stage for Margaret is not at all desirable."

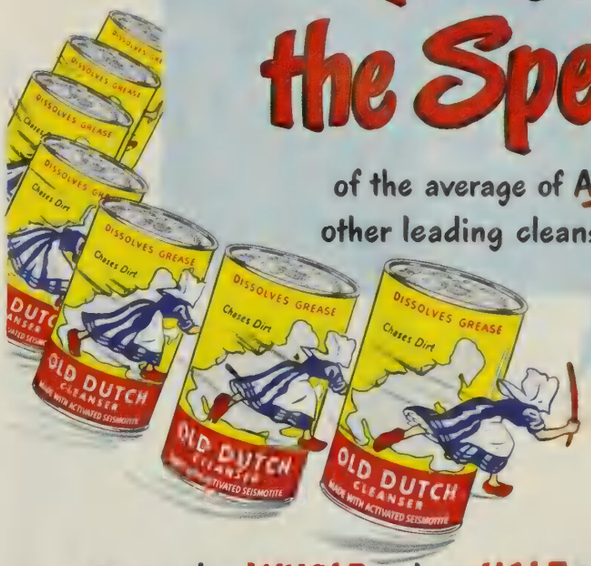
I assured the Queen that the last thing George and I wanted to do was upset Their Majesties' plans in any way, and that for the time being I would be prepared to carry on with my work and live at the palace for as long as they wished me to, even after I was married.

"After all, ma'am, it will not be for so very much longer that I shall be required here," I said. I waited, hoping perhaps the Queen would confide in me then what their intentions were for Lilibet, but she said nothing further, and I curtsied and withdrew.

I HAD expected to get Margaret back a very cross, spoiled and disorganized young person after all her travels and the compliments and grown-up treatment she had had, which had been more than sufficient to turn the head of any teen-age girl.

I was entirely wrong. She was as good as gold. I really think she was quite glad to get back to her peaceful schoolroom life for a little while, anyway. She arrived for lessons wearing as usual a very simple wool frock, carrying the same pencil box she had used as a small child. It was always full of very small pencils pared right down to the stub. This was a form of economy both the girls practiced, which had always amused me a lot. They used their erasers in the same way, down to the last rub. Obediently, Margaret settled down to her books again, for all the world as if she had never been away.

I now concentrated on getting her finished. We did a lot of history and literature and general reading, and concentrated more than before on poetry and modern plays. At one time I tried to arrange for Margaret to go to Sir Henry Marten for advanced history, as her sister had done. Nothing came of this scheme, however. For one thing, Sir Henry was far from well. For another, Margaret's social life became more and more demanding.



At last things were moving. Suddenly that look of strain we had all been conscious of

JENNIFER

"You know what? We've got company—I can hear mommy laughing at daddy's jokes!"

Activated Seismotite
(PATENTED PROCESS)
Gives Famous Old Dutch Cleanser
Twice the Speed
of the average of ALL other leading cleansers*

Does the WHOLE job in HALF the time!

*Famous independent laboratory proves Old Dutch gives you Twice the Speed
of the average of ALL other leading cleansers

LOOK AT THE RECORD:

Cleanser	Cleaning Efficiency
OLD DUTCH	100%
CLEANSER A	58.3%	Average 49.8%
CLEANSER B	50.0%
CLEANSER C	48.5%
CLEANSER D	42.5%

SEVEN TIMES MORE GREASE-REMOVING ACTION
Your sink and tub . . . even your greasiest roasters and broilers come shining clean faster than ever before! Amazing new grease-dissolver in Old Dutch cuts stubborn grease on contact!

ELEVEN TIMES BUSIER SUDSING ACTION
See your pots, pans and porcelain gleam as rich, thick Old Dutch suds, filled with Activated Seismotite, absorb sticky grease, dirt and stains . . . float them all away.

No other cleanser gives you this cleaning action—because no other cleanser is made with ACTIVATED SEISMOTITE

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

© THE CUDAHY PACKING CO., CHICAGO, 1950

EASIER FOR YOU
WHEN YOUR HOME HAS
R·O·W Removable Windows

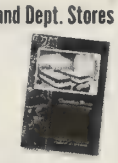
NOW—You can wash or paint both sides of your windows indoors. With R•O•Ws, each sash is easily removed by pressing to the left against the spring-cushioned sash guide. It's now the world's largest selling wood window, yet R•O•W WINDOWS COST NO MORE THAN ORDINARY GOOD WOOD WINDOWS!

Make sure your new home has the convenience of R•O•W Removable Wood Windows. Ask your builder or lumber dealer or write for free literature to:

R•O•W SALES CO.
1398 Academy Ave.
Ferndale 20, Michigan

SPRING CUSHION R·O·W Wood WINDOW UNITS

Removable Opens Easily Weatherstripped



The Key to HOLLYWOOD BEDROOMS

Look what's under the bed... you'll see a Harvard Frame, the best method of making a Hollywood Bed. A complete, sturdily constructed self-supporting unit—specially designed for Hollywood Beds. Fits any coil or box spring and mattress—may be used with or without a headboard—equipped with casters. All sizes available.

HARVARD FRAMES at all Furniture and Dept. Stores

Decorating Magic
A 20 page illustrated booklet—a guide to modern bedroom design. SEND 10¢ IN COIN FOR YOUR COPY.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ASK FOR THE HARVARD FRAME—LOOK FOR THE HARVARD TAG—YOUR ASSURANCE OF QUALITY

Harvard OF CLEVELAND
6201 Woodland Dept. 44 Cleveland, Ohio

NEW APEX INSECT BOMB
KILLS

FLIES, MOSQUITOS, ANTS, ROACHES, BED BUGS, MOTHS, ETC.
Just spray — it works magic in your home
At your drug counter or department store
$1.69
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
APEX INSECT BOMB

LOOK FOR THIS SEAL OF SATISFACTION
INNER Rymland SPRING
IN FINE BEDDING AND FURNITURE

SALT FLOWS FREELY in dampest weather with these AMAZING AIRKO* SHAKERS

Patented Airkonite "wonder" element in the gleaming chromium top keeps salt dry and free-flowing in all weather. Lovely design . . . sparkling crystal glass . . . hand-cut satin-finish base. Four inches tall. At dealers or order direct. Only $1.00 a pair plus 10¢ postage.
10-day money-back guarantee
*TRADE MARK
AIRKO MFG. CO. Dept. LJ2, Clermont, Fla.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS
50 for $1
With Name
FREE Samples
MAKE Extra MONEY FAST
SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC
Show rich New Cards never before offered . . . Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches and Stationery. Gift Items. Samples on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!
PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 013-J, St. Louis 3, Mo.

FREE COLORFUL CHRISTMAS GIFT CARDS
50 for $1 Christmas Cards WITH NAME
32-page CATALOG of 100 BEST SELLING
Christmas Cards and Gift items. It's all yours. Just send us your name and address for our 1950 deluxe assortment on approval. Make up to 100% profit. It's fun, easy. Write NOW!
FANMOUR Corp., 200 Fifth Avenue, Dept. L-7, N.Y.C. 10, N.Y.
SPECIAL FUND RAISING PLAN FOR ORGANIZATIONS

disappeared from Lilibet's eyes. One day she poked her head into my room looking absolutely radiant.

"Crawfie," she said, "something is going to happen at last!"

"It's about time," was all I could say, and there was a big lump in my throat.

"He's coming tonight," she said, and then she kissed me and danced away.

Next morning was Wednesday, July ninth. Lilibet came to my room much earlier than usual. I have never seen her look lovelier than she did on that day, not even on her wedding morning. She wore a deep yellow frock, a shade that has always suited her very well. She closed the door behind her and held out her left hand.

Her engagement ring sparkled there. It was a large square diamond with smaller diamonds either side. At that time it was too large for her, and it had to go back to be made smaller. It was a ring they had chosen together secretly, but of course she had been unable to go and try it on.

That was a happy day for all of us. The morning papers announced in a Court Circular that the King had been graciously pleased to give his assent to the betrothal of his beloved daughter to Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten. Philip's naturalization papers had come through, and he had dropped his title of Prince. He was a junior officer now in the British Royal Navy, and had taken the family name of his uncle, Lord Louis Mountbatten, who had been his guardian most of his life and had given him the only home he had ever known.

The romance did something wonderful to the palace. All of a sudden the gloomy corridors seemed lighter. Everyone was immensely excited and pleased, for the tall, rather unconventional young man who had been around for some time had made many friends for himself. He appeared presently, looking very handsome and happy. I congratulated him and said how very glad I was that everything had come right for them at last.

He looked down at me and smiled. "I'm so proud of her, Crawfie."

"Sir, you have good reason to be. And who should know that better than I?" I replied.

Photographers as usual filled the horizon for a while. All question of lessons was shelved for the next few days. Margaret was sweet, happy in her sister's happiness as if it had been her own. She was growing out of her onetime objection to Lilibet's doing anything she could not do, or having a train longer than hers. The air was full of wedding talk and planning, which for me had a personal note. And Queen Mary, too, as usual, was thinking ahead, as evidenced by these letters to me:

July 8th 1947

From Queen Mary
Marlborough House
S.W.1

You were talking to me on Sunday about Alah's having put away such a number of the Princesses' things, gifts given on vario sions, would it not be a good idea for see what Pss. E. has been given in t years of cushions, covers and oddmen have always seen lots of these kind of t the birthday and Xmas tables, and whe setting up house all these things come useful.

With regard to good and nice toy have been kept I feel that some of these be kept for future use as in these days that is made in this way equals what w in the past, besides being a prohibitiv Then I think a few toys which both Pr have played with ought to be kept as so as I was always being asked to lend som children's toys for exhibitions just out c est. I hope you will not mind my sugg and of course this needs no reply. We learn the great news on Thursday.

July 16

From Queen Mary,
Marlborough House
S.W.1

I have thought of two more things of P You will remember that at your sugge gave her a charming pink leather blotter her writing table. I saw it once either Palace or at Windsor but never again, ought to be looked for, also for the love green leather autograph book with crown which my household gave her 18th birthday. Unfortunately Pss. E. take it to S. Africa when she ought to h lected many interesting autographs, and say I think the young couple look very I trust all will be well.

I had now decided my own marriage take place quietly during my next Scotland. I said nothing to the K Queen about this. It seemed to me th already enough on their hands. Both and I had already decided we wished married without any fuss.

Some weeks later, in September, the was at Holyrood House in Scotlan Margaret, and I was at home in Dunfe on my usual holiday. She telegraphed come to tea with her. I went wearing gagement ring for the first time. This b the subject up at once. It was no long sible to ignore the problem, or push i in the background for that future co ation which so often never took place

No one could have been kinder th Majesty. The Queen kissed me and me great happiness, but added, "I d you won't think of leaving us just ye going to be such a busy time."

Once again I made my promise would remain as long as I was needed, I realized this meant postponing still the real start of my married life or ma home of my own.

We then had tea. Later Margaret flu arms around my neck and said, "I am that you are going to stay near me, Cra

When Ainslee, handsome and cor ever, came in with the tea, the Queen

Other views, sizes and prices of Vogue Patterns on Page

Vogue Design No. 2580. Suit, 6 to 14. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 2549. One-piece dress, 2 to 8. 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2540. One-piece dress, 2 to 8. 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2548. "Easy-to-Make" housecoat, 4 to 10. 35c.
Vogue Design No. 6798. "Easy-to-Make" housecoat or brunchcoat; 12 to 2 30 to 38. 60c.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3338. One-piece dress; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. 60c.
Vogue Design No. S-4097. Suit, 12 to 18, 30 to 36. $1.00.
Junior Vogue Design No. 3349. Two-piece dress and dickey; 9 to 15, 29½ to 33. 75c.

2580 2549 2540 2548 6798 3338 S-4097 3349

him, "What do you think, Ainslie? Miss Crawford is also going to be married."

Ainslie congratulated me in his courtly way. I have often thought what a wonderful Archbishop of Canterbury he would have made had he applied his talents in other directions. He departed. When I went out to go home I found he had collected all his staff in the hall, where they stood lined up to congratulate me in their turn before I left.

George and I were married very quietly on September 16, 1947, by the Reverend Robert Dollar, B. D., in Dunfermline Abbey. We spent our honeymoon in Aberdeen. None of the royal family were invited to be present, but I had messages and telegrams from them all; in particular one from Margaret (reproduced on Page 42).

Later several wedding presents arrived. Queen Mary sent me a complete and very beautiful dinner service, the Princess Royal gave me a visitors' book. Princess Margaret, three bedside lamps, and Lilibet a coffee set.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hurdy-Gurdy Song

By Fleur Conkling

Now is the time when the jingle of music
Wakens the shadows on sun-spattered street.
Now is the time for the chorale of children,
Pennies in small hands and skylarking feet.

Quick-eyed and eager, the genie of pleasure
Grinds out old melodies years can't destroy;
Taps a worn shoe to vociferate measure;
Urges the monkey his wiles to employ.

Windows fly open, and window-box flowers
Dance in the gay wind to rhapsodic beat.
Now is the time for hilarious revel
When children and blossoms and hand organ meet.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Margaret now came to the front much more. As soon as Lilibet was married, she would take her place as the Princess in the palace. Among her first grown-up duties was the launching of a ship, all on her own. She went to Ireland alone, except for a lady in waiting to look after her. One charming incident there was peculiarly Margaret. She was presented with a bouquet of red roses by a hot and blushing young sailor. And she smiled at him in a way that I am sure must have made his heart beat faster, and pulled a rose from her bouquet and gave it to him for his own.

It was the sort of endearing human thing that my little Duchess would have done years back when I first knew her. So many of Margaret's more charming ways are inherited from her mother.

This Ireland trip came as a blessing to George and me, still on our honeymoon in Scotland. It gave us a few more days together. Then I had to return south. We had a rather sad little farewell as I left on the night train. We did not know how long our separation was to be.

I arrived back at the palace to find Lilibet's wedding preparations under way. The place seemed to be knee-deep in tissue paper. Mr. Hartnell and his ladies were forever trooping up the stairs or hurrying down them, or waiting about disconsolately, drooping in anteroom or passage, where Bobo sometimes revived them with cups of tea.

THEY who minister to royalty do a lot of waiting about. I often wondered what the rest of Mr. Hartnell's clientele did in those days of the autumn collection.

Lilibet was very happy now, and happiness, as it so often does, had transfigured her. She was sweet and thoughtful of me, happy and thrilled that I had got married first. I remember how she came laughing into my room one day and I showed her an American newspaper which someone had sent me. GOVERNESS BEATS LIZ TO THE ALTAR, said the headlines.

We got a lot of amusement out of that. No one has ever given the Princess that particular nickname, as it happens, although Margaret sometimes in the bosom of the family has called her Lil.

Lilibet was immensely touched by the way her romance seemed to appeal to the world in general. Letters and telegrams came from every kind of place and person. Girls wrote her that they planned to marry on the same day. Sailors who had served with Philip wrote her from ships at sea. She would bring a sheaf of these messages to show me, touched almost to tears. I think it was the first time she realized how many people loved her who had never seen her, and just what it was she stood for.

WEDDING presents poured in. One day Lilibet asked me, "Crawfie, what have you done with George all this time?"

I told her George was in Scotland still, unable to make any plans until we knew what was to happen to me.

"But Crawfie, he must come to my wedding," Lilibet said, and promptly saw to it that George had an invitation. So he came south. We could meet but little in those busy days, but occasionally he came to the palace to see me.

Princess Elizabeth asked me to bring George to my rooms at the palace, in order that she and Princess Margaret should meet him. As soon as they were introduced, Lilibet said, "I hope you are going to keep Crawfie in order, because she has certainly bullied us for the last sixteen years!"

George said we all three talked the same way, and laughed and moved our hands alike. He was so struck by the charm of the two Princesses and how pleasant and easy they were, and like everyone else, he spoke especially of the beauty of Lilibet's face and the charming vivacity and quick wit of Margaret. Prince Philip also came in and George was presented to him.

George came again, I remember, the night before the wedding. We heard the most awful sounds coming from the old music room. They were all trying to sing Crimond, "The Lord is My Shepherd," because Lilibet wanted it at her wedding. They could not get the descant right, and they were humming it to Doctor McKee, organist of Westminster Abbey, who had come in.

We were swamped with wedding presents, and everything else was forgotten meantime. Margaret behaved like a grown-up young lady, and her parents both encouraged her. She was a real help and pleasure to them, there is no doubt, and they tended to forget she was still only a child.

Philip was now a constant visitor. He and Lilibet would be together in the sitting room, which I noticed he had improved a lot. Philip has strong ideas about furnishing. Soon after the courtship started I saw that a large sofa was drawn in front of the fire with the chairs on either side, instead of being isolated in the window, with two solitary chairs on the hearthrug. So already he had begun to use his influence, and instead of looking stiff and unlived in as I had often thought that sitting room did, it now had a homelike look.

The wedding day was fixed. I always felt myself that both the King and Queen would have preferred it to be put off until the spring or early summer when the weather was pleasant, and the reception could have been held in the gardens of the palace.

The young couple felt they had waited long enough. Like other young people, on this subject they had their own ideas.

AT HER FAMOUS "LITTLE SUPPERS"

CELEBRITIES BEG HER FOR THE RECIPE!

Hildegarde's elegant

"Princess Pie

■ Hildegarde is acclaimed on most versatile entertainers of c To her own parties she brings t incomparable charm that alwa tivates her supper club, radio a cert audiences.

This distinguished singer gives you her own cherished recipe!

"Just one of many tricks you can do with Libby's Fruit Cocktail," says Hildegarde.

This is the cocktail cut from whole, hand-picked fruits—the same glorious quality of fruits Libby packs individually! Wonderful by itself or in this dream of a recipe:

-----HILDEGARDE'S PRINCESS PIE-----

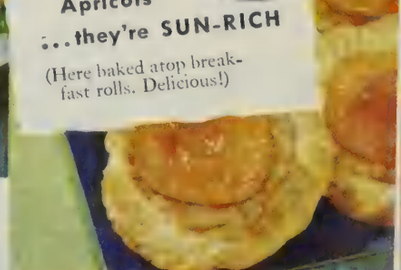
For the crust: Use your own recipe or a prepared mix. Line a 9" pie plate or a baking dish (11"x7"x1½") with pastry. (If you use oblong dish, press points of fluted pastry over top edge of pan to prevent slipping.) Bake and cool.

For the filling: Melt 2 tbsps. butter or margarine in the top of a double boiler. Remove from heat. Add grated rind of 2 lemons, ¼ c. lemon juice, 1 c. sugar. Mix. Add 2 slightly beaten eggs; combine well. Cook over boiling water 6 min. or until thickened, stirring constantly. Cool. Stir up two 3-oz. pkgs. of cream cheese in a bowl until creamy. Add lemon mixture a little at a time. Pour filling into baked shell.

For the topping: A No. 2½ can Libby's Fruit Cocktail, thoroughly drained. Serve soon.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

Made from whole hand-picked fr —the same fine quality packed i vidually under the famed Libby l



Try Libby's PICK O' THE CROP Peaches!

(Here filled with famous Libby's Deviled Ham.)

Taste Libby's Apricots ...they're SUN-RICH

(Here baked atop breakfast rolls. Delicious!)

Look to LIBBY'S for perfection

Gentler bleaching action.....

added protection for linens! There's extra protection for linens, and baby, too, with Clorox! For linens—because Clorox is free from caustic, extra gentle. For babies—because Clorox makes linens sanitary. In addition, Clorox removes stains, makes white or color-fast cottons and linens snowy-white, color-bright. Let Clorox go to work protecting linens, and health, for you!

Greater disinfecting efficiency...

added protection for health! This wise housewife is protecting her family's health. And so easily! She simply includes Clorox in her routine cleaning of bathroom and kitchen. That's because Clorox not only removes stains and deodorizes, it disinfects. And Clorox does a super job of disinfecting . . . kills germs quicker than any other product of its kind! See directions on the label.

Copr. 1950, Clorox Chemical Co.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

I did not bother Margaret with lessons. She had enough on hand. Nor did I feel that physically she had entirely recovered from the African tour. She still tired easily and refused to own when she was tired. I knew that once all the excitement had died down, we would make up for lost time.

The people of Wales sent a piece of Welsh gold for the wedding ring. This is a metal found only in very small quantities in Wales. It looks the same as any other yellow gold. The royal wedding rings are always made of it. Lilibet was particularly pleased when the piece that was to make her own ring arrived, and in that delightful way she had of always wanting to see Margaret wasn't left out, she told me, "There is enough for two rings. We can save a piece for Margaret."

They would walk about the gardens together, the two of them, Lilibet in her corn-colored wool dress, Philip very tall and slender, his arm through hers, his lint-fair head bent toward her. I could see them from my window, and I thought what a handsome couple they made.

I also thought it was probably a long time since anyone wore quite such unconventional garments around the palace. Philip's favorite kit was flannel trousers (not always very new or creased) and a tennis shirt with open neck, and often rolled-up sleeves. Hatless he would arrive, driving his own small sports car, always in a hurry to see Lilibet. Driving his own small sports car a great deal too fast!

Late one night after he had gone the telephone rang. A scared equerry came to inform the King that Lieutenant Mountbatten, on his way home, had skidded and overturned his car in a ditch. Lilibet had to be told. She was very upset and anxious, and insisted she speak to him on the telephone herself. I think she knew he was not the world's most cautious driver. Beyond a shaking, he was none the worse and apparently no more cautious.

Certain officials of the household, all of whom were devoted to Lilibet and had been her slaves since childhood, were greatly perturbed about this. They did not feel that Prince Philip should be allowed to drive the Heir to the Throne about London as he had been doing.

It was surprising to all of us that the King did not forbid him, but I have no doubt whatever that Philip was gravely cautioned by His Majesty. I know the Queen must have been very worried, because when the children were small she was forever saying to the King (not by any means a rash driver), "Darling, do not go so fast!"

Another side to the problem was the general reluctance of the palace chauffeurs to have Philip take out any of their beautifully kept cars, which might be returned to them with unsightly dents and buckled fenders.

THERE was another unfortunate incident not long afterward when once again Philip was driving, and at Hyde Park Corner they had a slight mixup with a taxicab. Lilibet came running in to me when they got home, very bothered.

"Oh, Crawfie, how am I to make mummie and papa realize that this time it really wasn't Philip's fault," she said. "It was the taxi. They will never believe it."

I saw the sketches of Lilibet's final choice of a wedding dress and patterns of the lovely material it was to be fashioned of as soon as Lilibet had made up her mind. I felt a very special interest in it, because the material finally chosen was woven and spun in my own home town, Dunfermline. There is a Swiss factory there that spins the particular weight Mr. Hartnell needed for his wonderful embroidery design. It had to be very strong, yet not heavy.

There was resentment in some quarters about the secrecy that was maintained over the wedding gown, and the bridesmaids' frocks. But I felt that in all Lilibet's romance she had been able to keep so little to herself and had been so dogged and hampered by rumor and speculation that it gave her pleasure to feel that she had something entirely private and all her own. Princesses like to forget, sometimes, how little they belong to themselves. Everything else to do with the wedding had been written about in the papers.

Some of the accounts were quite fantastic flights of fancy. Every aspect of the young people's future had been commented on and explored. There was no feeling at all for a young and sensitive girl, and what her reaction would be to public speculation on the number of children she might have, and what their rank would be.

Royalty earn every penny they get, for their loss of privacy at times like this.

Parcels began to pour in, hundreds of them, from all parts of the world. The contents of some of them were quite amazing. One evening the lady in waiting and I started after dinner to open some of them. The old schoolroom was by this time full of every kind of oddment. The Keeper of the King's Pictures had brought up a number of them for Lilibet to choose from, and so parcels were stacked in the lady in waiting's room, which soon looked like a depository in a railway station.

I always loved opening parcels, even if they were not for me. I picked one up, cut the string, removed several layers of paper, and found two soggy masses in my hand. I flung them away in horror. It was two slices of very burned and damp toast. With them came a letter from two young women who had been making toast when they heard the news of the Princess' engagement on the wireless. They were so excited and thrilled they burned their toast to a cinder, so sent the very toast to the Princess with a charming little letter of congratulation. How we laughed!

Another parcel that fell to me to open was very securely tied up with layer upon layer of stout paper.

"Whatever have you got there?" asked the lady in waiting.

"Something round and very heavy," I told her facetiously. "It's probably a bomb!"

I quickly snatched off the last piece of paper, holding the thing at arm's length. It was a large, rugged piece of rock. An old man from Wales had sent it for luck. It was, he said, a piece of Snowdon.

An old lady sent a lace underslip, beautiful hand-done Victorian work. It had been worn by the brides of her family for generations.

FOR the first time, an old-established convention was broken. Lilibet was allowed to keep presents that were sent her. At other royal weddings, presents were accepted only from persons the family knew. It would have been difficult to return gifts that were sent with such deep love and loyalty, but I often felt some of the priceless heirlooms that came should have remained in the families they really belonged to.

The letters were wonderfully touching. The Princess herself read every one of these. A lot of people sent their clothing coupons to help her with her trousseau, but these were always returned by registered post, with a letter of thanks from the Princess. It was not legal to give clothing coupons away.

Hundreds of beautiful handkerchiefs, linen, lace and the sheerest lawn were sent to her. There were hundreds of pairs of nylon stockings. Gloomy old Buckingham Palace suddenly took on the appearance of a treasure house. Queen Mary came one day and inspected the handkerchiefs thoughtfully through her lorgnette. Later she sent round a message saying that she would be glad to have any that could be spared. Her Majesty was always a great collector for bazaars.

The magnitude of it all bewildered Lilibet. She was, in those days, rushed off her feet, and hardly knew where she was. She had been so very simply brought up. Until quite recently her idea of a nice birthday or Christmas present had been a Victorian posy, a china ornament, or a needle book fashioned, with grief and pain, by her own hand. After

(Continued on Page 142)

Now, Pacific Contours also come in luxurious combed percale at slightly higher prices.

Camping is easy with

A wrinkle-proof CONTOUR sheet... about $2.80 TWIN SIZE

EXTRA-STRENGTH MUSLIN

Even a tenderfoot can make a bed as slick as a whistle with a Pacific Contour* Sheet. The fitted, tailored corners slip over the mattress in a wink! The unique tuck-under automatically slides into place on all four sides, holds the sheet taut and smooth all through the night.

Morning making, especially for a double-decker, goes like lightning because there's no smoothing, no retucking of the bottom sheet.

On warm summer nights, a Contour Sheet gives you the coolest sleep you've ever known. Not a ripple, not a wrinkle to ruffle your sleep. It can't bunch up in the middle, can't pull out.

Contours are easy to launder wherever you are. They weigh less, they're lighter to wash—and they stretch so smoothly over the mattress they scarcely need ironing. You get a perfect fit after washing because they're Sanforized♦!

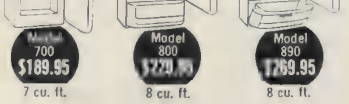
Pacific Contour Sheets come in standard twin and double-bed sizes—crib size, too, for active heirs. If you cannot find Contours in your favorite store, write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-7, 214 Church St., New York 13.

*TM Pacific Mills
♦Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Only Pacific Crib-Fast Sheets have scientifically fitted corners, plus a generous, automatic tuck-under that keeps the sheet firm and smooth no matter how your baby bounces in his crib.*

It's a PACIFIC sheet

BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS



NEVER BEFORE!

SO MANY NEW, HELPFUL BENEFITS, PRICED SO LOW!

Enjoy Your Gibson Save Cash Daily

Loaded with never-seen-before features, your new Gibson saves food money every day. Provable economies actually help buy your handsome Gibson!

LOOK!
Put in and Take out,
NO HANDS!
Pres-Toe Automatic Door (Model 1150)

See Gibson NOW!

Suggested Retail List Prices—Subject to Change Without Notice.

Your Gibson Dealer will Prove:
GIBSON DAILY ECONOMIES WILL HELP BUY YOUR GIBSON! . . .

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY · GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

(Continued from Page 140)

the scarcity, the make-do of the war years, this sudden lavishness and plenty was unnerving. I often thought it bothered Lilibet a little, in those days of austerity, to have so much when many had so little. She was always a thoughtful young person.

She had, like all other brides, a small extra allotment of coupons given to her by the Board of Trade, for her trousseau. But there was, besides, a great deal of material at the palace bought at different times and places by the Queen, and Queen Mary, to say nothing of gifts of silk and muslin, and brocades that came from distant parts of the empire. All this helped with the trousseau.

The wedding presents were displayed in St. James's Palace, which took on the appearance of an Ali Baba's cave of treasure—and horrors! People paid a shilling for admittance after the first day, when I believe it was five shillings. A very large sum was raised for charity in this manner. After the wedding the beautiful wedding dress was on view here too.

The crowds waiting to get in and have a look often would stretch for a mile along the Mall. We could see them waiting there from the palace windows.

Lilibet said, "I have so much! Crawfie, you are getting a home together also. You must share some of all this with me. Make out a list of the things you will be needing most."

I had great fun compiling the list, for in the midst of all this plenty, curtains for my own little home had presented a real problem.

The King had given me for my lifetime one of the Grace and Favour Houses which are in His Majesty's personal gift. This one was attached to Kensington Palace, looking over the Palace Green. It is a small cottage, designed by Christopher Wren. It looks as if it had got to London quite by mistake from some distant country place. It is built of lovely seasoned red brick, with a tiled roof and roses round the door. It has a little square garden behind a low white paling, where snapdragons, and lavender, and scented white Mrs. Simpkins border carnations grow. I had never before had a home of my own, and to me it seemed wonderful. Like a dream at last come true. I used to stand back to admire the name painted on the little white gate, NOTTINGHAM COTTAGE. Queen Mary knew the place well, as she had been born in Kensington Palace and in other days had often been to have tea in the cottage. Sometimes a flock of sheep are put to graze in the field over the way, and at evening the lamplighter trudges round still lighting up the old-fashioned gas lamps. The roar of the traffic in Kensington High Street sounds thin and far-off and in springtime the voices of the birds drown it altogether.

Margaret was almost as intrigued by my little house as I myself was. She frequently came down there with me to help me plan and choose my color schemes, and made many a useful suggestion. I could not help thinking, as she sang about the little rooms, what a wonderful housewife she herself would make, and how well she would run her home and how elegant and pretty she would make it look.

But I had my problems. Curtain materials and coverings for floors and furniture were not only in short supply, they were a truly terrible price.

These, together with various other matters, had to be shelved for the time being. I had too much to do, to bother about my own affairs. The wedding day was upon us. From the palace windows the whole world seemed aflutter with flags. The crowds had begun to gather the night before, and by daylight the whole Mall was a solid mass of people, with mounted police riding up and down on their splendid horses, keeping the main road clear. Great numbers had slept out, and were having picnic breakfasts, and cooking bacon over little stoves. It was funny to open the window and find, with the usual roaring noise, the smell of coffee drifting in.

What does a Queen do when, on an important state occasion, she sees another woman wearing a hat exactly like the one on her own head? Next month, in the final installment, "Crawfie" describes last-minute crises at the wedding of Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip; problems of royal bride in "setting up housekeeping"; Queen Mary's scrapbooks; the twelve typists hired to handle mail after the birth of Prince Charles. She explains how a princess's lady in waiting is chosen and why Princess Margaret's lady in waiting has an especially difficult role; "Crawfie's" own farewell to the royal household.

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

"Punctual as a clock, all my life. I've been pretty sick this last month, though—quite different than it was either of those times before."

"You mean you've had trouble with nausea?"

"Yes, but that's not all. For the past month I've been bleeding."

"Bleeding for a whole month. Badly?"

"No, I wouldn't say badly—just a little, every day. Just a sort of show."

"I understand. Tell me, Mrs. Hoe, have you had any pain along with this bleeding?"

"Not very much—I'm just a little sore and sensitive."

"Right in the middle of the abdomen?"

"N-no, it seems to be on my left side, doctor."

"Well, Mrs. Hoe, I think that for all practical purposes we may assume you are pregnant. I'm going to take you into the examining room and give you the most careful examination I know how to perform."

"Do you think I'm in danger of miscarrying again, Doctor?"

"It could be. I'll be frank to say that I think you are in danger of something, and we'll make no more guesses until I've had the opportunity to find out."

After he had examined her, the doctor's face wore an unaccustomed grave expression as he explained his appraisal of the case to his patient.

"I think there is little room for doubt that you are pregnant," he began. "We could attempt to back up my opinion by the so-called rabbit test. However, I don't want to delay matters by waiting for it; and even if it were negative, I wouldn't be convinced. A negative result wouldn't be at all unusual in a case like yours."

"You talk as though there were something terrible the matter with me. Tell me, what is wrong?"

"I believe you have a pregnancy outside the womb."

"Why, how could that be?"

"It is not uncommon, especially where there has been a protracted lapse of time since preceding pregnancies—there's a reason for that too."

"I wish you would explain."

"Very well. In your case, where there is little doubt of your being pregnant, there are a number of probabilities to explain the bleeding. First, and most common, is the threatening abortion. This comes about either from a faulty embryo or an imperfect attachment of the embryo to the uterine wall. Next in frequency would be a condition found in the genital tract which would cause such bleeding. This may be due to a polyp growth, an area of erosion, or a varicose vein. Finally, and most distressing, is the pregnancy outside of the womb. This is known as an ectopic pregnancy, and my examination eliminates all the other possibilities and points definitely to such a condition."

"But why should this happen to me, after going through two previous pregnancies normally?"

"Your second pregnancy wasn't normal by any means. Didn't you tell me that you lost that one?"

"Well, that's true, but I mean that it was inside the womb."

"Agreed. But I believe that abortion was responsible for your present trouble."

"But that was so many years ago."

"You haven't become pregnant since then til the present occasion. I believe I can explain the reason for that too. You told me at you were quite sick and bled for a long ne, so that your doctor came to see you ev- day. You had no operation, however. rrect?"

"That is correct, but ——"

"Here's the way I reconstruct the episode. u aborted—accidentally, but all the material which was the product of conception d not come away. If it had, you wouldn't ve bled—much. What happened to you sn't at all unusual—in fact, it's a common currence. That material was allowed to y inside, and finally rotted away, after ich you stopped bleeding, and have felt rly well ever since."

"Certainly. I'm never sick."

"Now, why do you suppose you never be- me pregnant during all those years? Did u use means to prevent it?"

"No. I wanted more children."

"Precisely. Well, here's why I believe you dn't get them. It was because the inflamtion that was bound to be set up inside ur womb by all that rotting process that s going on there became transmitted to ur tubes and sealed them practically ht."

"I don't see how you can know that."

"I am deducing it by what I know of other es. Don't you see, something must have pened. You became pregnant twice with- t any trouble, and after the second episode u became barren for a period of years. ere was more than just k responsible for that."

"I still don't understand. I had my monthlies gularly all the time."

"The occurrence of regr periods would have d nothing to do with the oes. They would have continued if you d had no tubes at all."

"It's too complicated for me."

"Here's what was taking place. Every four eks your ovaries produced an ovum, an g, which quite likely may have found its y into the outer end of one or the other be and then became stranded because it s too large to pass a constricted spot which d developed as a result of that old inflamtion. That ovum is a big cell. It must have en a tight constriction in the tube, however, because it did not even allow any of ur husband's sperms to pass, and they are ch smaller than your ovum.

Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.

"Now, this past June at least one of those rms did get past the constriction and met entrapped ovum in the process of trying make its way down to the womb. Pregncy thus took place, but instead of having resilient uterus, capable of great expansn and growth in its own right, to receive d foster it, it found itself in the fragile, conicted tube, where unfortunately it will ntinue to grow."

"Grow to be a child, doctor?"

"Mrs. Hoe, I am sorry to have to tell you t, in my judgment, it will not grow much ger than it is at present."

"Why, what will happen?"

"I believe that tube is due to rupture in very near future."

"Would that be serious?"

"Most serious. It would constitute a grave ergency."

"Are you sure? Are you positive there is chance of your being wrong in your diagsis?"

"Mrs. Hoe, I will be frank to say that I not positive, but I am convinced that I correct," the doctor told her. "Unfortately, there is no way to be absolutely sitive at this stage. In my judgment there no time to wait."

"Couldn't you take an X-ray picture, or mething?"

"Such a picture would give us little inrmation unless we attempted to infiltrate e uterus and tubes with opaque oil under essure, and that is something I would not re to do, believing that the left tube is ar the point of rupture at this very moment. I was able to feel it plainly during my examination, a soft, boggy mass the size of a plum, and extremely sensitive, as you well know."

"Yes, it hurt terribly."

"I was as gentle as possible. I have known such a mass to rupture during just that kind of examination, which was the reason I exercised so much care."

"But couldn't that mass be some other thing than . . . such a pregnancy?" Mrs. Hoe asked.

"It could. It could be a cystic ovary, for instance; but in my judgment all the evidence points the other way."

"And the womb itself is normal?"

"No, it is not. Unfortunately, the womb enlarges and becomes soft in these tubal pregnancies, just as it does in early, normal pregnancy. Naturally, that makes the diagnosis all the more difficult."

"What do you think should be done, Doctor?"

"Immediate operation."

"And you are not even positive of your diagnosis."

"I explained how I could not be absolutely positive, though I am convinced that I am correct. I'll go further and say that I would rather risk operation on a half dozen such cases as yours under those conditions, than neglect even one that demanded operation. The crisis in case of rupture would be that grave."

"Do you think I ought to have another opinion, Doctor?" the patient asked.

"That is your privilege, Mrs. Hoe. No opinion would change mine, however, and a dissenting one would only complicate matters."

"I think I'd like to talk to my family doctor."

"Do. I'll get him on the phone and explain what I've found, and then let you talk with him."

When Mrs. Hoe laid down the instrument, not many minutes later, she remarked, "Doctor Ball says to do as you advise."

"Shall we?"

"M'm, yes. My husband ——"

"Can we reach him by telephone?"

"He will be at his place of business now."

"We'll get him and tell him to come right over here."

"There's just one thing more I want to ask, Doctor. If this tube should rupture, what would happen?"

"Usually the patient goes into shock and when we do operate under emergency handicaps, we find the belly full of blood from ruptured vessels."

"And that always happens?"

"Not invariably. It is the usual. Occasionally the damage is not so great—it depends upon the point in the tube where the rupture occurs—and once in a blue moon a most unusual phenomenon happens."

"Yes?"

"The product of conception is forced back up the tube and outside, and comes to rest in some spot in the abdomen. Here it picks up a new blood supply, and may go on to full-term development among the intestines and other organs."

"And the baby lives?"

"Usually not. However, there are some cases on record in which the babies have survived."

"It's—it's incredible!"

"I think it's very wonderful how Nature keeps working toward the salvation of human life. Now, Mrs. Hoe, how about it?"

Mrs. Hoe drew a long breath. "You may send for my husband."

"Good! You are doing exactly right. Now we'll have to make some preparations."

He rang for his nurse, and instructed her: "Call the hospital and tell the operating room to get ready for an ectopic pregnancy at five o'clock. Have them send over the ambulance in an hour—I don't intend to take any chance of this patient having an accident on the way there."

(To Be Continued)

AMAZING OFFER

$40

IS YOURS

for selling only 50 boxes of Christmas Cards. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. Write today. It costs nothing to try.

FREE SAMPLES
PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS
STATIONERY
and NAPKINS

CHEERFUL CARD CO.
Dept. G-33
White Plains, New York

CHEERFUL CARD CO.
Dept. G-33, White Plains, New York
Please rush samples and full details of your money-making plan.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

THE PHOTOGRAPH BELOW shows a typical baker's cake . . . an angel food. And it tastes as good as it looks!

Because modern bakers use the same high quality ingredients you would use; bake fresh daily with the same care you would take.

Give them a chance to show you how baking has improved. Give yourself a chance to go do something you'd ten times rather do than stay home baking cake.

Buy a cake today—at your bakeshop, your grocer's or from the baker who calls at your door.

See how good it is! See how grand it is to let your baker do your baking while you enjoy yourself!

Get a BAKER'S CAKE today...

See how good it is!

Bakers of America

© 1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

The thick warm grass of midsummer is perfect under feet not yet steady, as the puppies explore a new world of sweet smells and bright sunshine.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

THIS is midsummer in New England. The days are very hot and still, growing weather, and the nights are warm and dreamy. By August, the first breath of autumn blows in the air at night, but in July it seems as if it would be forever summer. The sky is a lazy blue, the sun sets serenely and rises with a pale clear brilliance over a countryside green and fruitful. Grass is our natural heritage in Connecticut, and if anyone excavates for a house or digs out a new road he has to hurry or the dirt will be overlaid with a soft fresh green as the grass comes in.

The sugar maples are so heavy with leaves that they almost bend with their own weight, and along the country roads the shadows are green and cool. But the hayfields are hot, and George is tanned to a deep mahogany when he rides in with a load of sweet-smelling hay. He works early and late, and the last load comes swaying down the road at dusk, softly gold in the tender light.

We get the weeding and hoeing done early in the day before the sun is too burning, and after supper we finish a few odd jobs like feeding the roses with manure water or pinching the side shoots from the tomatoes to give better tomatoes. The last planting of sweet corn goes in early in the month, and beets and carrots may be planted for winter use.

The beans are ready and we have been freezing them all week. One year we waited until they were too mature, and the result was dreadful. Now we pick them as fast as they develop a thin slender pod and rush them to the freezer as fast as possible. The modern stringless beans are easy to do; we snip the ends, drop the beans in boiling salted water, dip them in ice water, drain and pack whole. We time all our vegetables by the Government bulletin on freezing, but we skimp on that timing. If vegetables are very young and tender and you run from the garden to the back door and the water is already on, you can safely, we think, give them a very short blanching.

We do all the spinach we can now, too, and the pie cherries. The birds eat all our own cherry crop, but we can get them from the neighbors when they are just tur ripe. Fresh cherry pies are so good January!

Mamma used to make a special spi cherry preserve that I never learned to make, and I wish I knew her recip never learned, because it was my jo run the old cherry pitter. It was a gadget, except every few minutes a ch pit got caught in its throat, so it had t watched. If ever one solitary pit got in preserve, father would bite down o So mamma put a few in for flavor small cheesecloth bag and fished them afterward.

New tender string beans are good co with a little rosemary, and good co with butter, salt and pepper, and a sweet milk poured over at the last mi of cooking. I like them for supper as a dish, served in a big soup bowl and warm fresh bread and unsalted cou butter on the side.

Beans must never be picked when foliage is wet or the vines may spread and as we always have dew in the mornings, we have to wait until all delicate lace of cobwebs is off the grass garden before we begin picking.

I don't understand all the theories a picking. I used to rush out after breakfast to cut the roses, and now I hear they sh be cut at midday when the sap is stabil or something or other; so I have been d wrong by my flowers all these years. the main thing, I have found, is to cut flowers when they are not fully out. E the delicate yellow old-fashioned tea r last longer if they are brought in when little buds are still half folded. In an blue sugar bowl, they look lovely.

It is time to divide the bearded iris fact, it seems to me it is always tim divide something. This spring the mi the daffodils and narcissus were out, I the worst had happened: they all nee dividing. Then came the peonies—crow to suffocation and ready to move all the yard. The iris grows like mad in soil; we plant it everywhere we have inch of space, give away basketfuls, an desperation last year simply threw put in the swamp, where we now a iot of iris!

e Fourth of July, we have a family
y the farm pond. Don still loves s, even though he graduated in m the university, and Cicely and and I love the sparklers that you circles in the air. Too many chil-injured every year on this particunal holiday, and I wish all danger-works could be banned everywhere.
et off a few stars and a few little un-snakes and wave our sparklers.
h of July gives us a sense of pride in ntry, and is a good holiday to celend it is a good time to remember the pon which American independence
ed, and determine to cherish them.
il is growing so fast that she makes armful when I pick her up. Gradu-has persuaded the other dogs that art of the family and they will play
r. When they all tear around the onquil tears with them, running s fast as she possibly can on her ittle legs and bringing up the rear, ead straight out, eyes shining with ent.
Sister is about the right size for her y roll the rugs up when they wrestle, eve, the Irish, is quite an undertaksometimes Jonquil is tossed around nall glowing ball. She picks herself jumps in for more. She is the most puppy I have ever known. If the ll on her, she would jump up and nd wag her tail the minute she was eft her overnight with neighbors e had to be away for a day, thinking too young to stay

e grown dogs. and
e went to get her,
atty, the neigh-ild, met us at the Jonquil get along

t?" I asked.
y bounced up and down. "Oh, Jon-d the life of her time," said Patty, ad the life of her time." She added,
y."
is a family saying now. When we specially nice picnic we end with the nt, "We certainly had the life of our day."
Biggs says, "You can put a Cover puppy down anywhere and he will
" and this is an understatement. You t a Cover Charge puppy down anyand everybody will have the life of e!
é has caught two very small mice
She has never been a natural mouser er was, and has no feeling of respon-for keeping the house free from them. e was terribly proud of herself, never-
, and told me about it over and over in mese. She explained the approach, the , the scurry-flurry, the capture. Then lained it all over again, to be sure I iated her ability. Then she walked sly away, leaving the mice to me!

week we went to the smörgåsbord
in the Grange Hall, which the homes put on for the Four-H Club. It was derful occasion, and we all ate all we hold. They had tables covered with and yellow crepe paper so you could ur plates and sit down to eat. Every-ound a chair or bench first, and then f the women laid their purses on the o hold their place and went on to the the hall where the long table was with fifteen or twenty dishes of mar-food. As I threaded my way through owd, I thought that our valley is a good place to live in, where a crowd undred and fifty folk can use their for place cards!
ep housework at a minimum when it
I do not like to heat myself up with n when the thermometer is skiing up
p. We use paper napkins and plastic mats, and the sheets dry in the sun just fold them without ironing. Usukeep the load down to a very few sport shirts and I iron these after dark in the summer kitchen, with both doors open to catch the cool air that breathes up from the pond.

I have finally learned to iron the yoke of a shirt first, but I still would never win a prize as an ironer. I can always iron some new wrinkles in a sleeve, especially around the cuff. I love to wash and hang the clean clothes on the line in the sweet summer air, but I do hate to iron a blouse and pick it up and look at it and realize the fatal truth that nobody would think it had ever been near an ironing board!

Meals are easy in July with the fresh vegetables coming in. To keep the kitchen comfortable, I often do a big roast or turkey during the evening, in a 300° F.–325° F. oven, while I am not in the kitchen.

For a change, we like pickled flounder fixed the way Bob Rhodes told us. This is a traditional recipe and a delicious one. You can use either fresh or frozen flounder. You combine ¾ cup vinegar with 2½ cups water, 2 sections garlic, minced, ½ teaspoon cumin seed, ¾ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Drop the flounder fillets in this and let them stand 12 hours in the refrigerator, then drain and dry, roll in corn meal and fry.

With this I like Rosie's corn bread, the recipe for which I grabbed from her the first time she served it when we were there for dinner. It is light and rich and melting good to eat. You cream together a scant ½ cup sugar and ½ cup shortening. Add 2 slightly beaten eggs. Sift together 1 cup corn meal, 1¼ cups flour, ½ teaspoon salt, 3 teaspoons baking powder. Add this alternately with ¾ cup milk to the egg mixture. Beat until mixed, but don't beat too long. Pour into a greased square pan and bake in a moderate oven, 375° F., about half an hour.

I love fools' experiments. I am always making them.
—CHARLES DARWIN.

In summer we seldom eat rich desserts, but now and then we do like a change from Bavarian cream or fruit compotes or sherbets. Then I make a nice versatile cake which is a kind of cross between a coffeecake and a dessert cake, very light in texture and not rich for hot weather. It is good for Sunday supper or Sunday breakfast, and wonderful with iced tea in the afternoon.

Most of our meals we eat outdoors, in the shade of the old apple trees in the daytime and in the quiet garden in the evening. This does involve some lugging from the kitchen, but with good-sized trays to load, it is not too difficult. We use ten-cent-store trays which Jill painted Colonial blue, and they hold everything we need to set on the picnic table. A rectangular tray, we find, holds more than a round or oval one.

After supper, we stack everything back on a couple of trays and carry them in and go out again to the garden where the sweet enchanted scent of the nicotiana is beginning to fill the air. How gently the seasons slide into one another in the country; there is no bitterness of ending here, no sharp change from fruit to bare bough. We mark the height of the delphinium spires today, the budding of the asters tomorrow.

Little Sister hunts an important rabbit and Linda rushes to help her. No rabbit could help knowing when Linda starts the chase, she squeals so loudly. Maeve takes a run over to see if George has put the cows to bed successfully, then she will take a swim and come out to shake all over us. An Irish setter can shake off more water than a Niagara.

Jonquil spends a happy hour in the July evening digging up all the perennials that have been nicely hoed around during the day. She is upended and up to her elbows in damp earth.

And over Stillmeadow, the stars shine with the same steadfast light, whiter now in midsummer, and closer than in winter. I feel as if I could gather a bouquet of them, white summer flowers of the sky, and carry them into the little old farmhouse.

But for the stars, it is enough to be!

THE END

TWO GREAT FLORIDA FAVORITES GET TOGETHER!

Orange Juice and Grapefruit Juice in a single drink for your enjoyment—convenience—health

● If ever you've wanted a delicious drink that would provide you with instant, thorough, and lasting refreshment—you have it here! It is juice squeezed from FLORIDA grapefruit—the kind with the real rich grapefruit taste—combined with the luscious, sweet juice of Florida's tree-ripened oranges. For complete, long-lasting refreshment from head to toe, here's far more than bracing, appetizing flavor. You can count on Florida Orange-Grapefruit Juice to fortify you with all the natural vitamins, minerals and energy of the tree-fresh fruit. At breakfast time, dinnertime, suppertime or any time... just open the can and pour!

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

How This Drink Helps You to Health EVERY DAY!

1. Helps maintain ALKALINE reserve
2. Supplies LIQUID—hostile to colds
3. A gold mine of VITAMIN C
4. Other VITAMINS and MINERALS
5. ENERGY from fruit sugars
6. Arouses sulky APPETITES
7. Stimulates DIGESTIVE juices
8. MILDLY LAXATIVE

FLORIDA
ORANGE-GRAPEFRUIT JUICE

RIPE OLIVES

The word is "Elegant!"

For that elegant touch, add ripe olives to crisp, cool summer salads—use them to perk up sandwiches—to give teasy appeal to appetizers.

Yes, they're the extra that makes ordinary dishes *extra*ordinary.

And, of course, they're unsurpassed for downright good eating any time you set out the olive bowl.

Ripe Olives from California

Write for FREE booklet of elegant Ripe Olive recipes:
Olive Advisory Board, Room 805
16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California

Make Extra Money SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
Show friends, neighbors, etc. finest Christmas assortments. Also beautiful All Occasion cards, Gift Wrappings and Religious Cards. Write for FREE SAMPLES imprinted Christmas cards and stationery.
MITCHELL GREETINGS, Dept. A, 76 W. Adams, Detroit 26, Mich.

SELL Custom-Made Personal CHRISTMAS CARDS
Limited number of men and women wanted to make exceptional profits with big presentation of highest quality Personalized Christmas Cards. Exclusive designs reproduced with finest craftsmanship on costliest papers. Added profits with lower-priced "Personals" and big line of top-value Box Assortments. Write fully for samples. WALLACE BROWN, 225 Fifth Ave., Dept. L-151, New York 10, New York

JUST OUT! NEW THRILLING SENSATION IN CHRISTMAS CARDS
Luster Foils, Satins, Brilliants
50 for $1 With Name FREE SAMPLES
MAKE BIG MONEY
Amazing values bring you easy orders! Earn dollars fast. Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1 up. Imprinted Book Matches, Stationery, Gifts. 30 FREE Imprint Samples; two $1 Boxes on Approval. Write JOY GREETINGS, 507 N. CARDINAL, DEPT. A-4, ST. LOUIS 3, MISSOURI

PEN-JEL
ORIGINAL POWDERED APPLE PECTIN FOR MAKING
JAM and JELLY

MAKE MONEY FAST!
SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
to friends, neighbors, clubs. Big, beautiful line includes Religious, Current and Every Day. 50 for $1. Everyday, Comics, Wrappings, Children's Cards and Books, Stationery, Imported Napkins, Ladies' Ruru Sandals, AMAZING BENEFITS, personal greeting, Extra Cash Bonus Plan. Rush coupon for [illegible]
OVER 100 ITEMS
5 LEADING $1 21 CARD BOXES
50 for $1
WRAPPINGS
DE LUXE PERSONALS
GIFT ITEMS BIRTHDAY
SEND FOR SAMPLES
Hedenkamp & Co. INC.
361 BROADWAY, Dept. L-6, NEW YORK 13, N. Y.
Name
Address
City State

FORT WORTH CHILDREN'S MUSEUM

(Continued from Page 23)

consulted experts in the field of museums for children in 1939, and, at the same time, began promoting the idea of a future museum for Fort Worth. They visualized the project as an entertaining, constructive alternative to the vandalism and useless loitering often characteristic of children with too little to do.

Mr. J. P. Moore, superintendent of schools in Fort Worth, explains, "It was clear from the start that the Children's Museum idea carried out our philosophy of learning by seeing and doing. The museum gives the children a chance to learn under the guise of fun!"

The city's school board donated the museum's first home—two big sunny rooms on the second floor of the DeZavala elementary school. Starting with a roomful of exhibits from the Fort Worth Public Library, the museum received many presents from private collections. One of the most important initial steps in making museum visits run smoothly was the establishment of a volunteer curator service, with teachers and parents serving as guides and storytellers to the hordes of boys and girls who began pouring in after the museum's opening in February, 1945. The children kept coming back again and again, telling their friends, "You can really play with things we only read about in school!"

This modest beginning proved so popular and got such favorable reports from the local press and the children themselves that a bond issue of $300,000 for the building of a permanent home for the museum was voted in by Fort Worth citizens. It was made a part of the city's budget in October of 1945.

Although the museum is fortunate in having a number of generous contributions from its wealthier patrons, modest donations, as well as $10 yearly memberships, are received just as enthusiastically. The board of directors (made up of businessmen, teachers and mothers of museum-age children) feel that the more people taking an active part in the museum program, the more enthusiasm and widespread support for the future.

There is a fifty-cent membership for the children themselves, which, though it entitles them to no special privileges, carries with it a bright green badge bearing the organization's armadillo insigne. J. Lee Johnson, president of the board, says, "No child needs a membership card to get in, but the button gives him more of a feeling of belonging to the museum, and the museum belonging to him."

Early in 1946, the board invited John Ripley Forbes, young director of the Hornaday Memorial Foundation (set up by a famous naturalist for the purpose of encouraging new museums for children) to advise on the coordination of rapidly growing museum collections and program of activities. Mr. Forbes also helped in getting the first maintenance-fund drive under way. "The Hornaday Foundation doesn't give financial support," he explains, "but helps arouse the community's interest in supporting its own project. When the museum is on its own feet, it will be the community's responsibility."

In mid-September of 1947, the museum moved to its present home, a rambling, white-frame, twenty-room mansion at 1306 Summit Avenue. The welcoming, wide-pillared porch bears a card by the door, "Please come in without ringing the bell." From the top of a wall running along the back of the deep, shady lawn, children can see the site of the fortess where the last shot was fired by an outpost of Texas soldiers against the Indians. In the museum, they can play in a scale model of the old fort—a stockaded settlement of log cabins which comprised the city of Fort Worth only 101 years ago. A little girl who thought that the tiny flag on the fort had thirty stars on it because "there wasn't room for any more," now guides new visitors to the spot and explains proudly that "in those days there were only thirty states."

Throughout the building and its grounds, everything possible is done to avoid "museum mustiness." Taxidermists and habitat experts are always busy building new exhibits, and keeping familiar ones bright and colorful. Birds and animals are mounted in lifelike attitudes and posed in family groups; and traffic is heavy in the large room called the "Live Museum," which houses a lively collection of animals native to Texas. Here children from two years on up may make friends with a pet possum, a flying squirrel, several baby alligators and snakes, a "disarmed" skunk, and other fascinating and friendly creatures. David Bigelow, the museum's naturalist, plans to arrange a "checking-out" system, under which the children will be able to take home tame animals as they would borrow library books, learning the habits of the pets and how to care for them.

Every inch of space in the big house has been put to use. Display cases of foreign dolls and collections of Egyptian, Indian and medieval European objects line the wide halls; the tub in one of three upstairs bathrooms is a frog farm, supplying food for five hungry snakes. Outbuildings house a craft workshop, a movie theater, a planetarium and an authentic "pioneer house."

Though nothing is kept under lock and key, none of the tempting objects at the museum has ever been "borrowed" and taken home. Mrs. Anne H. Webb, attractive silver-haired director of the Children's Museum, wants every exhibit and program to be something the children can enjoy. "If people go through life only half awake to the beautiful things in nature all around them," she says, "and to the cultures of the past and present, it's because they never had a chance to learn to enjoy them when they were young. Our first job is to open the doors of a child's mind."

To do this job, the week's schedule includes twenty-one separate activities, with a wide choice provided for youngsters of all ages. Boys and girls are encouraged to settle on one or two main interests and stick with them for several years; and many of them develop hobbies which will grow up with them—skills in astronomy, metalwork, stamp collecting and even square-dancing!

More than one child has been spurred on by a hobby discovered at the museum to specialize in some field of natural science. One young girl, whom her teachers considered slow in school, became so fascinated with the rocks and fossils at the museum that she dug about eagerly for more information on geology. Her growing interest helped her progress in reading, led to study in related fields of science and history. She has since graduated from high school; and at college where she is majoring in geology, her professors consider her future bright "in a career not overcrowded with women."

Every Saturday, the Nature Trails Club's morning hikes introduce children to birds, rocks, trees and flowers in their natural surroundings. Jimmy Blake, an eighth-grader who lives on a farm six miles from town, hasn't missed a hike in over a year. He gets up at 6:30 every Saturday morning to finish chores, packs his own lunch, and rides his bike into town. "I used to go to cowboy shows with my buddy every Saturday afternoon," he says. "Now we have a lot more fun getting out in the woods to chase down different specimens. That's something you can take part in, and you can't say that for a show!"

For kids who want to learn more about the stars, Miss Charlie M. Noble (who taught celestial navigation and advanced mathematics in the wartime Navy V-12 program) directs the Friday-evening Astronomy Club. Its members, from seven to seventeen, chart the skies like old hands, and say Miss Noble "really knows her stuff." "She doesn't expect us to know everything, and if you say 'Beetle juice' for 'Betelgeuse,' she lets it slide—so long as you can identify the star."

To insure a chance to see "Betelgeuse," rain or shine, the Junior League recently gave the museum a $1000 Spitz Planetarium in Miss Noble's name. With the new machine the children can watch the heavens make a "twenty-four-hour turnaround" in five minutes, while they sit spellbound on long benches under the round awning that forms the planetarium's "sky."

In 1949, an average of 150 children every day attended the museum on individual and classroom visits and for programs and club meetings. With them, over the year, came 13,500 parents. The total of last year's contacts, including attendance and extension services to schools and hospitals, was 80,000—more than one fifth of Fort Worth's entire population of 350,000! The record for 1950 promises to surpass this figure, and sometime in the future the Summit Avenue headquarters will be replaced with a larger and more adequate building, tailor-made for museum activities.

For those children who are too ill or too crippled to visit the museum, a visiting curator system with traveling exhibits has been initiated. Staff members, assisted by volunteers, visit polio wards and children's hospitals with pets from the "Live Museum," dolls, pictures, games, war clubs from the Indian Gallery for bedridden little boys who are roughriding cowboys in their imaginary games. Youngsters from the state school for the blind are brought to the museum on regular visits. A future project for blind classes is a unique nature hike, with all the trail signs marked in Braille.

The many men and women, boys and girls who have "grown up with the museum" agree with John Forbes that, "The old type of museum with its hushed atmosphere, ponderous exhibits and long, boring labels is dead as the dodo. The Fort Worth program is one strong answer to the grave problem of juvenile delinquency. And it is a truly exciting link between recreation and education for our young people." THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

What Every Young Man Should Know

By G. M. White

When I was young, my mother said,
"Choose wisely, son, the girl you wed,
For women are creatures of great surprise.
Observe the eyes
And look for depth—there passion lies.
Above all, listen to her voice—
Tones tell all a little wit conceals.

"For lasting beauty, note the skin—
Does it reveal the blood within?
All lips can kiss, all lips betray.
Observe the way
They form the words, not what they say.
Consider how she holds her head—
A pride that never yields will hurt."

My mother added, "That's not all—
The inner ear must hear love's call.
Since women are creatures of great surprise
It is not wise
To marry a girl you can analyze."
This knowledge brought me happiness,
But I've been puzzled ever since.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

My, how speedy! My, how good!

LUNCHEON SHOW-OFF . . . IN 25 MINUTES!

Baked Tomatoes with Rice. Remove seeds and pulp from 6 firm tomatoes. Save pulp. Salt inside of tomatoes. Bake in shallow baking dish at 375°F. 15 minutes. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in saucepan; add ½ cup diced celery, ¼ cup diced green pepper, 2 tablespoons chopped onion. Cook 3 minutes. Add ½ package (⅔ cup) Minute Rice, ¾ cup water, ½ teaspoon salt, dash of pepper. Bring quickly to boil, uncovered, fluffing once or twice with fork. Remove from heat. Cover and let stand 10 minutes. Add tomato pulp. Fill baked shells with mixture. Bake 5 minutes longer. A heavenly dish—with the savory flavor right through the rice! Serves 6.

SUNDAY NIGHT NIFTY . . . IN 18 MINUTES!

Bacon 'n Egg Rice. Prepare 1 package (1⅓ cups) precooked Minute Rice as directed on package. Let stand 10 minutes. Add 5 slices cooked bacon, diced, and 2 hard-cooked eggs, diced. Melt 1 package (8 ounces) processed American cheese in double boiler. Add ½ cup milk and blend well. Place rice mixture on platter and top with cheese sauce. Then try to make people believe you turned out this luscious feast, with perfect rice, in so few minutes! Serves 6.

AMAZING NEW RICE DISCOVERY makes dazzling dishes a cinch to prepare!

★ NO WASHING!
★ NO RINSING!
★ NO DRAINING!
★ NO STEAMING!
★ PERFECT RICE EVERY TIME!

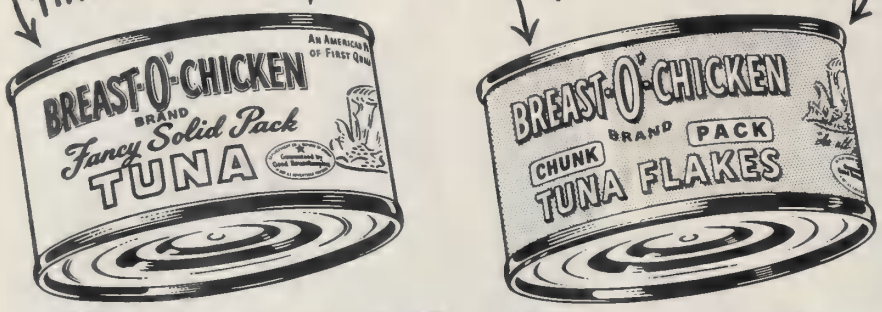
Just bring Minute Rice to a boil. No more cooking's needed! And this fancy, long-grained rice turns out fluffy, snow-white, and delicious every time!

There's no other rice like this sensational, precooked Minute Brand product! Keep several boxes on hand—and turn out speedy glamour-dishes by the dozen!

DEEP-SOUTH SPECIAL . . . IN 30 MINUTES!

Chicken-Rice Dinner Plate. It's the pride of Southern cooking—fried chicken and white-and-fluffy rice! But what old-time Southern cook, taking endless trouble, could count on getting such perfect rice every time? Just prepare speedy Minute Rice as directed on package. Serve with fried chicken and Birds Eye French-style Green Beans. Garnish with radish roses and parsley. Delicious!

SKILLET SUPPER . . . IN 18 MINUTES!



Rice-and-Beef Hash. One skillet can get you a lot of compliments with this Minute Rice inspiration! Sauté ¼ cup chopped green pepper and ¼ cup chopped onion in 2 tablespoons fat until golden brown. Add ½ pound ground beef; continue cooking 5 minutes. Add 1⅓ cups canned tomatoes, ½ cup hot water; ½ package (⅔ cup) Minute Rice, 1 teaspoon salt, and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Cover and simmer slowly 10 minutes and serve to 4 lucky people! Minute Rice absorbs that rich beef and tomato flavor to give you a treat no other rice could match!

For tastier, quick-quick meals MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

white label fine solid pack CHOOSE green label fine meaty chunks

BREAST O' CHICKEN brings you only the BEST it's young, it's tenda'

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

We catch tons and tons O' tuna... but we choose only the young, the tenda' tuna to pack under our renowned Breast-O'-Chicken label. Because O' this... Breast-O'-Chicken is consistently fine in flavor and quality - and so tenda', tin after tin. See for yourself - reach for Breast-O'-Chicken every time - get the best O' tuna every time.

Little folks love Breast-O'-Chicken in sandwiches, salads and hot dishes (and if there's any left, big folks love it, too.) In the good old summer time, as Mrs. M.S. of Illinois writes, "Breast-O'-Chicken is so good to eat." Get a tin or two tomorrow. Breast-O'-Chicken... best O' tuna... packed in California for 25 years.

O' TUNA

FREE Recipe booklet. Write - Westgate-Sun Harbor Co., 1995 Bay Front, Dept. J-3. San Diego 13, California

COUNTRY SUPPER

(Continued from Page 56)

RAW-VEGETABLE APPETIZERS

Almost anything the garden provides may be used here, provided it's crisp and cold—radishes, crisp strips of celery, carrot sticks, strips of cucumber, scallions, slivers of cauliflower or even broccoli.

Sauce for the vegetables: Mix together 1½ cups mayonnaise, ⅔ cup chili sauce, 1½ tablespoons minced parsley, 1½ teaspoons minced chives, a little salt, ¾ teaspoon sugar, a dash or two of Tabasco sauce, and pepper to taste.

Since a porch supper may be a movable feast, it's our idea to serve the sauce in eggcups—one for each person. The cup is easy to hold and each person may dip with less drip.

Something hot besides the weather. You know how they always say "one hot dish at every meal"; and after all, you can't live all summer long on cold cuts and potato salad. It has been done, but I don't recommend it. So here's a dish that's both hearty and hot, and if you get to make it early in the day and set it aside to bake when the time comes, it'll do no harm. In fact, I feel it is the thing to do. Get everything done in the cool of the day if you can. Gives you such a nice smug feeling and a chance to take things easy when you want to take them easy.

HAM, NEW POTATOES AND PEAS IN CASSEROLE

Peel 2 pounds new potatoes and shell 4 pounds fresh peas. Or use 2 packages frozen peas. Slice enough baked ham thinly to weigh 1½ pounds. This dish is worth baking a half ham to have nice slices. Or—there are beautiful canned hams that produce the perfect slices. Cook the peas and potatoes separately until just tender in boiling salted water. Make 6 cups light cream sauce, using ½ cup butter or margarine, ½ cup flour, 5 cups milk and 1 cup light cream. Season with salt and pepper to taste and add 3 tablespoons grated cheese. Mix the drained peas and potatoes with the ham and sauce. Pour into a large casserole and bake until the sauce bubbles up and gets light brown, about half an hour in a moderate oven, 350° F. This dish may be made ready before you are set to bake and serve it. Allow about 40 to 45 minutes if the casserole has waited and cooled off before baking. Serves 6 to 8.

> You may hear it said of me that I am disagreeable and cross-grained. Do not believe it. Let me but have my own way exactly in everything, with all about me precisely as I wish, and a sunnier or pleasanter creature does not exist.
> —THOMAS CARLYLE.

Garden memories. I remember how proud I used to be, when I gardened more or less, of my sweet corn. Next to going out to pick peas while the dew was still on them, it's something when you come across an ear just ready to pluck, and then another and another until your basket is full and you find your way back through the tall stalks to husk and gloat over the harvest. A harvest—if you're a good gardener—that comes in succession all summer long, until the "killing" frosts. And then it's all over until another year. But one more word: corn at its best ought to be picked just before you are wanting it. For boiled corn, the water should be boiling like crazy, a teaspoon of sugar, and don't cook it to death. But to make a porch supper seem like a corn roast, we have grilled the fresh-picked corn under the broiler.

GRILLED CORN

Preheat the broiler. Boil the corn two minutes, drain. Have a dish of melted butter or margarine handy, brush the ears of corn, arrange the ears on a broiling rack as near the heat as possible. As the corn browns, turn the ears over and brush with more butter generously from time to time. This gives the ears an old-fashioned corn-roast flavor. When each ear is golden brown, lift onto a hot platter, sprinkle with salt and serve immediately. Corn may be done over an outdoor grill, if you have an outdoor grill.

You like it or you don't. Our most controversial vegetable is garlic. You like it in salads and a lot of other dishes, or you can't abide it no matter what. Personally, I can take it or leave it alone. But there is something special to be said for it, when it comes to garlic bread. And toasted crusty rolls with garlic are even better—more crust.

TOASTED ROLLS WITH GARLIC BUTTER

Cut crusty French rolls diagonally into 4 or 5 slices, but do not cut all the way through the roll. Separate the slices so you can butter and garlic them and still have a roll. Grate 1 small clove garlic into ¼ pound softened butter. Cream together well. Spread the garlic butter between the slices. Place the rolls on a cooky sheet and heat about 8 minutes in a moderate oven, 350° F. This amount of garlic butter will spread 8 rolls or a loaf of French bread.

Something like a "slump." Old-fashioned as wire bustles and flannel petticoats, the "slumps" and the "grunts" have had their day. But—like the rose that, called by any other name, would smell as sweet—these old dishes, touched up with a little modern passementerie, are still grand and good eating. They may not follow the old pattern exactly—in fact, they are generally better than the originals. And to prove it, this country supper winds up with one of these creations. Nowadays it's "pudding," and no more unimaginative or duller-edged word was ever coined. The genius who thought up "grunt" and "slump" and such expressive names for what we call "pudding" was inspired. Pity is that she's forever lost to us. And not even a simple stone records her life or notes her passing. Belatedly I offer praise to her memory—unknown though she may be.

PEACH-AND-RASPBERRY BATTER PUDDING

Peel and slice enough ripe peaches to make 5 cups. Wash and pick over enough fresh red raspberries to make 3 cups. Alternate the peaches and raspberries in 6 small glass ovenproof baking dishes, or bake in one larger casserole. Sprinkle ½ teaspoon lemon juice over each. Mix 1 cup sugar with 1 tablespoon cornstarch and ⅛ teaspoon salt and sprinkle over the top of the fruit. Cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., until the mixture is hot and begins to bubble—about 20 minutes. Remove the cover and drop 4 teaspoons of the following batter over the top of each:

Batter: Beat 1 egg until light and then gradually add ½ cup sugar and 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. Fold in 1 cup flour which has been sifted with 1 teaspoon baking powder and a pinch of salt. Moisten with 3 tablespoons milk and beat until smooth.

Bake uncovered another 25 minutes at the same heat until the batter browns and is done. Serve while still warm or cool with or without cream.

Flags will be flying. The Fourth of July—soon it will have come and gone. This year as never before—not since the republic came into being—we should, I think, raise the flag from every housetop. Call the bands to play their loudest, send the rockets twice as high and salute the Father of his Country with blunderbuss and cannon. And all to drown out the voices that would belittle and besmear us. And forever silence them while we remember the great men and gallant women whose faith and vision are our most precious heritage.

THE END

Printed in U. S. A.

UGUST, 1950

Ladies' Home

JOURNAL

25 CENTS

The Magazine Women Believe In

PUBLIC LIBRARY
BR.
URLINGAME
LIC LIBRARY

Belles on Their Toes—beginning the amusing sequel to Cheaper by the Dozen—It's even funnier

Hidden taxes take One Third of everyone's $50-a-week wage—A real life story

Marion Crawford concludes her story of The Little Princesses

Continuing Tell Me Doctor, Baby's First Year, Man in the House

Undiscovered

AMERICAN BEAUTIES

SALLY FRASER
Canoga Park, California
. . . and you should hear her too.

JOURNAL
CONTENTS
AUGUST, 1950

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HESSER

Sally and swing

From time to time the JOURNAL cover features an Undiscovered American Beauty—a girl who has never previously modeled for money. Nominations are submitted by photographers throughout the country.

We only wish we could supply a sound track with this month's cover, for Sally Fraser has a fine high soprano which has already won her a musical scholarship in the Los Angeles high-schools competition. Sally began her singing with a church solo, did so well she began taking lessons, and won two voice contests her first year.

Sally came to the warm San Fernando Valley from one of the coldest states in the country: North Dakota. Born there in the grim winter of 1932, she lived awhile in Minneapolis, then came with her folks to California eight years ago. Judging from her own fat scrapbook, it has been a very pleasant life. There are valentines, report cards bearing straight A's, football programs, pressed flowers, party hats—and pictures of boys (see below for the most recent). There is also a little essay entitled Analysis of a Kiss, which sounds as though it were based on firsthand research.

Sally is fond of skiing, dancing, swimming and swinging (above). Her favorite books are historical novels and "humorous biographies." We hope she likes this one. She was discovered for the JOURNAL by two of her neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Hesser, who have a studio in Canoga Park. Just shows you can't tell about beauty—it may jump right over your back fence.

Sally and friend

Complete-in-One-Issue Novel

A Summer in the Country . . . Anne Homer Warner 40

Fiction

You Can't Dance Alone . . . Ruth Lamson 36
Last Day of All . . . Margaret and Leslie Gordon Barnard 38
If Only it Were Yesterday . . . Mary Roberts Rinehart 52

Special Features

A Primer on the Cold War . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
The General Was a Lady . . . G. M. White 11
Baby's First Year . . . Photos by Wayne Miller 26
Tell Me Doctor—No. 7 . . . Henry B. Safford, M.D. 31
Belles on Their Toes (First part of three) Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey 34
The Little Princesses (Conclusion) . . . Marion Crawford 42
The Hidden Tax Bill on $50 a Week . . . 54
There's a Man in the House . . . Harlan Miller 55
How America Lives:
It's All in the Family . . . Earl and Dorothy Selby 107

General Features

Making Marriage Work . . . Clifford R. Adams 5
Our Readers Write Us . . . 6
Under-Cover Stuff . . . Bernardine Kiely 14
What is a Boy? (The Sub-Deb) . . . Edited by Maureen Daly 23
Diary of Domesticity . . . Gladys Taber 24
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town . . . 33
Ask Any Woman . . . Marcelene Cox 131
My Child Won't Eat . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 133
This is a Sand-Blaster . . . Munro Leaf 137
Veterans Administration Hospital . . . at Downey, Illinois . . . 150
Volunteers Are a Link With the Community. Margaret Hickey 150

Fashion

Fashion and Your First Job . . . Wilhela Cushman 46
Fashion Portraits . . . Wilhela Cushman 48
The Journal's Little Gem of a Wardrobe . . . Nora O'Leary 50

Food and Homemaking

Cool Colorful Collection . . . Ann Batchelder 56
Line a Day . . . Ann Batchelder 58
Quick and Easys for Two . . . Louella G. Shouer 80
Packed Up to Go . . . Margaret Davidson 120
Conversation Piece . . . Ruth Mills Teague 140

Interior Decoration

Romantic Southern Antiques . . . Henrietta Murdock 116

Poetry

Secrets . . . W. H. Auden 63
Hunters . . . Joan Aucourt 71
Summer Dusk . . . Genneva Dickey Watson 82
August Afternoon . . . Eunice Mildred LonCoske 95
Rendezvous in a Bus Station . . . Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 102
For Anne Boleyn . . . Elizabeth McFarland 124
Slim Cunning Hands . . . Walter de la Mare 128
The Heart Remembers . . . Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman 135
Pot of Gold . . . Ruth Mary DuBois 145

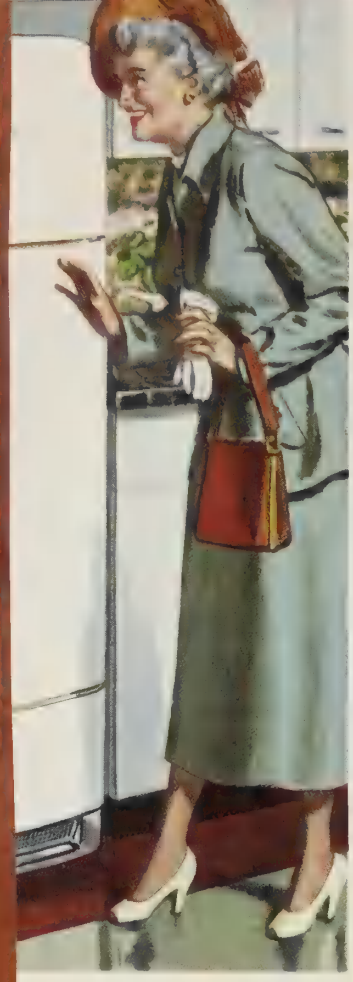
Cover Photograph by Eve and Edwin Bower Hesser

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 15 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.
Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published the last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.



The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $4. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U.S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

st and Greatest Dishwashing Sensation
AT NEW DREFT
Big ures
0% MORE WASHING POWER ERENCE
ng new suds in action. New with the power to wash 40%
w, extra value!
reft washes dishes! So clean n without wiping!
e vanishes. New Dreft cuts an any soap in the world.
W BEAUTY
LDNESS FOR HANDS
FFERENCE
mazing new beauty mildness!
eft suds ever!
ater! How clean and "grease-eft suds are different in the world!
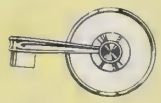
sink is clean!
irt. No scum.
New! Milder!
dreft
THAN THE MILDEST SOAP FLAKES

Look what's new Outside!

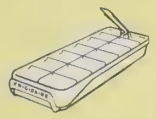


Look what's new Inside!

You can't match a FRIGIDAIRE!

LOOK AT THE CHOICE you have of Frigidaire Refrigerators. There are 3 types, 4 series, 10 sizes—all packed with new features. You may pick one with a separate Locker-Top as shown, or a full-width Super-Freezer Chest or a colder-than-ever Super-Freezer. Some models have Cold-Wall Cooling—of a new, improved type. Some have Lifetime Porcelain exterior finish—others have Durable Dulux. Sizes range from 4 to 17 cubic feet—frozen storage capacity from 15 to 70 lbs. But all models are powered by the new, more-powerful Meter-Miser. Whether you decide upon a new Imperial, De Luxe, Master or Standard model—you can't match a Frigidaire!

YOU GET NEW BEAUTY



1. New Styling Inside and Out—by Raymond Loewy.
2. New! Lustrous Ice-Blue, Gold and White Beauty—sets a new standard for smartness.
3. New! Target Door Latch—finger-tip action—locks cold in.

4. New Streamlined design—finished in Lifetime Porcelain or Durable Dulux.

YOU GET NEW CONVENIENCE

5. Extra Storage Space—in less kitchen space.
6. Extra-Large Frozen Storage Space—holds from 15 to 70 lbs.
7. Double-Easy Quickube Ice Trays—trays slide out—cubes released instantly—no melting.

8. New Aluminum Rust-proof Shelves—adjustable, sliding—more space between shelves.
9. New, Extra-Deep Porcelain Hydrators—for fruits and vegetables.
10. New Meat Storage Drawer with Plastic Trivet—in Master models.
11. New Full-Width Plastic Chill Drawer—in De Luxe models—for meat and ice cube storage, quick chilling of beverages.
12. New Handy Plastic Basket Drawer—for small items—in De Luxe and Imperial models.

YOU GET NEW ECONOMY—NEW DEPENDABILITY

13. New Improved Meter-Miser—makes more cold with no more current.
14. New Improved Insulation—keeps more cold in—more heat out.
15. Improved Cabinet—sturdy, one-piece steel, rugged—for longer life.
16. Freon-12 Refrigerant—developed by Frigidaire and General Motors.
17. New Improved Cold-Wall Cooling—in De Luxe and Imperial models.
18. New Sealed-in Mechanism covered by 5-Year Protection Plan.

This emblem on a Frigidaire refrigerator is your assurance of safe cold from top to bottom, lasting beauty, utmost convenience, proved economy features—plus General Motors dependability and Frigidaire's 30 years' experience in building more than 12 million refrigerating units.

e Imperial!

new styling by world-aymond Loewy—sleek new golden-highlighted ote the distinctive Target ch with finger-tip action -to-clean Durable Dulux stays snowy-white year perial Model shown is ic foot size.

Behind the upper door of this combination refrigerator-food freezer you'll find the separate Locker-Top—with frozen storage capacity up to 70 lbs.—with plenty of Double-Easy Quickube Ice Trays!

In the compartment below you'll discover one innovation after another—including adjustable and sliding aluminum shelves, deeper porcelain twin Hydrators that you can stack, a plastic Basket-Drawer, and Frigidaire's new and lustrous Ice-Blue and golden interior trim! Frigidaire's new, improved Cold-Wall cooling with the amazing Refrig-o-plate means constant and uniform cold throughout the lower compartment and proper moisture control! See these and all the other reasons why you can't match a Frigidaire . . . whichever model you choose!

FRIGIDAIRE

America's No. 1 Refrigerator

See your Frigidaire Dealer for Proof! Look for his name in your Classified Telephone Directory. Or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio. In Canada, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Refrigerators • Electric Ranges • Automatic Washer • Clothes Dryer
Electric Ironer • Food Freezers • Electric Dehumidifier • Electric Water Heaters
Air Conditioners • Kitchen Cabinets and Sinks

Making Marriage Work

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph. D., Pennsylvania State College
Department of Psychology

A divorcee, now discontented with her new marriage, writes to her former husband: "I am crushed and defeated by the mess I've made of three lives. How can I go on?"

Learning From Failure

AFTER seven years of marriage to Frank, a physician, Margaret divorced him and married Bill, who had been their next-door neighbor. Six months later Frank received this letter:

"I know I shouldn't write to you. After all, Bill is my husband now, and all my loyalty should go to him. But our marriage hasn't brought me the happiness I hoped for. If only I could remember just the bad things about you, instead of the good. Bill tries to make me happy—but I shouldn't have married him or anyone else until what you did, felt and thought meant nothing to me. I am crushed and defeated by the mess I've made of three lives. How can I go on?

"MARGARET."

As her letter clearly shows, the divorce which ended Margaret's first marriage failed to solve her marriage problem. Although she thinks of her present marriage as a new situation, actually her unhappiness now stems from the very source which plagued her life with Frank—her own unstable personality.

Like many divorced women, Margaret thought that by changing partners she would escape her problem. Actually, she sought the impossible—escape from herself. Divorce rarely provides escape. And, like marriage, it never reforms anybody. Most marriage failures grow out of personality maladjustment, and divorce often aggravates maladjustment instead of relieving it.

Margaret's regrets seem mere self-indulgence. Her experience will be valuable only if she learns from it. If she can analyze her past behavior honestly, perhaps she can avoid repeating previous mistakes. But to brood about what might have been prevents making the best of what is.

The divorce must be accepted as final. The ex-wife who feels she still has a rightful place in her former husband's life—because of children or financial matters, or other ties—is handicapping herself as well as him. No real adjustment to the new life is possible while trying to preserve remnants of the old.

The first step for any divorced wife is to cultivate a realistic attitude—toward her previous marriage, toward a possible second marriage, and particularly toward herself. She cannot afford the attitude of helpless victim. For until she understands where and how she failed in her first marriage, she is only likely to repeat the disastrous pattern in her second.

(Continued on Page 18)

Now Try the World's Latest and Greatest Dishwashing Sensation PROCTER & GAMBLE'S GREAT NEW DREFT
with 2 Big New Features

YOU will get more pleasure with the right equipment—bought at the right prices from your hometown hardware store . . . Picnic baskets, fishing tackle, vacuum bottles, softballs, tennis rackets, beach toys, baseball equipment, camping supplies, charcoal grills, camp stoves, lanterns, flashlights—whatever you need to make your outing a long-remembered event. The irha hardware retailer in your community knows and offers you the best values in outing needs. He understands your requirements—handles the kinds of merchandise you and his other neighbors will find most satisfactory!

GET OUTFITTED RIGHT

WHERE YOU SEE THIS SYMBOL OF SATISFACTION

You will find that it pays in many ways to trade at the store of this fellow-citizen — who displays the red, white and blue irha symbol of satisfaction.

1950 National Retail Hardware Association

NATIONAL AND AFFILIATED RETAIL HARDWARE ASSOCIATIONS

Our Readers Write us

Message for All Women

Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Dear Editors: Cancer killed my wife. I always felt that I was being considerate of her health and happiness in all ways—but now, thinking over the events that ended two years later in her death, I feel that I was almost criminally negligent. Knowing my wife to be a clear-thinking individual, not given to imaginary ills, I should have insisted on the doctor when she complained the first time. But weeks went by.

Finally, after an unsuccessful operation the surgeon called me in. "It's cancer in the lymph—no hope." I want to say to all women: For your sake and your loved one's sake, see a doctor at the first signs of "not feeling so well." A real doctor will not pooh-pooh the idea of examining a healthy-looking individual. Don't hesitate for lack of money. Most doctors give conscientious service regardless of money. Don't hesitate because you are afraid of what the verdict might be. If it is serious, it is going to be still more serious the longer you wait.

Sincerely yours,
(Name withheld by request.)

Cool and Contented

PHILIP SEALE

Wendy Susan Lipper

Denver, Colorado.

Dear Editors:
Of all the ads for baby food
This one should win the prize.
You see contentment in her mood
Though taken by surprise.

The milk she drinks is not from cans
Nor is it from a cow;
It is an ad for mother's milk:
Babe thrives on it—and how!

IRMA RICE MAYER, Grandmother.

Does Sex Come First?

Sanford, North Carolina.

Dear Editors: I have just read Doctor Adams' latest Making Marriage Work. We women should by now know all the answers. If there were only some way for Doctor Adams to write similar articles for the men, and then make them required reading, we should see a downward trend in the divorce rate. But I disagree with his idea that the ability of husbands and wives to harmonize their attitudes affects and is affected by their sex adjustment.

I think he has definitely put the cart before the horse. The ability to adjust sexual attitudes depends entirely on how well their attitudes have harmonized during each day, month and over the years. Most sexual experiences come at the close of the day and should be a fitting climax to the activities of husband and wife during the day. So often they aren't.

(Continued on Page 8)

FRANCO-AMERICAN MEAL HINTS

Welcome Surprise for Dinner!

BAKED STUFFED TOMATOES with GRAVY

BAKED STUFFED TOMATOES with GRAVY

6 slices bread
2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
¼ teaspoon poultry seasoning
1 can Franco-American Beef Gravy
8 medium tomatoes

Heat oven to 350° F. (moderate). Soak bread in water; squeeze dry and break into small pieces. Combine with butter, onion, salt, pepper and poultry seasoning. Remove stems from tomatoes and scoop out a small amount of the pulp. Fill with stuffing. Place in a greased shallow baking dish; and pour on Franco-American Beef Gravy; bake at 350° F. for 30 minutes. Makes 8 servings.

Summer Night Menu

Chilled Cream of Chicken Soup with Chives
Baked Stuffed Tomatoes with Gravy
(Recipe above)
Steamed Lima Beans
Corn on the Cob
Cottage Cheese and Carrot Strips
Cantaloupe
Iced Tea or Coffee

Anne Marshall

Franco-American Beef Gravy makes the meal!

Made from the juices of selected beef . . . with that genuine roasting pan flavor! Delicious served with any meat-and-potato dinner. On sandwiches. In stews. Or add it to make your own gravy s-t-r-e-t-c-h.

FOR ANY FAMILY OCCASION...

"fresh up" with Seven-Up!

BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

Sunday at the zoo! What a family day to remember—Freddie and Kay thrill to the bears' antics. And look what little brother is enjoying! Cheerful, clean-tasting 7-Up takes an active part in family fun at home . . . or anywhere. Seven-Up is so pure—so good—so completely wholesome that even the very youngest can "fresh up" just as often as they want . . . and with as much as they want, too.

Seven-Up, the all-family drink, is a part of all-family fun in millions of homes. So "fresh up" with 7-Up—the all-family drink. Order a case where you see those bright 7-Up signs.

Copyright 1950
by The Seven-Up Company

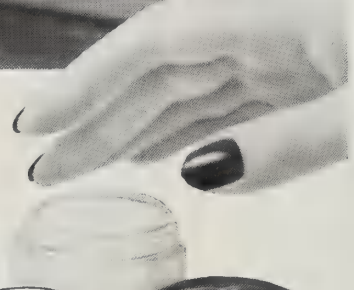
You like it . . . it likes you!

FAMILY GAME BOOKLET Family fun suggestions for youngsters and grownups! Send 20¢ in coin to FAMILY FUN, 1523 South 10th Street, St. Louis (4), Missouri, or your local Seven-Up Bottling Company.

BUY A CASE TODAY!

Best Deodorant News Ever!

New finer Mum more effective longer!



NOW CONTAINS AMAZING NEW INGREDIENT M-3—THAT PROTECTS AGAINST ODOR-CAUSING BACTERIA

New Protection! Let the magic of new Mum protect you—better, longer. For today's Mum, with wonder-working M-3, safely protects against bacteria that cause underarm perspiration odor. Mum never merely "masks" odor—simply doesn't give it a chance to start.

New Creaminess! Mum is softer, creamier than ever. As gentle as a beauty cream. Smooths on easily, doesn't cake. And Mum is non-irritating to skin because it contains no harsh ingredients. Will not rot or discolor finest fabrics.

New Fragrance! Even Mum's new perfume is special—a delicate flower fragrance created for Mum alone. This delightful cream deodorant contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Economical—no shrinkage, no waste.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Mum's protection grows and GROWS! Thanks to its new ingredient, M-3, Mum not only stops growth of odor-causing bacteria—but keeps down future bacteria growth. You actually build up protection with regular exclusive use of new Mum!

Now at your cosmetic counter!

New MUM cream deodorant

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

(Continued from Page 6)

Men have the very strange notion that all daylight disagreements can automatically be erased (like a tape recorder) when bedtime comes, and that regardless of how cruel, rude or ill-tempered they have been all day, they can go to bed at night and find a sweet, loving and responsive wife. My idea would be to build toward sex rather than to take sex in itself and build everything else to it. Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request)

H-Bomb

Rodeo, California.

Dear Editors: I think you published Lillian Gould's letter (June) in a tongue-in-cheek and hand-over-ears expectation of an explosion from indignant housewives who have found happiness. But I think I see what she means: she's merely a housewife while I'm a Homemaker.

Sincerely,
MADELINE LEAL.

Our letter editor selected this as the least explosive of the hundreds of replies to the writer of "Yes, Darling," and disappeared on a much-needed vacation.—ED.

Speaking for Thousands

Modesto, California.

Dear Editors: God bless the JOURNAL! There, I said it right out loud when the May issue arrived. What brought out this praise was Pearl Buck's feature, The Child Who Never Grew. Usually, I am content with an inward glow of pride in the wide scope and high quality of material in each new issue of the JOURNAL, but this time I wanted to be one of the first to express my praise.

Sincerely,
MRS. N. K. HOVEY.

Pearl Buck's story of her child evoked the greatest response of any single-issue feature so far this year. ED.

What Money Can't Buy

Melrose, Massachusetts.

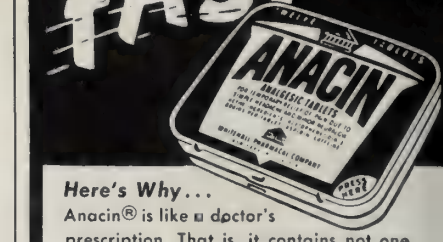
Dear Editors: I was shocked and disturbed to read that "in a poll to discover what people consider the prime requisite for happiness, money came in first by a long margin." In thinking back over my life (I am seventy-six) I find that the things that have brought me the most happiness have had nothing to do with money. Happiness is a thing of the spirit, not dependent on material things. Money can make living more comfortable, and make it possible to do more for others, and so may be one help toward happiness, but the prime requisite—no, indeed! The things that make for true happiness are summed up in two great commandments: love God, and love thy neighbor.

Yours sincerely,
AMELIA S. LORING.

Russian Navy Learns of Peril

Cohasset, Massachusetts.

Dear Editors: I quote from a letter I received from my sister living in Tokyo:



"On one of my excursions to our local dispensary, I happened to be alone in a small waiting room with three Russians, two of them army officers and one naval. The two army fellows were typical—they sat like a couple of great stone faces and never blinked an eye. The navy man, who was sitting next to me, started to read a magazine—the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, of all things! When he came to an ad for cold cream, he leaned over to me and asked me what it was. I told him and that was that. But the remarkable thing about it was that this man even spoke to me—they generally shun Americans. I was so amazed that I haven't quite got over it."

Is it possible that the JOURNAL has finally raised the Iron Curtain?

GENEVIEVE GOOD.

Robert Wood Johnson, one of this country's leading industrialists (Johnson & Johnson), once wrote us that the best way for the United States to combat communism would be to send 200,000 JOURNALS monthly to Soviet Russia for distribution. The idea had also occurred to Premier Stalin, who sternly prohibits their import to his benighted country.—ED.

RELIEVES HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS PAIN FAST

Here's Why...
Anacin® is like a doctor's prescription. That is, it contains not one but a combination of medically proved ingredients that are specially compounded to give FAST, LONG LASTING relief. Don't wait. Buy Anacin today.

Home Facial Reveals A Lovelier Complexion.

★ Cleans pore openings
★ Reduces skin blemishes
★ Works wonders with tired lines in face

If you long for a lovelier, alluring complexion give yourself a home facial tonight wit Hopper® White Clay Pack. You'll enjoy th wonderful sensation — a feeling of freshnes a delicate, supple complexion such as you ma never have known before. Hopper White Cla Pack cleans pore openings, reduces ski blemishes, helps ease tired lines in your fac refreshes and revitalizes your skin. At dru and cosmetic counters.

"No More TIRED, DULL ACHE because of Varicose Veins!"

writes Mrs. Henry Niedorf, Walcott, Iowa

If you suffer from the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins or swollen legs, you, too, may find new relief, new beauty with Bauer & Black fashioned Elastic Stockings.

Made of genuine two-way stretch elastic for firm, comfortable support. Lightweight, neutral color and authentic fashioned leg and instep—they're almost invisible under sheer hose!

Ask your doctor's advice... then get Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for real relief and beauty.

At drug department and surgical store

Elastic STOCKINGS

A product of

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company

—WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET!—

BAUER & BLACK, Dept. W-8
2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16, Ill.

Please send me your new FREE booklet about varicose veins, "New Comfort and Relief for You."

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State_____

Hepped on no hips! Satin elastic coming and going. Airy Veil of Youth* on the sidelines. Long featherlight hipbones to the very top of its high-waisted hug. Pink or white with touches of blue. LeGant #613. Only $10.95. Pink or white nylon taffeta and nylon marquisette bra #2299. $3.50.

Sakes alive!—$5.95! Imagine . . . all "Veil of Youth" with a special double front panel for extra tummy tucking. Only 3½ ounces at that. White with blue trim. LeGant #705. (Matching girdle #704). White lace and broadcloth strapless bra #2083. $2.00.

You don't have to take pains to be pretty, precious!

Be magically comfy in Warner's "Veil of Youth" fabrics . . .

Up to now this weigh-nothing, do-everything elastic was measured out like cloth of gold for only the most expensive girdles.

Now, thanks to production magic, Warner's has worked a miracle. Put this precious net into dozens of new "slimmers." Priced them to fit the tiniest explain account. Planned many of them to fit just you in your very own 3-Way-Sizes.

1. Your Warner's is your length . . . whether you're a short, medium, long or extra long.
2. . . . and your hip-size . . . whether you have straight, average or full hips.
3. . . . and your control . . . whether you like a little or a lot.

Nifty for $7.50! Satin elastic fore and aft. "Veil of Youth" and light featherbones hold that hipline. Two-inch elastic top band. Pink or white etched with blue. LeGant #653. White broadcloth bra #2076. $2.00.

Satin for flattenin'. Two way-One way stretch—unexpectedly $5.95. Satin elastic front and back. "Veil of Youth" sides. Pink or white. LeGant #724. Cup-stitched white satin bra #2227. $1.50.

Pantie partner. No chance for a hip-slip. Exactly the same as LeGant #724 at left, except that it keeps you even more attractive when you're active. LeGant #725. $7.50. Pink or white cotton bra #2290. $1.50.

WARNER'S®
3-Way-Sized Foundations and Bras

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT® · A'LURE® · STA-UP-TOP® · "FREE-LIFT" WARNERETTE®

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., The Warner Bros. Co., New York 16, Chicago 6, San Francisco 8

Show the world a lovelier complexion—with your very first cake of Camay!

Mrs. Albert Malekoff
the former Jane Kasmer of Union City, N. J.

The most wonderful things can happen when your skin is soft and smooth! And your skin can be lovelier—really lovelier, with your first cake of Camay! Just change to regular care—and use Camay and Camay alone.

Never let a lesser soap touch your skin. You'll have a fresher, clearer, actually younger-looking complexion—with your first cake of Camay!

Camay—All That A Beauty Soap Should Be!

Where in the world will you find a finer beauty soap than Camay? It's so mild and gentle—so quick with its rich, creamy lather. And no other soap has ever quite captured the flattering fragrance of Camay. Yes—Camay gives you the finest kind of complexion care—your very first cake can bring a lovelier complexion!

THIS CAMAY BRIDE WON A LOVELIER SKIN AND A VERY HANDSOME HUSBAND!

Courtship in Hipboots! Even a trout stream can set the scene for romance—when one of the anglers has a Camay complexion like Jane's! She says: "Camay is my most treasured beauty aid. That creamy Camay lather has such gentle ways with my skin!"

Honeymoon on Wheels! Virginia's magnificent Luray Caverns was just one of the exciting stops on Jane and Albert's auto trip through the South. And Camay went along in Jane's kit! She says: "My first cake of Camay brought me new skin beauty. It can do the same for you!"

Camay--the soap of beautiful women

Ladies' Home
JOURNAL
Anne Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
Editors

The General Was a Lady

THERE is an army everybody knows, though few know much about it. It is the world's best-loved army, for it practices a faith in service to God and man that millions aspire to but few dare. In its arsenal is a force far more powerful than atomic energy, for it is as unconquerable as the dream of man, as lasting on this earth as human life. It marches beyond that momentary span, into whatever crude design mere mortals can hold of the eternal and the divine. It is an army with an idea. It consists mostly of women!

Celebrating its seventieth anniversary in the United States this year, the Salvation Army marks a life span of service that commands the deep respect of even those who smile at its symbolic street-corner devotions. The Salvation Army operates one of the largest chains of restaurants in the world, one of the largest chains of hotels, hostels and shelters, and quietly assists the needy through its 229,207 volunteer women workers. It provides a beacon of hope for forgotten men in the "Boweries" and "Skid Rows" of the nation; it cares for and rehabilitates thousands of unmarried mothers; it operates foster homes for children and builds better Americans through its boys' clubs. Gen. William Booth, its founder, summarized the motivation of the Salvation Army in a famous one-word Christmas message: "Others."

In 1855, Catherine Mumford, who was to become Mrs. General Booth, advocated the ministry of women in long letters to her fiancé. He was against it, but after being married to Catherine for five years he changed his mind. At the age of thirty Mrs. Booth began to preach and she preached for thirty years. Of their eight children it was Evangeline, a charming, intelligent athlete, who was to become, in 1934, the first—and only—woman General of the Salvation Army.

A book, General Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army (Scribner's, 1948), reveals the exciting story of her life. As commander of the army in the U. S., she planned and directed the program of help to the doughboys of World War I, for which President Wilson conferred upon her the Distinguished Service Medal. She was awarded an honorary degree of Master of Arts from Tufts College in 1921; in 1939 she received an honorary Doctor of Laws from Columbia University. She was received in Buckingham Palace by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, and told of Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret singing her song, The World for God. Evangeline Booth's generalship, like the spirit of the Salvation Army, was one of accomplishment and adventure. Her biographer, P. W. Wilson, concludes: "The Army is now, as eighty years ago when Evangeline Booth was an infant, one of the world's indispensables." It is an army people should know more about and support freely. —G. M. WHITE.

A Primer on the "Cold War"

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

QUESTION: What is a "cold war"?

ANSWER: This odious phrase is used to describe a condition of division and enmity in which opponents are struggling with each other by every means except an armed clash, each meanwhile arming with ever more powerful weapons in anticipation of an attack from the other, and in the hope of deterring, through fear, such an attack.

Q.: How does such a condition arise?

A.: It arises when each believes, correctly or incorrectly, that the other has ambitions incompatible with its own security and way of life.

Q.: Is that belief, under present conditions, justifiable?

A.: Apparently so. Soviet communists have always maintained, and apparently sincerely, that there will be no security for the Soviet Union so long as any powerful part of the world is capitalist, which, in modern Soviet terms, means non-Stalinist. The Soviet Union is therefore compelled, by its basic theory, to indulge in a perpetual struggle, by all means compatible with its own security, with the noncommunist world. The growing conviction of other nations and cultures, also sincere, that this is the case has led to the present world alignments.

Q.: How do these alignments shape up?

A.: Two great powers, each with weaker states who have voluntarily or involuntarily associated themselves with the stronger, face each other. One is the Cominform bloc led by Russia; the other the Atlantic Pact countries, led by the United States. Some countries, such as Turkey, Japan and Korea, are associated with the Atlantic countries without being members of the Pact.

Q.: Is the whole world thus divided?

A.: No. In Europe, Sweden and Switzerland are neutral, and Finland, profiting by Sweden's neutrality, manages to maintain a degree of independence despite the fact that she is in the Soviet orbit. Jugoslavia, though communist, also stands aloof. In the Far East, India, while anticommunist, refuses to take sides. So does Israel, in the Middle East.

Q.: Which side is stronger?

A.: In man power, and because of its interior world position, embracing a contiguous land mass in the heart of the Eastern Hemisphere, the Soviet bloc is much the stronger. It already includes nearly a quarter of the world's population. The Atlantic Pact countries and their associates are not contiguous. They are separated from one another geographically, and from the United States, in particular, by oceans. Their armies cannot quickly be mobilized for a common march. If the Soviets and the other Red armies decided to make a surprise invasion of any part of Europe or Asia they could do so, and then, if resisted, would have to be driven out. The United States and associates could not make a surprise invasion of the Soviet Union or its satellites. As far as land power is concerned, they are forced to take a defensive position only.

On the other hand, the Atlantic nations are immeasurably stronger industrially, mechanically and technologically. They can, if they wish to, outbuild the Soviet Union in every category of arms.

Q.: Which is stronger politically?

A.: This question is difficult to answer objectively. The Soviet associates, thus far, have the advantage of complete unity, but tyrannous unity. Even more than in Hitler's Reich, the "leadership principle" is in operation. Moscow dictates, and all the associates fall into line, regardless of separate national interests. In fact, Cominform associates, with the exception of the Soviet Union itself, have abandoned all sovereignty. This makes, temporarily at least, for compact, herdlike strength. The government of each is a despotic single-party dictatorship whose policies are not subject to popular criticism or consent. None can be ousted by the people.

The Atlantic Pact countries are associated as sovereign equals. Every common plan must be reached through negotiations, into which national interests introduce disagreements. The government of each has a powerful domestic opposition, seeking to frustrate some part of government policy. Often this leads to half measures and weakness.

The greatest waste we can make is that of time.
VOLTAIRE.

The Soviet Union and Cominform associates have more or less powerful fifth columns within non-Soviet countries. Composed of citizens of those countries, who directly or indirectly influence and confuse public opinion, engage in espionage and plan acts of sabotage in case of war, they are protected by the constitutional safeguards and civil liberties which Atlantic Pact nations extend to all their citizens.

The Atlantic Pact countries cannot organize similar fifth columns within the nations associated with the Soviets. Such espionage as they engage in must be of the conventional kind, and the punishment for even the suspicion of espionage, or any form of opposition, is swift and Draconic.

KNOWLEDGE of this creates great emotional and psychological uneasiness and fear in the Atlantic countries, encouraging confusing and depressing accusations, and sometimes leading governments or their opponents to take hysterical and ill-advised measures against the wrong people, thus dividing the nation.

Q.: With whom are the sympathies of most of the people of the world?

A.: The sympathies of most of the people are definitely not with the Soviet Union. No country, including Russia, has ever put a communist government (or any other dictatorship) into power by a majority vote. Without exception communists have come to power either by fomenting and winning a civil war, or by the device of the so-called "popular front," in which liberal or left-wing parties form a coalition with communists, giving communists positions of power, from which they are then able to seize the whole power. The cabinet or agency positions which they invariably seek are Public Security (police) and Justice. They then turn the police into a party power with which to capture the state. This they did openly in Czechoslovakia, and in a more gradual way in all the Cominform countries, including Russia itself. One need only imagine what cou happen in America if the FBI were head by a communist!

Q.: Has there ever been any danger of th in the Atlantic countries?

A.: There was a serious danger of it France and Italy immediately following th war, when the communist parties we represented in the governments. There always greater danger under a system proportional representation when no o party has enough votes to take full r sponsibility and must make a coalition wi others in order to govern. Then there is temptation for left-of-center parties to a sociate themselves with the communists order to obtain or stay in power.

Q.: Has this ever been attempted in th country?

A.: The party headed by Henry Wallac which entered the last national election was a coalition between left-wing Ne Dealers and the Communist Party.

Q.: So the sympathies of the people of t world are with the United States and t Atlantic countries?

A.: That, in my opinion, does not follo Soviet propaganda in behalf of communi policy has been so unsuccessful that t Soviets have practically abandoned it, pr ferring to stir up strife on other ground But Soviet anti-American propaganda h been much more successful. This prop ganda has assailed American atomic polic American "dollar imperialism," and Ame ican "warmongering." Sometimes Sovi propaganda has been greatly aided b American braggadocio, the large amount war talk which appears in our press, the o tentatious display of wealth abroad by bu ness interests that ha profited by Marshall A and too much emphasis American propaganda the high standard of li ing in this country. my opinion it is not go domestic or foreign pro aganda for President Truman to sa as he twice has done, that he would, necessary, "use the atom bomb again." T atom bomb is universally hated and fear and it would be wiser, as well as mo moral, to publicize on every occasion t offer in the Baruch Plan. There is more w talk in America than anywhere else in t world; and by and large the poor do n like the rich, nor are they interested in standard of living they cannot share. In number of international human problem we are seriously failing. Millions of peop in the non-Soviet world are still living camps, as displaced persons, and some these, who originally fled from Cominfor countries, are returning home, thorough disillusioned with western promises. O such person spreading his own story word of mouth is worth a score of hir communist agents. No sufficiently vigo ous, energetic or adequate program f permanently resettling the homeless h been launched by the non-Soviet world.

Q.: Where are the most dangerous area

A.: In Europe the most critical area Germany, because of the division of t country. If, however, Western Germa and France succeed in joining their ec nomic resources, the European moveme will grow and attract the rest of Germa The other critical areas are the Midd East and Southeast Asia. The former nee great economic reconstruction to solve t problem of Arab refugees from Israel, a narrow the shocking gap between the fe rich and the appalling poverty of the tee ing millions.

Q: Can we win the cold war?

A.: If by winning is meant the uncond tional surrender of the Soviet Union, or t conversion of the whole world to the Ame ican pattern, I do not think so. Or if t Soviets mean, by winning, that they will c tain world mastery, I do not think they c win, either, but will inevitably bring abo a hot war.

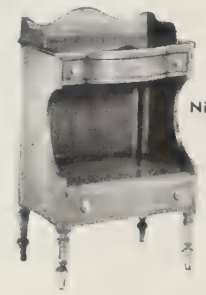
The cold war can end only when all go ernments determine to live, and let a

(Continued on Page 134)

Goodness!

You say you've never tasted KRAFT Mayonnaise!

Try Kraft Mayonnaise on Salads ...try it in Sandwiches, too!



Chances are you'll like Kraft Mayonnaise even better than the kind you're using now. For Kraft's is true mayonnaise at its finest . . . satiny smooth, superbly rich, most exquisite in flavor. A master blend of really choice ingredients, this mayonnaise has a wonderfully flattering flavor, flavor that does wonders for everything it's served with. Do try Kraft's soon . . . on salads, in sandwiches, with seafoods. You'll see why it's the choice of discriminating women.

For easy, elegant parties...

Everybody loves "serve yourself" parties. They're so friendly, so easy. Yes, and they can be elegant, too! Shine up your best tray or platter... arrange your salad-sandwich makings with an eye to shape and color . . . and serve them with luxurious Kraft Mayonnaise. Compliments guaranteed.

A master blend of really choice ingredients true mayonnaise at its finest!

Night Stand
$56.50

Night Stand
$41.50

Lady's Desk
$80.50

■ Prices F.O.B. Louisville

WILLETT
SOLID Wildwood
CHERRY

NOW your bedroom in

Lovely Solid Cherry

FROM THE ELSWICK COLLECTION

Mirror
$21.50

Chest
$124.50

150 years ago, as the great days of 18th century cabinetmaking were coming to an end, artisans fashioned exquisitely graceful pieces like these for the fine homes of the land.

Today, you can have pieces like these, fashioned with time-consuming care by the most skilled cabinetmakers of our generation—in the best of all American cabinet woods, SOLID wild cherry, well seasoned and finely turned. You'll love the age-ripened color, the lovely details; you'll love the modest prices* too.

America's largest maker of solid maple and cherry furniture for living room, dining room and bedroom.

For instance, all the pieces illustrated in the photograph above cost approximately $279. Also in open stock.*

CONSIDER H. WILLETT, INC., LOUISVILLE 11, KENTUCKY

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

PHOTO BY GEORGE KARGER—PIX INC.

When Jean Arthur enters as Peter Pan, old hearts grow young.

PETER Pan is a theater treat for all ages, played so winsomely, as it is now, by Jean Arthur. Maybe because it reminds us of our own childhood, maybe because it is all that we like most to believe about childhood. But in a world of dialectic materialism, all we can say is, "Thank God for James Barrie!"

●

The little Princesses, you remember, used to love the Doctor Dolittle stories. Now the eleventh and last of the series is about to be published: DOCTOR DOLITTLE AND THE GREEN CANARY, which Hugh Lofting wrote and illustrated before he died.

And speaking of books for the young —— A BOOK OF CHILDREN'S LITERATURE, edited by Lillian Hollowell, is a contribution of inestimable value. Here is the world of stories—fairy tales, animal stories, fables, myths, hero tales, down to present-day realistic stories. Poetry from Mother Goose to Hilda Conkling. Fascinating facts that children delight in, like a list of gods and goddesses, Greek, Roman, Norse, with their titles and characteristics. Short biographies of authors. . . . Teachers would do well to look into it for school (it's a two-volume, expensive work); librarians also; and parents who could make it a Christmas present to all the children, because it is such an excellent source for reading aloud. Its thoughtful, meaty introduction is exclusively for grownups.

■

"A happy marriage," says André Maurois, "is a long conversation that always seems too short." Maurois is married to Simone de Caillavet, who as a child was admired by Proust, and who is likewise the daughter of the Madame de Caillavet who "made" Anatole France (the one who used to lead him to his desk every day after lunch, and who arranged Sunday salons so that the right people could listen to his extraordinarily witty

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I'm not grouchy. I just can't think of anything nice to say."

That Heavenly Feeling

THE FIRST NAME IN TEXTILES PRESENTS THE LAST WORD IN SHEETS

THAT HEAVENLY FEELING: Spin the softness of a fleecy white cloud with the silken smoothness of a rose petal... weave in the cool caress of a summer night's breeze... finish with the freshness of a morning in May... and you will have captured the exquisite new texture of Bibb Combed Percale Sheets.

These new and lovelier sheets are made of fine, long staple cotton, extra combed until only the long, strong, lustrous fibers remain. Amazingly strong for extra long wear... divinely light and easy to launder.

74 years of leadership in textile craftsmanship attests the superb quality of Bibb Sheets. No finer muslin sheets are made than Bibb Lady Baltimore and Bibb Kennesaw. These economy-luxury muslins are smoother, softer and give amazing long wear.

Such wonderful values! Until you see the snowy-white beauty, feel the exquisite texture of Bibb Sheets, you will not believe that such fine quality sheets can be bought so thriftily. Whether you prefer the finest combed percales or budget-saving muslins, it will pay you to insist upon Bibb Sheets.

All Bibb Sheets Exceed American Standard Specifications

BIBB
The First Name in TEXTILES

Bibb Sheets
WITH THAT HEAVENLY FEELING

Bibb Combed Percale
Lady Baltimore, Type 140
Kennesaw, Type 128

BIBB MANUFACTURING COMPANY • MACON, GEORGIA ▪ NEW YORK ▪ CHICAGO • PHILADELPHIA ▪ AKRON

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

LESTER

Betsy Ross Spinet

COMPARE this quality piano with any other Spinet. Dollar for dollar, you will find that it is unquestionably your best piano buy.

Examine the careful construction . . . listen to the lovely tone . . . try the responsive touch . . . check the many exclusive Lester features. You will agree that the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet is the perfect instrument for your home.

Dampp-Chaser equipped for regulated moisture control . . . a plus value offered only by Lester.

Priced from $545.00; model pictured $655.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa. Your dealer will arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc., builders of fine pianos since 1888.

ONE name quality price

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

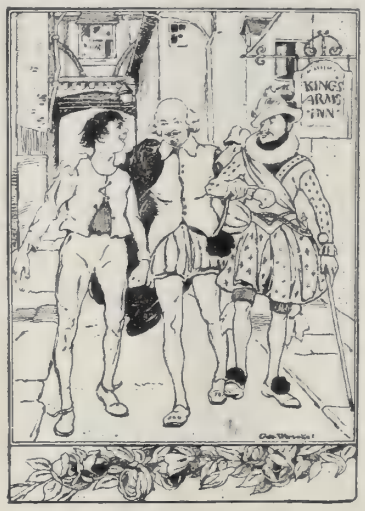
Name

Address

City

Zone No. State LHJ-5L

Foreign Sales Representatives H. R. ASTLETT & CO. 27 William St., New York 5, N. Y.



SOLD BY AMERICA'S FOREMOST PIANO DEALERS

(Continued from Page 14)

conversation). In the dedication of CRAINQUEBILLE, France acknowledges his debt to her: "To Madame de Caillavet, this book which I should not have written without her help, for without her help I should write no books."

•

SHAKESPEARE OF LONDON, by Marchette Chute, is far more than a current book. This is the best biography of Shakespeare ever written, in the opinion of most critics, and will doubtless outlive us all. This is Shakespeare as his contemporaries saw him. He was once life-size, as the author says, and this is her attempt at a life-sized portrait. She has used only contemporary documents, with one exception, and that is dated 1635, nineteen years after Shakespeare's death, and was written by the last survivor of the original group that worked with Shakespeare in the theater.

So worthy a friend! The Bard of Avon flanked by cronies.

This is a fascinating book bristling with theater news from the old Globe, with gossip about busy London of that day, with close-ups of Queen Elizabeth and her Court, and emerging from it all, William Shakespeare himself, natural, modest, very intelligent, and so worthy a friend! If you love Shakespeare—and who does not?—you will hold this book close to your heart.

Incidentally, Marchette Chute is one of three sisters, all tall, young, slender, and all three successful writers. (Look for stories in The Saturday Evening Post every now and then, signed B. J. Chute, usually about policemen or prize fighters. These are written by sister Joy, pretty, feminine, gay.) This summer Marchette and Joy are in England with their mother. While Marchette visits St. Helen's, Shakespeare's parish church in Bishopsgate, still miraculously intact, Joy goes to Scotland Yard with a personal letter to its chief, Sir Harold Scott, from the New York police force.

•

SUNRISE TO SUNSET is a good historical novel of Troy, New York, in the 1830's. Here are mill girls living in a factory dormitory, getting up before dawn, working for sixteen hours, and—when their strength holds out still getting a tang out of life. They wear a ribbon when they can buy one, and flirt when a good-looking macaroni comes their way. Author Samuel Hopkins Adams knows his upstate New York history and way of life, and paints a romantic story against the black pages of its labor exploitation.

Peg's pup upsets trash...

and to Peg it's a dog's life! She has just finished vacuuming that rug, and now she must lug out the cleaner again. "Drat that dog!" says Peg.

So does Meg's...

but Meg is smart. She has a handy Bissell® for quick clean-ups, and saves her vacuum for heavy periodic cleaning. "It's easier with both!" says Meg. "Easy on me, too!" says the pup.

Only BISSELL has "BISCO-MATIC"* brush action

You don't need to bear down on the handle, at all! This miracle-action brush adjusts itself instantly to any thickness of rug. Picks up dirt with an easy glide, even under beds and chairs.

New Bissell Sweepers with "Bisco-matic" Brush Action as low as $6.95. Illustrated: The "Vanity" at $8.95.
Prices a little more in the West.

BISSELL SWEEPERS

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Company
Grand Rapids 2, Michigan

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Bissell's full spring controlled bristle.

Given to you... IF YOU JOIN THE BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB NOW

AND BUY AS FEW AS FOUR SELECTIONS A YEAR

A TREASURY OF EARLY AMERICAN HOMES

By Richard Pratt

250 PICTURES IN FULL COLOR WITH EXPLANATORY TEXT

AS THEY APPEARED IN THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Retail Price $12.50

ONE OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL BOOKS PUBLISHED IN MANY YEARS... This magnificent volume presents the loveliest old homes of America, from the early 17th Century in New England to the glorious houses of Natchez and Old Charleston. The volume will suggest rewarding trips; afford pleasurable armchair travel; provide countless decorating suggestions. It is an ideal volume for your library, or guest room, or a reception room.

BOOK MEASURES 11" x 14" (SLIGHTLY LARGER THAN THIS PAGE)

Begin your membership with ANY OF THESE RECENT SELECTIONS

HE LITTLE PRINCESSES....by Marion Crawford
Price (to members only) $3.25

HE WALL.....by John Hersey
Price (to members only) $3.60

OHN ADAMS AND THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION
by Catherine Drinker Bowen
Price (to members only) $3.85

THE GRAND ALLIANCE....by Winston Churchill
Price (to members only) $4.00

COMES THE COMRADE!.....by Alexandra Orme
and INCREDIBLE TALE.....by Gerald W. Johnson
(DOUBLE SELECTION)
Combined price (to members only) $3.90

THE EGYPTIAN.....by Mika Waltari
Price (to members only) $3.35

THE MATURE MIND.....by H. A. Overstreet
Price $2.95

THE PEABODY SISTERS OF SALEM
by Louise Hall Tharp
Price $4.00

As a member YOU MAY BUY AS FEW AS FOUR BOOKS A YEAR . . .
YOU BUY ONLY SELECTIONS YOU INTEND TO BUY ANYWAY . . . YOU USUALLY PAY LESS FOR THEM
. . . YOU SHARE IN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF BOOK-DIVIDENDS

OUR CHOICE IS WIDE: In addition to the monthly elections, the Club makes available Special Editions f widely-discussed books. Thus your choice is wide—rom 25 to 30 books a year. You receive a careful escription of each selection and if you think it is a ook you would not enjoy, you send back a form lways provided) specifying some other book you ay want. Or you may simply say: "Send me nothing."

VHAT YOU PAY . . . AND HOW: You simply pay he special members' price for each selection you buy, which is usually lower than the regular retail price. bill is mailed with each book you indicate you ant. (A small charge is added to cover postage and ailing expenses.)

OOK-DIVIDEND PLAN . . . WHAT IT IS: After our first purchase, with every second book you buy—from among the Club selections and Special Editions—you receive a Book-Dividend. This member-profit-sharing is similar to what happens in any consumer co-operative. A fixed percentage of what each member pays is set aside in a fund, which is finally invested in enormous editions of other books, and these are the Book-Dividends you receive as a member. In the past four years alone over $50,000,000 worth of free books (retail value) were distributed among members.

GOOD SENSE FOR READING FAMILIES: Why not buy from the Club the monthly selections you would buy anyway? You will usually pay less for them and you will share in the Club's Book-Dividends. You will actually get and read particular new books, which you are anxious not to miss, but which you frequently do fail to read—through oversight or procrastination.

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, Inc. A168
345 Hudson Street, New York 14, N. Y.

Please enroll me as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club. I am to receive, free, A TREASURY OF EARLY AMERICAN HOMES. This will be sent with my first purchase indicated below. Thereafter for every two monthly selections—or Special Members' Editions—I purchase from the Club, I am to receive, free, the current Book-Dividend then being distributed. I agree to purchase at least four monthly selections—or Special Members' Editions—from the Club during the first year I am a member, and I may cancel my membership any time after buying four such books from the Club.

AS MY FIRST PURCHASE PLEASE SEND ME:

_____
(Choose one of the books listed above)

Name.....
(Please Print Plainly)

Address.....

City..... Postal Zone No. (If any)..... State.....

Book prices are slightly higher in Canada, but the Club ships to Canadian members without any extra charge for duty, through Book-of-the-Month Club (Canada), Ltd.

*Trade Mark of Book-of-the-Month Club Inc., Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Big Summer Washdays on your mind?

HERE'S GOOD ADVICE: Get a new Easy Spindrier with Automatic Spin-rinse! Does a week's wash in less than one hour. Two busy tubs—one washes while the other double-rinses, then spins clothes 25% drier than a wringer. Clothes dry faster—less time on the line!

NEW "NO RINSE" DETERGENTS, women say, are made-to-order for Easy's high-speed spin-drying action. They skip the rinse, or spin-rinse for 60 seconds just to make "doubly-sure".

USE SOAP OR REGULAR DETERGENTS? Let Easy automatically spin-rinse clothes right in the spinning basket. Takes but 3 minutes and 3 gallons of warm water. All 3 ways Easy works faster, better!

NO SET TUBS NEEDED! Just roll Easy to any sink. Saves hot suds for re-use. Saves cleaning bills by doing draperies, slipcovers. Easy Washing Machine Corporation, Syracuse 1, New York.

BROUGHT UP ON A WRINGER?
This thrifty new Easy Wringer Washer is your best buy. See your Easy dealer for special summer savings now!

Get your EASY SPINDRIER now!

EVERY DAY MORE WOMEN SAY—"IT'S EASY FOR ME!"

MAKING MARRIAGE WORK

(Continued from Page 5)

If You're Shy With Men

JANE is a thoroughly nice girl whose face reflects her pleasant disposition. She enjoys helping her mother with the housework, and has herself become an expert cook. Nor are all her talents domestic, for she is a skilled pianist. When she is engaged in these familiar activities, or among her parents' friends, she is confident and at ease.

But in the company of an eligible man who might make her a good husband, poor Jane is lost. She is uncomfortable, awkward and all thumbs. She can think of nothing to say; any remark she ventures sounds stupid to her, and she blushes, hesitates and lets the conversation die.

Alone again, her face burns as she recalls her ineptitude, and she berates herself for acting this way. For she wants to get married, and she realizes she hasn't much chance of getting acquainted with a man—let alone attracting a husband—until she can control her shyness.

If you try to scrap what is permanent, it may scrap you. —GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

There's nothing abnormal about Jane. She recognizes her problem for what it is, but she doesn't know what to do about it. Worse still, she's ashamed of it, as though it were a deformity or character defect. If she only knew it, shyness is often associated with superior mentality, and many truly great people have suffered as Jane does.

If she will make the effort, Jane or any other girl can largely overcome shyness, without sacrificing natural dignity or modesty or other good traits. The effort is worth while, for though shyness is not a serious fault, it is a handicap, to the extent that it interferes with normal social life and chances of marriage.

- Start believing in yourself. Without false humility, list some of your good qualities. Merely seeing them on paper will help you believe in them. If you honestly compare your assets with those of your friends, don't you rate pretty well?
- Watch people you know who are troubled with shyness. Note that their difficulty is that they are looking at themselves instead of at others. This may help you to look outward instead of inward.
- Don't be a perfectionist, as shy people often are. Join the conversation, try the new game, take part in what's going on, even if you appear at less than your best. Nobody excels at everything—and good losers are usually popular.
- Perfect whatever skills you have. Take pride in each, whether it be driving a car, arranging flowers, or trimming a hat.
- Add to your social skills; most shy girls have too few. If the people you added protection for linens! Any man gets a lift from a snowy-white shirt. And when that shirt is made beautifully snowy-white with Clorox, the family budget gets a lift, too. For Clorox conserves costly linens . . . it's free from caustic, extra gentle on fabrics! Protect your white and color-fast cottons and linens with Clorox. They'll look good, be good for a long, long time!

(Continued on Page 21)

1

Gentler bleaching action.....

2

Greater disinfecting efficiency...

added protection for health! Protecting family health by maintaining a sanitary home is the job of the lady of the house. And in millions of homes the favorite helper is Clorox . . . the fastest-acting, most efficient disinfectant of its kind! Public health departments recommend disinfection of the Clorox type. Make cleaning with Clorox a regular health habit. Directions on label.

Copyright 1950, Clorox Chemical Co.

CLOROX AMERICA'S FAVORITE BLEACH AND HOUSEHOLD DISINFECTANT

BIG VALUES FOR LITTLE BUDGETS!

Pennies work harder

when you spend them for this light-hearted dinette set that's designed to make mealtimes merry. Yes, the table seats six with ease, opens to a hospitable 52 inches. It's topped with Daystromite, that work-sparing, hard-wearing plastic. The husky chairs are comfortably padded, and cheerily upholstered in washable Pantex "Fantasy" designed by Raymond Loewy. Look for the name "Daystrom"—and be sure of high value at low prices. Other Daystrom sets from $49.95* to $199.50*.

Set, about $69.95—in red, blue, green, yellow or grey*

Table, 2 chairs, about $64.95; with 4 chairs, about $84.95

Short of space?

Then this versatile little table has extra inches built in! Closed, it takes up little room, only 21 inches by 30. But two generous leaves snap up to give you a full 51-inch length when company comes! Every inch is washable—the Daystromite wonder top, the sleek chromed surfaces, even the Duran upholstery. At furniture and department stores, in five fiesta colors, with matching or contrasting chairs.

*Prices slightly higher in West and South

-it's DAYSTROM furniture!

Awarded the Fashion Academy Gold Medal for 1950

THE TABLES WITH THE WONDER TOP

Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N.Y.
Daystrom-Balboa Corporation, Fullerton, Calif.

TOWLE'S CRAFTSMAN
TOWLE'S FRENCH PROVINCIAL
RAMBLER ROSE GRAVY LADLE
KING RICHARD COLD MEAT FORK
TOWLE'S CANDLELIGHT
TOWLE'S OLD MASTER

Add to your TOWLE whenever you like

A TEASPOON at a time — a serving piece every so often — a place setting now and then . . . there are any number of ways of collecting your TOWLE Sterling. And don't forget gifts! Your friends enjoy giving Sterling on birthdays and other gift occasions as much as you enjoy watching your set grow and grow.

And this is important! THE TOWLE PATTERN YOU CHOOSE NOW WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR ALL OF YOUR LIFETIME — AND YOUR FAVORITE TOWLE STORE WILL BE AS NEAR AS YOUR TELEPHONE, READY AND ABLE TO SUPPLY YOU WITH THE PIECES YOU WANT.

So — choose, from the collection of beautiful TOWLE solid silver patterns, the one that is perfect for you. Let your favorite TOWLE store register your pattern, and let them work out easy payments to suit your budget. You will find that TOWLE Sterling is not expensive. A single teaspoon can cost as little as $2.95, six-piece place settings start at $24.50.

TOWLE SILVERSMITHS, NEWBURYPORT, MASSACHUSETTS

TOWLE
STERLING

There's a Towle pattern that's perfect for you

NEW INSOLE

Miracle of Foot Ease!

LIKE WALKING ON PILLOWS!

Makes Any Men's and Women's Shoes Air-Cushioned

1. Relieves Painful Callouses, Tenderness, Burning Feeling
2. Gives Feet Soft Bed to Rest Upon, Eases Pressure on Nerves of Feet
3. Cushions Sore Heels. Keeps Feet Cool in Summer, Warm in Winter
4. Washable, Sanitary

The moment you slip Dr. Scholl's AIR-PILLO INSOLES into your shoes, you experience the most delightful sensation of walking ease imaginable! Made of soft LATEX FOAM (millions of tiny air cells), these insulating, air-ventilating insoles cushion your feet from toe to heel.

ONLY 60¢ A PAIR!

In Sizes and Colors for All Styles of Shoes

Dr. Scholl's AIR-PILLO INSOLES are made for men in White and for women in White, Red, Black, Brown, Gray, Green to harmonize with open toe and heel dress, sport and casual shoes. Give your feet this wonderful cushioning treat today! Sold at all Drug, Department, Shoe and 5-10¢ Stores.

Dr Scholl's AIR-PILLO INSOLES

New!

Now you can make your own self-covered buttons... WITHOUT TOOLS!

Give your garments that smart, professional look. Easy to make — rustproof and washable. 25 cents a card at notion counters. Now available in two new styles . . . Decorative and Combination.

Patents Pending

Prims "Cover a Button"

William Prym, Inc., Dayville, Connecticut

(Continued from Page 18)

know enjoy dancing and skating, canasta or bridge, learn to do these things at least well enough to be good company.

- Study the girls you know who are not shy. Their conversation and behavior may offer hints for your own.
- On social occasions, don't sit silent in a corner. Do something: pass the cigarettes, examine a painting, call someone's attention to the sunset—any activity, no matter how trivial, will relieve your tension and help you relax.
- When you meet a new man, remember that he may be self-conscious too. Take it for granted that he wants to make a good impression on you, make him feel that he is doing so—and you'll both soon be at ease.

Are You Too Shy?

These questions will be a valid test only if you can answer frankly and honestly. Think them through before checking yes or no.

1. Do you think most people are better than you?
2. Are you easily embarrassed?
3. Do you feel inferior to several of your friends?
4. Are you constantly critical of yourself?
5. Do you spend much time daydreaming?
6. Are your feelings easily hurt?
7. Do you worry about past mistakes and blunders?
8. Are you envious of your girl friends?
9. Do criticism and worry upset you?
10. Are you dissatisfied with your past achievements?
11. Do you constantly seek praise and approval?
12. Are you ill at ease when meeting a new man?
13. Do little slips or breaks upset you?
14. Do you often feel alone at a party?
15. Does time seem to pass too slowly for you?
16. Does it embarrass you to be in the limelight?
17. Is it hard for you to conceal your feelings?
18. Do you blush or stammer easily?
19. Are you afraid you won't marry?
20. Do you find it hard to talk to an eligible male?

If your answers are all "no" you are probably overconfident and aggressive. But if your "yes" answers total more than 12, you are too shy and self-conscious. Since this may hinder your dating, begin now to practice the suggestions on these pages.

Do You Agree?

Our marriage is happy except for my husband's indifference to me physically. What could cause this?

Poor health, anxiety or fatigue may be a factor. Also, individuals vary markedly in strength of sex interest. Your unresponsiveness in the early years of marriage may likewise be involved in his attitude.

Get the Big Luxurious BATH SIZE!

For velvet-smooth Beauty Lather that caresses your skin, leaves your body glowing with a warm blush of fragrant loveliness, enjoy a beauty bath with Bath Size Palmolive

IT'S EXQUISITE . . . It's economical. Big, big Bath Size Palmolive is perfect for tub or shower. Just the gentlest massage over your body creates a glorious beauty lather that leaves your skin glowing, alluring. Proper cleansing with this thrifty Bath Size smooths and softens your arms, back and shoulders . . . really gives you a lovelier complexion all over.

And its delicate, exciting scent leaves the merest hint of perfume on your skin—a delightful invitation to romance. Get Bath Size Palmolive today—for Palmolive's marvelous beauty lather means that you, too, may have a lovelier complexion from head-to-toe.

Hemstitched border, 72" x 108".
Reg. $6.15—only $5.50
in August. Monogram extra.

Plain white, 72" x 108".
Reg. $5.75—
only $5.15 in August.

Now... even the tip-top is at your finger-tips

For the first time in history . . . the loveliest, most luxurious sheets in history . . . go on sale in August. Yes! The sheet that dreams are made of . . . the one sheet so fine it can be called Supercale . . . is within your reach at last. Reach for it now!

Let your fingers thrill to its angel-skin coolness. Let your heart sing with the satisfaction that you, too, can own the very best. It's a satisfaction that will last through many long years. For Supercale by Wamsutta is made in only one quality . . . by the only Mill in the world that can make a sheet of such exquisite texture yet such robust strength. No wonder you'll remember this August for so many years to come!

Sculptured scallop border,
72" x 108". Reg. $6.95
—only $6.15 in August.

Imagine... as little as ~~$5.15~~ and

Supercale SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES BY WAMSUTTA

to

for less in August!

Even with your eyes closed you know it's Sup
the smoothest, silkiest sheet in the world!

WHAT'S he really like—the boy you date-dream about? You know if the name is Tom, Dick or Farley. You can tell at a glance if he's a blue-eyed blond, big and brawny—or just the way you like 'em, brown-eyed and crew-cut in the small economy size. But what is he like on the inside? What does he talk about when he's out with the boys? What does he think about when he's out with girls? And most important, what does he think about you?

Of course we can't give you all the answers (and you've got a long happy life ahead to figure them out for yourself), but we did find out a few. Here's how it happened. Last week we broke up a bull session with these six little words: What do you think about girls? The boys who chipped in their answers were all high-school seniors, with pretty definite ideas about themselves, and very definite ideas about girls. Some of their comments are sugar-coated compliments and some just aren't the sweet li'l' nothings you might have expected to hear. But tear out this list for "must do" study. That may be your next Friday's date who's talking!

• "Girls should remember what most forget—a buck is hard to come by. Some girls act like they don't know from nothing when it comes to spending a five-dollar bill."

Almost every high-school boy these days, especially in his junior-senior years, tries to find a part-time job. But lately those jobs are getting harder and harder to get. A lucky lad can sometimes make as much as $10 or $15 a week as a service-station attendant or a soda jerker. More likely he'll get 50 cents an hour cutting lawns or lugging boxes out of somebody's cellar. And if he's a big man on the school squad ("Every girl wants a crack at the guy with the letter sweater"), he probably won't be able to fit in a part-time job at all. What to do about it? Says one boy, "Tell gals to take it easy on the popcorn and trimmings on dates, and don't get mad about sitting home a night or two a week. What does she want—me and my money too?"

• "Girls should get wise to kissing on a first date. Probably every boy will try it, but chances are he won't like it if you let him. That's just the way it is."

Why all this pro-and-con controversy about first-date kisses? Even the boys didn't know that answer, but they did have definite opinions on the subject: "It's just not the thing to do. A girl seems cheap if she does. And it won't ruin her chances for the next date if she says 'No.'" On the first few dates, according to the boys, almost everyone uses party manners, tries to make a good impression and get acquainted. A boy likes to feel that his current doll likes him especially and doesn't show the same affection to everyone. So even if a boy does try to kiss a girl on the first night, he doesn't really expect her to co-operate—believe or it not!

• "Studying seems to come more natural to girls, but no boy likes to feel like a dummy. Why don't girls give fellows credit for wanting to get good grades too?"

Maybe it's a hang-over from the cave men when the big boys were rated higher on brawn than brain. But even now, when a boy tries to slip some study notes in his back pocket "the girls think he's kind of a brain trust or sissy." Most boys try to get their cramming done in school hours, listen hard in class and make a dash for the library during study hall. But sometimes they'd like to work overtime too. What do they want from girls? "Let them get over the idea a fellow's no he-man just because he's not out tearing around every night in the week. Fellows need a chance to study too."

• "Too many girls are scared to take boys into their confidence, and that makes it tough for both of them. If a girl's parents tell her she has to be in at twelve o'clock, then why doesn't she say so?"

The boys decided that setting the get-home hour for dates is "just a matter of manners," but then disagreed about just who was responsible! Some felt that a boy should ask the girl right at the start of the evening; the rest said, "The girl ought to let a fellow know—and if she doesn't bring it up, you figure it just doesn't matter." All agreed, however, that "if you like a girl you'll take her out whether she has to get home early or not" but preferred to date girls who could stay out till 12 or 12:30 for week-end dates and 1 or 2 o'clock for dances.

• "There are a couple of pet peeves that most fellows have against girls because most girls have the same habits! They act too silly, and they're catty about other girls."

Whether it's on a date or just around school, "girls knock themselves out giggling, making wisecracks and saying the same pet phrases over and over again. Right now the girls in our school say, 'That's my buddy, she is' all the time." Cat chatter makes boys feel self-conscious; too much noise makes them feel "like everybody is staring at us." Said one boy, "Girls give the impression sometimes that the only reason they date is to win some kind of race with their girl friends."

• "We get a kick out of watching girls who flirt and act up—and then pretend to get annoyed with fellows for acting like wolves. Girls ought to realize that fellows know when they're doing things because they want attention."

What's the meaning of all this double talk? The boys gave some examples. "Why do girls wear strapless formals and then spend the whole evening fussing and trying to hike them up higher? Didn't they look in the mirror before they left home?" . . . "And why do girls wear tight sweaters to school—and then pretend it's the boy's idea if he happens to look at them?" . . . "Every fellow likes attention from girls, but the word soon gets around about who are the cuddle-uppers—the girls who act lovely all evening then get mad if someone suggests kissing them good night."

• "Maybe girls won't know what I mean, but boys will. We don't like gals who feel they have to 'pretend culture.'"

Most girls worry about "What will I say on a date?" and boys say they wish girls would keep still once in a while! As one fellow complained, "Girls seem to think they have to know about everything from football to classical music—and if they don't, they say anything just to keep talking." In short, say the boys, they resent interruptions, know-it-all attitudes and "girls who put on a show of being interested in cultural subjects when fellows can tell they aren't interested at all." The best date is the girl who has learned to say, "I don't know—you tell me."

ANYBODY GOT T

Something on your mind you'd troubles, girl troubles, worries too many dates to nothing-doin note to Maureen Daly, LADIES' dependence Square, Philadelphi
we can come up with the righ

Juilliard
featheroy

"fine fabrics are the foundation of fashion" Fabulous FEATHEROY...

Juilliard's whisper-light, color-bright corduroy of luxuriously soft combed yarn . . . in a suit by Nardis of Dallas. See it at Arnold Constable, New York; Bullock's, Los Angeles and other better stores. If you're a sew-at-home, write for list of stores featuring Featheroy by-the-yard. A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., 10 West 10th Street, New York 18, N. Y.

Juilliard Featheroy
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
VAT DYED-COMBED YARN

Freezer stocked with vegetables, lemonade served under the trees, summer is scheduled by the sun—Jonquil pursues the moles, undaunted by failure.

Diary of Domestici

GUM BASE, SUGAR, DEXTROSE, CORN SYR
NATURAL & ARTIFICIAL FLAVORS & ARTI
TOPPS CHEWING GUM, INC., BKLYN, N.Y.
TOPPS
Bazoo
SUBBLE
Bazook
Topps
YOUN AMERIC
FAVORI

By GLADYS TABER

OUT in the corn patch, the stalks stand tall. The blades are green as sea water, the silk on the plump ears begins to turn to butterscotch in color. I love to walk on the soft earth between the corn rows; the cornfield makes its own world of green and gold and the only sound is the tender murmur of the corn itself. There is no trouble, no fear, only the deep peace of green things growing under a good sky.

George's corn, in the upper meadow, has the long heavy ears for the cows, and the red ears that hang by the fireplace in autumn, with the husks braided neatly. Our sweet corn in the lower garden is not so high and the ears are smaller, but how good those first ears taste! A few always ripen early and we pick them the instant they are ready; and with succession planting, we have some up to frost. There are many varieties and I think we have tried most. My favorite is whatever I happen to be eating at the moment.

I especially love the blue Mexican, for its color and the nutlike flavor of the kernels and the solid way they are set on the cob. But the old Golden Bantam is pretty near perfect. Some of the white varieties are sweeter and more tender, but of course the color of the yellow kinds is a treat in itself.

We begin to freeze corn as soon as there is any to pick. The farm freezer is already, by this time, stocked with vegetables and chicken. We never have enough corn, for when the children come home and we ask what they want for vegetable, they chorus, "Why not have corn?"

We do a few ears whole, but the best frozen corn is cut from the cob after the cob has been husked, dropped in boiling water for four to five minutes and dipped in ice water to cool it. A thin, very sharp knife is best, and I cut close to the cob, then with the back of the knife run over the cob to get the extra sweet milk out.

We use several kinds of containers, but the wide-mouth glass ones are very good for corn because you get a better pack. body agrees on how long you need to bl for freezing. When we began, our bulle advised ten minutes. We found this is long for best results and every year tend to cut the time a little, and we ha never had a failure.

The main rule is to freeze any fruit vegetable as soon as you can after picki My sister Jill brings the basket to the ba door and I stand with the screen open a a knife in my hand. The water is boil and ice cubes are swimming in the dishp

While we are at it, I make corn puddi for supper. To make this, I use a wh sauce of 2 tablespoons butter or margari 2 tablespoons flour, 1½ cups top milk, s to taste and ¼ teaspoon dry mustard stir in 2 cups cooked corn, 1 beaten egg a 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, p into a greased casserole, top with butte crumbs and a dash of Parmesan cheese bake in a moderate oven about 25 minut

Now the raw-vegetable salad comes i its own. I keep the salad bowl rubbed w garlic, the vegetables are crisp and fre and almost all of them are good slivered diced and tossed with a sharp French dre ing. Young celery leaves and carrot to add extra goodness to the greens. For t dressing, I vary it with wafers of meat chicken, or niblets of cheese. If the bowl a collection of greens, I stir in a one-minu egg and a half cup of toasted croutons a some grated Parmesan cheese in the Ca fornia style.

When Johannes is here, he makes his ov salad dressing in the bowl before putti the salad in, and his method is wonder to behold. He simply opens the refrigerat door and takes out all the little bowls leftovers. He stirs and tastes, adds chiv pours in sour cream, crumbles blue chee adds the leftover tomato bisque, locates bit of dried beef ——

(Continued on Page 78)

A

UTICA MOHAWK

PRODUCT

America's Favorite Sheets for over a Century

his is the hallmark of textile craftsmanship—the symbol that identifies Utica-Mohawk Sheets. Look for when selecting your sheets. You will find it on five different Utica-Mohawk qualities—from luxury percales to thrifty muslins. It is your assurance that the quality you choose is the best value for your money.

UTICA BEAUTICALE® SHEETS

MOHAWK COMBED PERCALE SHEETS

UTICA MUSLIN SHEETS

MOHAWK MUSLIN SHEETS

HOPE MUSLIN SHEETS

ite for your copy of the free booklet, "Beauty Secrets From Your Linen Closet." Utica & Mohawk Cotton Mills, Inc., Dept. LH-5, 55 Worth Street, New York 13, New York

Juilliard
featheroy

"fine fabrics are the foundation of fashion" Fabulous FEATHEROY...

Juilliard's whisper-light, color-bright corduroy of luxuriously soft combed yarn... in a suit by Nardis of Dallas. See it at Arnold Constable, New York; Bullock's, Los Angeles and other better stores. If you're a sew-at-home, write for list of stores featuring Featheroy by-the-yard. A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., 40 West 40th Street, New York 18, N. Y.

Juilliard Featheroy REG U S PAT OFF VAT DYED COMBED YARN

Freezer stocked with vegetables, lemonade served under the trees, summer is scheduled by the sun—Jonquil pursues the moles, undaunted by failure.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

OUT in the corn patch, the stalks stand tall. The blades are green as sea water, the silk on the plump ears begins to turn to butterscotch in color. I love to walk on the soft earth between the corn rows; the cornfield makes its own world of green and gold and the only sound is the tender murmur of the corn itself. There is no trouble, no fear, only the deep peace of green things growing under a good sky.

George's corn, in the upper meadow, has the long heavy ears for the cows, and the red ears that hang by the fireplace in autumn, with the husks braided neatly. Our sweet corn in the lower garden is not so high and the ears are smaller, but how good those first ears taste! A few always ripen early and we pick them the instant they are ready; and with succession planting, we have some up to frost. There are many varieties and I think we have tried most. My favorite is whatever I happen to be eating at the moment.

I especially love the blue Mexican, for its color and the nutlike flavor of the kernels and the solid way they are set on the cob. But the old Golden Bantam is pretty near perfect. Some of the white varieties are sweeter and more tender, but of course the color of the yellow kinds is a treat in itself.

We begin to freeze corn as soon as there is any to pick. The farm freezer is already, by this time, stocked with vegetables and chicken. We never have enough corn, for when the children come home and we ask what they want for vegetable, they chorus, "Why not have corn?"

We do a few ears whole, but the best frozen corn is cut from the cob after the cob has been husked, dropped in boiling water for four to five minutes and dipped in ice water to cool it. A thin, very sharp knife is best, and I cut close to the cob, then with the back of the knife run over the cob to get the extra sweet milk out.

We use several kinds of containers, but the wide-mouth glass ones are very good for corn because you can tamp it down a get a better pack. As for the timing, n body agrees on how long you need to blan for freezing. When we began, our bullet advised ten minutes. We found this is t long for best results and every year tend to cut the time a little, and we ha never had a failure.

The main rule is to freeze any fruit vegetable as soon as you can after pickin My sister Jill brings the basket to the ba door and I stand with the screen open a a knife in my hand. The water is boili and ice cubes are swimming in the dishpa

While we are at it, I make corn puddi for supper. To make this, I use a whi sauce of 2 tablespoons butter or margarin 2 tablespoons flour, 1½ cups top milk, sa to taste and ¼ teaspoon dry mustard. stir in 2 cups cooked corn, 1 beaten egg a 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, po into a greased casserole, top with butter crumbs and a dash of Parmesan cheese. bake in a moderate oven about 25 minute

Now the raw-vegetable salad comes in its own. I keep the salad bowl rubbed wi garlic, the vegetables are crisp and fres and almost all of them are good slivered diced and tossed with a sharp French dres ing. Young celery leaves and carrot to add extra goodness to the greens. For t dressing, I vary it with wafers of meat chicken, or niblets of cheese. If the bowl a collection of greens, I stir in a one-minu egg and a half cup of toasted croutons a some grated Parmesan cheese in the Cal fornia style.

When Johannes is here, he makes his ow salad dressing in the bowl before puttin the salad in, and his method is wonderf to behold. He simply opens the refrigerat door and takes out all the little bowls leftovers. He stirs and tastes, adds chive pours in sour cream, crumbles blue chees adds the leftover tomato bisque, locates bit of dried beef —

(Continued on Page 78)

A

UTICA MOHAWK

PRODUCT

America's Favorite Sheets for over a Century

his is the hallmark of textile craftsmanship—the symbol that identifies Utica-Mohawk Sheets. Look for when selecting your sheets. You will find it on five different Utica-Mohawk qualities—from luxury percales to thrifty muslins. It is your assurance that the quality you choose is the best value for your money.

UTICA BEAUTICALE® SHEETS

MOHAWK COMBED PERCALE SHEETS

UTICA MUSLIN SHEETS

MOHAWK MUSLIN SHEETS

HOPE MUSLIN SHEETS

ite for your copy of the free booklet, "Beauty Secrets From Your Linen Closet." Utica & Mohawk Cotton Mills, Inc., Dept. LH-5, 55 Worth Street, New York 13, New York

Here's One Important Way—

TO FIGHT POLIO, KEEP HANDS REALLY CLEAN!

Public Health Authorities Urge This Care!

READ!

Advice on Care of Children

"Now, as never before . . . cleanliness is of extreme importance. Every child . . . should have at least one bath a day.

"BUT CLEAN HANDS ARE MORE IMPORTANT THAN CLEAN FEET! Every child should wash his hands before every meal or snack.

"He should, he must, wash hands after going to toilet.

"Mothers . . . should wash their hands before feeding children.

"Hands may carry polio infection into the body through the mouth.

—From Health officials' statements published during 1949 Polio epidemic.

ORDINARY WASH-UPS MISS MUCH DIRT BUT LAVA SOAP GETS HANDS TRULY CLEAN . . . LIGHTNING-FAST!

GROUND-IN GREASE—STUBBORN GRIME . . . in 30 to 50 seconds LAVA has it out, off, down the drain—hands really CLEAN!

Swiftly routs the ground-in grime . . . washes hands cleaner, faster, than ordinary toilet soaps ever can. Yet LAVA SOAP is amazingly gentle . . . even for women or toddlers!

There is nothing medicinal about LAVA Soap. But its hygienic value is vital, because it gets hands really clean . . . extra clean . . . extra fast! Such a simple, easy precaution . . . yet so important!

LAVA Soap has special, super-swift action. Its rich, creamy lather contains 50,000 tiny, dirt-lifting cleaners per inch. They loosen and rout dirt out of skin-creases . . . around the finger-nails and knuckle-wrinkles.

Yet LAVA is amazingly gentle, even for women's skin. It contains the same soothing ingredient as costly hand-lotions.

It's so easy—with LAVA—to be sure of clean hands. True, if you wash long and hard enough, any good soap can clean hands.

But LAVA routs the ground-in grime . . . gets dirtiest hands cleaner, quicker, than ordinary soaps can. Get LAVA Soap today . . . and be sure of CLEAN hands!

©1950, The Procter & Gamble Co.

During the Polio months, CLEAN HANDS are a first Precaution!

ALL HANDS NEED LAVA SOAP!

the good gray bar with the snowy, creamy, clean-up lather!

(Continued from Page 26) Both organically and emotionally, babies will show how successful this education has been. Some who've been denied a close tie to their mothers may react with croup, asthma or digestive disturbances. Others may suck their thumbs, roll their heads excessively, or express their deprivation in temper tantrums, retarded walking and speech. Such children, as they grow older, will turn against themselves the energy that should flow to other people. Lost jobs, broken friendships and marriages are familiar results of thwarting in early life.

Thus, the middle of his first year is none too soon to ask whether baby's in harmony with his home. Doctor Ribble points out that, from six months on, a satisfied child can usually adjust to a slight change of routine and to a brief absence from his mother. He won't desert good eating and sleeping habits, lose ground in vocal talents or bodily ease. One less stable, on the other hand, may cry and be wakeful; while the least secure will show organic disorders.

Doctor Ribble suggests one simple test to size up your baby's psychological status. On an average day, when you wake him from his nap, does he look first at you, then at his bottle, and seem to know the difference between the two? Does he crow and wave his arms in a welcome to you both? If he does, this indicates good mental response. Or is his reaction to your appearance an immediate crying jag? Does he seem vaguely restless and unable to distinguish between what he's fed and the person who gives it? Such behavior tells you he's anxious and afraid of disappointment. Perhaps he's been ill or left alone too often. Perhaps, without knowing it, you've let him go hungry. More attention, play and mothering are his best tonic.

Less simple to handle is the baby who refuses to work at all for what he needs. His interest in his mother and food is fleeting. He seems passive and uncaring for what goes on around him. Easily distracted, he may even fall asleep before a meal is ready. Talk to your doctor about his problems, for he may need special help to develop as he should. Every baby's healthy body should have a healthy mind to guide it and—never underestimate yourself—both are yours for the giving.

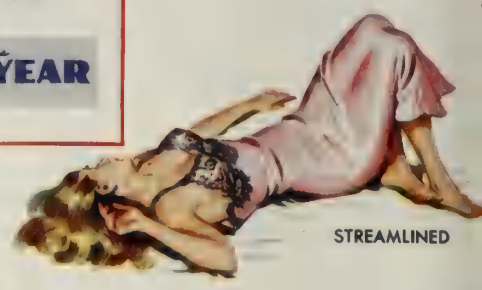
Food fads may start now as baby learns to tell what he likes from the other kind. but he swallows well and (after a fashion) can even raise the spoon to his mouth. Meat soup, zwieback, whole-grain cereals and pudding are often added to his diet.

Chewing's a favorite indoor sport. Dana has cut her first two milk teeth. X ray would show permanent ones formed below.

Brother David totes Dana's reveille bottle. Average baby sleeps 16 hours a day, should have a room of his own by now, if possible.

Growing up emotionally: at the half-year mark, babies have strong pro and con feelings, may treat mother to temper tantrums as well as love and affection. Most turn their heads toward a familiar voice, enjoy making noises, can even produce some syllablelike sounds.

NEXT MONTH



A day in the life of a seven-month-old

Up and doing and on the go is Dana's recipe for the good life. After the morning trip to market, she'll nap in her carriage or play there. But passers-by, dogs, cats and cars are so interesting that she needs a strap to keep her "in bounds."

Englander alone makes a mattress of Airfoam* by GOODYEAR

America wakes up to

THE NEW SLEEP

ON AN Airfoam MATTRESS

Also available in wood rose stripe

All the proof you need. Just press down on Airfoam. Feel how it molds itself to your hand, responds with a buoyant "uplift."

No other foundation works like this. Joined only through the middle by flexible steel bands, each spring in the upper half is free to adjust individually to every move. Lower part acts as a unit, supports body in the firm, healthful manner doctors recommend.

...at a new low price...with a 20-YEAR guarantee!

Now you can get an Englander Mattress of Goodyear's Airfoam for $59.75

This is the wonderful new mattress that is sleeping the country! It's genuine Airfoam—yet it costs no more than a good innerspring mattress. That's because Englander and Goodyear teamed up to develop it—put their heads together to bring America a brand-new standard of sleep. And what glorious sleep it is! Airfoam's millions of tiny air cells cradle you, suspend you, soothe you into the soundest, sweetest sleep of your life.

When used with Englander's special Red-Line* Foundation, whole unit guaranteed for 20 years

An Airfoam mattress requires a special type of support that ordinary box springs just cannot provide. To fill this need Englander engineers have designed a special foundation—the Englander Red-Line Foundation—made to order for Airfoam. So scientifically matched are they that we guarantee them for 20 years against any defects in material or workmanship when used together.

Both for the price of a conventional mattress and box spring $119.50

Other Englander Red-Line mattresses and companion box springs (both twin and full size) from $39.75 to $79.75

Englander

AMERICA'S MOST LUXURIOUS MATTRESS

*TM The Englander Company, Inc. *TM The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company

© 1950, The Englander Company, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

Tell me, Doctor —PART 7

you want a baby and haven't become pregnant, both you and your husband should talk with your doctor.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

THERE was the vestige of a frown upon the doctor's face as he added a comment at the bottom of the history card he was just completing, then zed up to appraise the patient who had n ushered into his consulting room.

Mrs. Roe, what is the nature of your plaint?"

I have been married three years, Doc- and have not yet succeeded in becom- pregnant."

. smile took the place of the lingering vn. "You could not have come at a e auspicious time," the doctor an- nced. "I have just been obliged to tell atient who wants a baby more than thing in the world that she must not, ler any circumstances, go through the erience."

I don't think I understand," Mrs. Roe d.

This young woman is one of my ies—I brought her into the world more rs ago than I like to realize. Since she tracted scarlet fever at the age of six, has had a badly damaged heart. In te of that she married in due course of e, and about five years ago she became gnant."

I suppose that was bad—on account of heart."

Nothing could have been worse. How- er, I wasn't consulted about either her rriage or her ensuing pregnancy, and I ubt whether she would have listened to advice. When she came to me, she was her fourth month; she was actually sping for breath, and her ankles were ollen to nearly twice their normal size. rious heart trouble, you understand. In te of the technical difficulties involved, would have terminated her pregnancy ht then; but she would have none of my vice. Contrary to my better judgment, agreed to see her through with the help one of the best cardiac specialists in the y.

To make a long story short, I termi- ted her pregnancy during the eighth nth by a Caesarean operation. I wanted make her permanently sterile then, but e would not permit it. We recovered an derdeveloped child which, however, sur- ved until an unfortunate accident six nths ago. Obviously, the mother, too, rvived. Now she comes to me and an- unces that she proposes to have another by.

"'If you are determined to end your life,' old her, 'don't count on my help.'

"'But you helped me before, and you can do it again,' she insisted.

"'No!' I said. 'Once is enough.'

"Then she burst into tears, and I am very, very much afraid that I haven't been blessed with the eloquence to convince her that a repetition of her experience is almost certain to end in a tragedy."

"She certainly is unfortunate."

"So many are. There's a woman who wants children and can become pregnant and yet shouldn't, and here's one who wants children and can't become pregnant and, I dare say, should. All muddled up. You see why I might have acted a little sourly when you came in. Now let's get down to the difficulty you consulted me about. You say you have been married three years?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"And never used contraceptive measures?"

"No. Why, one of the chief reasons I married was to have a baby."

"Excellent!" said the doctor. "What kind of man is your husband?"

"Why, he's—he's a fine, big fellow ——"

"In good health?"

"Ever since I've known him. In fact, he was quite an athlete once."

"Has he ever undergone a physical examination, to your knowledge?"

"Why, he must have—he was in the service more than two years."

"Well, I don't mean just that kind of physical examination, though general fitness counts. Has he ever had his semen examined?"

"I couldn't say—he never mentioned it."

"It is highly important. It would be futile to treat you for some condition when all the time your husband might conceivably be incapable of making you pregnant."

"What would he have to do?"

"Provide a fresh specimen of semen which would be examined to see if there were sperms present, and if they were normal and active."

"Do you do that?"

"No, I only treat women. I could send him to a good man, however."

"I'll speak to my husband about it."

"I find some men are reluctant to submit to such an examination. It is only fair to you, after all. I wouldn't want to perform a serious operation on you, for example, before I was sure that your husband was fertile. In former years, many women were operated upon in the belief that it would help their ability to conceive, only to find subsequently that the husbands were sterile."

"I can see that. I don't think he will refuse."

(Continued on Page 104)

pyright, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is seventh of a series of articles taken from the book be published early in 1951 by Renbayle House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

THIS ADVERTISEMENT READ AND APPROVED BY A WELL-KNOWN PROFESSOR OF PEDIATRICS

"O-oh, do I love to be babied with soft, gentle Chix diapers!"

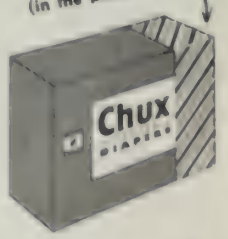
No fretty baby here . . . for Chix extra-absorbent diapers gently cradle baby . . . give real protection, as well. Famous Cushion-Weave makes Chix diapers so caressingly soft . . . yet Chix save precious time for mother. Chix wash easier, dry faster than ordinary diapers. Baby your baby with Chix. You'll love smart Dude Diapers by Chix, too, in pastel colors!

* * *



"I wear Chux, on Mother's busy days!"

Super-soft, cottoned facing . . . thirsty cellulose layers . . . water repellent backing make Chux the ideal diapers for busy days or traveling with baby. No washing problems . . . simply throw Chux away!

* * *

For disposable diapers, it's Chux! (in the pink box)

For washable diapers, it's Chix! (in the blue box)

SEND FOR YOUR CHIX SAMPLE KIT!

Contains a Chix Diaper, a Chux Disposable Diaper, sample Chix Diaper Liners, and the helpful booklet, "Common Sense in Dressing Baby."

CLIP COUPON AND MAIL TO:

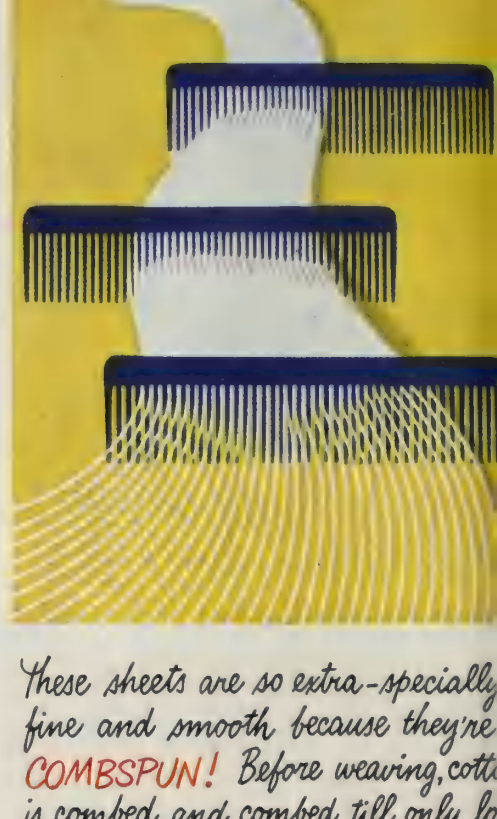
Chicopee Mills, Inc. Dept. LH-8
47 Worth Street, New York 13, N. Y.

I enclose 25¢ in coin for a Chix Sample Kit.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....



Surprise! Heavenly sheets that let budgets say "yes"!

Your CANNON GIRL says: Imagine! Luxurious sheets you've dreamed about – at prices that'll open your eyes wide!

None other than Cannon Combspun Percales – as white and soft and carefully-made as a baby's CHRISTENING DRESS!

These sheets are so extra-specially fine and smooth because they're COMBSPUN! Before weaving, cotto is combed and combed till only lo sleek fibers remain...

Your precious Cannon Combspun Percales are FOAM-LIGHT (for easier laundering) WHALE-STRONG (for extra wear).

Also available in enchanting pastel WATER COLORS, real color magic for your bedroom. (Priced slightly higher.)

Compare for beauty! Compare for val And go home with the best sheet bu all-CANNON COMBSPUN PERCALE

Cannon Combspun Percale Sheets

TRADE MARK CANNON

CANNON TOWELS . . . STOCKINGS . . . BLANKETS . . . BEDSPREADS ★ CANNON MILLS, INC., NEW YORK 13, N. Y.

COPR. 1950 CANNON MILLS

Journal about Town

Gossip about people you know, editors you like, and what goes on in New York

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

IN August, 1900, Collis Huntington, the railroad magnate who reduced the time between New York and San Francisco from six months to six days, died. August Belmont's sloop won the Astor Cup; swarms of grasshoppers at Kalamazoo even stopped trains, and Chicago's Swift and Co. announced they would not employ any cigarette smokers.

An Entire House on One Floor is featured in the August, 1900, JOURNAL. A fourteen-room Spanish-type mansion. "It has attracted much attention, and several smaller homes have been built upon the same plan."

Conversation and Good Form in Public Places: "It is no longer considered good form to say a word against anyone. Gossip, thank goodness, is going out of fashion."

Sweet potatoes: "Yes, sweet potatoes would be injurious if used during the entire season three times a day," believes cooking expert Mrs. Rorer.

Seven-Course Luncheon: "First soup, then half a shaddock or some strawberries with hulls on. Then a fish dish with rolls, followed by creamed sweetbreads. Next broiled chicken with rice and peas. Then a salad with cream cheese and wafers. Any dainty dessert will do, such as charlotte or ice cream, with cake and coffee."

Fashion note: "Shopping skirts are frequently worn six inches from the ground by city women, who find it a difficult matter to carry packages and lift a skirt as well."

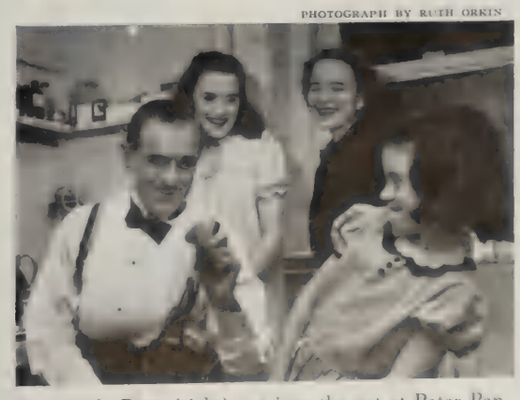
Advises Mrs. Burton Kingsland: "A bachelor may live where he likes without loss of social position if he belongs to one good club."

"For outstanding work in divergent fields"—Ann Batchelder, L.H.D.

WHEN we see Ann Batchelder now around the Workshop, it's Doctor Batchelder, if you please. For by unanimous vote of the trustees and faculty of Bowling Green State University, at Bowling Green, Ohio, the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters was conferred on your and our Miss B. at the commencement exercises—in recognition of her outstanding work in widely divergent fields, with which most of you are familiar. And as you can see, the cap and gown and the crimson stole are most becoming to Ann Batchelder, L.H.D.



When Gladys Denny Shultz's daughter, who's been living in Costa Rica, was having her baby down in that little Central American country, she had difficulty at times getting in touch with her two doctors, they were both so busy with affairs of state: her pediatrician being the Costa Rican Vice-President; her obstetrician, the Minister of Health.

It pays to marry an architect, the young wife of one tells Richard Pratt; for hers can design not only buildings but also her clothes. Right now, with her first baby on the way, he's finished up her whole maternity wardrobe. The outfit she showed Mr. P. is a black-and-white hound's-tooth jacket and black skirt—very chic. She wears the jacket belted now, but later on will wear it unbelted, and her husband plans to put some buckram in the back of the jacket to make it flare out behind to counteract the flare in front. His first job was a remodeling one—a suit for his wife made from an old one of his; his second, a strapless evening gown, as svelte and sheer as a slick modern house.

Which reminds us of Harrie T. Lindeberg*, architect of many handsome houses since World War I, who designed a one-piece garment for himself—shorts and shirt, with necktie attached, plain and patterned, cutting down dressing time and laundry bills both.*

Today there are 5,452,000 more women over 14 years in the U. S. than in 1940. There are 6,806,000 more married women living with their husbands, 117,000 more married women living apart from their husbands, 1,292,000 more widows and divorcees, 2,762,000 fewer single women. . . . Women thrive on marriage, according to insurance-company statistics. During the last half century, the death rate of married women has fallen from 16 per 1000 to 8 per 1000. For unmarried women—spinsters, widows and divorcees—the decline was only two fifths of that. . . . It takes the average American factory worker about eight minutes to earn enough money to buy five pounds of potatoes, or a quart of milk, or a pack of cigarettes, based on current New York prices. If the average English worker wanted to buy these same quantities in London, he would have to work fourteen minutes for the potatoes, nineteen minutes for the milk, and nearly one hour and twenty minutes for the cigarettes.

PHOTOGRAPH BY RUTH ORKIN

Even little Dina (right) got into the act at Peter Pan.

When Ruth Mary Packard told us the other day that she was going to take her seven-year-old daughter Dina to see Peter Pan, we fixed it up for her to take Dina backstage and meet Marcia Henderson and Boris Karloff, who play the parts of Wendy and Captain Hook. Well, it was a case of love at first sight, all around—Wendy, Captain Hook and Dina; so much so that Karloff asked Dina to come backstage again between the acts and after the play. At the end, in Wendy's dressing room, Marcia Henderson asked Dina, "Remember when I was starting up the steps to the woods where the pirates were lurking? Well, who was the child down there in the audience who screamed out, 'WENDY, DON'T GO!'?" . . . "That was me," said Dina.

We asked a friend where she'd come by the unusually attractive Paris dress she was wearing. Turns out she had bought it for $75 at a very intimate private sale held by the Duchess of Windsor just before she left for Europe with her husband. May have been thirty or more of the Duchess' dresses, and hats, marked from $50 to $100, from which her friends could choose, and, as far as we know, all were chosen.

ACME

The Duchess of Windsor.

Out in Hollywood recently, when Sara Churchill saw Wilhela Cushman, she said, "You know, those two dresses you gave me to be photographed in for the JOURNAL are the luckiest dresses I've ever worn. One I was married in, and it was in the dinner dress that I took my first screen test and got my contract." Wilhela asked the wartime Prime Minister's actress daughter what her first picture was going to be. "That's another lucky thing," Sara said. "All my life I've dreamed of dancing with Fred Astaire, and now, in Royal Wedding, I'm really going to do it!"

ILLUSTRATED BY

Belles on Their

The gay Gilbreths of CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN continue the story of their life together – minus Father

First of Three Parts

By FRANK B. GILBRETH, JR., and ERNESTINE GILBRETH CAREY

Foreword: Mother is Lillian Moller Gilbreth, and Dad was Frank Bunker Gilbreth. Their consulting firm of Gilbreth, Inc., specialized in timesaving and in making workers' jobs easier to do. They were the originators of motion study, and among the first in the scientific-management field. • Dad died in 1924, leaving Mother with eleven children, the oldest of whom was eighteen. He also left a good many wonderful memories and an "efficiency" system of family life under which the children helped Mother run the house. Without the system, without the esprit de corps which he had instilled, Mother's job might have been too much for her. ▪ But it was Mother who made the system work. Mother became the family breadwinner, filled the place of two parents, guided her children individually through the growing pains of adolescence, kept the family together. In her spare time, so to speak, she became one of the foremost management engineers in the world. ▪ This is a book about the Gilbreth family after Dad died. It is primarily the story of Mother.

SOMETHING FOR DAD

MOTHER was going to Europe and would leave us by ourselves. It was not an easy thing, but it was something she had to do for Dad. For us too. Frank carried her suitcases down the front steps to a taxicab parked under the porte-cochere of our house in Montclair, New Jersey. The driver climbed out of his air-cooled Franklin, and gave a hand.

"You the oldest boy?" he asked Frank.

Frank told him he was. Frank was thirteen.

"It's going to be tough on your mother. All you kids, and you the oldest boy."

Everyone knew it was going to be tough. There wasn't any use talking about that.

"I'll put them on the train myself," said the driver, pointing his head at the suitcases. "I heard about your father."

Frank climbed the stairs and joined the rest of us on the porch, just outside the front door. That was where we usually said good-by when Dad went away on trips.

Dad had died three days before, on June 14, 1924. It seemed longer. He had had a heart attack at the railroad station in Montclair. It had happened in a telephone booth; he was talking with Mother over the phone.

Mother held out her arms—and we knew then that what had seemed the end of everything might be just a beginning.

Dad liked regimentation and for everything to be done by a system. He even had assigned each of us a number, which he used for routing intrafamily correspondence and memoranda. Mother wasn't that way. But from habit we lined up on the porch as we would have for Dad—by ages and in a sort of company-front formation.

Anne, the oldest—she was eighteen—was at the tall end of the line. Jane, the youngest—not quite two—was at the short end. In between were Ernestine, Martha, Frank, Bill, Lillian, Fred, Dan, Jack and Bob. Anne told us to "dress right" on her. Dad always liked the line to be straight. We waited there for Mother.

We still weren't accustomed to seeing her in black. She looked tense and alone as she pushed open the screen door and came to the head of the steps. We wished she'd let some of us go with her to the boat, or at least to the Montclair station.

(Continued on Page 60)

Copyright, 1950, by Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey

Toes

You Can't Dance Alone

By RUTH LAMSON

THE way it began, "What do you want for Christmas, Jennie?" my mother asked. "And, oh, yes, your birthday." And, oh, yes, your birthday. There ought to be a law. Having children at Christmas is pretty poor timing, if you ask me, which nobody did. But this year I could bear it better—Santa Claus was bringing me eighteen, the year of the great big answers.

As I saw it, eighteen opened a door and suddenly you became mature and well adjusted with a perfect sense of values, your mother quit waiting up for you, and no more piecing between meals. The world paused an instant to let you catch hold. I mean nineteen scares you, it's the jumping-off place: but eighteen—wonderful age, wonderfully confused hoping me.

My eighteen had just one dark place in it, named Mitch Summers.

"What about the Christmas Dance?" mama followed up in a leading way. "Will your white net do?"

In other words: Do you want a new formal for Christmas-birthday? Ordinarily, in my spontaneous right mind, I'd leap into an opening like that with glad cries. My white net—I wore it to the holiday dance way back last year when merely a junior, with Mitch; before the Summers family moved to the city. Mitch's two gardenias were put away with it in the dress box; nothing breaks your heart like an old gardenia still bravely trying to smell sweet. The white net; in that dress a person could close a person's eyes and make like Pelham Higgins Townsend was Mitch.

"It will do nicely," I said.

"Good gracious, the millennium!" Mama viewed me as she would a curiosity under glass. "Are you sure, dear? Speak now or never. I expect to be up to the tens in Christmas and no dressmaking, remember. And kindly bear in mind the budget won't take any darling dress out of any shopwindow at the final frantic minute."

"I am sure," I said. At seventeen you are always sure.

And then, on the eleventh of December, Mitch came back.

How could I know he'd come back? He wasn't the writing type; I thought he'd gone forever. But he came back and it was all over Sierra Center High School like a chem experiment: "Mitch is back!" with open speculative glances at me.

"Will you faint here?" Chotzie said. "Or will you sit down for it?"

Chotzie: we'd been best friends all year; I was trying to exert a good influence on her, but she was still going steady with

(Continued on Page 122)

ILLUSTRATED BY Joe Lefevre

-the year of the great big answers

"The last time for me,
the last time," is that terrible minute which is the first time in love

Camilla would always remember the silence of the woods and the way Andy had laughed.

Last day of all

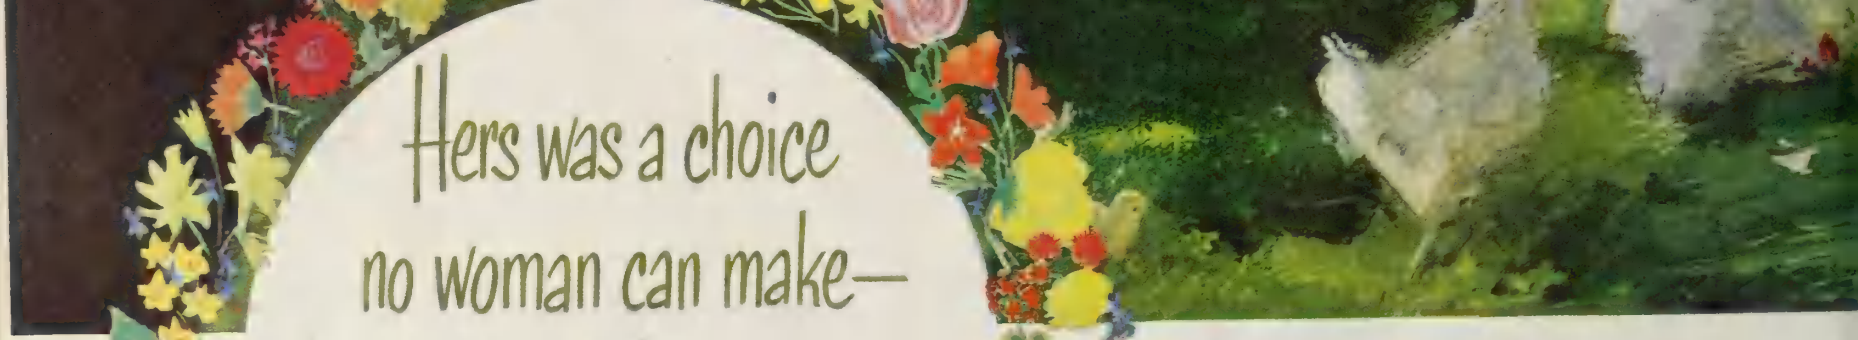
By MARGARET and LESLIE GORDON BARNARD

IN just a little while now they would go. They would leave behind this lovely place. They would leave behind . . . Andy. "You must pack, dear," mother was saying. She looked in, her arm full of dresses still on their hangers, to see how Camilla was getting on. Outside in the sharp sunlight the sea lay blue and calm and endless. People passed by on the road, talking and laughing. One of them called to Miss Hartford, down on the veranda, "Want to come to Eagle Head with us tomorrow?" Tomorrow they would still be here. They didn't have to take the noon bus. They didn't know what it was to have a tight knot of pain inside.

Camilla picked up a dress and began to fold it aimlessly. It was the yellow one with embroidered daisies that she had worn the very first Sunday. Andy's eyes had widened when she purposely walked out on the veranda just as he came around from the back door, all dressed up himself. Her fingers trembled now as she smoothed the creased folds. She wouldn't cry. Crying was like a storm that didn't clear the air. It couldn't change anything. Life was so queer. You couldn't understand it sometimes. She hadn't even wanted to come here to Sandford, but her mother and father had thought it sounded like the different kind of holiday they needed this year.

"There's a place for you!" someone had said. "Off the beaten track. Pushed right out into the Atlantic. You'd like it, Bill. You'd all like it, I'm positive. There are a couple of boarding places, quite simple, but the food's good and there's lots of fresh air. I could give you the addresses."

"Sounds just the thing," father had said.



Mother was glad to have it settled, after all the talk and folders and correspondence they had been through. They would go down by train to some little way station where a bus would meet them.

"What about me?" Camilla had cried, a bit obstinate and sulky because Judy and Kay and the rest were going to hotels with swimming pools and tennis courts, where you met all kinds of people and anything exciting could happen; or else to camps where they had riding and sailing instructors and everything. Nobody ever heard of Sandford.

Even in her berth on the train, the green curtains swaying, the locomotive whistle wailing, hoarse-throated, through the night, she lay there thinking, How dull. How dull it's going to be. How dull, how dull, the wheels making a refrain of it. And all the time the train was rushing her toward Andy. Right after breakfast it slowed for their stop, jerking a little, as if it, too, were heavy with sleep, clumsy and reluctant.

"This way, please," the porter said.

Then there was the smell of steam, of coal smoke on fresh air, very fresh—in fact, quite (Continued on Page 128)

Hers was a choice no woman can make— her husband's happiness, or the life of her child

By ANNE HOMER WARNER

THEY found the place by accident, rented it on an impulse and almost at once they were sorry.

"Those apple blossoms were responsible," Ben said on the wa home. "We must have been out of our minds! Five hours' driv from the city, and nothing to do but stagnate."

Lydia agreed. She would be lonelier than ever now; she knew sh had been beguiled by a momentary vision of happiness, without foun dation. "I suppose you could call up the agent, and forfeit the deposit."

"Good idea," Ben said. "I'll do it first thing in the morning."

But Sharon didn't understand what her parents were talking about an so she was ecstatic. "I can have a pony," she kept repeating over and ove in a singsong voice, "and a baby lamb, and a puppy and some kittens.

"An entire menagerie, in fact," Ben muttered, but under his breath, because he loved his little daughter.

They had made the trip to Vermont to find a camp for Sharon. They had talked to camp heads and counselors, and inspected cabins, and been told that their child would have expert supervision. After a while the word "supervision" had begun to get on their nerves. Somehow it made Sharon sound like a whole army of raw recruits, instead of one little girl with brown braids, and gaps where her second teeth would eventually be.

On the way home, still undecided about camps, they had stopped for lunch at the Kerby Inn, and fallen into conversation with Mr. Barton, the proprietor. Quite by chance he had happened to mention that there were a number of nearby places to rent, and that he was also in the real-estate business. So, without being in the least serious about the project, they had gone with him after lunch to look at some houses that he had on his list.

The first one he showed them was a big rambling farmhouse on a hill overlooking an apple orchard. The barn had been fixed up as a studio, with a large picture window; and there were chicken runs, sheds and a number of smaller buildings. With a vague feeling of adventure they had wandered around, exclaiming over the lilac bushes and the spring, and a small brook that trickled over rocks.

"I could build a dam," Ben had said.

Lydia had looked around her, aware of a sweetness in the air, and an almost intoxicating quietness. She'd tried to picture Ben building a dam. And it had flashed into her mind that perhaps up here they could find the thing they had lost.

But they never would have been so impulsive if Sharon hadn't become almost wild with excitement. As soon as she got out of the car the little girl began dashing around, inspecting the (Continued on Page 83)

COMBINE

Coming back down the aisle, radiant Lilibet paused unexpectedly in front of her parents and swept them a beautiful curtsy.

The Little Princesses

THE HAPPY BRIDE, THE PROUD MOTHER — By Marion Crawford

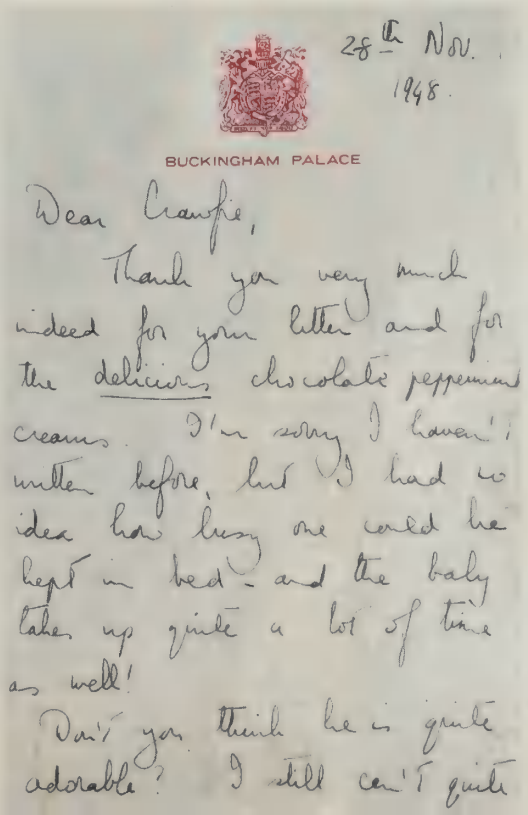
Former Royal Governess

In this final installment of her memoirs as governess to Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose of England, Marion Crawford tells the behind-the-scenes story of Lilibet's wedding. Crawfie married before Lilibet, but stayed on to help with the wedding, and complete Margaret's education.

VIII



ON the evening before the wedding of Princess Elizabeth, there had been no last-minute festivities inside the palace, no party or gathering of any kind. There was too much to do. The King and Queen and their daughters dined quietly together. After that there was a mass of detail to be gone into, for tomorrow's function. Gold chairs were stacked up in the banqueting rooms. The whole air smelled of flowers.

Lilibet went to bed very early. Philip had looked in during the evening and said his last good night to her. She came up to her room, singing. There was a lovely feeling in the palace that night. We were all of us happy because she was happy, and things had at last gone right for her.

I don't think any of us had very much sleep. I went along to Lilibet's room very early in the morning, and found her in her dressing gown, peeping excitedly out the window at the crowds. "I can't believe it's really happening, Crawfie," she said. "I have to keep pinching myself."

She had been down as usual for the session with papa and mummie in their room. They must all have been a little sad that morning, as people are when it comes to last times. Standing there, peeping through the curtain, she looked such a child still, it was difficult to realize she was grown up, and would today be a bride. I stood in the doorway for a moment, looking back at her, and I could not help remembering that small golden-headed little girl I had first seen—could it really be all of sixteen years ago?—sitting up in bed, the cord of her dressing gown tied to the bedposts, driving her imaginary team round the park. I thought of Alah, and how dearly she would have loved this day, with her darling decked out in splendor, and surrounded with all the magnificence and ceremony Alah always felt to be a princess' due.

Of course there were the usual last-minute crises, the tensions common to any home on a wedding morning. The bouquet got lost. A footman remembered receiving it and bringing it upstairs, but what happened to it after that nobody could imagine. It had gone! When the 28th Nov. 1948.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE

Dear Crawfie,

Thank you very much indeed for your letter and for the delicious chocolate peppermint creams. I'm sorry I haven't written before, but I had no idea how busy one could be kept in bed — and the baby takes up quite a lot of time as well!

Don't you think he is quite adorable? I still can't quite

At her wedding, Lilibet sat Crawfie close to the King and Queen, saying, "You must be near us, as you have been all these years." KEYSTONE Lilibet was delighted her baby came during first year of marriage, said she wanted three more: "After all, it's what we're made for."

KEYSTONE

Lilibet got a new puppy during her honeymoon, stopped in at palace to look for a dog leash. "My horrid sister has taken all the leads," she said, vexed. Footman finally found old chewed one, and she took dog on rest of honeymoon.

INP

King and Queen wistfully watching the wedding carriage roll out palace gate. Dignified Queen shed no motherly tears, but as carriage went by she suddenly picked up her skirts, ran a few steps after it, throwing rose petals on it.

"I CAN'T BELIEVE IT'S REALLY HAPPENING, CRAWFIE, I HAVE TO KEEP PINCHING MYSELF," SAID LILIBET.

uproar was at its height, the footman suddenly remembered he had bethought himself to put it into a cupboard to keep cool.

Then Lilibet decided she must wear a certain wedding-present string of pearls, and she sent for them, only to be told they could not be found either. After much agitation, someone remembered they had been sent over with the rest of the wedding presents to St. James's Palace, and were on view there.

Her private secretary, Mr. John Colville, volunteered to go over and fetch them for her. He departed at the double. Unfortunately, the detectives on duty at St. James's did not know Mr. Colville. They listened to his story and thought it extremely fishy. They were taking no risks. In vain he pleaded with them: they refused to let him have the pearls. In the end, he was allowed to take them back to the palace with a policeman and a couple of detectives accompanying him, ready to pounce should he show any tendency to melt into the crowds!

The only person who remained throughout calm and cool was the stanch Bobo. She dressed her Princess, and then went over to the abbey to be on hand to take care of her when she arrived there.

The Queen looked beautiful that day. She wore a dress of apricot-colored silk brocade, which I thought immensely more becoming to her than her usual shades of pastel violet, blue or mauve. The dress was plainly and simply cut, and with it went an apricot-colored hat, and wonderful jewels that caught the light in a thousand different colors as she moved. She wore, that day, no fuss or feathers, and her face was the face of my little Duchess painted by Sorin long ago.

She must have remembered another great occasion when she had driven through just such crowds and rejoicings, to marry the man she loved. Through the years I had had many reasons for admiring the Queen's self-control, but never more greatly than on her daughter's wedding morning. And I thought, as I watched her enter the abbey and kneel for a moment in prayer, that the most she could ask for her child was the happiness she herself had found in her own marriage.

Lilibet had arranged seats for George and myself in Poets' Corner, not far from the King and Queen. "You must be near us," she said, "as you have been all these years."

There is always a nerve-racking moment, waiting for the bride to appear. It had been a dull morning, but now for a few moments a thin, watery sun fell through the stained-glass windows, lighting the feathers and silks and jewels of the waiting guests. I remember feeling sick in my tummy, just as I did on our pantomime mornings, or before a state ball. The bells that hold such heart-rending memories for all of us clashed out overhead, and every time the doors opened to admit anyone we heard far off that curious murmur that is the voice of a crowd. The organ played softly. We were all of us on tenterhooks, lest something had gone wrong since we left the palace. I know I saw the Queen give a little sigh of relief when at last the great doors were thrown open and the Princess came.

A Princess she looked, that morning. She was pale. She had used hardly any make-up. Her veil was a white (Continued on Page 143)

World copyright, 1950, The Curtis Publishing Co. No portion of this may be reprinted without special written permission. The complete book, a Book of the Month Club selection, published by Harcourt, Brace & Co. at $3.50.

LONDON EVENING STANDARD

WIDE WORLD

Lilibet's last public appearance before baby was born; baby's first public appearance—in pram Lilibet had as baby. Margaret fussed over active Lilibet, pressed pillows on her, gave her footstools, scolded.

COMBINE

"I still can't believe he is really mine," Lilibet wrote to Crawfie, soon after baby was born, "but perhaps that always happens to new parents. Anyway, this particular boy's parents couldn't be more proud."

WIDE WORLD

Lilibet insisted on having her baby in her own room at the palace "amongst the things I know." She fixed up his nursery herself, and packed him a cupboard with her own beloved toys—little soldiers, china mice, families of Teddy bears.

EUROPEAN

Family reluctantly asked Margaret to stay home two nights a week after Crawfie complained girl was exhausting herself going out every night. "We are only young once," Queen said indulgently. "We want her to have a good time."

Crawfie retired in 1949 after almost 17 years as royal governess. "I can never tell you how grateful I am for all your devotion and love for Lilibet and Margaret," Queen wrote. "Thank you with all my heart."

UP TO NOW, you've dressed with more haste than care for eight-o'clock classes, and with considerably more care for eight-o'clock dates. Now you're looking for a job, or you have a job.

Your clothes will help you, or let you down. Organize them or they'll disorganize you. Spark them with your imagination or they'll grow tiresome. You'll indicate your fashion knowledge by the cut of your suit—perhaps a box jacket, slim skirt, though walking ease in skirts is always permissible. You'll remember, or learn, that a jersey dress is the easiest keeper, and a natural for old or new belts and scarves. August weather calls for a silk or rayon-crepe dress, summer weight, fallish color. A black dinner dress is forever the necessary jewel. Your coat for everything can be a bright color—red or bittersweet this year.

Fall 1950's business girl likes the fashion of an oxford-gray flannel suit ($49.95), with a chamois wool vest, velvet sailor by Richard Englander, calfskin bag and walking shoes.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HAROLD HALMA

She changes her suit for dinner with velvet-trimmed red jersey blouse, Suzy's veiled hat, crystal star pins.

early-straight coat goes with every-ning; around $50, comes in winter red.

A long-sleeved rayon-crepe, all-year fashion, $17.95, by Henry Rosenfeld, ocelot belt.

Crisp look for office: jacquard cotton shirt, skirt with braid trim by Raissa Masket, around $22.

FASHION AND YOUR FIRST JOB . . .

Use your wits and save your well-earned dollars by having a plan that includes: a suit and a jersey dress in gray to wear with any known color; two or three velvet hats—they cost so little; cotton shirts in white or autumn colors; cotton gloves; a big gold-and-crystal stickpin that goes on beret, bag or collar. • By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

nful, fashion-right pleated two-piece jersey y Stanley Wyllins, around $25. Mr. Alf's hat.

Dinner dress, a two-piece pleated rayon, by Hannah Troy, $39.95, velvet belt and hat, white gloves.

The red coat can be changed with velvet hat, leopard tie, black suède gloves, bag, pumps.

FASHION PORTRAITS of women across the nation . . .

names and faces you know, wearing first fall fashions that would fit perfectly into the wardrobes of thousands of other American women.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BONSSAGRIVES

Senator from Maine, Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith, dressed for luncheon in a two-piece navy-blue faille, veiled felt hat, calfskin bag.

Mrs. Brien McMahon, wife of the senator from Connecticut, in a slim navy-blue wool coat-dress.

Mrs. Sigourney B. Olney, Jr., of Seattle, likes the velveteen suit fashion worn with velvet beret, baum martens.

Mrs. Leonard K. Firestone, of Beverly Hills, California, wears a black jersey suit with white satin gilet, black fox.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

PHOTOGRAPH BY ANTHONY BEAUCHAMP

Mrs. Bertrand L. Taylor III, of New York, in a black taffeta afternoon suit.

THE JOURNAL'S Little Gem

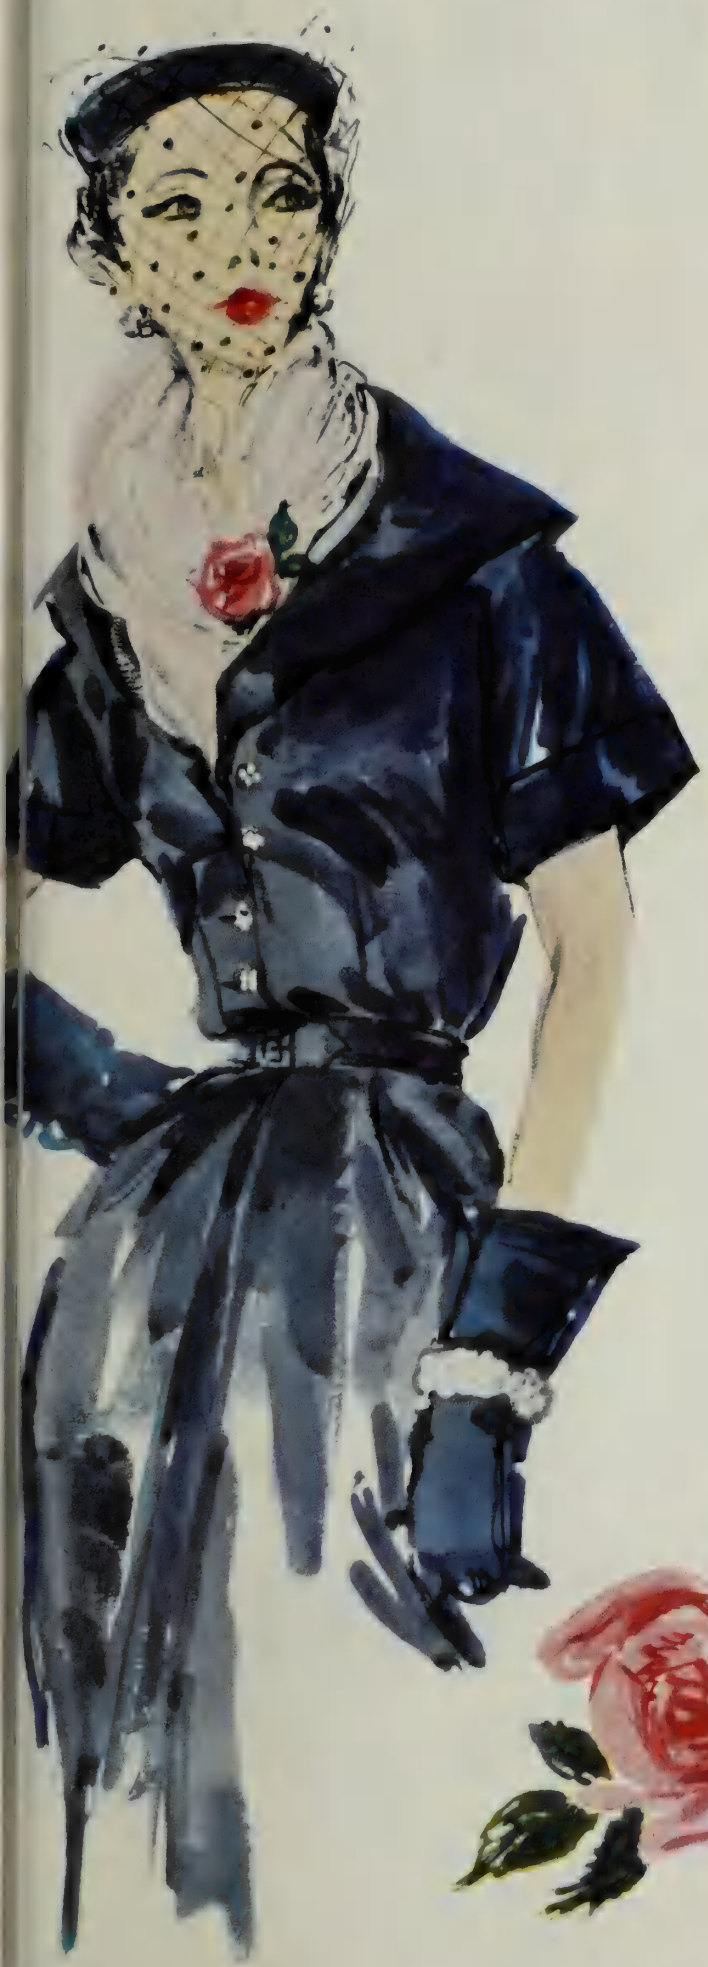
Pearl-buttoned plaid rayon surah blouse matches the coat lining. Vogue Design No. 7115, "Easy-to-Make" blouse, 12 to 20. Slim skirt matches the coat, Vogue Design No. 6949, 24 to 32 waist measure.

JEWELRY BY SEAMAN SCHEPPS

Figure-flattering, slim coat of velvety navy-blue wool, viewed side and front. It has a black velvet collar, and is also effective trimmed with braid. Plaid lining. Vogue Design No. S-4126, 12 to 20.

HAT BY ELIZABETH MARKS, SCARF AND BAG BY MR. JOHN, GLOVES BY ANDRÉ DAVID



PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ontario. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

A GEM of a wardrobe is ideally small. Each piece must fill its needs as perfectly as possible. Having one wool dress instead of three means that more thought and money can go into it. We stress the value of fine fabrics and workmanship. We recently asked a reader what her idea of a GEM of a dress was, and she answered, "It's just the kind of a dress I need" . . . and that is exactly the way we feel about it. It's the perfect kind of dress whether it's casual or dressy. It is never extreme in design, fabric or color. It is a dress which takes kindly to scarves, belts and jewelry . . . which takes a change of buttons each season. A GEM of a coat is one that flatters your figure. If it is slim, as ours is, it must be fitted to perfection. Your lining is gay in plaid rayon surah . . . especially if you make a blouse to match. (When you tire of the plaid, a plain lining can be substituted.) You may like it with braid buttons and a bit of braid on the pocket flaps . . . braid is an important fall fashion detail. We think a fitted coat and a matching skirt is a pleasant change from a suit with a loose coat. If you do not have the confidence to tackle a coat yourself, take a well-designed pattern to a competent local tailor. You have the pleasure of selecting a quality fabric, choosing the pattern and criticizing the fit. If you make the coat yourself, remember a tailor will put in bound buttonholes for you (if you are concerned about making them on heavy fabric), or you can make them with the buttonhole attachment on your sewing machine. It is difficult to find a GEM of a dress or coat, but once you have found it you will never want to part with it. • By NORA O'LEARY Back and other views and prices are on Page 129.

CF A WARDROBE

Day in, day out . . . you will love this casual dress of pale yellow kasha-type wool. It has a leopard-fur belt. Vogue Couturier Design No. 562, one-piece dress. 12 to 20.

BELT BY BEN KING, SCARF BY BROOKE CADWALLADER

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

Beautifully simple midnight-blue satin to wear to dinner, to the theater. Vogue Design No. 7156, one-piece dress. 12 to 20. Pale malines and a rose at the neck. At left, black velvet bag with slit pocket for handkerchief; laced velvet sandal; silk-chiffon rose—your evening accessories.

VELVET BAG BY MILCH, SHOE BY EVINS

If only it were

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

AMY had run all the way back from the party, but when she reached the corner she knew she was too late. The big red house was brightly lighted, a car she recognized as the doctor's was in the drive, and a police siren was shrieking and coming closer.

She was gasping for breath as she stood there, her knees shaking under her, and her face, had anyone seen it, showing complete despair. There was no one near, however. It was the dinner hour for the unfashionable neighborhood, which ate between six and seven. The bitter cold had driven even the dog walkers inside, and the police car had not yet appeared, although the siren sounded closer.

She tried to think, standing there in her mink coat and with the wind blowing the feathers of her party hat in every direction. She looked precisely what she was, a stoutish handsome woman in her thirties, with a square jaw and a rather bitter mouth, who had obviously been to a smart reception and was on her way home. Only she was not going home; not to face the police, or the doctor, or ——

Her mind stopped there, as if it could not go on. But she dared not stay where she was. She turned and gasped her way around the corner, walking stiffly, not noting where she was going. After a few blocks she found herself in front of an apartment house, and stood there staring at it. She and Jessie had quarreled over it, she remembered. She had wanted to give up the big unwieldy house and go there, and Jessie had objected.

"I love it, Amy," she said. "It's the only house I've ever known. I was born here, you know. Even if you weren't, I should think the fact that mother ——"

"It was only mother's by her second marriage," Amy said sharply. "I have no sentiment about that."

"You never liked my father, did you?" Jessie inquired. "Why not, Amy? He was kind to you."

"I was only his stepchild. When you came along I was fourteen. It wasn't easy."

That had been only a few months ago. But then there had been the accident and there was no question of moving Jessie, even after she came home from the hospital. Her back had been hurt, so she had to spend her time in bed or on her chaise longue.

Amy moved toward the wall out of the wind. She was breathing easier, but she still could not decide what to do. Her head was aching viciously again, as it had the day of the accident. Jessie had suggested a drive in the fresh air to help it, and in spite of Jessie's protests Amy had taken the wheel. Then, somewhere out in the country, Jessie had said casually:

"Ranny Mason has asked me to the concert next Saturday. I hope you don't mind, Amy."

"Mind! Why should I mind?" Amy said stolidly. And somehow the car (Continued on Page 135)

ILLUSTRATED BY WALTER BIGGS

The servants whispered that he was back again to Miss Jessie, and wasn't Miss Amy's nose out of joint!

Yesterday
They lay down to sleep...
one to die
before she waked

The hidden tax bill on $50 a week

Every good citizen recognizes the need for taxes. Our schools, roads, police, our military services, our public-health and welfare facilities—all these depend on them, along with many other essentials of a democratic society. This article is not intended as a suggestion that taxes are not necessary. It is intended as a suggestion that when families with $50-a-week income pay almost one third of their money out in hidden taxes, they should know it, and should concern themselves with whether this tax money—our country's joint money—is being carefully and wisely spent.—The Editors.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JOSEPH DI PI

"Mamma, can I have some more meat?" "Sorry, son, I've just given the rest to Uncle Sam."

How much do you pay in taxes? Do you really know?

This is a dollar-and-cents real-life story about a man who pays practically no income tax but who nonetheless works about one week out of three to pay his taxes. The paradox lies in hidden taxes from which no one who spends money is exempt. To find out how these work and what they cost, the Ladies' Home Journal asked a family in the low-income bracket to keep a four-week diary of their spending, and then asked tax experts in producing and merchandising fields to estimate carefully the amount of taxes in the cost of each item purchased. This story is the startling result.

ELEANOR and Bob F. live in a small New Jersey town, 2500 pop., as the sign says. Their home, which they've furnished themselves, is a rented two-bedroom apartment in a four-family white frame house, fronting on the railroad station. Their older son, Bobby, is just eleven, and in the fifth grade; Chuckie is going on five. Eleanor is a pretty, round-cheeked, comfortable sort of person; Bob is rangy, ambitious and good-looking.

They have been married almost fourteen years. When they got home from their honeymoon they had $100, a three-room apartment, some furniture and some wedding gifts.

They also had a chicken coop, for Bob's hobby was the raising of Bantams for show. The coop is gone now; the hobby cost too much. Instead, Bob uses what spare time he can find to build up a side venture in the buying and selling of used auto parts. Last year he had made enough on it to make a down payment on a pickup truck. But all profits go into paying for the truck and cannot be counted in the family income.

Their income comes from Bob's wages. He is a spinner operator in the town's meter factory. His pay is $50 a week, but about five weeks a year, when the factory is rushed with orders and he works on Saturdays, $15 a week is added to his pay. Their annual income is thus around $2675 a year, about $800 below the family average.

A man earning $50 weekly, with two children and a wife, pays only $1.24 a year income tax, but he also pays for planning for his retirement (Social Security) and, in New Jersey, state unemployment-insurance premiums. Thus, when Bob turns his pay check of $50 over to Eleanor on Thursday evenings, there are already two tax deductions from it: old-age benefits . . . . . $ .75 state unemployment-and-disability insurance 50 leaving them with a weekly income of $48.75.

When the Journal asked Eleanor to keep a day-by-day, penny-by-penny account for four weeks of all she spent, she grinned and said that wouldn't be hard—"We don't spend much."

Eleanor is the one in this family who handles the money; she takes the check every Friday down the street to the bank, and as soon as it is cashed, she immediately puts $3.00 of it away in her Christmas Club fund. There is no tax on saving this—but when the family get around to spending it on their usual ties, shirts, shaving lotion, costume jewelry and toys, there will be a variety of taxes. Since most of these are what the Government calls "luxuries," many will take a straight 20 per cent excise tax; but they, as well as the "nonluxuries," will incur other taxes indirectly—concealed in the price. Of each $3, there will be an estimated 1.05 going to pay taxes.

Eleanor doesn't think about this, however, any more than she thinks about Christmas until it is almost upon her. She has the weekly grocery and odds-and-ends shopping to do. Food is their biggest expenditure, although no one spends any money in restaurants, and Eleanor is an expert cook who knows what to do with a leftover. She packs Bob's lunch each morning and sometimes, on demand, packs (Continued on Page 118)

THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE

By HARLAN MILLER

When we remodeled our living room I installed a somewhat elaborate mail slot through the wall beside the front door. . . . And if nine tenths of the mail slid on into a wastebasket and vanished unread, it wouldn't be much loss, and one delivery of the clamorous stuff a day is plenty for me.

◊

Of the eleven radios in our house, the only one that's never needed repairs is the one in my basement bathroom. It's scarcely been moved in seventeen years and it stays tuned to one station; it goes on when the light's turned on; and no one fiddles with it.

◊

I must remember to tell my wife's bridge club that the air hostess on the Pan-American plane which flew me from B.A. to Rio served lunch in thirty minutes to fifty-five people, as many as live around our block, with no fuss at all. (Maybe the system could be adapted to our private parties?)

◊

Maybe one reason why our neighbors don't carry out their good resolves to invite our kids' teachers to dinner is that most of us parents, in the presence of any teacher, still feel like small boys and girls ourselves. (But this year, right after Labor Day ——)

◊

It always gives me a twinge when one of our friends decides to sell the old homestead and move into an apartment which "we can lock up when we go on trips." . . . Though it's not quite so final as moving to Florida or California.

◊

"Wouldn't there be heck to pay," broods Peter Comfort, raking the gravel path in his wife's garden, "if women were really as thin as the figures in the fashion ads? An ordinary hug would fracture 'em."

◊

Ah, for a modern Breughel to paint in one picture the myriad things a child finds to do on a summer day! (And for a Merlin to slow up the flight of the days for us adults.)

◊

Our proudest neighbor is the one with four air-conditioned rooms in his house. He keeps his machines turned on so strong that he's forced to wear a wool bathrobe on the warmest days.

◊

If they taught girls in school to use their voices more charmingly, I'm inclined to think there'd be fewer bachelor girls. (And fewer bachelors, of course.)

Much as I love to dive, I've left the diving board to the young fry since my Dream Girl told me I didn't have the figure for a swan dive. . . . My slightly convex figure looks better when dunked neck-deep.

◊

After stumbling around Latin America like a deaf-mute because of my vanished Spanish and non-existent Portuguese, I'm reviving my reign of terror at breakfast: five new foreign words every morning. (Plus a short poem standing up after dinner.) But I've broken those vows before.

◊

On the first hot day the older members at the club look daggers at the young whippersnappers who take off their neckties at lunch. And on the second hot day they appear necktieless themselves. (All except a few of civilization's pennant bearers in vests and stiff collars.)

◊

After twenty years with the same sturdy refrigerator, we've exiled it to the basement. (Incidentally, it revived my faith in American industry.) Our new one, alas, still has no lock, but anything I mustn't eat I can now padlock in the old one.

◊

If all our friends who took piano lessons as children were laid end to end they wouldn't produce as much music on a piano as they can equipped with combs, tissue paper and bazookas.

As I understand Margaret Mead's new book on sex, the reason men invent airplanes or pole-vault fifteen feet is their secret chagrin at not being able to bear babies. . . . And now may we hear from a male anthropologist?

◊

On my recent thirty-day flight around South America on the clipper planes, I phoned my durable Glamour Girl from Peru, Chile, Argentina and Brazil. It wasn't too expensive (cheaper'n an orchid a week) and I can now talk about it for the next twenty years.

◊

Our neighborhood's No. 1 feminist doesn't care how much the men worry about Russia and wars, so long as the girls keep the young men parked under the neighborhood's lamp-posts, in the shadows, and lay plans for their china and linen and silver and golden weddings.

◊

I don't know how much our children'll cost us from obstetrician to wedding reception. But they've paid their way in sheer fun. . . . When our youngest at six sat down on the running board of the car, in our driveway, looked up at the stars and exclaimed "Isn't it a wonderful world!" he paid for his college tuition.

◊

The man next door has surrendered to the psychiatrists. He is now convinced that the friction between him and his boy is attributable to the fact that he forced the boy to eat his eggs at age four, and made him wear a cap in cold weather.

◊

Often I'm haunted by a fear that our Yankee civilization is wasting on knickknacks and bric-a-brac too much of its energy that ought to be devoted to new houses built on 150-foot lots to last 150 years.

◊

"The way they gush about a new girdle or a new bra," says Betty Comfort, behaving like a martyr with the lawn hose, "you'd think the future of the human race depended on 'em!"

◊

When your wife overlooks a fault that chafes your conscience . . . and you find letters from Junior awaiting you in Lima, B.A. (about his allowance) and Rio . . . and your daughter neatly sorts and files your twenty-year accumulation of papers and mementos . . . and your youngest at ten proposes "Let's start our bedtime talks again every night" . . . then you want to telegraph somebody that the preacher who married you must immediately be promoted at least to the rank of bishop.

COOL COLORFUL COLLECTION

By Ann Batchelder

IT'S a beautiful morning—the grass is green and needs cutting, I notice, but who cares? It's green and pushes itself up as it pleases and carpets the lawn nicely. I know that the crab grass and the faded dandelions are bandying smart remarks back and forth about the mower boy, and the rocks won't budge an inch no matter what.

The brook tinkles along like a ukulele, and the sun makes a mirror in every pool that Narcissus might bend over and lose himself in the self-adored face that never failed him and never grew dim. Yes, it's a wonderful day, an August day, the beginning of the end of summer. Down in the orchard garden there are the late flowers. But more than those, there are the late strawberries, and the ever-bearing raspberry bushes hang heavy with fruit (the birds have their share, but so do we).

August is hot—but hot. Well, to take up the agenda of this meeting, let's get down to business and bring up the various matters that are pressing for a hearing at this gathering.

Here we present, introduce and bring to your attention a group of as young and sprightly, cool and colorful summer dishes as you'll come across in many a long day. And if I get my metaphors mixed, give it no mind. After all, it's August, and it's hard to keep such things as metaphors on the mind.

Here's something special. And I'm going to put it on the special shelf, which means that it's going in right now, ahead of more important and imposing things. Just because it is so special, and that means the receipt for sesame bread sticks! They're delicious with any summer salad, including these.

SESAME BREAD STICKS

Dissolve ½ cake compressed yeast or ½ package quick dry yeast (1 teaspoon) in 2 tablespoons lukewarm water, according to directions on the package. Melt ½ cup shortening in 6 tablespoons scalded milk and cool to lukewarm. Stir in dissolved-yeast mixture. Sift together 2 cups flour, ¾ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon sugar in a large bowl. Make a well in center of dry ingredients. Add liquids all at once and beat until dough comes away from sides of bowl. Set in a warm place to rise until double in bulk. Punch down.

Pinch off pieces of dough no bigger than a walnut. Roll between palms of your hands or on a board into pencil-thin strips only ¼" thick and about 6" long. Let the strips dry about 10 minutes. Then dip in beaten egg (1 egg is enough for this receipt), then roll in hulled sesame seeds (you'll need ¼ pound). Arrange the sticks on ungreased baking sheets or line cooky sheets with aluminum foil—but no greasing, mind now. Bake without rising (except what they do in the oven, and you can't help that) in a moderately slow oven, 325° F., until a light golden tan and very crisp. Takes about 25 minutes at this slow speed. Don't try to hurry them in a hotter oven: they get mad and cut up like four-year-olds if you do. Makes about 5 dozen. Store in a tightly covered tin to keep them crisp. (The tin won't be occupied long.)

More substantial, but beautiful. If American cooks didn't invent jellied salads and jellied desserts, then I don't know my history book or have mislaid my dream book. There never was such a transformer and lifter-upper as gelatin. We take it for granted, use it all the time, yet it does a thousand lovely

(Continued on Page 82)

Receipts

LIME-AND-MINT FRUIT SALAD

COTTAGE-CHEESE SNOWCAPS

AVOCADO-RIBBON ASPIC

SHRIMP-AND-CUCUMBER RING

SESAME BREAD STICKS

FROZEN FRUIT SALAD

FROZEN COFFEE MOUSSE WITH PEACHES

CANTALOUPE SUPREME

COCONUT BAVARIAN CREAM WITH RASPBERRIES

PHOTO BY STUART-POWLER

Fine a Day

PHOTO BY WE

By Ann Batchelder

1 Like meeting an old friend, a book worth reading once is worth reading again. Right now I'm reading for the nth time a story called Lazarus, by the great Russian author Andreyev. And it's not my last reading either.

2 Salads are more than asides and grace notes to a luncheon or dinner. Try serving a big bowl of chicken-and-white-grape salad for your really up-and-up buffet. Crisp toast fingers are your best bet with this.

3 Another buffet treat is a tray of the small round tomatoes, hollowed out. The pulp chopped and mixed with chopped cucumber and shrimp mixed with lemon mayonnaise. Fill the tomatoes with this and serve with mayonnaise in which chopped cress is mixed, and garnish with cress. This is tasty to the tongue and beautiful to the eye.

4 Here's a sandwich, new to me: Spread cucumber slices with creamed Roquefort cheese, put between small rounds of bread spread with water-cress butter.

5 Years ago I toyed with the first shrimp puffs ever to show up in a surprise package. I hadn't seen any for a very long time until I came across them the other day in a pretty fancy food shop.

6 They look like little pinkish chips when you get them. But—heat some shortening in a frying pan, fairly deep, drop in the chips and, lo and behold, they grow and puff and come out looking like rose petals. Salt them very little and serve them hot. Nice to have them back again, for they're different and wonderful on the hors-d'oeuvre tray or with salads.

7 For tea, among the sweet sandwiches don't fail to include little ones made with lime marmalade. It goes with tea like candles and roses.

8 Broiled bananas with steak are enjoying a well-earned popularity hereabouts. All you do is peel and split them lengthwise, sprinkle with lemon juice and a little brown sugar and broil them until they're nice and tender—not too soft. And they are delicious with ham too.

9 From an old cookbook: "The introduction of cooking stoves in our kitchens can scarcely be described as anything but calamitous. Think what the careless domestic can do to spoil the food that came from the Dutch ovens and the spits in perfect and unspoiled delicacy. The wary housewife now has one more watch to set upon her table." Now our ranges do the watching!

10 Let us see what more can be done about spinach. It's here to stay, I'm sure. Ever try a spinach pie? Make a good flaky crust and line a deep pie plate. Brush the crust with the white of an egg and prick it with a fork. Bake until the crust is set but not completely done.

11 Second Step: Now cook your spinach in as little water as possible. When it's done, drain it like all get out. Chop it fine and season it with salt, pepper, nutmeg and two tablespoons butter. Mix a chopped hard-boiled egg with the spinach. Put a layer in the crust, sprinkle well with Parmesan or grated Cheddar cheese, cover with another layer, add little pieces of butter and more cheese and bake in an oven at 350° F. until the cheese is melted, about twenty-five minutes. You may change your mind about spinach.

12 Here's an Italian dish that I am as partial to as the pastor to a chicken-pie supper when he knows which pie is which. It's fine for a luncheon and goes well with ham or fried chicken for any kind of supper.

13 This is what you do. Cook, with milk—not water—some farina or wheat cereal as the directions tell you. Spread it out on a glass platter and let it cool. Then cut it into rounds half an inch thick and the size of a half dollar. Put some butter in a large glass pie plate, then a layer of the rounds, cover with Parmesan cheese, then another layer, more cheese and butter and bake until brown—they won't get very brown. Serve sizzling hot in the plate you baked them in. And they're called gnocchi.

14 A main dish for dinner, after a jellied-soup beginning, is the white meat of cooked turkey, sliced, done in a wonderfully seasoned cream sauce to which has been added a cup of sliced sautéed mushrooms and some chopped green peppers. Serve very hot on rice or even on toast.

15 Pretty slick for the chafing dish—and perfect for a buffet—are creamed mushrooms. But here's the gimmick. When ready, add half a cup of crumbled French-fried onions. Get them in cans. They're very crisp and crumble easy as easy. It's a touch. Try it with canned mushroom soup.

16 A wonderful thing to go with smoked turkey, cold meat or cheese is Morello-cherry jam—delicious and worth getting acquainted with.

17 Here's a breezy little number by way of a dessert. Take half a pound of creamed cottage cheese. Add a little cream. Stir in a heaping teaspoon of cocoa or powdered chocolate, a few drops of vanilla and a pinch of salt. Mix well. Chill and serve with hot chocolate sauce. One teaspoon of powdered coffee does the same trick if you like Mocha flavor.

18 As pretty a garnish as you could wish for: very thin slices of scallions floating atop a cup of tomato bouillon.

19 Skipping lightly from crag to crag brings me to veal chops; and I haven't said a word about these since I don't know when. But you'll like this kind.

THE OLD BRIDGE

Staunch as the dwellers on these granite hills
The old bridge stands.
Here is a destiny that time fulfills,
Defying man's destroying hands.

20 First Chapter: Brown six veal chops in butter or margarine. Put them in one layer in a large glass baking dish. Between the chops and around them put plenty of minced raw onion. Put a big tablespoon of boiled rice on each chop. On top of the rice arrange thick slices of tomatoes. Chop the rest of the tomatoes and put this on the onion.

21 Second Chapter: Season your dish with salt, pepper and a pinch of orégano. Now pour over all a cup of liquid—might be chicken broth or consommé. Bake, covered, in a moderate oven, 350° F., for an hour and a half or until the chops are very tender. A green salad and fried green peppers with mushrooms are pretty elegant with this.

22 Tropical note: Ever try to crack a coconut? The ax will do it. Also a hatchet. But it's a lot of exercise. Put the hard shell in a shallow pan—to catch the milk—and leave it in a 300° F. oven till the shell cracks. It really does.

23 Take some potatoes with the largest waist measures you can find. Boil them. Let them cool. Slice. Dust with flour and brown well on both sides in butter or margarine. Spread half the slices with deviled ham and put together with unspread ones, as you'd do a sandwich. Serve right away.

24 Try this one in your omelet pan. Beat four eggs lightly. Add half a can of condensed mushroom soup. Season with salt and pepper. Cook as you do an omelet and garnish with orange slices, cress and broiled mushrooms.

25 To vary the French-toast routine, spread bread slices with sharp Cheddar cheese. Put two slices together—sandwichlike. Cut into four strips and dip in eggs beaten up with milk and fry. Serve hot—but very hot—and very good.

26 For P.M. tea or 1 P.M. luncheon, make a receipt of biscuits. Add to the mixture two teaspoons of sugar and the grated rind of half a big lemon. Cut them small. Splendid with jam or marmalade.

27 Mix cream cheese with Gruyère or Roquefort and make softer with chili sauce. Salt and add a few finely chopped ripe olives. Very tasty.

28 Herb-and-spice division: Sweet basil is a must with any tomato dish, from salad to bake to broil to fry. Corn dishes stand up like a maid of honor if given pepper. Nutmeg or mace with broccoli and spinach.

29 Mash and purée some ripe bananas. Add a little sugar and beat up with lemon juice to taste. Chill and serve with lemon or orange ice. Very cool.

30 Word-to-the-wise dept. No dinner is better than the coffee that comes after. Remember—the curtain line is the one the reviewers remember.

31 The month is done. Quite a lot of cooking has been done since we started out. Keep cool, feel cool and be as cool as August will let you be. Bear in mind that, come Christmas, you'll be longing for these long, hot, lazy days. In the meantime—time's a-wasting.

BEAT-THE-HEAT

3 LUNCHES

. . . delicious and quick

WITH SOUP AS THE ONE HOT DISH

ANNE MARSHALL
Director Home Economics
Campbell Soup Company

BY Anne Marshall

How to feed the family well these late summer days, and yet keep cool while doing so—that's a problem every woman faces. Nowadays, more and more women are coming up with the answer. As the one hot dish needed in every family meal, they're serving soup, chosen for deliciousness and nourishment. Soups like these on this page take but a jiffy to prepare—and how good they are! Trust your family to find that out!

#1 BRIGHT BID TO APPETITES—on one of those "too-hot-to-eat" days—is the soup most folks like best: zesty tomato soup. It appeals to the children no less than to the grown-ups. Sandwiches, fruit and a beverage complete the invitation.

Tomato Soup
Cream Cheese and Jelly Sandwich
Peach Chocolate Milk

#2 ALWAYS A FAMILY FAVORITE—hearty, homey chicken noodle soup. Folks just naturally take to it, and mothers are glad to know this includes the youngsters, for it's so good for them, so nourishing. Yes, tempting is the word for this lunch.

Chicken Noodle Soup
Summer Vegetable Salad Iced Tea

#3 "HERE'S A PARTY!"—says cream of mushroom soup, the moment guests sit down and catch that appetizing aroma. The soup is so delicious, so rich and creamy, it always encourages eating. Try this "entertaining" lunch built around it.

Cream of Mushroom Soup
Pineapple Basket Tea Sandwiches
Lemonade

Summer's Busy Shelf

A well-stocked shelf of fine prepared soups can be so helpful in summer. With a nice choice of soups on the shelf, the one hot dish can be varied delightfully, and so keep meals interesting to the family even on the hottest summer day.

The doctor advises a patient about

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

DOCTOR: "Your recent physical examination showed that you are in good condition, although your blood pressure is up. Additional tests and examinations I have made indicate that you have uncomplicated high blood pressure. This means that no underlying diseases or infections are causing your condition.

"Actually, high blood pressure, or hypertension, may be slight, moderate, or severe. Even when it is severe, many people continue to lead active, normal lives for many years simply by following the doctor's advice and by adopting healthful living habits."

PATIENT: "Just what is high blood pressure?"

DOCTOR: "It is a condition that results when the blood flowing through the body's small vessels meets increased resistance. This is usually brought about by the narrowing of these small vessels. This narrowing may occur in response to emotional or other factors.

"Everybody's blood pressure varies from time to time. However, when these blood vessels remain constantly tightened up, persistent high blood pressure results."

PATIENT: "How does high blood pressure cause harm?"

DOCTOR: "Mainly by placing an additional strain on the heart and blood vessels. This, in turn, causes enlargement of the left ventricle of the heart. As a result, the efficiency of the heart's chief pumping chamber is lessened. Then, too, the arteries wear out sooner than they would if the blood pressure were normal."

PATIENT: "I understand. Now, Doctor, what can I do to help myself?"

DOCTOR: "First, learn to avoid worry and mental strain. For example, if there are situations which always upset you, make a special effort to avoid them. Slow down—go through your daily routine without undue fuss or hurry. The calmer you become, the more your blood vessels tend to relax—and thus help to lower your blood pressure. You must also get your weight down to what is normal for you and keep it there, you must get plenty of sleep and rest, and you must not neglect having periodic health examinations."

PATIENT: "What about the new treatments . . . special diets and drugs?"

DOCTOR: "In selected cases, the newer forms of treatment are often helpful. Some of the newer drugs may be helpful in many cases but owing to the wide variation in the causes of high blood pressure, these should only be taken with the advice of your physician. Various diets in which salt, protein, and fats are restricted have often benefited some patients. But in your case, like many others, simple common sense treatment usually produces good results."

Knowledge of what causes high blood pressure is increasing, thanks to research supported by the Life Insurance Medical Research Fund and others. In fact, there is hope that both preventive and curative measures may be found as research continues. For more information about high blood pressure, write for Metropolitan's free booklet, 80J, entitled "Your Heart."

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 80J, "Your Heart."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

BELLES ON THEIR TOES

(Continued from Page 35)

Mother stood there, tall, slim and quite beautiful. Her figure never even whispered that she had had a dozen children.* Her veil was pushed back over her hat, and her face was white and taut.

A few strands of red hair, the only part of Mother's person that wouldn't do her bidding, curled defiantly from under her hat. Everything else was black and white.

Whenever Dad said good-by there on the porch, he always made believe we were secretly glad to get rid of him. Nothing could have been farther from the truth, because we worshiped him, and he knew it. But he'd say we were only waiting for him to get out of earshot before we'd start a wild celebration that would run far into the night. He'd tell us our long faces didn't fool him any, and that someday he was going to ride around the block and come back and catch us decking the halls with boughs of holly, building a bonfire, burning him in effigy, and—the biggest sin of all—even using one of his Durham-Duplex razors.

Mother didn't want us to know how she felt about leaving, so she smiled and tried to act like Dad.

"Those long faces don't fool me any," she boomed as heartily as she could. "Just as soon as I'm out of sight ——" The boom dropped to a whisper, and then she couldn't go on at all. She held out her arms and we broke ranks and burrowed into them.

She didn't trust herself to talk for a while, and neither did we. Finally she pulled herself loose and started down the stairs. Just before she got to the cab, she turned and looked at us—at each one of us.

Mother has a way of making each child know he means something very special to her. Not just as one of the group, but as an individual person who has his own special claim on her heart.

"I love you so," she said quietly. "I wouldn't leave you, if it didn't seem the only way we can stay together later on. You know that, don't you?"

We knew it, all right. Most of Dad's money had gone back into his business. Mother was going to try to operate the business herself—that was one reason the trip to Europe was necessary. If she failed, the family might have to be divided or to move in on Mother's relatives on the West Coast.

MOTHER'S mother had invited all of us to come and live with her, in Oakland, California. Since there were so many of us, Mother thought it would be a bit of an imposition—more, in fact, than she was willing to impose on anyone, even her own mother. Several of Dad's friends had offered to adopt some of us. None of us wanted that.

"Don't worry about us," Anne assured Mother now. "Everything will be hotsy, honest!"

"I'm sure it will, dear," Mother smiled. "Not only hotsy, but totsy too."

The driver started to help her into the cab. "I'm sorry about your husband," he said.

"Thank you very much." Now Mother's voice sounded far away.

"I talked to a fellow that saw it happen. It must have been an awful shock for you."

"Shut up," Frank whispered fiercely. "Why can't he just shut up?"

Anne nudged Frank sharply, and he was quiet.

We got back into line as the cab started down the driveway. We could see Mother waving from the window in the back.

Lillian, who was ten, burst into tears. "I want to go with Mother," she sobbed. "Tell her to come back."

Anne took two steps and stood in front of Lill, blocking her from view. "I told you not to do that," Anne said between her teeth. "I told you the first one who did that before Mother left I'm going to murder." Anne sounded as if she meant it too.

"I can't help it," Lill cried. "She's got to come back."

All the way up Eagle Rock Way, we coul see Mother waving. We smiled and wave back. Lill stopped crying before the car w out of sight, and Anne stepped aside so th Lill could wave too.

The car disappeared around a curve, ar Lill burst into tears again. "I didn't mea to," she sobbed. "Honest, I didn't."

"It's all right," Anne told her. "We kno you didn't."

"Do you think she could see me at the en when I was waving?"

"I'm sure she could," Anne said. "C course she could, honey." Anne burst in tears herself.

We went back into the house, and su denly we didn't feel so depressed any mo Perhaps it was the saying good-by we ha dreaded, even more than being witho Mother. Mother had gone on trips befo and we had lived through them. And she be back in a little more than a month.

"Everybody," said Anne, drying her tea "did fine. I think Mother was proud of us

"We'll get things running like clockwo around here," Ernestine told us. "Moth won't know us when she gets back."

WE began to see that what seemed the e of everything might really be just a begi ning. There was even a certain exhilarati in knowing that Mother had had enou confidence in us to leave us by ourselves.

"Yes, sir," said Anne, almost gaily, "e erything went so well that, for the first tim I think we're going to make a go of it." S was fairly beaming now. "Everybody h haved so well I could kiss you all."

"I knew it," said Bill, ducking. "The mi ute Mother leaves, you start making threats

Anne grabbed him, and planted a resoun ing, moist smack on the side of his neck. E struggled, giggled and hollered. The no sounded fine after three days of whispe The tension began to drain out of us.

"I know we're going to be able to stay t gether," Ernestine said. "I'm so sure of now that I could almost go build that bonf Dad always talked about."

"Let's see," Anne grinned. "Where's t nearest holly tree?"

"You keep away from his razors, though Frank warned. "I'll be needing those o day."

Ernestine and Martha hooted. Bill me tioned something about how the cat wou be fully competent to lick off any whisk that Frank had at present or might produ for years to come. Anne kissed Bill loud again, and he hollered some more. Frank r an exploratory hand across his chin, b there was no sound of sandpaper.

Mother sailed with the tide that morni aboard the Scythia for England.

Dad had been scheduled to speak at t London Power Conference, and to presi over a session of the World Congress of S entific Management, at the Masaryk Aca emy, in Prague, Czechoslovakia. Those we two honors that meant his work in moti study and the elimination of fatigue in indu try was being recognized internationally.

Dad had been a consulting engineer a efficiency expert, specializing in big industr He was the creator of motion study, whic as one skeptic alleged—and Dad never d nied—was designed to "make it easy to wo hard."

Dad's method was to study a worker's m tions, and then to cut down those motio often by redesigning the machinery that t man operated. Mother was his business pa ner. She had given him a dozen children a had written with him a half-dozen books e plaining motion study. Now she wanted make certain that he received the recognit the European meetings would bring. And did we.

She had been invited to substitute for h at the two sessions. At first it seemed out the question to accept. And then it seem to be the one opportunity of keeping the fa ily together. Engineering was, and still is man's field. Mother knew there would difficulties in trying to continue Dad's bu s. But if she made a success of her two eches in Europe, before some of the big- t engineers in the world, she might have easier time in convincing Dad's clients it she could do the work.

*Mary, the next to oldest, died of diphtheria in 1912.

Mother wasn't accustomed to making de- ons. Those, in the past, had been left to d. He had set the pattern, and she had owed it. Even the idea of twelve children l been his originally. But if Dad thought idea was good, Mother was convinced it s marvelous.

There was a time when Mother wept easily, en she was afraid of walking alone at ht, when a lightning storm would send her ddering into a dark closet. All that ended day Dad died. It ended because it had to l. It ended because of the realization that at she really feared was that something uld separate them.

Well, what she had feared had happened, l tears would not wash out a word of it. So gave his speech in London and presided him in Prague. And she was not afraid more.

AD used to complain that if the Bureau of ndards in Washington ever needed a pre- definition or an exact measurement of a k of All Trades Who Was Master of None, it would have to do was to build a glass e, create a vacuum therein, chill to degrees centigrade, and send for Tom. Tom had been with the family for seven- n years, as Dad's handy n. The title should not taken too literally. In a usehold whose routine bound by a chain of ciency, Tom was un- stionably the weakest

Tom knew a little some- ng about everything. t enough to fix it if it were broken, but ugh to think he could. He was unwilling oncede that any job was too big for him, or t he had not done a similar, but infinitely re difficult, job before. He never forgot a take, either, and so was able to keep king the same errors over and over again.

Tom was of Irish descent, small, light- ted and tough. Although no longer young n when he first came to work for us, he clung to the belief that the bigger they e the harder they fell. As a result, he metimes presented a battered and swollen earance, and would walk around the se announcing darkly:

I don't take nothing from nobody, unner- nd? Nothing from nobody."

He was always evasive when asked how he received the bruises, but would manage leave with the inquirer the impression t the six club-swinging bullies who sprang him in the dark, when his back was ned, would be released from the hospital fortnight or so.

Tom liked children and animals, and all of were immensely fond of him. Before ther left, she had decided that it would necessary to discharge either the cook or n, as an economy move. It never occurred ny of us, or to Tom, that he should be one to go.

Why, Tom," Martha had said, putting words what all of us were thinking, ould be willing to cut off his right arm for e would have too. There was no guaranty, ugh, that in his eagerness to oblige he ldn't have got rattled and cut off his left by mistake.

o the cook had departed and Tom had ed permanently into the kitchen. He wore a butcher's apron and a chef's cap, boasted that he never had followed a pe in his life. This last was all too obvious veryone.

he discharging of the cook was the only nomy measure Mother had had time to t. She hadn't said anything about our ing other expenses. But Mother made it licy never to tell us to do the things she ught we were old enough to do without npting.

When Mother said good-by, for instance, there was no last-minute outpouring about being good, and going to bed early, and brushing our teeth and doing what Anne told us. We knew Mother wanted those things done, so there was no need for her to repeat them. She may have worried—of course she worried—about whether we'd do them or not. But she didn't intend to show any lack of confidence unless we gave her reason.

There was no doubt that the immediate problem was saving money. For the time being, perhaps indefinitely, there would be little or no money coming in. When there are eleven children in a family, there is always money going out.

We talked economy in the dining room before lunch, an hour or so after Mother's departure. From an odor not unlike that of burning leaves, we gathered that Tom was having trouble with the cooking again. Part of the economy drive would have to be aimed in that direction.

Anne had been left $600 to run the family during Mother's five-week absence. That included the cost of our tickets to Nantucket, Massachusetts, because we intended to spend the summer at our cottage there, as usual. Mother had made boat reservations from New York to New Bedford, Massachusetts, and from New Bedford to Nantucket, an island off Cape Cod, and Anne was to pay for them when we picked them up. We thought it would be a good idea to spend only $300, and to turn the rest back to Mother, as a surprise, when she joined us at Nantucket.

"In the first place," Anne told us, "there is the milk bill. Thirteen quarts a day. More than three gallons."

Anne was sitting at Mother's place, at the head of the oval dining-room table. As the oldest one at home, the senior officer present, she was automatically in command. Ten feet away, in Dad's place, sat Frank. The rest of us, including Bob and Jane, who were still in high chairs, sat around the perimeter. Anne had Dad's check stubs, some bills and the family budget book spread out before her.

"The milk bill alone amounts to more than fifty dollars a month," she said. "I don't see how Daddy paid for all these things. Cheaper by the dozen, nothing!"

We decided we could get along with only nine quarts, without anyone's dying of malnutrition.

"Each of us is going to have to sacrifice a little," Anne continued, thumbing through the check stubs.

SHE called out the amounts on the stubs and what they were for. Food and clothes. We were going to have to cut down on them. Doctors' bills. We didn't intend to have any. Dentists' bills. Everybody's teeth that needed straightening had been straightened. Tobacco. Certainly not. Gasoline. We had already sold Dad's car. Dancing school ——

"Frank and I," Bill suggested, "could do our part by cutting out dancing school." Bill was eleven, and it was a fight every Monday afternoon to get him into his Buster Brown collar and patent-leather pumps.

"We couldn't ask you to do that," Martha smirked.

"We're willing to sacrifice a little," Bill said.

Dancing school went into the discard, and Bill ran a relieved finger around his soft and unbuttoned collar. Also abandoned were music lessons, which everybody sacrificed without too much reluctance.

We drew the line at cutting allowances, since all of us thought Dad kept them trimmed pretty close to the bone. But we did institute a series of fines that would reduce our take-home pay. Leaving on an electric light or the cold water would cost the offender two cents; hot water, four cents; failure to do any of the things on the process charts, five cents.

Dad had the household organized on an efficiency basis, just as he organized a fac-

(Continued on Page 63)

Education's first goal is the power of distinguishing what is first-rate from what is not.

—SIR RICHARD LIVINGSTONE.

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

So often every week versatile Velveeta is just the thing!

O.K. ANYTIME BECAUSE

- EVERYBODY LIKES ITS MILD CHEDDAR CHEESE FLAVOR
- SO EASY! VELVEETA ALWAYS SPREADS, SLICES, TOASTS, MELTS PERFECTLY
- RICH IN MILK NUTRIENTS THE WHOLE FAMILY NEEDS
- DIGESTIBLE AS MILK ITSELF!

Whether it's a snack for Junior's gang or your own canasta guests—Velveeta is just the thing! Lots of fine food value from milk for those hungry kids, and this cheese food has such a talent for making gala snacks, too (note the Nutburgers, for instance). Besides this, hot Velveeta sauce casts a delicious golden spell over vegetables and even leftover meats; gives you a magic key to thrifty, nutritious main dishes. Let the 2-lb. Velveeta loaf be your right-hand-helper many times every week!

VELVEETA NUTBURGERS. Blend together 1 c. chopped peanuts, ¼ c. pickle relish, ¼ c. Kraft Mayonnaise, ⅛ tsp. Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper to taste. Split 5 round buns in half and spread bottom halves with nut mixture. Top each with a generous slice of Velveeta. Place in moderate (350°) oven for 10 min. or until Velveeta melts. Cover with top halves of buns and serve at once.

YOUR GARDENER'S PRIDE...GLORIFIED!

GARDEN GLORY. For the sauce melt ½ lb. Velveeta in the top of a double boiler. Gradually blend in ¼ cup of milk. Place whole baked tomatoes in the center of a chop plate; arrange hot cooked broccoli around the edge. Pour the smooth, golden Velveeta sauce over the broccoli.

INDOORS OR OUT GOLDEN NUTBURGERS HIT THE SPOT!

Wonderful new book on cheese cookery! Every woman w loves to serve unusual dishes will want "THE CHEE COOKBOOK," by Marye Dahnke, Director of Consu Service for Kraft Foods Company. Two-hundred twe four pages; 250 recipes; washable cover. Get it at your lo book store or send $2.00 and your name and address to publishers, A. A. Wyn, Inc., 23 W. 47th St., New York

VELVEETA IS THE QUALITY CHEESE FOOD...MADE BY KRAFT

(Continued from Page 61)

y. He believed that what worked in a ısehold would work in a factory, and what rked in a factory would work in a house- d—especially if the household happened have eleven children. The process charts, t developed for industry, were an exam- . They told each of us what we were sup- ed to do, and when we were supposed to it.

The charts were in the boys' and girls' throoms, upstairs. They listed duties such washing the dishes, making the beds, mbing hair, brushing teeth, weighing our- ves, listening for fifteen minutes a day to nch and German language records on the onograph, sweeping and dusting.

Dad had things broken down to such a fine nt that Lillian, who wasn't tall enough to ch table tops and high shelves, dusted the and the lower shelves. Ernestine did the s and the high shelves.

We decided we could eat much more aply if we cut out roasts and steaks, ex- t perhaps on Sundays. Ernestine was a d shopper, so she would plan the meals, ssing such items as frankfurters and baked ns, and she would do most of the buying. already got our canned goods from whole- rs, so we couldn't save there.

Ernestine also would try to teach Tom the essity of putting such ingredients as bak- powder into the corn muffins, and of add- water to fresh vegetables before placing n on the stove.

Martha, who was the most efficient of all s and could keep her money the longest, put in charge of the budget. She also ld supervise the packing of clothes for ıtucket.

We talked about the matter of college. ıe had just completed her sophomore year mith. Dad wasn't a college man himself, had believed that two colleges were bet- han one. At Dad's suggestion, Anne had le plans to transfer that fall to the Uni- ity of Michigan. Ernestine had gradu- from high school the night before Dad . She was registered at Smith and was to t taking her college-board examinations couple of days.

We knew Mother wouldn't allow either of girls to change plans. She insisted that ehow or other she was going to send all of hrough college. Dad had wanted that. s for our getting odd jobs to contribute ıe income, maybe that would come later. the time being, at least for the summer, he older ones would be needed at home. I don't have to tell you," Anne said, ing significantly at the bigger children, ıt a lot depends on how things go this mer."

wouldn't want anyone to adopt me, d you, Dan?" Fred asked. Fred was n and he and Dan, who was one year ıger, were inseparable.

Heck, no," said Dan. "I wouldn't let ne adopt me, would you, Fred?"

Where did you ever get an idea like ?" Anne asked. "Nobody's going to be ted, especially if everything goes thly while Mother's gone."

the time that Tom announced lunch eady, all the household duties had been ated and the new economy budget was lance.

was Ernestine's turn to bring in the She eyed askance a leg of lamb that she ed in from the kitchen. It was burned st black and was festooned with charred to halves, which looked as if they had ne a part of the lamb—a part that ed lancing and bandages.

nestine was the only member of the fam- no didn't get along well with Tom. They had a running feud that had started before, when she had proudly presented picture of herself and he had announced ıe intended to hang it in the pantry as a pellent.

w, without saying anything, but with ace of a martyr who intended to co- te if it meant poisoning all of us, Ernes- placed the platter in front of Anne.

ne was caught off guard. "What," she ed in genuine alarm, "is that? Get it out of here quickly, you hear me? And tell Tom no one is in the mood for his jokes."

"It is supposed to be a leg of lamb," Ernestine said through pursed lips.

"How do you know?" Anne challenged distrustfully.

"I asked him and that's what he said. Leg of lamb."

Anne turned the platter around, studying the contents from all angles. "Any lamb with a leg like that," she said, "had better see a veterinarian."

"I'm beginning to think we should have kept the cook and got rid of that man," Ernestine announced.

"Hush!" Anne warned. "He'll hear you."

"I don't care if he does."

Tom appeared red-faced and furious at the butler's pantry door. "You don't, eh?" he shouted, reaching behind him to untie his apron. "All right, just for that I quit."

Tom sometimes quit as often as three times in a single day, so the dramatic announcement didn't have too much effect.

"I don't have to work here, you know," he continued. "I ain't no slave." He took off the apron and waved it in Ernestine's face.

"No one wants you to quit," Anne told him. "We all know we couldn't get along without Tom, don't we, Ernestine?"

Ernestine caught Anne's threatening glance and finally nodded reluctantly. "I suppose so," she said.

"There," Anne smiled sweetly. "You see?" "What's the matter with the lamb?" Tom asked, somewhat mollified.

"Nothing," Anne replied, "except that it seems just a mite well done. We like our lamb just a little rarer."

"It's lamb rangoon," said Tom, as if that clinched the argument. "And lamb rangoon has to be well done."

"Well, why didn't you say so?" Anne asked. "That explains everything."

"Nobody never gives me a chance to explain nothing around here, that's why," Tom mumbled, as he disappeared into the kitchen, tying his apron back on. "You work and slave to make them a special dish like lamb rangoon and then they try to fire you. After seventeen years with the family too."

"It still looks like something that had better not be touched until the coroner arrives," Ernestine whispered.

"Lamb rangoon," Anne muttered. "I've seen rubber boots that looked more appetizing." Then, realizing that as the oldest she was setting a bad example, she started carving, and added, "I'll bet it's good, though."

"Yummy," said Martha sarcastically.

"We'll try to get the cooking straightened out before Mother comes back," Anne promised. "Come on, now. Get the rest of the food, Ernestine. And bring in some cold cereal for those who don't want lamb."

Bill developed a high fever and broke out with spots that afternoon. By the time the doctor arrived, Ernestine and Martha were feverish and pimply. Ernestine wanted to cover herself with cold cream and powder, and still take her examinations, but the doctor put her to bed. By noon the next day, all eleven of us were broken out and bedridden.

No catastrophe ever befell any of us but that Tom, sometime in the distant past, had experienced the same trouble, only more so.

If one of our boys stepped on a nail, Tom would allay fears of lockjaw by describing how he once had stepped on a spike that went all the way through his foot and into his ankle. Not only that, but he'd take off his shoe and show you the scar.

When Bill broke out with spots, Tom was the first to discover them, and hurriedly ordered Bill to bed.

"But I don't feel sick," Bill protested. "Just scratchy."

"Don't tell me nothing," Tom commanded. "You're sick as a dog."

"Just scratchy," Bill repeated, scratching himself.

"I tole you wunst, and I ain't going to tell you again," Tom said. "Get to bed, now. And if you don't stop scratching yourself you'll be out of the club for a hundret years."

Only members of Tom's club were admitted to the kitchen after supper. This was true even before he became cook, because Tom always had presided over the kitchen once the day's duties were done.

For club members who were in good standing, Tom sometimes would play the harmonica, pop corn, distribute candy and perform card tricks. Those who were out of the club could come no closer to the activities than the back hall. The door was left open, and they were allowed to watch, but not to eat or otherwise participate.

The older children, while professing scorn for Tom's club, frequently were found in the kitchen after supper—if they were fortunate enough to be in his good graces. To the younger ones, banishment from the club was a trip to Siberia's steppes.

Tom's minimum excommunication, when meting out expulsion, was for a hundred years. Actually, this meant only about fifteen minutes, because Tom's heart was soft. The maximum, anathema, was for a thousand years and four days. This might mean an entire evening, although the sentence was often mitigated if one could manage to look repentant enough.

After Bill had climbed into his pajamas, Tom called Anne to break the news.

Anne groaned. "That's the last straw! Just when I was beginning to think things might go smoothly."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Secrets

By W. H. Auden

That we are always glad
When the Ugly Princess parting the bushes
To find out why the woodcutter's children are happy
Disturbs a hornet's nest, that we feel no pity
When the informer is trapped by the gang in a steam room,
That we howl with joy
When the shortsighted Professor of Icelandic
Pronounces the Greek inscription
A Runic riddle which he then translates,

Denouncing by proxy our commonest fault as our worst;
That, waiting in his room for a friend,
We start so soon to turn over his letters,
That with such assurance we repeat as our own Another's story, that, dear me, how often
We kiss in order to tell,
Defines precisely what we mean by love:
To share a secret.

The joke, which we seldom see, is on us;
For only true hearts know how little it matters
What the secret is they keep:
An old, a new, a blue, a borrowed something,
Anything will do for children
Made in God's image and therefore
Not like the others, not like our dear dumb friends
Who, poor things, have nothing to hide,
Not, thank God, like our Father either
From Whom no secrets are hid.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

KEEP cool with Kool-Aid. It's easy and economical. There's an oasis of soothing refreshment in every polar pitcherful. Plenty of frosty, flavorful goodness in every Kool-Aid ice box treat, too. Choice of 6 delicious flavors. Recipes on every package. Try these: Cool, creamy frozen desserts; colorful, fascinating home-made frozen suckers for the children . . . made in a jiffy.

Copyright, 1950 Perkins Products Co.
"Kool-Aid" is a registered trademark of Perkins Products Co.

Woman's work is never done...

but BREAD helps keep you going!

HERE'S WHY: FLOUR + MILK + SUGAR + SHORTENING + YEAST & SALT + VITAMINS = ENRICHED BREAD

That makes bread many-good-foods-in-one.

All those good foods in it—foods that are rich in protein, calcium, iron and other essential elements—make bread a splendid source of the energy you need to keep going all day long.

And bread, according to nutritionists, is no more fattening than any other food that gives you as much of the energy you need!

So—toast a slice for breakfast. Make sandwiches for lunch. Help yourself to the bread that helps you at dinner and between-meals.

Remember! Penny for penny, enriched bread (the kind a baker bakes) provides more of the things the body needs—more generously—than any other food you eat at every meal.

© 1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

Bakers of America

Eat more BREAD...your best food buy

"It's all right, Anne," Bill assured her. "I don't feel sick."

"I hear you scratching under them covers," Tom warned him. "I ain't deef, you know. I ain't blind. I tole you twicet, and I ain't going to tell you again. Mind now!"

"I'd better call the doctor," Anne sighed.

"I could tell you how to dose him," Tom said, "but ——"

"Oh, no, you don't," Bill shouted. "I know your doses."

"Remember what Dad told you about dosing them," Anne said.

"I remember." Tom's tone was injured. "I could cure Bill, but I got my orders. I can take a hint."

Anne leaned over and studied Bill's spots. "It looks like a rash or the hives to me," she said.

"Hives," Tom grunted. "He's sick as a dog, I tell you. Of course, he ain't as sick as I was wunst when ——"

"He ate some of that burned rangoon ——" Anne stopped quickly. "Maybe he ate something that didn't agree with him."

"Didn't agree with him?" Tom asked. And then accusingly to Bill: "Have you been sneaking out and eating down street again? You don't know what goes into the food they give you at them drugstores."

Bill shook his head.

"Anyway, it ain't his stomach," said Tom. "I know what it is, all right, but your father give me my orders, so I dassent tell you."

"He gave them to you the time we had the measles and you said it was scarlet fever, didn't he, Tom?" Bill said.

"That was the time," Tom conceded.

"Heck, anyone can make a simple little mistake like that, eh, Tom?" Bill asked. Bill was one of Tom's stanchest defenders, and was usually in the club.

"You scared Mother half to death," Anne said accusingly.

"I still ain't sure it wasn't that neither," said Tom.

Anne went to telephone Doctor Burton, and Tom paced the floor of the room shared by Frank and Bill.

"Of course," he muttered for the benefit of those of us who had assembled to see Bill's spots, "I don't know nothing about it. I'm stupit, I am. I'm so stupit that even though I seen a hundret cases just like it in the war, I don't know what it is. I seen them dying like flies from it."

"Is it really bad?" Bill asked. "Will everybody catch it?"

"You'll catch it, you bold thing you, if you don't stop scratching. You'll be out of the club for a hundret years."

"Not that!" Ernestine protested in mock terror. "Anything but that."

Tom pretended not to hear. But there was no doubt that Ernestine—or The Princess, as Tom sometimes called her with an exaggerated courtesy—was out of the club for a thousand years and four days.

Tom resumed his pacing and mumbling. "I was an orderly in a horsepittle for ten months during the war for nothing. Had my eyes closed all the time. Sure I did."

Lettuce is like conversation: it must be fresh and crisp, so sparkling that you scarcely notice the bitter in it.
—CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

THE war to which Tom alluded was the Spanish-American. If, as Tom frequently alleged, he actually had served as a hospital orderly, medicine had progressed considerably since those days. For Tom placed all his reliance on quinine and castor oil. And we weren't completely sure he knew that the practice of bleeding the patient had been pretty generally discontinued.

What was good medicine for humans, he believed, was equally beneficial for animals. Tom was a collector of pets, both wild and domesticated, much to the disgust of Dad. Dad used to complain that feeding almost a score of human mouths was more than any white man's burden, and that it was an outrage to be required to give sustenance to the fauna which followed Tom home or begged handouts on the kitchen window sill.

Let one of Tom's pets show up with a warm nose, sagging beak, coated tongue, fetid breath or bloodshot eye, and Tom wo swiftly mix a dose of castor oil and Quin Remedy, add a bit of sugar to make the d more palatable, and force the solution throu the mouth or down the bill of the debilita creature.

None of them ever died or seemed to h a lasting grudge. But Tom's cat, Fourteer Tom numbered his cats progressively would get down on her belly and start sne ing toward the back door every time she s him reach up over the kitchen sink, where kept the Quinine Remedy.

Tom's diagnoses for persons other th himself were varied, uninhibited and sor times exotic. But when he was sick hims he always diagnosed the ailment as pleuri regardless of whether the symptom wer bleeding nose or a swollen foot. On these casions he would send out for the Quin Remedy's large economy flagon, and it ne failed him.

ERNESTINE and Martha were in bed, too, the time Doctor Burton arrived.

Whenever the doctor came to our hou Tom was the medical orderly again. said "Yes, sir," and "No, sir," and sucked in his stomach. Doctor Burton kn of Tom's claims of medical experience, a assured himself of Tom's co-operation treating him as a learned colleague in profession.

"What is it?" Anne asked anxiously, Doctor Burton leaned over Bill's bed. "T keeps hinting that it's something seriou

"He says he's seen them die like flies fr it," Bill said. "But all it does is itch."

"It's obvious, eh, Tom said the physician.

"Yes, sir. Only wouldn't tell them noth because Mr. Gilbreth ma me promise."

"Anyone can see chicken pox. No need make an examinati would you say so, Tom "Is that all?" Anne sighed.

"That's what I thought, sir," said To "Either that or smallpox, I wasn't s which."

"It's nothing to worry about," Doc Burton told Anne.

"I'm not worried," said Anne, glaring Tom, "now that I know it isn't leprosy cholera."

"You'll all be up and around again i few days," Doctor Burton assured her.

"What do you mean 'all'? Anne as him. "Chicken pox is a children's disea isn't it?"

"Have any of you had chicken pox?"

"I guess not," Anne admitted.

"Then you'll all get it. But Tom will t good care of you."

"Yes, sir," Tom beamed.

"I'll have some medicine sent arour the doctor continued. "And, Tom, I'll co on you to see they keep regular."

"I've got just the thing," said Tom, ar was obvious that Doctor Burton's med standing had skyrocketed in his estimat

"Castor oil," moaned Bill.

"A little castor oil never hurt anyo Doctor Burton agreed.

"Did you hear that, Tom?" Bill s grasping at a straw. "Doctor Burton sa little."

"That's right," the doctor cautio "Not too much." He turned to Tom suppose you've had chicken pox?"

"No, sir," said Tom. "When I was a I had something that looked just lik Some people even said it was chicken But it turned out to be ——"

"Pleurisy." Doctor Burton nodded sa

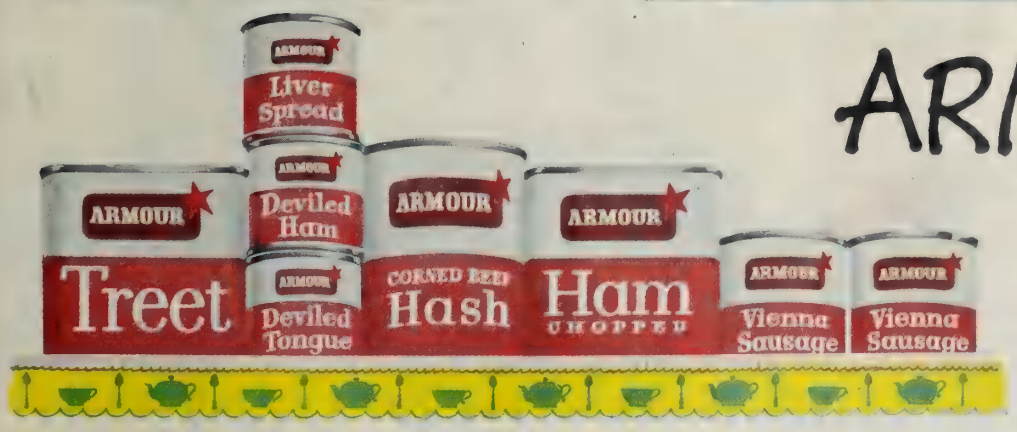
"That's the only disease that ever giv any trouble."

The next day, when it became app that all of us had chicken pox, Anne had move all the boys' beds into Frank Bill's room, and all the girls' beds Mother and Dad's room. The rooms adjacent; by leaving the door open, could supervise both wards from her be

(Continued on Page 66)

How to coax an appetite in 20 easy minutes!

Reach up on your pantry-shelf for Armour Vienna Sausages—those plump and tender "two-bite" franks with the delicious smoky flavor. "Heat gently in a little butter or margarine," says Marie Gifford, Armour's famous home economist, "and serve with scrambled Cloverbloom Eggs." 20 minutes does it—and Eggs Viennese do things to listless appetites, too! Seems as though folks just can't get enough of these skinless spiced-just-right Vienna Sausages that are all fine Armour beef and pork—no filler added. If you haven't got some in your pantry now, better get some today!



Real Sugar-Cured Ham in a can—that's the Armour Chopped Ham so many women now keep handy on the pantry-shelf. Made of the same top quality ham you bake for holidays. Slices just as neatly, too, for Armour's exclusive middle-of-tin opener brings the ham out whole. For a quick and easy appetite-whetter, Marie Gifford suggests serving Armour Chopped Ham as shown—with Swiss cheese and your favorite fixings.

For additional recipes for time-saving Armour Pantry-Shelf Meals, write Marie Gifford, Dept. 413, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Tune in STARS OVER HOLLYWOOD—CBS Saturdays

ARMOUR
Pantry-Shelf Meals

More than 25 different Pantry-Shelf Meals come from the famous Armour Kitchens. Fine Armour meats, cook-book recipes, and home-like cooking care make them taste just like your own good cooking.

Fighting mad at scorchy pans?

BRILLO

gives TWICE the SHINE in HALF the TIME!

New "Scorchy Pan" Tests prove Brillo outshines other types of cleansers tested. Actually gives aluminums twice the shine in half the time! A square, metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off greasy crust easy! No scraping! Use Brillo every day.

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

RED box—soap-filled pads
GREEN box—pads and cake soap

DAVIS BROS.

READY-TO-SERVE ATLANTIC COAST PRODUCTS

SPICY MACKEREL CHEF SALAD

Break chilled and drained canned Davis Mackerel into small pieces. Place in salad bowl with mixed salad greens. Toss lightly. Serve with tangy French dressing.

Deep-Sea Scallops
Sweet as a nut. Quick and easy to prepare!

Codfish Cakes
Shape and fry—that's all—and it serves 4.

Chicken Croquettes
Tasty chicken meat mixed with potatoes and palate-pleasing seasonings. Nothing to add. Just shape and fry.

PACKED IN ROMANTIC GLOUCESTER-BY-THE-SEA

ON SALE AT ALL GOOD GROCERS

(Continued from Page 64)

Anne had no intention of letting any mass epidemic interfere with the family routine. She had each of us get up long enough to wash, remake our beds, weigh ourselves and make the notations on the process charts.

We got the phonograph from the boys' bathroom—we usually listened to the language records while we were taking baths or otherwise occupied in what Dad called periods of unavoidable delay—and set it up in the doorway between the two wards. We played French and German records for fifteen minutes.

Then Anne got up and looked at the charts to make sure everyone had done what he was supposed to do.

"That's fine," she sighed as she crawled back into bed. "Now we can enjoy poor health. And a pox on the first person who gets me up again."

None of us felt very sick. We sang for a while, with the boys' ward carrying the melody and the girls' ward an alto. Sometimes, to get the song just right, the boys would sing their part alone, and the girls would sing theirs alone, and then we'd try them together. We sang Yes, We Have No Bananas . . . Oh, Gee, Oh Gosh, Oh Golly, I'm in Love . . . Last Night on the Back Porch . . . You've Got to See Mama Every Night or You Can't See Mama at All. Then we played some of the new dance records and sang along with them. What'll I Do? . . . All Alone by the Telephone . . . Charlie My Boy . . . Limehouse Blues and The Prisoner's Song. We didn't mind being sick, and we hoped Mother wouldn't find out and worry about us.

After a while, we could hear the sound of a spoon clinking against a glass down in the kitchen, and we knew Tom was mixing castor oil with orange juice and sugar. All the boys, from Frank on down the line, immediately feigned deep sleep.

Tom brought the castor oil upstairs, one glass at a time. The stirring grew progressively louder as he mounted the back stairs and walked through the upstairs hall to the wards. When he arrived with the first dose, the boys were snoring.

"You don't fool me none," Tom told them. "I can see them eyes winking. I'll be up with your medicine in a few minutes."

He knocked noisily on the open door of the girls' ward, with his head modestly averted. Tom always made an elaborate ceremony of knocking before entering one of the girls' rooms. He thought that the knocking was a waste of time, and alleged that he had, at one time or another, changed all their diapers. But Dad and Mother insisted on it. When Tom did, by mistake, happen on one of the girls who was not fully dressed, he never could understand—or made believe he couldn't understand—the ensuing commotion. "That's all right," he'd say, while the girl dived shrieking into a closet. "It don't embarrass me none. I don't mind. I don't mind." Now, after knocking, he asked:

"All right if I come in, Anne?" He stirred the castor oil harder and louder than ever.

"I guess so," Anne conceded.

"Ain't nobody here," said Ernestine, "but us chickenpoxers."

Tom entered and bowed low to Ernestine, The Princess. "Here you are, Your Highness," he said. "I've brung you a present from the Grand Doochess." He held out the glass.

"Anne first," Ernestine protested. "She's the oldest. Besides, you've probably spiked my drink."

"Where'd you learn talk like that?" said Tom, genuinely shocked. "I'm going to tell your mother on you when she gets home."

"It's something," said Ernestine, quoting Dad, "that I learned on my mother's knee and later at certain other joints."

"Here, hand me that glass and for goodness' sakes be quiet, both of you," said Anne.

"Oh, what's the use?" Ernestine wailed. "All right, give it to me." Having reached the decision, she grabbed the glass before her will power deserted her, and drained it.

"Good girl, Ernie," Tom beamed. "You're in the club. How was it?"

Remembering she was supposed to set a good example, she smiled bravely. "Delicious," she gulped. "Positively delicious."

"See what I tole you?" Tom said. "The orange juice cuts the taste."

"That's right," Ernestine lied. "Positively delicious."

"Do you want some more?" Tom asked hopefully. "I wouldn't mind fixing you another glass."

"No," Ernestine shouted. "I mean, no thank you. It was mighty good, but that was plenty."

"Tomorrow, then," said Tom, as he departed for the kitchen to mix Anne's dose.

"I never had so much castor oil in my life," Ernestine whispered to Anne. "The old idiot must think I'm as irregular as a French verb."

"If you don't mind," Anne pleaded, "please keep quiet until I've had mine. My heart bleeds for you, but please hold your oily tongue."

Anne, Martha and finally Frank all faced up to their responsibilities by taking their medicine and managing to smack their lips and say it was good.

But when Tom came to Bill the era of cooperation ended.

In the first place, Bill wouldn't wake up, and the more Tom shook him, the louder he snored.

"I never seen such a sound sleeper," said Tom, deciding it was time for psychology. "Well if I can't wake him for his castor oil, I'd better do the next best thing."

Bill's snores shook the bedroom.

"Does anyone," said Tom, "know where the hot-water bag is?"

Bill thought he knew what that meant. He rolled over and opened an eye. "Where am I?" he asked sleepily. "What time is it?"

"It's time," said Tom, shoving a glass in Bill's face, "to drink this."

"What is it?" Bill asked, stalling as long as possible.

"You know what it is," hollered Tom, whose patience was becoming exhausted. "Now swalley it."

"I don't like it."

"How do you know you don't like it, when you ain't tasted it?"

"I've tasted it before. It tastes nasty."

"Look," Tom said deliberately. "Ast Anne. Ast Ernestine. Ast Martha. Ast Frank. It's good. It's delicious."

"I know them. They're just setting good examples."

Tom now played his hole card. "Look," he purred, "I've got another glass just like this one, out in the hall. If you be a good boy and drink this, I'll drink that—just to show you how good it is."

By now all the younger boys were frankly awake, and watching. Bill considered the offer carefully.

"How do I know," he asked suspiciously, "that there's castor oil in the other glass?"

"You can take my word for it, can't you?" Tom was shouting again.

"I don't think so."

"Call me a liar, then," said Tom. "Call me a liar."

He went to the hall and came back, holding a glass in each hand.

"Take your choice. If that ain't fair, I don't know what is."

"When I take mine, will you drink a glass with me?" Fred asked.

"Sure," said Tom. "It's delicious. Ast Anne."

"How about me?" Dan wanted to know.

"Certainly."

"And me?" said Jack.

"Me too," Lillian shouted from the girls' ward.

"Everybody," Tom agreed. "All hands and the cook."

Bill examined the glasses closely, and the girls came in to watch him make his choice. The glasses contained the same amount of orange juice, but there was one very obvious difference. On the surface of the juice in one glass were only a few bubbles of oil. On the surface of the other floated almost a half inch of solid oil.

"I'll take this one," said Bill, pointing to the glass with a few bubbles.

"You're sure you want that one?" Tom asked innocently. "I don't see no difference."

"Don't try to wiggle out of it," said Bill. "That's the one I want." He was about to take the glass when he looked up and saw Ernestine just barely shake her head.

"Sure you don't want to change your mind?" said Tom, obviously pleased with the way things were going.

"Okay," said Bill, "you talked me into it. I'll change my mind." He grabbed the glass with all the oil on top.

"Hey, wait a minute," Tom protested, and there was genuine terror in his voice. "You don't want that one. If you look clost, you can see it's loaded with oil. Here's the one you want."

But it was too late. Bill drank orange juice and salad oil. "Delicious," he grinned. "Positively delicious."

Tom looked with distaste at the glass he was holding. He managed a smile, but it was

(Continued on Page 69)

"She painted it for you herself!"

"My Mom buys the BEST!"

PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

...and the best is

BIRDS EYE ORANGE JUICE!

Copyright 1950, General Foods Corp.

INSIST ON BIRDS EYE!

Guaranteed the best you ever tasted or your money back!

BIRDS EYE - BOUND TO BE BETTER!

Fitted corners slip over mattress in a jiffy. The "tuck-under" pops into place on all four sides . . . holds sheet cool . . . smooth . . . wrinkle-proof.

The biggest news since sheets were invented!

Amazing Wrinkle-proof CONTOUR Sheet

now in Combed Percale at new low price!

PACIFIC's wonderful new Contour* Sheet is different from any other sheet in the world—makes bedmaking so quick and easy, you'll never call it work again.

Four fitted corners, taped and sewed, slip over your mattress like a glove, adjust to slight variations in mattress size. A generous tuck-under slides into place automatically, stretches your sheet "hospital" smooth, invitingly cool, without tucking or folding. It can't wrinkle, can't bunch up, can't pull out.

Smart young brides plan half a dozen work-saving Contours for every bed. They're lighter to handle, cost less to launder. And they stretch so firmly over the mattress, they practically iron themselves. You can be sure they'll keep their snug fit washing after washing because they're Sanforized.

CONTOURS are available in twin- and double-bed sizes; other fine Pacific Sheets for every use in combed percale or extra-strength muslin to fit your pocketbook. Try your favorite store or write for folder and name of nearest dealer to Pacific Mills, Dept. K-8, 214 Church Street, New York 13, N. Y.

*TM Pacific Mills Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

For your new home buy for each bed . . .

6 Pacific Contour Sheets, bottoms
6 Pacific Hemmed Sheets, tops
6 pairs Pacific Pillow Cases
2 Pacific Quilted Mattress Pads

It's a PACIFIC sheet BY PACIFIC MILLS . . . WEAVERS OF FINE COTTONS, RAYONS, WOOLENS AND WORSTEDS

(Continued from Page 66)

eak one. "Good boy, Bill," he muttered lly.
Am I in the club for drinking my licine, Tom?"
I guess so."
For a thousand years and four days?"
om nodded glumly.
Are you going to drink yours now, Tom?"
le nodded again.
And are you going to drink a glass with an, Fred, Dan, Jack, Bob and Jane, like promised?"
om looked around him. The girls were ng their lips to keep from laughing. Frank buried his head in his pillow.
Drink it," said Bill.
It's delicious," said Ernestine. "Ast
e."
looks could have killed, The Princess'
y would have been in an advanced stage igor mortis.
Ast Ernestine," said Martha.
Ast Martha," said Frank.
Ast Frank," said Bill.
I don't know why I work here." Tom k his head dully. "Seventeen years with family and when I start to get a little they try to poison me. A hundret and nty million people in the country, and I to be the one who works here."
No," said Anne. "Don't drink it, Tom.
as only a joke, and not a very good one,
ess. We're sorry, Tom."
om stepped back with dignity, favored ith a withering glance, and drained his
s. Then he stalked out of the room, de-ded to the kitchen, and returned with bottle of castor oil and
oon. He handed them rnestine, and he didn't et to bow.
Here, Doochess," he
. "I know who put him
o it. I seen that guilty
. I ain't deef, you
w. I ain't blind. Now get the rest of them
ake their medicine, like the doctor said."
e left the room again, only this time he ked out, bowing, curtsying and grasping forelock.
rnestine tried to hand the bottle to Anne,
Anne wouldn't take it. "It's your re-nsibility," Ernestine said. "You're the st."
Tom's right," Anne replied. "I seen that ty look, too, Doochess, so it's up to you.
legate the responsibility."

If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be. —THOMAS JEFFERSON.

ARTHA was red-haired, freckled and ob-ous of the fact that within the last year had grown tall, slender and curvy—very vy. The realization was to come in time—ut the time that the freckles, with con-rable prompting from Martha, started to ppear. But for the moment she preferred
e-serge bloomers to skirts, middie blouses weaters, and bicycles to rumble seats.
Martha was casual, easygoing, steady and vorite with everybody. Efficiency came er naturally, partly because of her tem-ament; partly because she was at the age n the mere mention of work had a dessing effect. If possible, work was to be ided altogether. If not, it was to be dis-ed of as rapidly as possible, and with a imum of fatigue. Hence, efficiency.
he had just finished her sophomore year igh school, during which she had broken e's and Ernestine's previous records by rying home her own books fewer than a en times. She accepted her male carriers tter-of-factly, without attributing their ention to anything going on under her y nose. Our house was almost two miles n Montclair High School, and Anne and estine used to say that Martha selected gentlemen friends solely on their ability carry heavy weights for long distances.
We recovered from chicken pox in a comatively short time, and Martha took over job of supervising the packing for Nanket. She had Frank and Bill bring three nks from the attic to the upstairs hall. We ried our clothes to her, and she made sure we had everything we needed before she let us put them in the trunks. Martha herself was established in a comfortable chair, and didn't have to move.

To simplify the matter of logistics, Martha had drawn up a number of check-off lists, from which she seemed to derive more than her share of satisfaction. Martha usually was on the receiving end of orders from Anne and Ernestine, and it was an especial pleasure for her to have an opportunity to boss them now.

"Name!" she began by asking Anne, when Anne appeared in the hall with a pile of her own clothes. "Speak out loudly so I can hear you."

"My cow!" Anne replied. "It's all right to be efficient, but don't carry it too far."

"Do you," said Martha, offering to hand her the check-off lists, "want to supervise the packing?"

Anne admitted she didn't.

"Then be good enough, please, just to answer a few simple questions. Name!"

"Paavo Nurmi, the Flying Finn," Anne told her. "Age, eighteen. Hobbies, taking orders and impudence from a mere slip of a girl."

"Speak out loudly so I can hear you," Martha said, thumbing through her papers and coming up with Anne's check-off sheet.

"Oh, what's the use!" Anne snorted. And then shouting, answered, "Anne."

"Good," Martha beamed. "Dresses?"

"Six."

Martha made a note of it. "Bathing suit?"

"Sure does, Mr. Bones. Suits just fine."

"Speak out loudly so I can hear you."

"One," Anne hollered. "You're so efficient, I'll bet you're rocking with the grain of the wood."

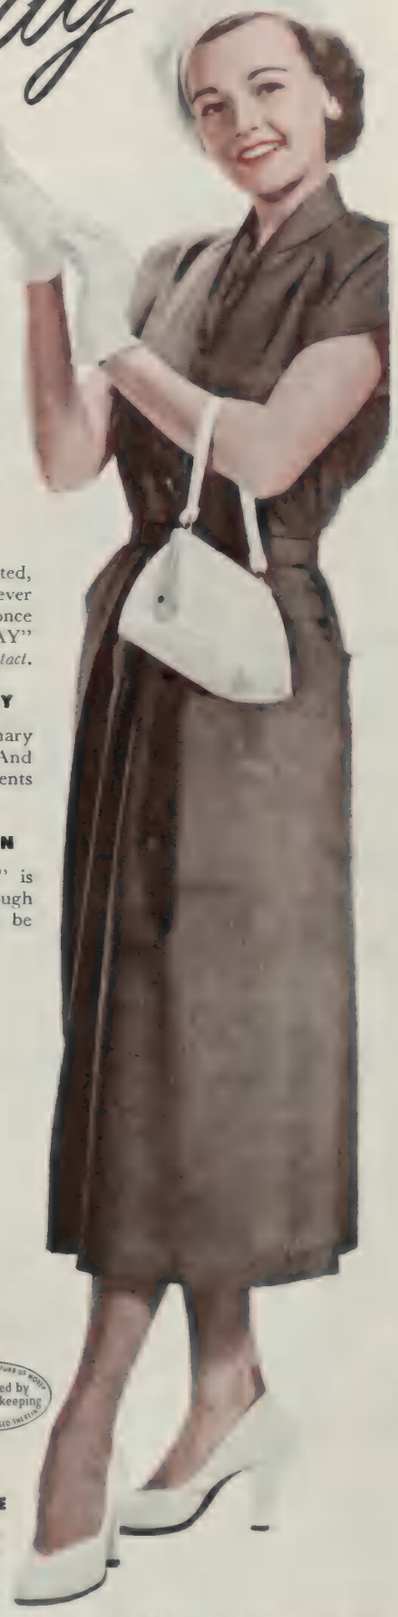
After running through the complete list, all the way from hairpins to shoe trees, Martha directed Anne where to stow her clothes. Then the rest of us, by ages, stepped up, gave our names, and went through the same routine.

Each older child, besides being responsible for himself, was responsible for a younger child. Anne was responsible for Jane, Ernestine for Jack, Martha for Bob, and Frank for Dan. This applied not only to packing clothes, but to any family project or emergency. In the event of fire, or when crossing a street, or when it came to writing up the daily jobs on the process charts, the older ones were supposed to help their particular charges. Bill, Lillian and Fred were in the intermediate group—old enough to look out for themselves, but not old enough to help anyone else.

Once the clothes were packed, together with sheets, blankets, tools, dolls, games, scrapbooks, crystal detectors and headphones, stamp collections, free samples and other articles that couldn't possibly be left behind, we devoted our attention to Departure Day.

Martha, meanwhile, had taken over the budget. Martha was not ungenerous with her own money, although it didn't exactly flow through her fingers. But when it came to handling Mother's money, her fingers had to be pried apart and twisted. It was a waste of time to tell Martha that you can't take it with you. She had long since made up her mind that, if that were the case, no sensible person would even dream of going.

She drew up requisition slips that we had to fill out in triplicate in order to buy anything for the house or to get our weekly allowances. We agreed with Bill that it seemed a lot of trouble to go to for fifteen cents a week.



To get to Nantucket, it would be necessary to take a Lackawanna train from Montclair to Hoboken, a ferry from Hoboken to New York, a night boat from New York to New Bedford, Massachusetts, and the Nantucket boat from New Bedford to our destination. We knew that the transferring, with all our suitcases and the younger children, was going to be a job. But the trip on the night boat

(Continued on Page 71)

EXTRA LEISURE

thanks to SPEEDY VERSATILE

Air-Way

SHE CLEANED EVERYTHING

Upholstery, mattresses, curtains, automobile interior—even the dog! It's just second nature with her new Air-Way which cleans so effortlessly.

SHE CLEANED THOROUGHLY

Cleaned her rugs and carpets to preserve their beauty—their fresh new appearance—her hardwood floors—and polished them too—lamp shades, venetian blinds, drapes, registers and dark corners! It's become a habit with her new Air-Way!

SHE CLEANED SAFELY

—thanks to Air-Way's exclusive, patented, "THROW-A-WAY" paper bag. She never touches or handles the germ-laden dirt, once it's picked up into the "THROW-A-WAY" Bag. When filled, simply discard or burn intact.

SHE CLEANED QUICKLY AND EASILY

After all, the power unit remains stationary while cleaning an entire room area. And Air-Way's featherlight wand and attachments are so easy to handle.

AND AIR-WAY IS SO EASY TO OWN

"The World's Most Versatile Cleaner" is just as easy to own as it is to use! Through Air-Way's liberal budget plan it can be yours for just a few pennies a day.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FOR SHOWING IN YOUR OWN HOME

by an Air-Way Dealer, phone "Air-Way Branches, Inc.," your city, or write for name and address of Air-Way Dealer. Air-Way Electric Appliance Corporation, Toledo 1, Ohio.

FOR 30 YEARS—THE FINEST IN HOME CLEANING EQUIPMENT

Air-Way

TRADE MARK

SANITIZOR VACUUM CLEANER

How's your reputation?

If your whole neighborhood now thinks of you as a cake baker extraordinary the Pillsbury Cake Mixes will preserve that reputation. If you are facing your very first cake, the Pillsbury Cake Mixes will build you a reputation. Just look at the cake you see here. One just as fine, just as glamorous, can be made by either a gifted cake artist or a raw recruit. Everything except milk (which you add) is in the neat blue and white Pillsbury package. Preserve a reputation. Or build a reputation. Your own.

Pillsbury BEST XXXX Mixes

Remember – You and Ann Pillsbury can make a great team

Pillsbury CAKE MIXES

WHITE AND CHOCOLATE FUDGE

Just add milk—

Milk is all you add (fresh or evaporated) — no eggs, flavoring, or extras of any kind required. These are complete mixes.

(Continued from Page 69)

is cheaper than going to New Bedford by iin.

Martha, who had been duly identified by me at the bank, cashed a check and went to New York to pick up the reservations.
e was appalled and unnerved when the an at the ticket office on the dock told her e total cost.

"There must be some mistake," she told
n. "It's Nantucket we're going to, not iris, France. Would you mind adding it up ain?"

The man added again, and then Martha ecked him—twice. When she finally be-me convinced that there was no mistake,
e decided to turn back two of the five state-oms Mother had reserved, and to exchange
o of the full-fare tickets for half fares.

When she returned from the city, Martha, istling with indignation, told Ernestine
d Anne about the prices. She also explained out turning in the staterooms and ex-anging the tickets.

"So I saved better than twenty dollars," e concluded. "There'll have to be four of in each of two staterooms, and three in e other."

"Good night," said Anne. "Even three rsons in one of those staterooms is a slum.
it I guess we'll manage somehow."

"Of course we will," Martha agreed.
nd think of saving ——"

"Wait a minute," Anne interrupted.
'ou've forgotten all about Tom. Where's going to sleep?"

"And if you try to tell us he can sleep in e of our staterooms," Ernestine put in, ll I can say is that's carrying economy a le too far."

"It certainly is," Anne agreed. "The very
a!"

"I'll scrub floors," Ernestine announced matically. "I'll clean out the rest rooms the Hudson Tubes. But I will not ——"

"Neither will I," said Anne.

"I didn't forget about him," Martha inted. "And for cat's sakes put down those ub brushes and get up off your hands and ees."

"Where's he going to sleep, then?" Anne ked.

"Well," said Martha, "he was complain-just the other day about how he never ot a wink on the way to Nantucket. So e doesn't sleep anyway, what's the use of owing away perfectly good money?"

"You can't do that to him," Anne pro-ted. "You go right back to New York d get another stateroom."

"It's all right," Martha insisted. "I al-dy told him about it."

"Poor Tom," Anne sympathized. "What he say?"

"Oh, you know Tom. He grumbled about undred and twenty million people in the ntry, and about how Lincoln freed all the ves but one. But he didn't really object."

"Poor Tom!" Anne repeated. "My cow!"

"I don't know why he puts up with us," nestine agreed.

"Look," said Martha, fishing angrily in pocket for the checkbook. "Do either of u want to take over the budget? I ask you,
you?"

"I guess it wasn't such a bad idea after
" Anne hastily assured her.

"And you did," Ernestine pointed out, ve more than twenty dollars of Mother's ney."

"Perfectly good money," amended Martha, o obviously considered all currency of the lm to be eminently satisfactory. "And I uldn't have done it if he hadn't said he n't sleep."

"It's all right, I guess," said Anne, "but v about those two half fares?"

"What about them?" Martha demanded ligerently, fishing for the checkbook again.

"Put that thing away," Anne told her.
m in charge here, and I'm not going to e checkbooks, check-off sheets, manifests ills of lading waved in my face every time pen my mouth."

"Frank might possibly be able to get ay with a half-fare ticket, but not you," nestine said.

"I'd like to know why not," Martha replied indignantly. "I'm a little tall, I admit. But I certainly can bend my knees when I go up the gangplank."

"It's not just your being tall," Ernestine said significantly.

"Well, what is it then?"

"For goodness' sakes," said Anne, looking. "Just look at yourself."

Martha glanced down and shrugged. "Oh, that," she said. "My gosh, nobody pays any attention to things like that."

Our train for Hoboken left in the early afternoon. We didn't want to have to pay for more than one taxicab, so five of the older children, including Ernestine, who was in charge, walked from the house to the station. Anne and Tom, with the five youngest children and all our suitcases, waited at the house for a taxi. The suitcases were lined up on the front steps, and Anne had her charges washed and ready, when the cab finally appeared.

It wasn't until the suitcases were stowed away and the children packed into the taxi that Anne discovered Tom was missing. She called him, but he didn't answer. She unlocked the front door and searched the house. In the kitchen she found Tom's cap, a cage with our two canaries, and an empty cardboard box with holes punched in the top. But no Tom.

The cabdriver kept blowing his horn, and Anne went out front to pacify him. The children were jumping and crawling around the car, and Bob was sitting in the driver's lap.

"If you're the ringmaster," the driver told Anne, reaching into the back seat and rescuing his hat from Jack, "you'd better get this show on the road. I've got other stops to make this afternoon, you know."

"I'm doing the best I can," Anne said. "We'll be ready in a minute. I think our cook is looking for his cat."

"How about Mr. Chairman?" Fred asked.

Anne snapped her fingers. "I knew I forgot something. Where is he?"

Mr. Chairman was our dog, a sort of collie. He was there, barking at the cab and growling at the driver.

"Get a leash on him," Anne told Fred. "Don't let him get away."

Tom came running down Eagle Rock Way. "Fourteen," he panted, "ain't nowhere to be found."

"We'll have to leave her," Anne said. "We're late for the train right now. Get into the cab, quick."

"Leave Fourteen?" Tom asked incredulously. "Are you crazy?"

"Please. We simply must catch the train."

"What do you think I am?" Tom snapped. "I ain't going to leave that cat. If she don't go, I don't go."

"We've got Mr. Chairman," Anne begged. "And you've got the canaries."

"But I ain't got Fourteen."

"Damn it," Anne shouted. "I've planned this trip for better than two weeks. I planned it right down to the last bath and shined shoe. A plague of chicken pox didn't delay it and no cat is going to ruin it. Now get into that cab."

Tom never had heard Anne swear before, and he was impressed. "I ain't even got my cap," he said. "Nor the birds neither."

"Go get them," Anne told him, "and be damned quick about it."

"You heard what the lady said," the driver put in. "I got other stops to make."

Tom went, mumbling but hurrying. "I wisht your father could hear you talk like that. He'd learn you. He'd learn you good, you bold thing you." Tom was still mumbling when he returned in a jogging half-run, with his cap and the cage, and got into the cab. "He'd learn you, all right. Swearing like a cabdriver in front of all them children. You ain't too big to spank neither."

Anne locked the front door and jumped into the cab.

"One cab for seven people, eight suitcases, a dog and two canaries," the driver inventoried as we started down the driveway. "You should have ordered three at least."

"We're not too crowded," Anne said as cheerfully as she could.

"Is that dog housebroken?"

"Usually," Anne lied.

"I don't think my insurance covers this."

"It probably does," she laughed weakly, "if you have an act-of-God clause."

A block from the house, we saw Fourteen. The cab stopped, Tom called, and there was a streak of orange as the cat dived into his lap and then perched on his shoulder.

"Look at that," Tom crowed, all his complaints forgotten. "She was waiting on us. Smartest cat I ever seen, bar none."

"Are there any other passengers or livestock we are supposed to pick up?" the driver asked.

"No," Anne told him sheepishly.

"No cows, goats or other children?"

"No."

"You sure we got them all?"

"Yes."

"And may one inquire where the destination is at?"

"Oh, excuse me," said Anne. "The Lackawanna Station."

"I thought maybe it was Overbrook. You know, the Funny Farm."

"No," Anne said meekly. "The Lackawanna Station. Please."

She leaned back in the seat and tried to adjust Jane a little more comfortably on her lap. She closed her eyes and thought of Mother, now safe in England. She thought of previous trips, when we had driven to New Bedford and taken the Nantucket boat from there. She thought of Dad—strong, gay and dependable—sitting behind the wheel of our old Pierce Arrow, blowing his bulb horns and shouting "Road hog" at the drivers who swerved for their lives as we went barreling by in a cloud of smoke.

From Anne's standpoint, at least, the remainder of the trip to Nantucket had only about half the earmarks of a howling success—the howling half.

The hubbub of the night-boat dock demoralized Mr. Chairman, and he yapped, howled and had to be dragged stiff-legged along the dock and to the gangplank. Every two or three steps, Frank would stop and bat him, to try to keep him quiet, but the wallops only made Mr. Chairman yap and howl all the louder. Tom, with Fourteen and the bird cage under one arm and a bulging wicker suitcase under the other, kept shouting threats about how he'd dose the dog good if he didn't shut up.

Each of the older children held the hand of his particular younger charge, and carried a suitcase. Martha discouraged eager porters, who came running to meet us, by telling them we were too poor to afford them.

By the time we single-filed up the gangplank, which Martha negotiated almost on her knees, the rails were lined with grinning spectators. Anne and Ernestine looked straight ahead, pretending not to notice, but the rest of us waved and grinned back.

"Carry your bags?" said a porter who was coming down the gangplank from the ship.

"No," shouted Frank, who sometimes read College Humor, "let them walk."

That was the sort of joke that appealed to Tom, and he laughed deafeningly, through his nose as always. "Henc, henc, henc, henc," he cackled. "That's a hot one."

The purser was so engrossed by our entrance that he made no pretense of checking to see whether we had enough full-fare tickets. He did insist, though, that Mr. Chairman and Fourteen be checked with the freight, down in the hold. All through the night you could hear Mr. Chairman complaining about that.

We were allowed to keep the birds, and they ended up in Anne's stateroom, where she shared the lower berth with Jane, while Fred and Dan shared the upper. Anne wouldn't let either Jane or Dan drink any liquids after six o'clock, but the inevitable occurred anyway.

It wasn't until the following morning, when we had transferred at New Bedford to the Nantucket boat, that Anne discovered Morton Dykes.

Morton was an Amherst man, and a sheik whom Anne rated high on her hit caravan. He was very tall—six feet seven or eight—and thin, but quite good-looking in his patent-leather hair and Oxford bags. He and Anne had had a good many dates that spring, while she was at Smith. We had often heard her talk about him, but never had seen him before.

It wasn't necessary to check animals with the freight on the Nantucket boat. Morton bumped into Anne on the upper deck, where all of us—including the birds, dog and cat—were gathered. "Bumped" is the word, because it soon became apparent that, so far as Morton was concerned, the meeting was not only unpremeditated and unrehearsed, but undesired.

"For goodness' sakes," said Anne, trying to straighten out her dress, which had been rumpled beyond repair by Jane, "look who's here. Hello, Morton."

"Hello," Morton almost whispered, edging away as if Anne had something he didn't want to catch. "Good to see you."

"Good to see you too," said Anne enthusiastically. When Anne was enthused, her voice had all the modulation of a cheerleader's in the last minutes of the final quarter. Morton edged still farther away. "I knew you and your mother were coming to Nantucket," she added, "but I had no idea we'd be on the same boat."

"We were on the night boat with you too," Morton reported resentfully. "We saw you come aboard."

"Oh, you did?" was all Anne could manage.

Morton asked, "Was that your dog that howled all night?"

"I didn't hear anything," Anne said.

Morton edged some more, and Anne finally realized that he didn't want to be mistaken for one of our group. The realization made her furious.

"Come on over," she said, "and meet everybody. Pull up a chair and make yourself at home."

"No, thanks. I've got to run."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hunters

BY JOAN AUCOURT

Too late the gay fowl in the brilliant air
Remarks the waiting hunter on the hill.
Before the wing beats once more on the wind
The fine high voyage stops, the bird is still.

Too late, and always just too late, the cat
Retreats its great head between leaf and leaf.
The great gold snarl is silenced, the great gold eye
Closed with the final vision of its grief.

And even below the safe, soft, crystal sea
The secret fish is stopped upon the hook,
Between the last ledge of Atlantic rock
And the next landfall that its fancy took.

So how shall we, who have no habitat
Securer than the traffic in the street
Escape unlikely and untimely ends?
And if we should escape, would it be meet?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Hit for a hot night... SPAM SUMMER PLATTER

SEE HOW EASY . . . Stuffed celery: mash cream cheese with sweet cream to give butter-like consistency; add grated onion, dash of Worcestershire; fill celery stalks and dust with paprika. Stuffed tomatoes: make tomato cups by slicing off top and removing core; fill with shredded cabbage drenched with French dressing or mayonnaise. With sliced Swiss cheese, bread, and appetizing SPAM, dinner's ready—and so's the family.

COLD OR HOT SPAM® HITS THE SPOT!

SPAM is a registered trademark for a pure pork product, packed only in 12 oz. cans by Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.

NEW QUARTER SIZE SERVES FOUR

America's original canned ham now comes in both whole and quarter sizes. Both are made tender, mild, delicious by Hormel's exclusive Flavor-Sealed process. Both give you twice as much good lean meat per pound because skin, bones and surplus fat have been removed. Superb baked for dinner. King of the cold cuts sliced just as it comes from the can. A morning delight sliced and fried for breakfast . . . Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.

The famous HORMEL HAM

Listen to MUSIC WITH THE HORMEL GIRLS—Saturday, CBS—Sunday, ABC

"Why don't you bring your mother up here, and we'll all sit together?"

The suggestion caused Morton to drop all pretense of edging, and to break into an open retreat. "See you around," he whispered over his shoulder.

"Or," Anne hollered after him, "we could all come and sit with you."

Morton disappeared down a ladder to the lower decks.

"So that's Morton Dykes," Ernestine said. "Gee, he's cute—and so tall. The least you could have done was introduce me."

"I tried," Anne told her bitterly. "You heard me try."

"The whole boat heard you," Martha said. "If you ask me, he's a bean pole and a wet smack."

"You're just judging him as a potential book carrier," Ernestine grinned. "You know those tall, thin ones get tired easily."

"He seemed to be in a hurry to get somewhere," Martha said. "Does he always edge that way, like a crab?"

"He was ashamed of us," said Anne. "Well, any feeling I may have had for him in the past is dead. Completely dead."

"Why would anyone be ashamed of us?" Bill wanted to know. "You girls are crazy. He looked to me like he had heard about our chicken pox, and he hasn't had them."

"Martha's right," Ernestine agreed. "He is a wet smack."

"Dead," Anne repeated dramatically. "Completely dead."

ALL of us, but especially Anne, were glad to see our cottage at Nantucket. Dad had named the cottage The Shoe, in honor of Mother, because he said she was like the old lady who lived in one. The Shoe was flanked by two circular lighthouses, which Dad had bought years before from the Government. One lighthouse had been used by Dad as a study, and the other by us as an overflow dormitory.

We wondered how Nantucket was going to be without Dad. He had left his mark on every room in The Shoe. There were the dot-and-dash messages he had painted on the ceilings over our beds, the summer he decided we should learn the Morse code. There were the astronomical diagrams he had painted billboard fashion on the dining-room walls, showing the size of the earth and other planets, as compared with big stars. There were photographs of nebulae and constellations that had been given Dad by Harvard University, and which he had hung only two feet from the floor, so that even the smallest children could see them.

We went from room to room, looking at everything and finding it good.

The trunks had followed us from the express office at the dock. Martha opened them in the dining room, found a comfortable chair, and started giving us instructions about unpacking them.

Everyone came and got his clothes, and put them in the bureaus. Tom fed the animals and cleaned the kitchen. Frank and Bill put up the screens. Anne and Ernestine swept away a winter's accumulation of sand and dust.

"That's the most efficient house opening we ever had," Anne told us when we were through. "Everyone did a fine job, particularly Martha on the packing."

"Martha is Dad all over again," Ernestine agreed. "She's naturally efficient."

Martha grinned happily, pushed herself up from her chair, and started over to the trunks to get her own clothes. Someplace between the chair and the trunks, a terrible realization struck her. She knew the trunks would be empty, and they were. She knew, too, there wasn't any use asking if anyone had picked up her clothes by mistake.

"Don't anybody ever say I'm efficient again," she squealed.

"Of course you're efficient," said Anne. "Stop fishing for any more compliments. I just finished saying you did a fine job on the packing, and we've got everything we need."

"We haven't got my clothes or bathing suit," Martha shouted, "and we need those. I haven't got a stitch except what I've got on my back."

"Nonsense," Anne said. "They must be around someplace. Who took Martha's clothes?"

Martha shook her head, and she was near tears. "No use to look. I remember now. I didn't pack them."

"But the check-off lists?" Anne asked. "How could you forget your own clothes?"

"I don't know."

"You sure you didn't pack them?"

"The check-off lists were for everybody else," Martha said. "Since I was doing the packing, there wasn't any use to have one for me."

"That means we'll have to get you a whole new outfit."

"No we won't," Martha insisted. "The budget can't stand it. I'll go around in a barrel first."

The boys started giggling, and Anne and Ernestine couldn't help but join in. Bill sat down in the chair Martha had vacated, and made believe he was thumbing through a sheaf of papers.

"Name?" he asked Martha.

"Speak out so we can hear you," said Frank.

Martha managed a sick grin. "Mud," she said. "I admit it. Age, almost fifteen. Favorite pastime, eating crow."

Anne still wanted Martha to go down to the village and buy some clothes and a bathing suit, but Martha was determined not to waste the money.

"I just need some things to bum around in," she said. "I'm not a boy-crazy flapper trying to impress an Amherst man. I'll find something."

Anne and Ernestine agreed they'd hand her down some clothes, and Frank said he'd hand up a sweat shirt, some jerseys and a pair of dungarees.

"Swell," Martha said. "I don't have to worry about a bathing suit, because I can wear Mother's until she gets here. And I'll write her to be sure to pick up my suit when she stops by Montclair."

"I can see you in Mother's suit," Ernestine scoffed. "Why, it's practically a Gay Nineties model."

"Who cares about that?" Martha said. "All I want is something to cover me. You two make me sick."

Mother wasn't a swimmer and didn't like the water. She did occasionally wade in up to her knees, splash some water on her shoulders, duck down almost to her elbows, and then hurry home. If she met any of us en route to the beach, she'd inform us through blue lips and chattering teeth, that surf that day seemed particularly refreshing. The waves on the bathing beach never got more than a foot high during a full gale, but even in a flat calm it was surf to Mother.

MOTHER'S suit left nothing exposed. Even Dad, who insisted that the girls wear black old-fashioned models, had to admit that Mother carried modesty a little to the extreme, and that she seemed to put on more than she took off when she prepared to go in the water.

Her suit had numerous appurtenances, including a sash and a bandanna. But its two principal components were a black undergarment, that started with a hug-me-tight neck and ended several inches below the knees, and a huge, long, black, billowing outer garment, that Dad said might be useful to Barnum and Bailey if it were dyed khaki. The outer garment had long sleeves and hung down to Mother's ankles, while themselves were encased in black cotton stockings and high bathing shoes.

"Mother's suit is out of the question," Anne told Martha. "You'd look completely ridiculous in it."

"If it's good enough for Mother," said Martha, "it's good enough for me. You ought to be ashamed of yourself, talking about her clothes like that."

"It's not her clothes that are ridiculous," Anne said. "A few years ago, everybody wore suits like that, and a good many people Mother's age still do. But it would look ridiculous on you."

's not much more ridiculous than the Dad made us wear," Martha protested. ıave to wear a black thing underneath, ort of dresses too."

know it," Anne admitted. "But at ours end at the knees and have short s."

ıad taken Anne years to get Dad to her and the other girls to bob their nd wear short skirts, silk stockings and s. Dad hadn't approved of the style that had set in since the war. He said were purely temporary, that girls ually would come to their senses, and ct that everyone else dressed that way no difference. He had refused to yield ıore than the sleeves and a couple of around the hems of the girls' swim- outfits. It was a sore point with the dest girls.

rtha kept insisting to Anne that she look all right in Mother's suit, and finally gave in.

l right," Anne said. "If you don't care ou look, I suppose I don't. And since of us should go out with boys until er gets here, I guess you can't do tine and me any permanent damage."

nk, Bill and the younger children al- had on their suits, and the two boys he younger ones down to the beach, was only a couple of hundred yards he cottage. Martha said she'd slip on er's suit and join them. Anne and tine had to finish sorting sheets and ets, and told Martha they'd be down ut half an hour.

vas late afternoon when the two oldest nally reached the beach. Both of them ired from the jour- Nantucket and the work. They sighed relief as they sank in the warm sand, all of us but Mar- ere sitting. Martha ıe best swimmer and in the family, and stay in the water for hours without g cold.

his is the life," said Anne, stretching contentedly. "This is what I've been ing of ever since the chicken pox. I everything is going to be much simpler ıow on."

ill you take me out over my head?" ısked her. "Frank took us in, but he take us over our heads."

a little while," Anne agreed sleepily. t want to get a little of what sun's still She lay down flat on her back. "Will ne make that dog stop shaking sand all ıe?"

nk leaned over and whacked Mr. man, but it didn't do any good.

ɔbody ever takes me out over my Jack complained.

here's Martha?" Ernestine asked. at the raft?"

ık nodded.

ɔw does she look in Mother's suit?"

an, she looks grand," Frank said en- stically. "You ought to see her."

l bet," Ernestine smiled. "Miss At- City of Eighteen-ninety."

e's out there," said Frank, "with that inny man we saw on the boat."

sat up suddenly, now wide awake. on Dykes?" she said. "You mean he's Martha in that outfit? My cow! What think of us now?"

ıat do you care?" Ernestine grinned. feeling for him is dead, remember?"

mpletely dead," Bill echoed.

didn't seem to mind the way her suit Frank said. "Every time she dives, ɔs her back on the raft. You'd think s crippled or something."

e shaded her eyes and looked out to- he float. It was easy to pick out Mor- ecause he stood almost a foot taller nyone else. But at first she couldn't Martha.

on't see anyone in Mother's suit," she It ought to be conspicuous enough."

ı a trim, curvy, black-clad figure hit ringboard and went into a beautiful jackknife that was unmistakably Martha's. A red head emerged from the water and a hand waved casually to the tall boy on the raft, who waved back vigorously. There was a wake of spray as Martha Australian-crawled back to the beach.

"Where did she get that suit?" yelled Ernestine, who had seen the dive too. "What would Dad say?"

"What will Mother say?" Anne asked.

Martha blew water out of her nose, tossed the hair out of her eyes, and started up the beach to join us. Frank and Bill, clicking their tongues as loudly as if they were a couple of Decency Leaguers who had stumbled into a nudist camp, ran to her with towels. They made a great pretense of turning their heads away, and of hiding their eyes with their hands.

THE beach wasn't very crowded at that time of day, but those who were there were sitting up and watching.

"You boys stop that," Anne stage-whispered. "I'm ashamed of you!"

"Here, Martha, quick," Frank said, pretending not to hear. "Drape these towels around you. If you hurry, the beach policeman may not even notice."

"Besides," said Bill, "we don't want you to catch pneumonia."

"Would you two," Martha inquired good-naturedly, pushing them and the towels aside, "like a good punch in the nose?" She sank down nonchalantly in the sand between Anne and Ernestine, and attempted to even old scores with Mr. Chairman by shaking her wet hair at him. "Boy," she said, "the water out there's really the cats."

She didn't seem to notice Anne's and Ernestine's frigid stares.

"Saw a friend of yours out there," she told Anne. "What a wet smack. You ought to see him in a bathing suit. More of a beanpole than ever."

Martha was wearing what appeared to be a tight-fitting black union suit. If you looked at it closely, you could tell it was the under part of Mother's suit, with the legs and sleeves rolled up as far as they would roll. It wasn't any more extreme than the bathing suits which other girls were wearing, but Anne and Ernestine were shocked almost beyond words.

"Go back," Anne finally whispered to her, "and get the outer half of it. The idea!"

"And," said Ernestine, "roll down those legs."

Jack still wanted Anne to take him out over his head, but she didn't hear him.

"I blush for you," Anne told Martha. "What will Mother say?"

"What have I done now?" Martha asked. "What's this all about?"

"You know perfectly well," said Anne, "so don't try to act so innocent."

"If you mean that sheik of yours, you don't have to worry. He's a wet smack who always wants to help you up on the raft. I'm wise to him."

"Let's leave Morton out of the conversation," said Anne.

"I never saw anybody so jealous," Martha complained. "Why, I wouldn't touch your ten-foot beanpole with a pole."

"He's not my ten-foot beanpole," said Anne. "And I'm not talking about him. I'm talking about that bathing suit."

"You said it was all right to wear it."

"I said it was all right to wear all of it. Not just the under half."

"You didn't think I was going to wear the outer part, too, did you?"

"Of course we did," Ernestine said. "You know perfectly well we did."

"So that's what you meant when you said I'd look ridiculous." Martha started to laugh. "I can see myself in that black tent, can't you? I don't wonder you thought everyone would stare at me. Why, I couldn't swim a stroke in that sea anchor—you should have known that."

"Martha," said Ernestine. "Listen, Martha. It's not decent. You shouldn't walk out

(Continued on Page 76)

We are growing serious, and let me tell you that's the very next step to being dull.
—JOSEPH ADDISON.

"What affects the wear of NYLON stockings?"

THIS IS ONLY ONE OF THE QUESTIONS ANSWERED IN THIS ISSUE OF THE

DU PONT NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE

"Does Du Pont make nylon stockings?"

No! Stockings are made by hundreds of manufacturers. Some of these may elect to mark their stockings "Made of Du Pont Nylon" to inform you that they have used the nylon textile fiber made by Du Pont.

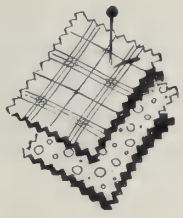
"What affects the wear of nylon stockings?"

The life of your lovely nylon stockings depends on many things—fabric construction, proper fit and length, care in handling, whether you fasten your garters in the heaver, welt part of the stockings, and, of course, denier.

"What is denier?"

Denier is the weight and thickness of each thread in nylon stockings. You can buy stockings in 15, 20, 30, 40, 50, and 70 denier. The larger the denier number, the stronger the thread. A 15 denier thread is only half as heavy and half as strong as a 30 denier thread. Before 1948 most stockings were of the heavier 30 or 40 denier. Today, however, because of their sheer, leg-flattering beauty, many women prefer the 15 denier stockings. You can have your choice.

"How can I avoid runs and snags?"



Gentle care means longer wear. Keep your hands and nails smooth, remove rings and other jewelry when you handle your stockings. After rinsing out stockings, dry them over a smooth rod—you know how quickly they dry. Keep them in hosiery cases or wrapped in facial tissues. Remember, too, the right size for your foot and leg is important for long wear. If stockings fit so tightly the fabric is strained, you lose out on durability. But too loose, wrinkled stockings may increase snagging.

"Is nylon warm or cool?"

Surprisingly enough, fabrics made with this fabulous fiber can be either. Nylon fabrics can be just as warm, or as cool, as other fabrics made of other fibers. What makes a fabric warm? Thickness, yarn construction and a great number of insulating air pockets. Spun nylon products like sweaters and socks are as warm and snug as you could ever want them. What makes a fabric cool? Thinness and the ease with which air can pass through it. Sheer nylon lingerie is cool and comfortable, more so when the fabric is designed to let air circulate.

"What are the advantages of fabrics which contain nylon and other fibers?"

In 100%-nylon fabrics, all of nylon's easy-living properties are put to work to give the maximum of easy care, long wear. However, textile designers also blend or combine versatile nylon with other fibers, such as rayon, silk, wool and cotton, to create many new, exciting and valuable fabrics. Nylon's amazing strength, light weight, and abrasion-resistance, for instance, can give new and better performance to familiar fabrics in lingerie, upholstery and suitings.

"Why do some nylon slips cost more than other nylon slips?"

There is as much variation in products made of nylon as there is in products made of any other fiber. Du Pont makes the nylon fiber. Your satisfaction with a finished garment depends not alone on the fiber, but on how well that fiber is woven or knitted into a fabric—and the skill with which the fabric is cut and fitted. It depends on honest workmanship—for example, good seam construction. One product made of nylon may cost a lot more than another—and be worth every penny. Worth it—because you are paying for better design, better styling and better detail of tailoring.

"Can nylon fabrics be made with permanent pleats?"

Indeed they can—when they're properly heat-set. A special heat treatment is used by manufacturers to set glamorous accordion pleats into nylon fabrics—the kind you've marveled at in delicate slips, petticoats and gowns. When nylon pleats have been properly heat-set, you can wash them again and again—without a single worry about the pleats coming out!

"Do I have to iron my nylon blouses?"

Many nylon fabrics look completely right without any ironing. There are others that look better after a light pressing with a cool iron. Lucky for you, nylon is easy to iron—even easier if you remember not to wring tightly, but to squeeze the water out gently. Hang each one up while still wet, and smooth wrinkles out with your hands. When you do iron nylon, use a cool iron—275°—or the "rayon" or "nylon" setting.

"WHY DO YOU HAVE A NYLON INFORMATION SERVICE?"

Because of the widespread use and popularity of products made of nylon fibers, a lot of people have had a lot of eager, interested questions about nylon. As a service to you who buy and use nylon products, we are running this series of advertisements aimed at answering some of those queries.

However, remember Du Pont does not manufacture nylon slips, shirts, dresses or stockings. Du Pont makes the basic fiber, or yarn, from which nylon products are made. Like the products of steel or aluminum used in the manufacturing of automobiles, refrigerators or washing machines, we make a basic material, nylon. This basic material in turn is used by hundreds of manufacturers to make finished nylon products.

FREE! Learn more about nylon! Send for new leaflet, "Care of Nylon." Write to E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Nylon Division, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING
... THROUGH CHEMISTRY

For nylon . . . for rayon . . . for fibers to come . . . look to Du Pont

Tonight!...Show him how much lovelier your hair can look...after a

Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Exclusive! This magical secret-blend lather with LANOLIN!
Exciting! This new three-way hair loveliness . . .

Better than a soap! Better than a liquid! Kay Daumit's cream shampoo with lanolin. Jars: $2, $1. Jars and tubes: 49¢, 25¢.

1 Leaves hair silken soft, instantly manageable . . . first wondrous result of a Lustre-Creme shampoo. Makes lavish, lanolin-blessed lather even in hardest water. No more unruly, soap-dulled locks. Leaves hair soft, obedient, for any style hair-do.

2 Leaves hair sparkling with star-bright sheen. No other shampoo has the same magic blend of secret ingredients plus gentle lanolin to bring out every highlight. No special rinse needed with Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

3 Leaves hair fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff. Famous hairdressers insist on Lustre-Creme, the world's leading cream shampoo. Yes, tonight, show him a lovelier you —after a Lustre-Creme shampoo!

(Continued from Page 73)

of your boudoir in that thing. Here, take this towel, dear."

"We could bury her with sand until everyone goes home," Fred suggested hopefully.

"It shows every curve," Anne said. "It leaves nothing to the imagination."

"I'm getting tired of being bossed," Martha hollered. "Always thinking about how you look, and never thinking about how you swim. Besides, there's nothing to imagine."

Anne was patient. "You know Dad's rules for girls in this family. Modesty, Martha. Modesty."

"But nobody wears two-piece suits any more. You think you're flappers, but you don't realize that times have changed. I've got a right to live my own life."

"You know the rules as well as we do," Anne continued. "Two-piece bathing suits. Skirts at least to the knees, black stockings, and a minimum of skin showing. What would Mother say?"

"I'll bet," said Martha, "she'd say times have changed, and that I could wear the same kind of suit other girls are wearing. And I'll bet, when she said it, you two would race each other downtown to get one-piece suits."

"That shows," Anne announced, "how well you know Mother."

"Yes, sir," Martha nodded, obviously deriving a good bit of satisfaction from the mental picture, "when she said it, it would be on your mark, get set, go."

"But she wouldn't say it," Anne insisted. "She'd die if she saw you like that."

"All right," Martha surrendered. "You're the boss, and I've got to do what you say. I'll wear the rest of it. But I'm going to take a hem of at least a foot in the bottom. And I positively draw the line at black stockings this summer."

Martha got up and, disdaining the offer of towels, headed back toward the cottage. There was no doubt that Mother's suit never looked better.

"I think," Ernestine told Anne, "that we could all do away with black stockings. No one else wears them."

Anne nodded. "I was thinking the same thing. As Martha says, times do change. Even Dad probably would admit that. Probably."

"And you know she did look mighty cute in that one-piece job."

"I suppose she did," said Anne. "In a childish sort of way, of course."

"That's what I mean—in a childish sort of way," Ernestine went on. "And it must be much easier to swim when you have just one piece."

"I guess it is," Anne agreed. "Lord knows I don't like the idea of two-piece suits any better than she does—if as well. But you know I can't repeal any rules behind Mother's back and —— Hey, wait a minute. Whose side are you on, anyway?"

"Yours," Ernestine said. "I suppose. I wasn't going to take off the outer part of my suit, honest! Just the stockings."

Anne shaded her eyes and looked out at the float again. The tall, thin figure was still there.

"Will you take me out over my head now, Anne?" Jack asked. "Nobody ever takes me out over my head."

"I guess so," said Anne, putting on her bandanna and shaking the sand from between the two layers of her outfit. She took Jack by the hand and Ernestine took Bob. They started slowly into the water.

THE remainder of the two weeks before Mother's arrival went comparatively smoothly. The economy budget stayed in balance. Ernestine had moderate success in improving the cooking. Martha looked swaddled, but eminently respectable, in Mother's shortened bathing suit.

There is no denying, though, that tempers were wearing thin. Anne's pep talks were beginning to sound hollow, and fights were increasingly frequent. A steadying adult hand was needed, and most of us realized it.

There was one fight in which the whole family took part, that started when Frank complained about the frequency with which Ernestine placed clam chowder on the menu. Ernestine was especially fond of cla Not only that, but we got the clams nothing by digging them ourselves. Fr could either take clams or leave them al preferably the latter. He thought that c chowder four times in a single week was much to take, even under an austerity gram. Someplace during the climax of argument, Frank picked up his bowl chowder and inverted it over Ernesti head.

With clams draped over her ears, Er tine arose silently, picked up her chow bowl, and repeated the process on Fra Fists started to fly, in a mass battle pitted the clam lovers against the clam durers. Anne finally managed to res peace, but not until all the chowder b had been emptied.

WE didn't have a bathtub or a showe The Shoe, since Dad thought bathing in water was more healthful, so we had to on our bathing suits and go down to beach to wash our hair.

By then, having let off steam, every was in a high if clammy good humor. T were considerable giggling, tripping, g natured sand throwing and pinching as ran down to the water. The neighbors, being stone deaf, must have heard the thr of mutilation and death that had emerg few minutes before from our cottage. In event, they seemed astounded to see all unscathed, except for clams and potatoe our hair, and apparently on the bes terms.

Anne deducted twenty cents from of our allowances, which meant that som the younger children didn't get any spen money for two weeks, and there wasn't repetition.

Mother wrote daily, and her letters tained personal messages for each child. could hardly wait to see Jack swim, and was mighty proud he had learned. She tainly wouldn't forget Martha's bathing when she passed through Montclair. Er tine shouldn't worry about missing her lege boards—it might be best anyway for to take a postgraduate year at high sch and start college after that, when the fa would be a little more settled. Most im tant of all, the talks at London and Pra had gone well—very well, she thought. she had plans for opening a motion-st school at our house in Montclair.

All of us would be on the steps, wai for Mr. Conway, the mailman, in the m ings. There was a calendar, with a red c around Mother's arrival date, hanging the chimney in the dining room. Each m ing at breakfast Lillian, who was in ch of the calendar, marked off another

The morning before Mother's arrival washed and oiled the floors, waxed furniture, polished brass, scrubbed wind and trimmed the bayberry bushes in front yard. Everybody, including T pitched in, and when we were through house was cleaner than it was in the be ning, is now, or probably ever shall be.

We went for a quick swim, more for itary reasons than for relaxation, and put on our best clothes. Everybody loo fine, even Martha in her hand-me-do

Ernestine had bought a large roast supper, and spent a good part of the afternoon telling Tom what she intende do to him, and how she intended to tor his cat, if he charred a single inch of i was the first roast we had had since we Montclair.

Lillian was stationed at the top of taller lighthouse, as a lookout for the N tucket boat. As soon as the smoke was vis she let us know, and Anne lined us up in dining room for a final inspection.

"Everyone's alive and whole," she be "and nobody's in jail. So I guess we d pretty good job."

She cleared her throat and paced floor in front of us.

"You all know," she said in her oratorical style, "that I don't enjoy mal speeches."

This was something we didn't know at because there were few things Anne enjo ore. Before she went to college, she had en a mainstay of the high-school debating am, and drove her arguments home with ch enthusiasm that her coach used to tell r she was supposed merely to stump her ponents, not tree them.

"Now that I am about to relinquish my thority," she continued, "I want to thank u one and all for your fine spirit of coeration. I would caution you about two ngs," she said: "Don't reveal to Mother out the disgraceful clam-chowder episode, Martha's wearing insufficient clothing to e beach the day we arrived."

"What's she talking about, Fred?" Dan ispered loudly. "And why is she hollering d sticking out her arms like that?"

"Search me, Dan," Fred whispered back
t as loudly.

"I'm talking about this," said Anne, for-ting her role as public speaker and leaning er so her face was on the level of theirs.
f you tell Mother about the clam chowder, about the day Martha wore the under f of Mother's suit to the beach, I'll rder you."

"You mean," asked Fred, "the day she s naked except for that black under-ar?"

"I like that!" Martha protested.

"That's just what I mean," Anne nodded.
Mother'd die if she heard it."

We started for the dock. Jane walked ne of the way by herself, and then Anne l Ernestine carried her together, in a ir they made of their hands and wrists.
knew Mother would want to see all of when her boat pulled in.

n a person's lifetime there may be not re than half-a-dozen occasions that he look back to in the certain knowledge t right then, at that moment, there was m for nothing but happiness in his heart.
e walk to the boat that afternoon was one hose occasions.

E steamer rounded Brant Point and we ld begin to distinguish the passengers.
I think I see Mother," Lillian shouted athlessly.

Where?" we asked her. "Where?"

illian was too excited to tell us. "Mother," screamed, and then jumped up and down hat Anne had to grab her dress to keep away from the edge of the dock.

hen we all saw her. She was waving, and ooked as if perhaps she were jumping up down a little too. She was still dressed in ow's clothes, but her coloring had come back. Perhaps it was just a trick of the wind, which was billowing her dress behind her and may have accounted for the jaunty angle of her hat, but she seemed stronger and more sure of herself than we had ever seen her before.

In a matter of minutes, the boat was tied to the dock and Mother was coming down the gangplank, struggling with two suitcases. Martha wasn't the only one thinking about saving tips.

PEOPLE stood back and gave us room as we descended on her. First it was a mass greeting, and then we could tell that she was picking out each of us, and checking us off in her mind.

"It's so good to be home," she said. "I can't tell you how I felt when I saw all of you standing on the dock."

We said it was good to have her home. With the youngest ones hanging onto her skirts, and the rest of us trying to get as close as we could, we started walking down the dock.

"I believe that every one of you has grown," Mother told us, "and all of you look so tan and well!"

"You should have seen us with the chicken pox," Fred said. "We didn't look so well then."

"We were sick as dogs," Dan agreed. "And we took castor oil, too, Mother."

"That was fine," Mother said absently. "I knew you'd do ——" She stopped dead. "Chicken pox?" she said. "What about chicken pox?"

"Didn't we write you about that?" Anne asked innocently.

"Mercy Maude," said Mother. "You know perfectly well that you didn't. Who had it, dear?"

"All of us," Anne grinned. "We got it the day you left." She turned to the boys. "You might at least have waited until Mother got home, to break the news."

"That wasn't one of the things you told us not to tell," Fred said defensively.

"You didn't have anything else, did you?" Mother asked.

Anne shook her head.

"Anything else happen you didn't write me about?"

"That was the only important thing. Really!"

Mother reached out, over the heads of Bob and Jack, and squeezed Anne impulsively around the waist. Anne looked as if whatever she had been through in the last five weeks had been worth while.

"Elaine, darling—has he made you happy?"

soft, shimmering Candleglow®
in Munsingwear's knit gowns and pajamas

It's really easy to be radiantly beautiful and radiantly warm at the same time. Just surrender to the loving embrace of sleepingwear styled in soft, shimmering Candleglow . . . Munsingwear's exclusive cross-dyed cotton-and-rayon fabric.

Red flamingo, aqua mist, blissful yellow, shy pink. Sizes 14 to 20. $4.95

Red flamingo, aqua mist, bashful blue, shy pink. Sizes 14 to 20. $5.95 Matching gown, $4.95.

For the finest in knit sleepingwear . . .
Munsingwear®
at better stores everywhere

Ernestine personally supervised the final stages of the roast beef, and it was red and tender. There were candles on the dinner table, and we used the good silver. No holly was to be had on Nantucket, at least in the summertime, but we decked the halls with boughs of bayberry.

Mother thought the roast beef was delicious, and made a point of complimenting Tom on it.

"It ain't done quite as much as it ought to be," Tom told her, "but we got a lot of cooks around here spoiling the cloth."

"I'm afraid," Mother said to us after Tom had retired to the kitchen, "that we won't be able to have roast beef as often as we used to. That'll be all right, won't it?"

"We know it," Martha said. "You don't have to worry about that."

"We're used to substitutes," Frank put in.

"We'll have to rely a little more on less expensive things like—well, liver, cold cuts, fish and clam chowder."

"I love clam chowder," said Ernestine, glaring at Frank. "We'll have some of that real soon."

"She eats it until it comes out of her ears." Frank smirked complacently. Then, imitating Tom, he laughed through his nose. "Henc, henc, I'm sorry for what I done, but henc, henc, henc."

"What's the matter, dear?" Mother asked. "Is something stuck in your windpipe? Hit him on the back, Bill."

"There's nothing the matter with him," said Bill, who obliged anyway, with all his might.

"It's just a noise he makes," Anne explained.

"Oh," said Mother, obviously relieved. "That's good. Only I don't believe I'd ever make a noise like that unless I had to, dear."

Anne thought we were skating too close to the clam-chowder episode, and was eager to change the subject.

"I think it's time for Martha's surprise," she said. "What do you think, Mother, we only spent three hundred dollars of the money you gave us."

"Why, you couldn't have," Mother replied. "The tickets to Nantucket must have cost . . . and Martha wrote she had forgotten her clothes . . . and the milk bill —— You didn't sell anything, did you, dear?" Mother asked.

"That was my surprise, you speechmaker you," Martha protested. "You said I could tell her."

"That's what I want you to do," Anne said. "You were in charge of the budget, so you're the one to tell her."

"Yes, you tell me, dear," Mother nodded.

"We spent two hundred and ninety-six dollars and five cents," said Martha, who always knew the bank balance down to the last penny.

"I don't know how you did it," Mother told us, shaking her head. "Why, if we can keep going at that rate, I know everything will be all right."

"And we've been eating like kings," Ernestine put in.

"I'd like for you to help me run the house, just as you've been doing," Mother said. "And I'd like for Martha to keep the budget—goodness knows I never could manage money that well."

"You'll have to make out a requisition form in triplicate when you want even two cents for a stamp," Anne warned.

"No she won't either," Martha said. "Mother's an exception. She'll only have to make out one form, and I'll fill out the two duplicates."

"Thank you, dear," said Mother. She sounded as if she meant it.

Mother had brought each of us a present. Not expensive presents, such as Dad used to bring when he returned from Europe, she explained. Just something to let us know she'd been thinking of us.

She brought out the presents while we were finishing our dessert. There were Czech dolls for Jane and Lillian, and Paris hats for Martha, Ernestine and Anne. The girls' presents were a big success. But the boys had trouble hiding their disappointment, when they unwrapped their packages and found that each contained a blue beret.

"All the men in France are wearing them," Mother said. "I thought you might like to start the style over here."

"They're just what we've always wanted," Frank said stoutly, trying to banish from his mind what might happen to him and Bill if they wore the berets to school.

"I guess," said Mother, "that I don't know as much about getting presents for boys as your father did. That's something I'm going to have to learn, isn't it?"

"Dad never brought anything better," Bill protested. "Just old stuff like knives and watches."

"You're good boys," Mother said. "I'll remember about old stuff like that if I go away again."

Martha asked if Mother had remembered to bring the bathing suit from Montclair.

Mother shook her head. "I had some business in New York, and couldn't spare the time to go to Montclair. So I picked you up a suit at Macy's instead." She handed Martha a package.

"If it comes below my knees," said Martha, fumbling with the wrappings, "can I take a hem in it?"

"Goodness, it won't come below you knees." Mother laughed. "It's a one-piec suit."

"One piece?" Anne and Ernestine shoute together.

"No girls wear those old-fashioned two piece suits any more, do they?" Mothe asked.

"We do," said Ernestine. "Remembe Dad's rules."

"Modesty," Anne recited flatly. "Skirt at least to the knees. Black stockings. And minimum of skin showing."

"Times change," Mother told them, "an your father would have changed with them In most things, he was a good bit ahead o his time. I'll admit he usually stayed pretty far behind them when it came to how h daughters should dress."

Martha held up the suit. It was light blu and had a low-cut neck.

"If you say 'On your mark, get set, go to me," Ernestine told her, "I'll scratch you eyes out."

"You'll have to beat me to them," sai Anne. "Besides, my fingernails are longe than yours."

Martha looked at the two oldest girls, an there was sympathy in her glance. "I won der if the budget couldn't stand new suits fo Anne and Ernestine," she asked.

"Those old maids would be too modest Frank put in.

The two girls didn't say anything, but the looked at Mother.

"I believe the budget can stand a knife fo each of the boys," Mother said. "But don't believe we need any more bathin suits." She handed Anne and Ernestine eac a package like Martha's.

(To be Continued)

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

(Continued from Page 24)

"I always think," he says, stirring happily, "salad dressing should never be the same twice!"

We eat most of our meals outdoors, in the Quiet Garden, under the apple trees, down by the pond. For this reason, our eating equipment has to be portable. Last summer, the stone fireplace in the barbecue collapsed and rebuilding it would have been fearfully expensive. Its feet were in soft soil and it just began to sink and sink until finally it bent in the chimney. We have grand plans for making a terrace out of the fallen stones, but moving the stones is hard work.

The portable grills are inexpensive, and we found the change very nice, for the fire just rolls along with us, wherever we feel like eating. A small, even charcoal fire cooks hamburgers or chicken like a charm, and the side counter keeps rolls hot.

Maeve and the cockers keep to the shade on the hot days, but Esmé, in Siamese style, sits right in the sun on the top of the fence. Jonquil is growing so fast that every day she seems a size bigger. A thoroughly healthy puppy is a joy to pick up; Jonquil's solid, compact body is electric with vigor, her legs are foursquare as posts, and now deeply furred with wheat-gold. She still chews on anything she can find. Especially she likes to chew wood, and we have to be quicker than lightning to prevent her devouring the kindling. I think her stomach must be paneled in pine by now, and yet she never seems to be in trouble over it.

Jonquil is pure undiluted charm twenty-four hours a day. None of the home dogs had any use for her when she came, but her winning ways have made her a part of the group. Even Sister will pull on an old towel with her, and Susie rolls in the grass wrestling noisily with her, the black and the gold so beautiful to watch.

She can hear the sound of a breaking eggshell from any part of the house, and rushes to the kitchen to state that eggs are her favorite food. When we get back from dog-training class, the buffet is served to the working dogs, scrambled farm eggs. Jonquil has hers, too, waking up in plenty of time.

My favorite dog tale this week is about Bogi, who belongs to Louise Rucks. Billy Rucks phoned his mother from the university that he wanted Bogi sent down for a visual-speech exam, a demonstration to be given on how to show a dog, operate a camera, do something you know. So Bogi was dispatched to the university, and when a neighbor called up, Louise told her about it. An hour later she phoned again.

"Louise," she said, "we have been having the most awful argument. I told the family you said Bogi was going to school at the university. Taking a course in how to operate the camera, and learning to speak. Though I suppose that is just barking for this or that. Now I know you tell the truth, and if you say Bogi is going to school, I am sure he is. But just what courses is he taking? The family wants to know."

The wit of conversation consists more in finding it in others than in showing a great deal yourself. He who goes from your conversation pleased with himself and his own wit is perfectly well pleased with you.
—BRUYÈRE.

Louise cleared it up, but she says she has been wondering ever since if Bogi couldn't learn to operate a camera as well as anybody!

Every year when the lemons are ripe, we get a box of them from the back yard of Mrs. McKinnon, in California. Big and golden and fully ripe, they are as perfect as jewels. This year we froze the juice from some of them, and now in the hot afternoons we have frosty lemonade with the rich tang of fresh ripe lemons, and it is delicious. I keep a pitcher filled with fruit drink always ready: sometimes I add other juices to the lemon, put in a bottle of dry ginger ale or soda, and float a mint leaf in every glass.

When the neighbors drop in, we can cool off in the shade with lemonade and watercress or lettuce sandwiches. When the children have been swimming, I add a platter of deviled eggs so we can put supper off at least until six o'clock. The favorite deviled egg at Stillmeadow is done with curry and mayonnaise. I mash the yolks very fine first and tuck a small bit of olive in the center.

The countryside has a haze of heat over it, so all the color is soft and dreamy. The sky has a lucid clarity; it is the most serene sky we have in any season. Every small house on the back roads has a clipped, even lawn and borders of annuals. The zinnias are wine and salmon and butter colored. Tea roses and marigolds and Heavenly Blue morning-glory and snapdragons riot in the gardens, and the gladioli are opening their elegance to the sun.

When I drive to the village and see the glory of bloom, the plainest house is beautiful, and it makes me think that it is the same with people. Not everyone can be glamorous or beautiful, but even the plainest woman can seem lovely if she has flowering thoughts. I make a new resolve to keep my own as much like these unspoiled country gardens as possible. No room for the weeds of hate and despair in a well-tended flower plot.

The village volunteer firemen give the annual clambake on the hottest, clearest day of all. Down in the green meadow by the river, the men lug great trays of clams and chicken and potatoes and sweet corn, and the women, this time only, sit pleasantly at the long wooden trestle tables and exchange recipes and plan new quilt designs.

George has been up since dawn. He personally has picked enough chickens to feed the county; now he is opening clams. We all eat clams by the dozen, right out of the shell, then we stop and play horseshoes for a while and then eat just a few more clams. Meanwhile the steam begins to rise, that heavenly odor of seaweed, clam juice, chicken broth, corn and potatoes. Finally the great racks are lifted out and there is the feast, and the butter drips richly over the corn, and everybody eats on half the afternoon while the men pour the hot dark coffee and serve the dessert to those still able to think of it.

The volunteer fire department is our pride. The men leave the harrows idling, the hay half loaded, and race to the sound of the lon siren. At night, after a fourteen-hour-day work in the summer fields, they will rou up from sleep and start the car and thund off down the night roads to the alarm. The get scant verbal thanks, but they have th whole valley feeling secure, and the clam bake celebrates another year in which n forest fire has gained a hold.

In the evening, in the Quiet Garden, th fragrance of the nicotiana is so lovely makes me ache. The white and dark-garn flowers are massed all around the little pick fence; they have long slender throats lik silver trumpets, the petals open out flat the end, and the scent is pure music, roma tic as a Viennese waltz, glamorous as fir love.

Little Sister and Jonquil are digging a la mole hole, ruining the one smooth place the lawn. Their upended rears are quiverin with joy. One of the nicest things about coc ers, I think, is that they never are depresse at failure. They never have, any of the caught a mole, but who knows?

I like to think of my favorite poem Faith Baldwin's. And repeat it aloud to t white moon over the house, and the flowe breathing so sweetly under it:

"I have come back to quiet ways; to things
Of silent wonder, instinct with delight;
To dusk, that closes in like darkling wings
To primrose dawns and lamplit, hearth-wa night;
To mending bag, to laughter, and old books,
To loud-voiced clock and table laid for tea
And that brown urchin of a dog who looks
From sandwich plate to mistress, wistfully ——"

And as I gather Jonquil in my arms a urge Sister from the inconvenience of t mole, I walk to the house.

"Thus, Lord, my spirit keep—in humblen
In still simplicity of gentle days,
This house, the love within it, lean to bless
And hold our feet upon the homely ways."

THE E

PHOTO BY DONALD STUART

On class nights, dinner is really speedy for Jean and Phil.

least once a week we like to a few friends and drive to Beach, have a swim, and grill eaks and corn which never good at home. Phil has deand made his own grill and is f on these beach safaris."

ROASTED CORN

he husks on the corn and wrap it eaweed. Roast directly over the l fire. There should be no flame, owing embers, to avoid burn-corn. When corn is done, strip seaweed and husks and drench
s with butter or margarine.

eachgoers: If there isn't enough
l around, just dip the whole ears salt water, soaking the husks hen wrap them in what seaweed ve.

don't live near the seashore you one of two things and still have s roast corn: Soak the corn in sks in a pail of water before
g. You won't have the flavor of but it's still mighty good.

his: The corn is butter-roasted.
he corn and lay each ear on thick squares of aluminum read the corn with soft but-d sprinkle with salt and pep-rap foil around corn, sealing es with a fold. Place directly on ls and cook about 6 minutes, once or twice. (We've done loors under a broiler, too, and s fine.) Everyone gets a "bund unwraps his own. None of ss and fuss with the husks when n is cooked and ready to eat.

THURSDAY
Workshop Night

Hamburgers
h Sour-Cream Dressing
Summer Squash
Watermelon
Iced Coffee

least one night a week, usually ay, we work together at makrefinishing furniture. We've sing the dinette for such projat our meals in the living room. Phil has just finished putting the 'works' for our record player in an old refinished washstand. I did the rubbing and scraping. We're working on a bookcase. Next project, a lamp base made from copper tubing. Thursdays we have an early dinner so we can really get something accomplished."

HAMBURGERS—
SOUR-CREAM DRESSING

Season and sauté hamburgers in just a little shortening, as you would if you were serving them on buns. When done to your taste—rare, medium or well done—remove to hot plates. Pour ½ cup thick commercial sour cream and 2 tablespoons minced chives into pan. Heat a few minutes, stirring around to loosen the brown bits, and pour sauce over hamburgers.

FRIDAY
Twilight Horseback Ride Before Dinner

Tomato Juice
Tuna-Salad Mold
Sherbet
Coffee

"Sometimes we like to go horseback riding before dinner. On these nights, dinner is later than usual. Knowing we'll be hot and hungry when we get home, I have everything fixed ahead of time. Nothing to do but serve it."

TUNA-SALAD MOLD

Soften ½ envelope (½ tablespoon) unflavored gelatin in 2 tablespoons cold water. Dissolve in ⅓ cup hot water. Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon paprika and 1 teaspoon grated onion. Chill until partially set. Mix in well 1 seven-ounce can flaked tuna fish, ½ cup chopped celery and ¼ cup heavy cream, whipped. Pour into a mold or individual molds or custard cups. Chill until firm. Serve with mayonnaise or Russian dressing—or no dressing at all, if that's the way you like it. Garnish with relishes and raw vegetables.

Pull up a chair and a cracker and sample the New Borden's cheese spreads!

New on the outside!
Improved on the inside!

BETTER THAN EVER For Picnics, Parties, and Snacks!

You'll notice a wonderful difference in all nine fine Borden's Cheese Spreads!

A new formula gives them more flavor, more body than ever. And they come to you now in fashionable, new-style, crystal-clear party glasses that you'll be proud to use on your table.

Double-sealed caps keep them fresh and full of flavor as the day they were made!

Look for Borden's Cheese Spreads at your favorite food store. Sample all nine and keep your favorites always at hand on your pantry shelf . . . Vera-Sharp . . . Smokey . . . Cheese 'N Bacon . . . Pimento . . . Relish . . . Olive Pimento . . . Pineapple . . . Liederkranz Brand . . . Blue.

Collect a set of PARTY GLASSES!

You'll find a dozen uses for the new crystal-clear party glasses that these Borden's Cheese Spreads come in. They go well with every table setting.

These stylish glasses are a copy of a costly crystal pattern, with a weighty base for steadiness. Handy size for juices and children's drinking glasses. Start collecting your set today.

Borden's Fine Cheeses

FOLKS WHO KNOW CHEESE SAY "BORDEN'S, PLEASE!"

©The Borden Company

Hot Biscuits

the Ready to Bake and Serve Way!

Take 'em out of the package . . .

No Mixing!

Put 'em in the oven and let 'em bake!

OvenReadys make the QUICKEST 'N' BEST Peach Shortcake

Peel and sugar the peaches, and whip the cream—while OvenReadys are baking.

In 9 minutes, you'll be treating your family to super-delicious peach shortcake.

Look for Specials on OvenReadys and peaches at your grocer's today!

READY TO EAT IN 9 MINUTES!

Easy come—no work at all! Easy go, too . . . tender, golden-brown Ballard OvenReadys disappear fast! Better have a second batch baking while the family's eating the first!

Fresh, fresh, fresh! Ballard OvenReadys are made of fine, wholesome ingredients (including pure vegetable shortening) . . . packed ten-to-a-package, then rushed to your grocer's refrigerator. Nothing quite like 'em. Serve some tonight!

BALLARD OvenReady BISCUITS!

Distributed exclusively by Kraft

COOL COLORFUL COLLECTION

(Continued from Page 56)

tricks for us who cook and those who only wait and eat. It sparkles like a diamond pendant; it glistens like dew on a freshly opened rose. It makes a dull dish forget forever its dullness and apply the make-up of beauty and distinction. And here is a group of sparkling beauties as intriguing as a rainbow and as delicious as some fabulous dish served to a begum perched on a ceremonial elephant, or a movie star making an entrance at the Ritz. See what you think. Here's No. 1. More to come.

LIME-AND-MINT FRUIT SALAD

Drain 1 No. 2½ can pear halves. Add 1 cup chopped mint leaves to 5 cups water and 1 cup pear sirup. Bring to a boil slowly and boil 1 minute. Pour over 3 packages lime-flavored gelatin and stir until the gelatin is dissolved. Let it stand 15 minutes to develop flavor, then strain to remove the mint. Chill the gelatin until thick but not set. Add 2 cups diced canned pears and 1 cup honeydew-melon balls—use your ball scoop for these. Pour the whole works into a 2-quart mold; a melon mold is pretty satisfactory, especially on the getting-out end. Chill until set. Unmold and serve with cottage-cheese snowcaps and salad greens. This salad, including the snowcaps, can be made one day and served the next. Serves 6 to 8.

Another humdinger. Excuse it, please, but that's what it is; and if this is slang (old-fashioned slang at that), let it go. This receipt deals with the simple, everyday things on the kitchen shelves and in the nice cool refrigerator (and today a front pew in the refrigerator wouldn't be so bad), and it's as dainty as a flower-trimmed hat at a garden party. And when you make it, you'll tell me that I didn't tell the half of it, for it goes well with any fruit salad. Cottage cheese and fruit are buddies from way back. One of the end pieces from luncheons to lunch boxes.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Summer Dusk

By Genneva Dickey Watson

That summer evening we laughed—
  Young girls in the dusk of the park;
Did our voices soar away
  Light and clear in the dark,
Joyous always, forever free,
As the voices of all the young should be?

In this evening dusk long after,
  From the bicycle path on the hill
I hear the same clear laughter
  As they wheel and swoop, and are still. . . .
Long, long has it circled the earth,
This joyous music of innocent mirth.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

COTTAGE-CHEESE SNOWCAPS

Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Heat over hot water until the gelatin is dissolved. Stir into 2 cups dry cottage cheese that has been mixed with ¾ cup rich milk or cream. Add ½ teaspoon salt and mix well. Pour into small individual molds. Chill until firm. Turn out and serve with lime fruit salad.

Takes time—but pays off. This No. 2 on the list is a last word in elegance, and when I say it pays off that's what I mean. It's a little more—shall I say tricky?—than some, but you can't rock on the front porch all day watching Mr. Brown cutting his lawn in all this heat, and at the same time come up with a dish like this. What's more, if you are going to give a party, you have to get ready for it sometime.

AVOCADO-RIBBON ASPIC

This is a 3-layer affair in loaf shape.

(1) Avocado layer: Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Add ½ cup boiling water. Stir in 1 teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons lemon juice and a few drops Tabasco sauce. Cool until thick. Stir in 1½ cups sieved ripe avocado (meat from 2 small or 1 large peeled avocado). Add 1 or 2 dro green vegetable coloring to make it the col you like. A drop at a time does it. Pour in a loaf pan 9x5", 2½" deep. Chill until almost but not quite firm. While this is settin prepare the cheese layer (or you could ha started this layer while the first part w cooling. No doubt you thought this up all yourself!).

(2) Cheese layer: Soften 2 teaspoons u flavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. D solve over boiling water. Mix 4 three-oun packages cream cheese with ½ cup mil adding the milk gradually. Blend in 1 te spoon salt, ⅔ cup mayonnaise and ¼ te spoon Worcestershire sauce. Stir in the d solved gelatin. Spread over almost-fi avocado layer. Chill.

(3) Tomato layer: Simmer 3 cups toma juice with ½ bay leaf, 2 whole cloves, 2 o sprigs parsley, 2 sticks celery, ¾ teaspo salt and a dash of cayenne for 10 minut Strain. Soften 1½ envelopes unflavored ge tin in ⅓ cup cold water. After a few m utes, add to hot tomato juice with 1½ tab spoons vinegar a 1½ teaspoons grat onion. Chill until begins to thicken a pour out on the che layer when the che layer is almost fir

Chill the wh thing now until fir Turn out and garn with tomato quart and greens. Ser sliced. Serves 10 12. This is wonder with cold meats or itself. Mayonnaise Russian dressing i neat number to se with this if you w dressing.

Jade and coral in a ring. That i shrimp-and-cucu ber salad. My, wh you can do with yo patio parties, yo suppers and lun eons when you ha such things to with! And you'll tice that the indispensable gelatin stri right along with the best of them. You the lucky girls! Try this charmer and th say that the world has gone to pot if y can.

SHRIMP-AND-CUCUMBER RING

Cook 2 pounds fresh or frozen shrimp i cups water seasoned with 1 teaspoon s 1 bay leaf, 1 onion, sliced, 1 slice lemon sprig parsley, celery tops and a few p percorns. Shell the shrimp and take out black vein. The frozen ones are ready. Str and save the shrimp broth.

Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin ½ cup cold water. Dissolve in 3 cups shrimp broth. Season with ⅓ cup lem juice, 2 teaspoons grated onion, 2 teaspoo salt, a little black pepper, dash of Taba and ½ teaspoon dry mustard. Chill u thick but not set. Add 1½ cups diced cook or canned lobster meat, 1½ cups shrimp, cup diced celery, 1 cup cucumber, peeled a chopped, and 3 tablespoons chopped s pickle.

If you want more pretty, add green col ing until you get the shade you like. P into 1½-quart ring mold. Chill until fir Unmold and garnish with sliced cucu bers, lobster claws and shrimp. Serve w mayonnaise dressing. Serves 6 to 8.

It's a wonderful thing. There isn't a b ter or more useful number than this one. I just right for a light summer luncheon di and it serves equally well as a salad-dess combination.

FROZEN FRUIT SALAD

Mix together ¾ cup diced canned pineapple, ½ cup orange sections, cut into small pieces, about a dozen maraschino cherries, minced, ripe banana, diced, and 4 marshmallows, clipped into small pieces with kitchen scissors. Add ¼ cup coarsely chopped pecans, ¼ teaspoon finely chopped crystallized ginger and a pinch of salt. Soften 1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin in 2 tablespoons orange juice. Dissolve in 3 tablespoons hot pineapple juice or sirup drained from canned pineapple. Let cool, but don't let it set. Mix the dissolved gelatin with the fruit and nuts. Whip 1 cup heavy cream stiff and sweeten with 2 tablespoons sugar. Mix with ½ cup mayonnaise and fold into fruit-and-gelatin mixture until everything sticks closer than a distant relative waiting for the will to be read.

Fill 8 muffin or cupcake-size fluted paper baking cups or 4 larger paper casserole cups. Set the cups in the freezing trays and freeze until firm. It takes about 2½ hours. The cups will hold their shape better if set in custard cups. If you have a large freezing compartment, set the cups right in the muffin pan. Or, if you have plenty of fluted paper baking cups, fit 3 or 4 cups together (for support) before filling. When ready to serve, peel the paper away, turn out upside down in lettuce cups and garnish with watermelon balls or any fruit you like best.

Speaking of favorites. Here comes a modest little group of August desserts, and each one is saying "Take me, take me." Well, take them all. They'll play fair and maybe you won't play any favorites. I shan't tell you my favorite. But I've got one, same as other people have, but I'm not telling. I hate for you to guess, but it could be ——

FROZEN COFFEE MOUSSE

Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Let it stand 5 minutes. Scald 2½ cups milk. Add 4 teaspoons instant coffee or powdered decaffeinated coffee. Stir until. Add softened gelatin and stir until dissolved, then add ½ cup sugar, ½ cup white corn sirup and a pinch of salt. Stir until the sugar is dissolved. Chill until thick. Fold in 2 cups heavy cream, whipped. Now beat 4 egg whites stiff but not dry and fold into the coffee-cream mixture. Pour into two quart freezing trays. Set up refrigerator to coldest position. Freeze (about 30 minutes) until mixture is frozen ¼" around the edges. Scrape it into a chilled bowl. Beat quickly with rotary beater or electric beater until blended. Don't "linger longer" over this, as the old song says. Return to freezing trays and freeze until set. Makes 2 quarts. Serve with sliced and sugared fresh peaches.

Never pick a melon right out of the patch? If you haven't, you've missed an unforgettable experience. The broad thick leaves cover the ground, there doesn't seem to be a melon within a mile, and then, suddenly, you come on what you came to find—if luck is with you. There, smiling up at you in the sweet summer air, the sunshine and the dew-bewildered vines, is your prize. A cantaloupe. Ripened on the vine, not on some spurious counter in a store down the street. You press it gently, tenderly lift it from its hidden bed, warm and sweet and perfumed as only God can perfume His gifts to man. And if it pleases you, here is one, but only one out of a hundred ways you can make that cantaloupe sing. See if I haven't told this right.

CANTALOUPE SUPREME

Cut 3 small ripe cantaloupes in half. Remove the seeds. Scoop out the pulp in small spoonfuls and chop fine. Place the shells in the refrigerator to chill. Add ¾ cup orange juice, 1½ tablespoons lemon juice, 1½ tablespoons sugar and a pinch of salt to the cantaloupe pulp. Mix well. Freeze the pulp until mushy. Stir well; freeze a little longer, but not solid. Fill the shells with the frozen pulp. Garnish with a spoonful of lime or lemon sherbet and a sprig of mint. Serves 6.

For a de luxe cantaloupe à la mode, fill the shells half full with the frozen-cantaloupe pulp and fill up the rest with ice cream.

The raspberries have it. Quite a combination, raspberries and coconut. I remember when I was beginning to be interested in what went on in the kitchen and what a range (coal one, then) was all about, that I developed a passionate love for coconut. I can't remember how or why or what brought it on, but coconut had me in its grip. That the family didn't have coconut in their soup and mashed potatoes as well as in pies and cakes was one of those minor miracles. Looking into the subject later, this combination seems just right for August.

COCONUT BAVARIAN CREAM WITH RASPBERRIES

Soften 1½ envelopes unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Heat 1½ cups milk and dissolve gelatin in it. Add ½ cup sugar, a pinch of salt, ½ teaspoon almond flavoring and 1 cup grated fresh coconut. Cool until it begins to thicken but not set. Whip 1 cup heavy cream and fold in. Pour into a 1-quart mold. Chill overnight to develop the full flavor of the coconut. Turn out, sprinkle with coconut and serve with a border of fresh raspberries or sliced peaches. Serves 6.

Another day. "Say au revoir but not good-by" was a sentimental tune in the so-called gay nineties. Well, compared with things as they are now, I guess they were gay. So I'll say au revoir but not good-by, leaving you with a cool, colorful collection and selection to do you proud—comes the day. And I expect all A's on your report.

A SUMMER IN THE COUNTRY

(Continued from Page 41)

tbuildings, and the barn, and the chicken ns.

Ben watched her for a while. Finally he d to Lydia, "It might not be a bad idea just one summer." But he spoke warily. Lydia thought of Greenwich, where they d spent most of their other summers. She ought of the country clubs, the parties, and en she thought about Betsey Rogers. Ben d never confessed his infatuation for Bet-, but it had been obvious to everyone. Perhaps this is what we need, she thought. might even be like that first year, when I still d a job, and Ben bought our dinners at a icatessen.

She said finally, without much conviction, Ve could try it anyhow, and see how it rks."

But now they were driving home, and dia saw already that the project was not ly dreary, but pointless.

She said, "The place is too large, and we uldn't know a soul!"

"It's also too far from the city," Ben said. "I'd be able to get up only week ends, except for part of August."

"Now I can have a pony!" Sharon chanted. "And a baby lamb!" Sharon was sparkling.

Lydia said, "Sharon, you don't have to go to camp. You can stay in Greenwich with us, and we'll buy you a pony anyhow."

"But where would I keep it?"

"In the garage," Ben said.

They all considered this. The Greenwich house was built on a rocky knoll. It had a brick-and-stucco facing, a flagstone terrace.

"Could I?" Sharon asked.

Ben sighed. "No, you couldn't," he said.

They were in Massachusetts now, passing through one town after another.

Lydia said, "You're right. It was those apple blossoms. And they'd all be gone by the time we moved in."

"The brook would still be there," Ben said. And he added thoughtfully, "We might get someone to share it with us."

It's tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken

PLANNED just for superior eating, it took more than ten years for this dream chicken to come true.

Here is chicken at its finest . . . specially fed for quality meat, specially raised to give springtime flavor every month of the year.

Look for fresh tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken with the tag on the wing or quick-frozen in the picture package.

BUTTER CRISP tender-grown CHICKEN

1 tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken, cut for frying
Swift's Brookfield Butter
Shortening
1 cup Flour
1 teaspoon Salt
¼ teaspoon Pepper

- Put flour and seasonings in paper sack. Shake 3 or 4 pieces of chicken in the sack at a time to coat.
- Heat enough butter and shortening (half of each) in a heavy skillet to make ⅛ inch layer.
- Place chicken in hot fat. Brown on both sides.
- Place chicken, one layer deep, in shallow baking pan. Pour melted butter over pieces.
- Bake in moderate oven (350° F.) until tender, about 40 minutes. Baste with melted butter every 15 minutes.

"Who?"

"Some other couple."

Lydia lapsed into silence. She was remembering the feeling she had had, looking at the apple blossoms—so feathery and pink and white, almost ethereal. It was a sensation she used to have often ten years ago—as though the world were too beautiful to encompass, yet as though the essence of it belonged to her. When she was twenty she hadn't been afraid of anything. She had battled offices until she'd landed a job in an art department. She had married Ben when he had no money at all. And she had expected every year to be better than the one before. She thought of the Greenwich house—of the two well-trained servants, the station wagon, the rounds of parties and activities.

She said, "We'd be crazy to bury ourselves off in the wilds like that."

They had turned into one of the big parkways. It was growing dark, so that they saw, coming and going, a stream of lights. Lydia looked at her husband. It was hard to believe that when he'd lost his job the first year of their marriage, he'd spent two nights pacing the floor, and she had had to comfort and reassure him.

"How about the Dixons?" Ben asked. "Sharon could play with their boys."

"Then you do want to go!" she said accusingly.

Ben kept his eyes on the road. "It would be fun for Sharon, and it might be a change," he said. "We could always leave."

Sharon was asleep now, with her head against her mother's shoulder. The cars hummed toward them along the parkway, and Vermont seemed more than two hundred miles away.

"All right, I'll talk to Kathie Dixon," Lydia said. "We can always come back if we don't like it."

Afterward they were never quite sure what decided them. But they had a number of stories they told their friends.

"We just happened to stop at this inn for lunch," Lydia would say, "and the owner was a nice old Vermonter, who insisted on showing us some houses."

Ben's explanations were all based on the sporting possibilities. "Most of the brooks were swarming with trout," he'd tell his New York acquaintances. "And what partridge cover, if you wanted to go up in the fall!"

The day after they returned from their trip Sharon whacked off her braids with a pair of blunt scissors. "It's more fun to ride a pony when your hair is short," she explained.

Lydia was aghast. She knew quite definitely now that she didn't want to go to Vermont. But she was beginning to feel trapped, as though the decision had somehow been taken out of her hands. She had Sharon's hair properly cut in a beauty parlor, and then drove over to see Kathie.

The Dixons lived in a part of town that formed a border line between the big estates and the commercial section. They had moved to Greenwich only three years before; but their easygoing friendliness had made them immediately popular.

LYDIA found Kathie out back, hanging up clothes. She said apologetically, "This is a dreadful time to call. I should have phoned first."

Kathie laughed. "I shouldn't be doing laundry in the middle of the afternoon, but I seem to be behind in everything. Anyhow, I'm glad of an excuse to sit down for a while, so come on in."

Sharon stayed outside to play on the swing with the boys, while Lydia and Kathie settled down in the sun porch.

Lydia said at once, "I know you'll think this is crazy, because it is crazy!" Then she told about the trip to Vermont. She said, "The house is big and just perfect for children. But I don't feel equal to undertaking it alone." She looked at Kathie, who seemed so self-possessed and capable. "It would be perfect for the children. But whether the rest of us would like it is another matter."

Kathie smiled vaguely. "I'm sure the boys would adore it; but Hank can't get much vacation this summer."

"He and Ben could drive up week ends." And Lydia added hastily, "I'm not so sur myself that it's a good idea. But since Be and I have already contracted for the place we would take care of the rent. There'd onl be food and incidentals to share."

When Lydia said that, Kathie tried to as semble her thoughts and really listen to thi unexpected suggestion.

She asked uncertainly, "Then you've al ready rented a house?"

Lydia laughed. "We did it on impulse without even talking it over. Apple-blosson fever is what Ben calls it!"

KATHIE'S mind began to race then, in th same feverish way it had raced last nigh during that dreadful session with Hank. Sh did not think coherently, but she found her self once more snatching blindly, yet in stinctively, at any possible out. Nevertheless she maintained her poise, and said, with th utmost casualness:

"I don't suppose it would be very expen sive."

"Vermont! Gracious, no. You buy you chickens and stuff from nearby farmers And of course two families together woul make it cost even less."

Kathie nodded. "We could take turns wit the cooking, and keep everything very sim ple."

"Oh, I imagine I could persuade Bella t come; and we have to pay her wages any how, so you wouldn't need to bother wit that." Lydia smiled confidently. "I'm sur we could arrange the domestic part easily."

Kathie's head was throbbing now. But sh felt no resentment against Lydia, who had house on Round Point, and two servant and probably no money worries at all. Sh was only conscious more than ever of a grow ing rage against herself. Because how ha they landed in such a mess? What had don this to them? No catastrophe, with the ex ception of Ronny's fractured leg, and the should have been prepared for emergencies And no obvious extravagance, that she coul put her finger on. Just a gradual, day-by-da financial deterioration, until now they wer faced with terrifying consequences, an didn't know where to turn.

She said finally, "I'll talk it over wit Hank tonight. We were thinking we migh try to rent the house this summer."

"But where would Hank live?"

"Oh, in town someplace." (In a dollar-a day room, eating in cafeterias.) "Probably a his club," she said. "Then he wouldn't hav to commute." And she added impulsively "It was wonderful of you to think of us Lydia. It really sounds heavenly."

Lydia looked at Kathie, whose dark gra eyes were thoughtful now. And she had t fight against a familiar pang of envy. Fo Kathie and Hank Dixon were known to be deeply devoted couple. . . . And suddenl Lydia wondered if she would like watchin the Dixons together all summer long. The weren't obvious; they didn't flaunt their a fection for each other. But it was alway there, pervasive and inescapable.

She said uncertainly, "We don't want t rush you into anything. You might not lik Vermont at all."

"I've visited in Vermont," Kathie sai "and I've always loved it. Why don't I tal to Hank tonight, and let you know?"

Lydia collected Sharon soon after tha and drove off in the station wagon. She fe committed now, and very uneasy. For they went to Vermont she would be stuc there for most of the summer.

After Lydia had left, Kathie tried to thin coherently, and see how this Vermont ide fitted in with their present predicament. B the boys came in right then, and began pla ing with trains on the floor, and that di tracted her. Ronny was six, and Pete fou Kathie watched them run the trains ov the brick flooring on the sun porch. And s thought, We never should have bought th house!

It wasn't an elaborate house, just sev rooms and an attached garage. And they thought that if they bought it the boys wou have a real home, and they'd all have a co munity life. But as it turned out, the mo ge was too big, even before they capped it th a second one.

So the house had been partly responsible. d the club, and rising prices, and the car ich was secondhand and had to have a new otor, and all the fun of meeting new people d entertaining them. They knew now that ey hadn't been sensible. Optimism and ppiness had carried them along, past the int where they should have started worry- g. And then Hank's income had begun to le. He was in the insurance business, and eral of his best clients had either died or ved away. Finally they did try to econo- ze. But by that time they were in so deep it when they started to cut down it didn't m to help very much.

Last night they'd really tried to face ngs, and Hank had struggled for hours h bills and figures. Most of the accounts re overdue, and they'd made several loans the bank. But when Kathie said guiltily, shouldn't have bought so much at Blake's t month!" Hank put his hand over hers d squeezed it reassuringly.

They tried to be matter-of-fact, but after hile the atmosphere in the living room be- ne charged with a vague, yet menacing, r. What happened to you when you uldn't meet your commitments? Kathie ought, What will happen to Hank? If you re a salesman you ded confidence in ler to make good; all s worry was partly sponsible for their luced income. Hank n't meet his friends lunch any more; in- ad, he grabbed a dwich at a drug- re. He had given up f and tennis, and s trying to work hts. But generally nightwork made n nervous, so that next day he was der an even greater ain.

After two hours of uggling with figures, nk glanced up and iled at his wife. But saw that she looked d and thinner, and he hated that. He ought, What happens to your wife when you n't take care of her? What happens to your s? And how did all this come about? Just a r ago we were on the crest of the wave!

"We'll have to take care of the more press- bills first," Hank said finally. "And what- r happens, we must meet the interest at bank."

"We could sell the house."

"That's out of the question till we get rid the second mortgage. I asked Thorpe out it. And if we let the bank take over, ere will we live?"

Where would they live? What did you do a situation like this? Kathie looked at nk, and thought passionately, I won't let be hurt. I won't!

She made coffee and tried to help with the ures. But she'd never been good at them, d now they blurred and danced crazily in nt of her eyes. She turned away, so he uldn't notice. For the dizziness only in- ased her panic. It was a symptom of her gnancy, but Hank didn't know about t yet. And she couldn't tell him, not now, en he was under such a dreadful strain.

NALLY Hank added only the most ines- able debts and compared the total with ir balance in the bank. Then he threw the per down on his desk. "I still can't figure w we got into this," he said. "I should 've seen it coming long ago."

"Just a lot of different things," Kathie ex- ined. "Ronny's leg, for instance."

Ronny's leg had had to be reset to prevent meness; the total cost had been over a usand dollars. But Hank dismissed that use. His eyes were dazed with worry now, face drawn with fatigue.

"We'll manage," he said. "We're bound to. eryone gets into a crisis now and then."

But do they? Kathie wondered. Most people kept up a front, so that you never really knew. . . . But she was afraid that this would break Hank, and shadow the children's lives. Most of all, she was just afraid.

So now, with Lydia gone, she sat out on the sun porch, watching the children, and wondering if Vermont might not be some sort of answer. They would escape their bad credit for a while; they might even be able to postpone the crisis until there was a turn for the better. For somehow Hank had to be protected from failure; though it still seemed to her almost inconceivable that just the lack of money could be such a threat to them all.

A WEEK later Lydia said to her husband at breakfast, "The Dixons have decided to come with us to Vermont, though I had to convince them it would be extremely cheap. Apparently they're worried about expenses."

Ben glanced up from his paper. "Good enough," he said, and went back to his reading.

She said finally, "I spoke to Bella. She's not enthusiastic about Vermont, or about cooking for such a crowd. But she says she'll try it."

Bella had been with them five years. She was famous for her soufflés and her roasts. But she was not adaptable.

Ben put down his coffee cup. "I hope this isn't going to make a lot of trouble for you."

"So do I. It would be easier to stay right here. But now, with the Dixons planning to come, it's too late to back out."

They left for Vermont in the middle of June. On the initial trip they took two cars—the Farwells' convertible and also their station wagon, since the Dixons' car was in the garage for repairs. Hank Dixon drove the station wagon, taking as passengers Bella and the three children. Because it was more comfortable, Kathie and Lydia went in the convertible with Ben; and Kathie soon found herself relaxing in comfort against the leather seat.

Bella, the cook, sat in the front seat of the station wagon, silent and disapproving, but the three children whooped it up in back, chattering endlessly. Sharon, at eight, was the oldest; so naturally she was an authority on farms and instructed the others.

She said, "We're going to make a pond and have ducks. And if we have chickens, too, I'll let you help me gather the eggs. But Pete must be careful not to drop them."

Pete, the youngest, didn't mind the note of authority; he was used to it. He said, "And I can help feed them grain, can't I, daddy?"

"Sure thing, Pete. It's fun."

Hank was beginning to relax now; for he saw that it was a good idea getting Kathie and the children up into the mountains. Now he could cope with the mess by himself, and maybe when they all came home he'd have things straightened out.

But in his heart he knew that that was wishful thinking, for just yesterday he'd had his first personal dunning visit. A man had come to the office about the lapsed payments on the washing machine, and he'd had to say, "I guess you'd better take it back. But wait until Monday, when my wife is gone."

Now he thought, I can help her with the wash; the heavy stuff, anyway. And then he heard a wrangle developing in the back of the car.

"Hey, hey, what's up?"

"Ronny wants to feed the pony," Sharon said shakily. "And that's my job."

Hank considered this. He said, "Who's going to rub down his coat?"

"I am!" all three shouted.

Bella muttered something disapproving under her breath. Hank glanced at her and When persons make extravagant promises that they aren't likely to keep, someone is sure to say, "That's a lot of 'blarney.'" Contrary to general opinion, the word is not derived from the famous Blarney stone. Centuries ago, the Irish Lord Clancarty was a prisoner of Sir George Carew. So long as he was in detention, Clancarty made fervent and repeated promises to deliver to the English his strong castle of Blarney. But for every new promise, the Irish nobleman would invent some plausible excuse for delay in carrying it out. So any promise that he made came to be called "Blarney," and in popular usage the word soon came to stand for all vain promises.

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

Use FRENCH'S to make a WOW

—best tomato juice cocktail you ever tasted

Taste a tomato juice cocktail made with French's—and you'll say it's a WOW!

Easy, quick—here's all you do. Add a pinch of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire for each glassful of tomato juice—mix well, and serve very cold. Choice ingredients in French's, aged and mellowed, give a zippy distinctive flavor men go for.

TOPNOTCH QUALITY ...COSTS LESS!

thought, Bella isn't going to last long with this gang! But he hoped Kathie wouldn't have to work too hard. She'd been looking almost ill these last few weeks.

He said, "There are lots of jobs with a pony. Why don't you take turns? One give him his food, one can give him water, and the third can rub down his coat."

This launched a babble of eager plans; and Hank tried to stop worrying, and share their enthusiasm. Because it was always this way when the children were around. They had so much confidence. And that, of course, was it. You couldn't let them down.

The Farwells had planned to stop at a well-known inn for lunch, but it turned out that the Dixons had brought along a picnic, with enough for everyone. They made two stops, looking for a proper place, and finally found one, just off the road near a brook. Kathie doled out paper plates, Hank made a fire, and the children cut sticks to roast hot dogs.

Lydia said guiltily, "I should have brought something."

She felt alien, and at a loss. The Dixons seemed to know how to have fun in a way that she and Ben had forgotten long ago. And this picnic was an example, because right away it turned out to be fun. Bella stayed in the car while they brought her lunch to her on a plate.

Kathie picked at her potato salad, only pretending to eat. The ride in the car had rested her, but now that queazy feeling was coming back again.

"What's the matter? Not hungry?" Hank asked, and he sounded anxious.

"Of course. I'm just about starved," she said hastily. "The air does it, and driving."

Ben put down his plate and stretched comfortably. "Two more hours and we'll be there," he said. "I hope you two like the place. We may have talked it up too much."

"I'm sure we'll love it!" Kathie said.

They reached Kerby in the middle of the afternoon. Ben stopped at the inn for the keys; and then the two cars drove up the winding dirt road through the orchard. When they arrived at the house Kathie said, "Oh, it's nice!"

The first couple of hours were given over entirely to practical matters—allotting rooms, going down to the store for food, getting out sheets and blankets. By evening, matters were fairly well arranged, and they sat out on the broad front porch, resting. The orchard was pale green now, but the mountains were darker, almost blue.

"It's beautiful," Kathie said. "As beautiful as anything I've ever seen." She smiled at Hank. "Aren't you glad we decided to come?"

"Sure thing!" He was sitting next to her, and now he looped his finger and thumb around her wrist. It was a simple gesture, companionable, friendly. But seeing it, Lydia felt almost suffocated.

She said, "These are the worst chairs I've ever encountered. Tomorrow I'll write to New York for some porch furniture."

"Good idea," Ben agreed.

Kathie reined in her thoughts, but not quite successfully. Whenever the Farwells needed something, they bought it. And that must make life so simple!

BECAUSE they were paying the rent, it was taken for granted that Ben and Lydia should have the most desirable bedroom. And though this was by no means luxurious, it was a large, square-shaped room, with a private bath. There were six windows, and a view of hills and fields that almost took your breath away.

Ben hung his suits in the closet in his usual methodical fashion. "Not bad," he said. "I think we're going to like it here."

"So do I," Lydia agreed. She thought of Kathie and Hank. And suddenly she felt she could no longer endure the way she and Ben skated on the surface of life—making a polite conventional pretense of marriage, but really sharing nothing at all. She turned, suddenly, and looked at him. "Do you remember New Hampshire, and the time we got lost climbing a mountain?"

She was reaching deep into the past when she asked that, for they had spent their honeymoon in New Hampshire ten years ago. But she saw that Ben looked completely blank. She smiled, though she felt unbearably depressed.

"Smithville," she said. "Don't you remember?"

"Oh, sure, of course." Ben picked up another suit and looped it over a hanger.

Nevertheless she persisted, driven by some impulse that she didn't altogether understand. She stood at the window, staring out at the high, impeccable mountains. And she asked a dangerous question. She said, "Ben, do you love me?"

He really looked at her then. "Of course. You know I do." But he sounded surprised, and vaguely uneasy. Then he vanished into the closet again, and she heard him shoving something around on a shelf. Finally he emerged, with a pair of trousers over his arm. "Perhaps you'd better send these to the cleaners," he suggested cheerfully. "I'm going to need them next week."

So Ben considered the subject finished! Lydia walked over to her suitcase, and started unpacking dresses and shoes.

Actually nothing had happened. She had known for almost two years that Ben was losing interest in her. But she had been afraid to face the issue, thinking it preferable to carry on the empty routine of their life together. Perhaps it was the strain of watching Kathie and Hank that had made her suddenly want to know where she stood.

Ben seemed to think there was nothing wrong with their marriage; but she knew that her whole personality was withering as a result of it. And she thought, I've been too fearful, too passive, ready to accept anything for the sake of outward appearances.

The trouble was that she was still afraid, lonely, unsure of herself. She knew Ben didn't mean to hurt her. He had simply managed to shove her into the background of his life. He didn't turn to her, the way he used to; he didn't need her, as he had in the early years of her marriage.

It was an issue that couldn't be evaded any longer; somehow she must make that clear to him. But before she could formulate anything Sharon burst into the room. Their little girl's face was smudged and rosy, and her brown eyes sparkled.

"There's a secret place in the back of the barn," she said breathlessly, "and we're going to make a clubhouse!"

Ben smiled. "That's fine," he said. "Are you going to invite me to join your club?"

"You can't join it!" Sharon protested. "But we'll invite you to a party."

"It's time for your bath," Lydia said quietly. "You can have it here with us. Don't you think this is a very nice house, Sharon?"

"I think it's the most wonderful house the whole world!" Sharon exclaimed e nestly. "And Ronny and Pete do too."

Lydia smiled. "Their parents agree, for nately. I was so afraid they'd be dis pointed."

The only person who actually disliked Vermont house was Bella, the cook. Fr the very first, she considered everyth wrong. The stove didn't work properly, refrigerator was too small. And the way Dixon boys trooped through the kitchen enough to drive her out of her mind.

The day after their arrival Ben, Hank the three children went on a scouting t returning with a kitten, a puppy and chickens. When Bella saw that, she deci then and there that she couldn't stay. spoke to Lydia.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Farwell," she said, " with my bad back and these stairs I d see how I can manage. My health wo break down before the summer was ov

They all tried persuasion, but when and Hank drove back to Greenwich Sun afternoon, Bella went with them. Ly phoned Mr. Barton, and told him their dicament.

He didn't seem at all surprised; and he at once, "Lloyd Baxter's girl is working way through the University of Verm Maybe I can persuade her to help you o

Jenny Baxter came to work the next and the children adored her. She showed t how to feed and water the chickens, and knew a place up near Pawlet where could buy a pony. Lydia soon realized Jenny was a find—for she understood all complexities of country life, and she di mind the stove, or the hot-water sys either.

THE next week end Jenny went with t to buy the pony, and then arranged for father, who had a dairy farm, to driv back in the truck. Sharon named him S and that night she was so excited that burst into tears in the middle of supper. children were eating early, at a wooden t in the big bright kitchen; and to quiet Jenny told them a story.

Jenny didn't finish her work until late t night, but Martin Somers called for he his jeep, and drove her home.

"Do you think you're going to like i he asked.

Jenny laughed. "The pay is good, and kids are sweet. They're all nice people, they let me do things in my own way. I s pose they think they're camping out!"

Martin drove her across the valley to father's farm. He said, "Maybe I'll d

(Continued on Page 88)

"I suggest you see another psychiatrist, Mr. Hatcher—after listening to the story of your life, I find I've taken an intense dislike to you."

HOT DOGS! with that extra flavor French's gives!

Millions prefer this smoother, creamier mustard oiled frankfurters hot from the ill, popped into toasted rolls, and ·ved with lots of French's—my, w fast they'll disappear! Be sure s French's you use—this delicious quant mustard brings out all the culent goodness of the meat.

Only the finest spices, mustard d and vinegar are used in French's ustard. Notice its golden color, its ooth creamy texture. French's spreads evenly, blends smoothly in sandwich fillings and mayonnaise—makes a wonderful salad dressing. Try this recipe for a zesty potato salad dressing with extra flavor!

HOT DAN'S SALAD DRESSING

4 tablespoons FRENCH'S Mustard
2 tablespoons evaporated milk
2 tablespoons vinegar
pinch of salt
2 tablespoons sugar
Beat until light and fluffy

FREE! Hot Dan's new recipe book "DINING DELIGHTS"

Send name, address to The R. T. French Company, 1616 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

LARGEST SELLING PREPARED MUSTARD IN THE U. S. A. (ALSO MADE IN CANADA)

(Continued from Page 86)

painting of that apple orchard of theirs. That way I can keep an eye on you."

Jenny smiled; but just the same, she was confused. She didn't understand Martin, and she couldn't stop thinking about him. He was a successful artist; and two years ago he'd come to Vermont and turned a ramshackle old barn into a studio. He used it only a few months of the year, but during those months he took his noonday dinner at her parents' farm.

Now she turned and looked at him—a big independent young man in his late twenties, forceful, sometimes abstracted, other times as friendly and confiding as a member of the family. And that was it, of course. He liked her. He took her to square dances and the movies, and several times she'd posed for him. But the major part of his life was mysterious to her—colorful, and not quite real. Winters he taught at an art school in New York, and lived alone in an apartment in Greenwich Village. And last December he'd flown to Mexico for a month of painting there. But he mentioned these things only casually, for he treated everything as more or less of a joke, until he went off into one of his difficult moods.

There was an almost full moon, and when Martin had parked the jeep back of her house, he turned and looked at her. Even after two years, Jenny hadn't got used to the impersonal way he had of studying her face. Or the things he said, either, for she never knew whether to be flattered or not. He had told her she was exceptionally paintable; that the lines of her jaw and cheekbones, and the wide spacing of her eyes, fulfilled a certain tradition not easy to find. Sometimes he'd tie a scarf around her hair or loop it about her shoulders. Then he'd study the effect for as long as half an hour. And Jenny would find her heart pounding, her throat dry. But finally he would untie the scarf, and say, "Try standing over by the well."

Now it was the same, for after five minutes of silence, and a heaviness around her heart, so that she could scarcely breathe, he merely shrugged.

"No one has ever painted a woman successfully in moonlight," he said. "What happened to those blueberry pies your mother was making?"

Moonlight and food in the same breath! That was Martin for you! Jenny laughed, and jumped out onto the soft ground. "Come on in, and we'll see."

She loved feeding him, for he had a big frame, and ate with tremendous gusto. She was sure the breakfasts and suppers he cooked himself on his electric plate were insufficient. But she and her mother made up for it by giving him a tremendous noonday meal.

Now she led the way into the big kitchen, and turned on the light. She rummaged in the icebox and cupboards, and got out cold lamb, bread and butter, the blueberry pie, and an assortment of preserves. She moved the coffeepot to the front of the stove, and raked up the coals.

MARTIN fell to at once, as she'd known he would. He ate for ten minutes in silence. Then he looked up and grinned. "The Debussy records came today," he said. "When you have time, I'll play them for you."

"I'll be free tomorrow afternoon," she said.

He had never made love to her, or even tried to kiss her. But often, after she'd posed for him, he'd play her music in his studio. Jenny didn't understand the tunes, but sometimes, listening, her nerves would begin to tingle, and she'd feel a mounting tension all through her mind and body.

"Tomorrow, then. If I do a picture of their orchard, will you be able to pose?"

"Probably. They're awfully easygoing, and I could keep an eye on the children at the same time."

She poured them each a cup of coffee, and sat down at the table with him. She wished she hadn't had to work this summer, but it had never occurred to her not to. All the Baxters in her generation, and the preceding one, had graduated from college. It had become a family tradition. Afterward the men usually went back to their farms, and the women taught school until they married.

Martin drank a second cup of coffee. He said, "I'll be up Monday, and look the place over. I don't want too much green."

Jenny laughed. "How can you get away from it?"

"By picking the right foreground, chiefly." And he added, with a grin, "A girl with yellow hair and brown eyes, for instance. You have good skin tones, Jenny. Wear that sweater."

"All right."

She put away the meat, and stacked the dishes in the sink. And she kept her tone light and casual, for it was always like this. He took her for granted, and ordered her around. And probably he didn't know that he filled her life with such a maze of color that everything in the past and future paled into insignificance, and finally ceased to matter in any way at all.

LYDIA was only mildly surprised when Jenny came to her Monday morning with a rather odd request. "Martin Somers, the one who comes for me in the jeep, wanted me to ask you if he could paint up here."

"Paint?"

"Yes, do a picture of the orchard."

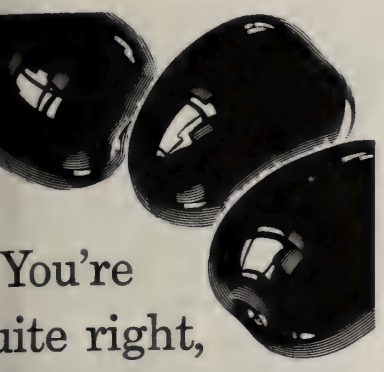
"Oh." Lydia was amused, and of course acquiescent. By now she knew she would comply with just about anything Jenny requested, for Jenny had turned out to be a jewel. "Of course, Jenny," she said at once. "Are there many artists around here?"

"Quite a few, but none as good as Martin."

Something in the girl's voice, both proud and shy, caused Lydia to glance at her a second time. But as usual, Jenny's serene young face told her nothing.

"By all means," she said with a smile. "Tell him to come any time."

Kathie knew she had been letting the days slip by, lulled into false security by the peace of the countryside. But the next Monday, after lunch, when she went up to her room to lie down, she decided she would really have to face things. It was a small room, with sloping eaves, and faded pink-and-blue wallpaper. But to Kathie it had become a sort of refuge.



She knew she was having a difficult pregnancy, worse than either of the others. But she hadn't told Hank, she hadn't been to a doctor, actually she hadn't even acknowledged the thing that was happening to her.

The window was open, the air was just pleasantly cool against her face. But as soon as she sank back against the pillow, she felt the fatigue and the illness beginning to claim her. And that was the trouble, of course; it was too easy to give in, and not let yourself think. She tried to pull her mind back into coherence. There were, after all, only two alternatives. Never in her life had she considered an abortion, but now she tried to

After a while Kathie began to cry, passively, letting the tears trickle down her cheeks. And of course that didn't mean anything either. It was part of her condition; a well-known symptom. She decided that she was truly and completely a coward, not facing anything, not willing to make even that sacrifice for Hank. Perhaps she should tell him, and let him make the decision. But Hank was too upset to be confronted with such a problem now. At all costs he had to be protected. Finally she fell asleep, without deciding anything at all.

That Monday, after lunch, Lydia took her book out onto the front porch, and stretched out on the new glider which had just arrived from New York. She saw right away that Jenny's young man had arrived, and was setting up his easel about a hundred yards from the house. After a while Jenny joined him, holding Sharon by the hand; and it became evident that both Jenny and Sharon were going to be in the picture—for they sat together on a log, while the brawny young man studied them intently.

Lydia was amused, but somewhat annoyed too. Sharon was supposed to be having her nap, and Jenny hadn't asked permission to include the child in a venture of this sort

You're ite right, Mr. Webster

Elegant, defined by Webster's dictionary as "exquisite" . . . "tasteful" . . . "fine." And that's precisely why Elegant is the word for Ripe Olives.

An exquisite touch in any meal — tasteful in appetizers, salads, sandwiches and main dishes—and, naturally, fine all by themselves in the olive bowl.

RIPE OLIVES from California

ite for FREE booklet of Elegant Ripe Olive Recipes:
Olive Advisory Board, Room 905
16 Beale Street, San Francisco 5, California

SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS
SUPERB SATIN VELOUR & METALLIC
Show rich New Cards never before offered . . . Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches and Stationery, Gift Items. Samples on approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!
50 FOR $1 With Name FREE Samples
PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 013-K, St. Louis 3, Mo.

LET US BUY UR FIRST BOTTLE OF A.1. SAUCE

IRS AT NO EXTRA COST IN THIS AMAZING OFFER!

are so certain that you will prefer auce to any sauce you have ever tried we literally offer to buy your first for you. Accept our offer today!

ERE'S ALL YOU DO!

day, buy a bottle of A.1. Sauce. Try it it . . . on meats, fish, baked beans. are! See how A.1. Sauce magnifies the of everything you serve.

ite us a letter telling whether or not ked A.1. Sauce—giving your reasons. close the neckband of the A.1. Sauce Mail to G. F. Heublein & Bro., Dept. 28, Hartford 1, Conn.

ill Immediately Send You the rchase Price—Plus Postage.

imited to one per family and closes August 31, 1950.

A.1. sauce

DASH THAT MAKES THE DISH

Nevertheless, she continued to watch, and she realized before long that the young man had arranged Jenny and Sharon in a really charming mother-and-daughter pose. Surprisingly enough, he was very assured and professional in his actions—placing the easel, examining the light, looping a scarf carelessly about Jenny's throat. Finally he started to paint; but almost at once he threw down his brush, somewhat impatiently, and went over and arranged Sharon's hair—or, rather, disarranged it.

Seeing that, Lydia knew just how he must feel. Before her marriage she had studied art; she had even kept on with it for a while afterward. And now she could remember that all-important first step of arranging your subject. Then you were tense with excitement, but often distressed, too, for so much was at stake—the composition, the shading, the final effect. She wondered now if it had been a mistake to give up her art and let the years slide by, and so many other things claim her time.

After about an hour Jenny and Sharon left, but the young man continued to paint. By now Lydia was really curious, and so she put down her book and strolled across the stubby grass.

"Good afternoon," she said. "I'm Mrs. Farwell, Sharon's mother. Does my daughter make a good model?"

Her voice was friendly, even cordial. But his response was vague to the point of rudeness, for he merely nodded and went on painting.

Lydia felt a quite natural resentment. She stepped closer and looked at the painting. And at once all her resentment vanished. Lydia had always felt that artists had certain prerogatives. And this man was an artist.

She watched him quietly for several minutes, feeling like an intruder, yet unable to tear herself away. "You have something of Renoir," Lydia said finally.

"When I'm through," he said, "you won't think that."

She subsided at once, knowing it had been wrong to make a comparison. She saw that the little girl in the painting did not quite have Sharon's features; but he had caught indelibly that elusive little personality, so earthy and shy and lovable.

He seemed to have forgotten she was there, and so she continued to watch. The clouds he was painting weren't the clouds she saw at all. The mountains, so far, were nothing but purplish blobs. But every stroke he took with the brush was sure and purposeful.

Finally she said, on impulse, "Couldn't I get you a cold drink of some sort?"

"Jenny's doing that right now," he said.

Once more she subsided. And so that she wouldn't disturb him, she retreated a few feet, and sat on a small hummock of grass. She watched him mix the paints, and attack the difficult foreground—putting in a blob of pink where she would have settled for the dead green which was actually there.

Finally he stepped back and examined his work.

"What do you think of it?" he asked.

"That shadow behind Jenny is really wonderful," she said.

For the first time he turned and looked at her. "You know painting?"

It was ridiculous to feel flustered, and Lydia knew it. But her answer was shy, almost an apology. "I studied a little before I was married. And I was in the art department of a magazine—just line drawings and things like that."

He did not shrug the answer off as she had feared. Instead, he said matter-of-factly, "If you do any Vermont landscapes, watch out for the green. It's treacherous."

She said doubtfully, "Perhaps I should have brought my paints with me. I've been so busy, I haven't had much time."

Martin turned back to his work. "I'll bring some stuff over tomorrow, if you like. But don't expect me to teach you. I have too much of that in New York."

Lydia started to protest, to say she was afraid she'd forgotten even the rudiments of painting. But just then Jenny came out with a tray cold drinks, sandwiches and cake.

When she saw Lydia she said, "Wouldn't you like some of this fruit punch, Mrs. Farwell?"

"Why, yes," Lydia said. "I'd love it."

Jenny brought another glass, and they all sat on the grass, savoring the sun and the summer breeze, and talking of this and that—the weather, the crops, and an auction that was going to be held in the village the following week. Sharon and the two little boys had cookies and bottles of pop; afterward they began racing around in circles, their spirits high. Lydia felt more relaxed than she had in months.

The next morning, while they were still having breakfast, Martin Somers drove up in his jeep with the painting equipment. At Lydia's invitation he joined them, and had two cups of coffee, and an ample supply of bacon, eggs and toast.

When he had finished he said, "Jenny is convinced I don't get enough breakfast, and now she'll really have it in for me!" He glanced at Jenny as he spoke, and there was a faintly teasing, yet affectionate, note in his voice.

Kathie sat at the breakfast table, feeling, as she did so often lately, like a spectator, watching them all from a distance. She saw at once that Martin Somers was a robust and stimulating person. But now her illness, and the constant effort to conceal it, put her at a disadvantage. She didn't so much resent vitality as fear it.

I don't know of any aspect in which Earth appears to better advantage than as a playground for small children. —E. S. MARTIN: The Luxury of Children (Harper & Bros.).

It soon turned out that Sharon was not enthusiastic about posing that morning. So Martin promised, as a reward, that he would take them all for a ride in his jeep.

"Me, too?" Ronny asked. "And me?" Pete echoed.

Martin laughed. "Of course. All three of you."

The boys were beside themselves with excitement. "You come, too," Ronny begged Kathie. And little Pete climbed all over her. "Please, mommie, you come too!"

"In the jeep? Gracious, no!" Kathie protested.

"Why not? It'll be fun!"

Fun! And then she thought, Why not? Perhaps this was the answer. She would go for a ride in the jeep. She would stop being careful. For what was she protecting? Disaster for them all.

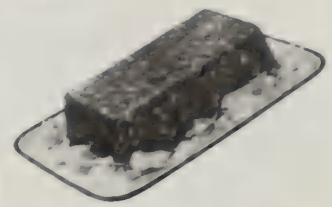
"All right," she agreed. "I've never been in a jeep, and it sounds like fun."

Lydia stayed behind to do the ordering, and Jenny to start the beds and the dishes. Kathie and the children climbed into the jeep, and Martin said:

"Now hang on, everyone, and I'll show you what this bus can do!"

He was reasonably careful, but he took them over fields and into ditches. He showed them the different speeds, and what happened when you came to a big rock and ran right over it. The children screamed with excitement, and Kathie began, almost at once, to feel ill. She clung to the seat, and soon there were sharp pains in her back, so that every jolt seemed to shake her apart. The ride lasted fifteen minutes, but it seemed like fifteen hours.

Toward the end of it Martin glanced over his shoulder and said at once, on a note of concern, "Say, Mrs. Dixon, you're looking pretty pale. I'm sorry if I've bounced you around."



He drove back slowly, ignoring the children's protests, and helped her out onto the ground.

"Too soon after breakfast, maybe," he said, still contrite.

Kathie managed a laugh. "Yes, that must be it."

She escaped to her room, and lay down. The pains were worse now; she was almost certain to have a miscarriage. She pulled a comforter over her, and lay very still.

ANGLO CORNED BEEF

COOL COOKING
Molded Corned Beef Loaf

Mold chopped corned beef and celery in tomato aspic. Season as desired. Serve on salad greens.

ANGLO CORNED BEEF IS ALL SOLID, LEAN MEAT—NO BONE, GRISTLE OR EXCESS FAT. A "MEAL-IN-A-TIN."

ANGLO ROAST BEEF

SIMPLE-TO-DO
Roast Beef with Horseradish Sauce

Add ½ cup drained, grated horseradish with dash of cayenne to 1 cup hot white sauce. Serve on hot beef.

ANGLO ROAST BEEF ALSO MAKES TASTY MEAT PIES, STEWS, HASH AND RAGOUTS. UNSURPASSED IN QUALITY.

Ask for Anglo Corned Beef and Anglo Roast Beef today! Always keep several tins on hand for emergencies. You can put your wholehearted trust in Anglo.

ON SALE AT ALL GOOD GROCERS

Very gradually the pains began to subside, and after a while she fell asleep. When she woke at noon she was feeling better; and she knew almost at once that nothing was going to happen. Her first sensation was one of profound relief. But then she was ashamed of being glad. Because everything was just the same; nothing had really been changed at all.

Lydia set up her easel unobtrusively, and at a discreet distance from Martin's. She promised herself that she wouldn't ask for help, or interrupt him in any way. But she needn't have worried, because almost at once he became so absorbed in his work that it was obvious that he'd forgotten she was there.

Finally she started to draft a rough sketch on her own canvas. She worked self-consciously at first, and heard every word of the monotonous little story Jenny was telling Sharon to keep her quiet. But after a while she became interested in what she was doing. She had tried to choose a simple subject—a view of the valley, with a piece of road cutting across the middle ground. But of course it wasn't simple at all.

After almost two hours Martin came over and took the brush. "Here, do this," he said, and made two bold strokes that ruined entirely her whole careful plan. She looked at him, feeling lighthearted, quite flushed with energy and pleasure.

"Is that what you do to your pupils?" she asked.

But he wasn't in any mood for banter. He stepped back a few feet, and continued to look at her picture. "Let yourself go," he said. "Don't be careful at first. Try to get the feel of it."

"Shall I start over?"

"Not necessarily. Just paint out the foreground and the mountains."

She laughed. "In other words, the entire picture."

He relaxed and grinned. "Not quite. The road's all right. You've got something there that's worth going on with."

It was not exactly high praise, but Lydia was pleased. At least he considered her picture worthy of criticism, though he'd told her to paint most of it out.

Martin stayed for lunch without even being asked. Afterward he relaxed on the front porch for half an hour, and drank two cups of black coffee.

Lydia sat on the porch steps, so that she was looking straight out at their breath-taking view. After ten minutes of silence she said, "I wish you'd do a portrait of Sharon. Just by herself, you know."

"I never do portraits on commission," he said. "But I'm going to paint you."

Lydia was startled. She didn't know how to answer, but apparently Martin didn't expect her to.

"We'll make it a study of a modern woman," he said. "The polished vacuum type. Not that you quite fit that description, but it'll be symbolic. You can wear those slacks, and that green silk blouse; but we'll have to do something about your hair."

"What's wrong with my hair?"

"Not sleek enough. Have you ever brushed it back into a knot?"

She was angry. "So I'm a polished vacuum," she said.

"Not altogether. This isn't to be a portrait."

The reply took the wind out of her sails. How did you fight with a man like that? She turned her head, and saw that he was yawning. She said irritably, "Anyhow, I'm not sure that I'll pose."

He reached in his pocket for a pipe. "You can sit in that green chair, the one with the aluminum arms; and you can be smoking."

She didn't know whether he was teasing her, or whether he was really serious about the project. She looked over at him, but she could tell nothing from his face.

She laughed. "You certainly make it sound attractive. Me with aluminum arms!"

"You are attractive, though," he said. "Poised. All of a piece, except for those green eyes."

"They're not green."

"At the moment they are."

"Well, when I'm wearing this blouse

It was an absurd conversation—and eq absurd to be having it on the front porch Vermont house, with a quite unpredic young man.

He stood up. "Come on, let's get to w he said.

She had planned to rest that aftern She was really tired from standing so lo front of an easel. But now she was asha to admit fatigue, even to herself. Besides realized she wanted to return to the pic

Two days later Hank and Ben drove u a long Fourth of July week end. Ben arra for memberships at the club, and then en the golf tournament. He had already di ered two friends of close friends, and s thing about the informality appealed to

"The greens are like fairways, and the ways are on a par with the average rou he said. "But that brook crossing the hole is quite a hazard!"

Kathie and Hank were upset abou club membership. They couldn't afford i yet they hated to say so. They talked it in their room. Almost unconsciously the formed the habit of retiring to the little ing room to discuss their worries.

Hank said, "I don't want to sponge o Farwells; you know that."

He was standing at one of the small dows, looking out at the elm tree. And K couldn't help noticing how tired he look exhausted really, white and strained, w nervous tightness around his mouth. business of sponging on the Farwells wa a drop in the ocean of their problems. yet it was important. Hank's pride w stake, his stature as an individual.

She said, "I don't believe they mind Lydia was saying just yesterday that mont was a lot cheaper than Greenwic

"It's all in the point of view," Hank He sounded bitter, and yet he didn't where to direct his bitterness. Certain wasn't Ben Farwell's fault that he'd m success of business. He sat down in the wicker armchair, and lighted a cigarett said, "Last week I looked into the apart situation in New York. But the prices a out of line. Even a cold-water flat, in a area, costs more than a decent place years ago."

Kathie tried to imagine their two ros tle boys living in the slums. But the pr of planning the future invariably exha them both. They came up against one wall after another—and then they look at each other, confused, each about his own role in what had happ

She said finally, "Perhaps we should up here, darling. A lot of people do, and certainly save money."

Hank shook his head. "You can't away," he said. His voice trailed off. But he looked at her and smiled. "Just the we have a lot, Kathie. Each other, an kids, and our health. If we can just cut our overhead, and pay back a few debts, be all right."

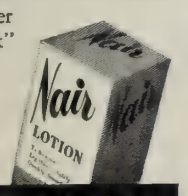
"I know, darling," she said a little br lessly. And she wondered if he'd noticed she'd begun to thicken, just slightly, ar the waist.

Seeing Kathie smile made Hank fee ter. She had such a pretty mouth. He ha ways loved her mouth, and her dark eyes. He had planned to tell her that the was calling in their note, leaving him jus weeks' grace. But now he decided on an course instead. He would try to borrow Ben Farwell. The first chance he got, ask for a loan. Everything in him rev against it; everything but that look in ie's gray eyes.

Ben was changing from his golfing s into blue jeans. He'd bought a new r Abercrombie's, and he was going to tr stream that ran through the orchard.

"Some of those pools," he said ha "should be just swarming with trout."

When he was dressed, he went ov equipment—examining with loving ca box of flies (silver doctors, gray hackles, coachmen), the tapered line, the new



Have "SECOND LOOK" Legs!

Kept smooth and hair-free longer . . . by Nair
. . . the safe, odorless depilatory lotion . . . that removes leg hair quickly, easily . . .
leaves legs smoother . . .
more exciting . . .

r petal-smooth legs use Nair, new, safe smetic lotion that dissolves hair skin-close.
) ugly razor stubble—keeps legs hair-free ger! Easy to use—rinses off quickly. No nging depilatory odor, no irritation to nor-l skin. Slower and softer rowth. For "second look" s—get Nair today!

Cosmetic lotion to remove hair safely

FOR LEGS THAT DELIGHT USE NAIR TONIGHT 79¢ plus tax

SO EASY! Sell America's Leading 21 Card Christmas Assortments. Samples on approval. New, national, Money making Gift Items. Don't delay. Write today.
IN ART STUDIOS, Dept. 5, Vermilion, Ohio.

FREE SAMPLES
50 for $1.00
25 for $1.00
Name Imprinted
CHRISTMAS CARDS and STATIONERY

PLENTY OF CASH FOR YOU!

e big spare-time pay! Sell SOUTHERN Christmas
ls. Gorgeous Folders low as 50 for $1 WITH NAME RINTED in Brand New Way. Sensation of 1950.
on sight from FREE SAMPLES. Also show approval sample of new "Southern Beauty" ard $1 Assortment. Make $50 CASH PROFIT
0 Boxes! 60 other fast-sellers including Gift s, Religious, Everyday Boxes. EXTRA CASH
US. Don't delay. Write for samples NOW
OUTHERN GREETING CARD CO.
S. Pauline, Dept. E-21, Memphis 4, Tenn.

EXTRA DOLLARS THE EASY WAY

how unusual Christmas cards—they sell themselves!
OUR PROFIT—up to 50¢ a box. Wide selection for imprinting, sell 25 or 50 for $1 up to 25 for $6.75, perfect for busioncerns. ALSO: 3 different "feature" boxes 21 unique cards; asd plastics, color metallics, fine etchings, humorous, religious, gift ings, children's books, plus big every-day selection of new nov-
, personalized stationery, napkins. Big Commissions. Ask for es on approval & FREE light-weight kit.
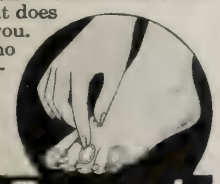
AR GREETINGS, INC., 41—43-L Crescent St., L.I. City 1, N.Y.



Corns?

NOW! LASTEST RELIEF EVER

1. INSTANTLY—Stops Painful Shoe Friction, Lifts Pressure
2. Quickest Corn Removing Action Known To Medical Science
3. The Only Method That Stops Corns Before They Develop

Other Method Does All These Things For You!

wonder Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are the gest selling foot reliefs in the world! There o other method that does many things for you.
join the millions who ays get instant reand keep free of
ns this quick, easy, nomical way. Get box today. Sold erywhere.

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

He said, "We'll have a mess of trout for breakfast tomorrow. You can tell Jenny."

Lydia was absorbed in a book Martin had given her; but now she glanced up and nodded automatically. After only three brief visits Ben was enthusiastic about Vermont. He had talked to the farmers about crops, and to the summer people about the fishing and hunting. And he was almost an authority on the complications of growing apples. But then, Ben had always been like that—outgoing, enthusiastic, self-sufficient. Now, in his new waders and khaki fishing vest, he looked undeniably attractive.

It had always troubled her, the way Ben did everything well, and nothing quite from within. But now she was absorbed in an occupation of her own. After only two days, this painting business had become close to an obsession. She found herself thinking about it at night, before she dropped off to sleep. And in the morning she couldn't wait to get up, and started again. The first picture had been more or less of a failure. But this new one had possibilities; and Martin had started showing her how to mix paints.

Ben slung the fishing basket over his shoulder. "It was really a find, this place," he said with satisfaction. "I've asked the Drakes over, and the Cummingses."

Lydia nodded again. "I'll do something about hors d'oeuvres," she agreed. "Perhaps Martin can stay too."

"The painter?"

"Yes. I showed you that picture he's doing of Sharon and Jenny."

"Sure. Let's have him. He seems like a nice guy," Ben said. And then he left, whistling to himself as he walked down through the orchard to try his luck in the brook.

At five-thirty that afternoon Jenny worked in the kitchen, wrapping slivers of anchovy around cream-cheese balls, and spreading caviar on small squares of toast. The children were having their supper at the big wooden table, and every so often Mr. Farwell would come out for more ice, or Mrs. Farwell to replenish the platter of hors d'oeuvres. Jenny had never minded being in the kitchen while the summer people had their parties. But now she kept thinking of Martin, on the front porch with the others.

It was foolish to mind; but every now and then she would hear his deep, careless voice, and then the appreciative laughter that would follow. As usual, Martin was the lion of the occasion, and they were all playing up to him—even the Drakes, who were wealthy summer people from Chicago, and the Cummingses, who had bought a place at the top of the mountain and were running a ski lodge. But it was always that way with Martin.

She knew she would never understand him; but she was pretty sure he didn't understand himself either. It would be a mistake to love anyone like that; Jenny was sure of it. You would never know where you stood, what misdirected impulse might change the course of your life.

Last night she had gone with him to his studio to listen to the Debussy, and afterward she had made a big pot of coffee and some sandwiches, in the curtained-off space he called a kitchen. She had stayed until midnight because he said he didn't feel like sleep. And she had listened to him converse, in that disjointed way of his. They had talked about children, and he had said, "You ought to have a dozen, Jenny. The girls will be beautiful, and the boys will have fun." He was always making remarks like that, and she never even tried to answer. Finally he had made some sketches of her—not poses, just quick line drawings, when she stood up to pour his coffee, or leaned back against the arm of the makeshift sofa. Altogether it had been a nice, companionable evening. But afterward she had stayed awake for hours, thinking over the things he had said, and the way he looked at her sometimes, almost as though she belonged to him.

She hurried to retrieve a glass of milk which little Pete Dixon was about to sweep onto the floor. Then she returned to the sink. But through the open living-room window she could hear Martin's voice.

"There's not a model in New York to compare with Jenny," he was saying. "I've tried half a dozen; but they're all self-conscious, and their expressions are . . . well, empty."

Not a model in New York. It was like a slow ache in her chest, this familiar, almost desperate uncertainty. Because she never knew whether to be glad or hurt. He liked to paint her; he needed her for that.

Ben Farwell went out onto the porch. He was enjoying himself enormously. Lydia, he saw, was talking to Martin Somers. She was sitting on the porch steps with her back against a post, her head tilted slightly. And she looked different. He couldn't put his finger on it, but the way she was laughing, and something about the expression in her greenish-hazel eyes, wasn't quite in keeping with what he'd come to expect. Lydia had always been a good hostess, observant and careful. But today she was leaving most of it to him. And he thought suddenly, I wonder if she's falling for that painter fellow.

He nodded agreement to something Bert Cummings had said, and kept on watching his wife. He had long ago become used to her appearance—the clear tanned skin, the nicely arranged light brown hair. He had taken it for granted that she was attractive, and always well dressed. But for a long time she had seemed a shadowy, rather passive sort of person, and he'd scarcely thought of her at all except as a mother to Sharon.

Now he raised his voice slightly. "I tried the stream through the orchard this afternoon, but I didn't get a rise. How about it, Hank? Shall we try it again tomorrow?"

Hank glanced up. "All right. Sounds like a good idea."

"We'll start at five, and bring back a nice mess for breakfast."

He looked over at Lydia again to see if she had heard any of that. But she seemed to be engrossed in a conversation with the painter. Ben tried, over the babble of voices, to hear what they were saying, and managed to catch a few words:

"I've changed my mind about that pose. I'm going to perch you in the branch of an apple tree instead." . . . "So I'm not a polished vacuum?" . . . "Some veneer rubs off pretty easily. What you find underneath can be a surprise."

A lot of gibberish, Ben thought irritably. Back home in Greenwich Lydia never would have talked such nonsense.

The next morning Hank was desperately tired. He would have liked several hours more of sleep. But it had occurred to him that an early-morning fishing expedition would give him a good opportunity to ask Ben Farwell for a loan.

It was just after six, and the two men stood together by a deep, swirling pool; Hank

(Continued on Page 94)

NEXT MONTH

When Kenny Neff met Roberta Bowman, he was regarded as totally worthless by almost everyone in town. Even his father said, "You've got to get this foolishness out of your head!" Only Robbie understood Kenny's dreams—and the obsession that threatened everything he valued most—his future as an artist and his love for a girl he could never hope to marry. Read

The Snob

BY RICHARD B. GEHMAN

complete in the September Journal

No other Deodorant gives you this thrilling 6-POINT PROTECTION

You're Lucky In Love When You "DEW"!

"DEW" SPRAY DEODORANT

JUST SQUEEZE FLEXIBLE BOTTLE! "DEW" SPRAYS ITSELF ON!

Only "DEW" Gives You All 6 Important Advantages

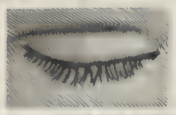
1 STOPS ODOR INSTANTLY! Yet is absolutely safe. Can't irritate normal skin. "DEW" protects you, protects your clothes.

2 CHECKS PERSPIRATION! Keeps you socially secure 24 hours a day.

3 CONTAINS RETSELANE!* Only "DEW" can use this amazing new ingredient.

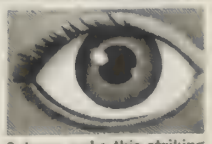
4 SAVES MONEY! Year's supply only 98¢ plus tax—less than 2¢ a week!

5 DAINTIER THAN CREAMS! Not messy. Never touches hands, nails. Dries quickly. Men, too, like "DEW".



6 MAGICAL SPRAY BOTTLE! Unbreakable, squeezable.

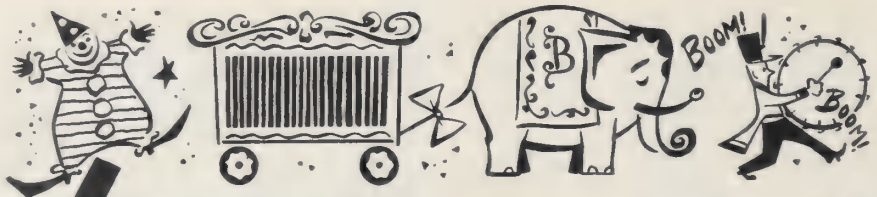
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping



WHEN YOU "DEW" YOU DON'T OFFEND

SAFE EYE-GENE

EYE-OPENING TEST THRILLS MANY!



Eyes so tired you want to close them for relief? . . . Clear, expressive eyes are fascinating. 2 drops of soothing EYE-GENE in each eye floats away that tired, strained, irritated look and feeling in seconds—dramatically lights up your whole expression! Safe EYE-GENE is like a tonic for your eyes. Use it every day. 25c, 60c, $1 in handy eye-dropper bottles at Druggists.

2 drops make this striking difference in SECONDS!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

ANY RINGMASTER can tell you it's performance that counts! That's why I recommend PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin Sheets . . . for they're lions for wear and lambs for comfort! They're exquisitely textured and flower-petal smooth . . . yet they wear beyond your fondest dreams. Of course, when you think of muslin, you think of long wear . . . but recent tests prove that PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin are 33% stronger crosswise than regular muslins . . . and it's the crosswise threads that are always the first to "go". Another thing I like about these luxuriously fine, sturdy sheets is this . . . they actually grow sleeker, smoother and lovelier with washing and wearing. So if you want the extra fine texture and extra value of a finer, firmer sheet, choose PEPPERELL Superfine Muslin Sheets . . . the snowy-white ones and several of the gorgeous "personality colors"—Aqua, Pink, Misty Yellow, Hyacinth Blue, Ashes of Roses, Spring Green and Peach Bloom.

STAR PERFORMERS that will earn a big ovation from busy homemakers . . . these JIFFY PLASTIC SLIP COVERS from The Slip Shield Company, Inc., New York City. These handy covers give your furniture wonderful protection from dirt, youngsters' sticky fingers, spots and stains from beverages . . . for they're made of VINYLITE BRAND PLASTICS. As you know, these "miracle" materials, produced by Bakelite Division, Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, are waterproof, mildew- and crack-resistant . . . always pliable and unaffected by weather. When they become soiled, a "swish" of a damp cloth wipes them clean again . . . so see these JIFFY PLASTIC SLIP COVERS, made of famous VINYLITE BRAND PLASTICS, at your favorite store soon. They come in styles to fit most chairs and sofas . . . as easy as ABC to put on and surprisingly inexpensive. I can assure you of this . . . once you try them, you'll agree they're actually worth twice the price for the work and worry they save you.

TRAPEZE ARTISTS have grace and daring we all admire! Yet if you have painful callouses or tender spots on the bottom of your feet, just walking is awkward and miserable . . . so get a pair of DR. SCHOLL'S LuPADS. They make you feel as if you're walking on your own personal cloud . . . for LuPADS were designed by a famous foot authority to loop over the forepart of the foot . . . nestling feather-soft pads beneath the Metatarsal arches to cushion them against shock, pressure, painful callouses and those awful burning sensations. You'll love wearing DR. SCHOLL'S LuPADS, too . . . because they're airy-light and invisible . . . even in scant summer shoes! Sold at all Drug, Dept. and Shoe Stores. If not obtainable locally send $1.50 direct to DR. SCHOLL, Dept. L-S, Chicago, Illinois, giving the width and size of your shoes. And do it today . . . for walking is wonderful with DR. SCHOLL'S LuPADS to "befriend" and pamper your feet.

A CIRCUS

must have its tinsel and spangles . . . just as a pretty girl must have lovely hair! And a TONI Home Permanent "outshines" all other permanents, giving you the loveliest wave imaginable . . . feeling as soft as naturally curly hair and looking as lovely and lasting as long as a $20 permanent! But a TONI costs only $1. Why is TONI so much better than ordinary permanents? Because of its exclusive gentle-action creme formula . . . which was especially created to give you a frizz-free wave (even the very first day!) that feels, looks and "acts" like naturally curly hair. And I'm not alone in my enthusiasm. TONI is the only permanent that has given over 93 million lovely, longer-lasting waves. And TONI'S exclusive new Midget SPIN Curlers are "made" for today's short hair styles, for they give you perfect neckline curls far easier and faster. You get 6 of 'em in the new Combination TONI Refill Kit . . . a $1.50 value for only $1.33!

THE QUEENS UNDER THE BIG TOP must always look their best . . . and so must you. And to help you tend your beauty needs with expert skill, I call your attention to CO-ETS . . . little fluted cotton squares that are exquisitely soft, smooth and absorbent. That's why your best bet's CO-ETS for applying powder, rouge, astringents, foundations, liquid deodorants and home permanent wave lotions . . . as well as removing cleansing cream, sun tan oils and nail polish. And if you wear "stockings" from a bottle, apply your leg make-up like this:

Shake bottle well and pour small amount into cupped hands. Press hands together, and starting at the foot, use them both in a rotary motion to stroke the cosmetic up the leg from the instep. Work fast. When legs are completely dry, rub them with a CO-ET to remove excess make-up and give your legs a soft, natural look.

The price of CO-ETS will amaze you . . . the large economy package with 80 fluted cotton squares costs only 29c.

BUY-LINE

RE you well-versed in Herb-lore . realize what magic they can put into ordin foods? While most of us know the endless use such herbs as mint and sage, chives and pars here are a few suggestions on others that make "every-day" dishes real adventures in ing: *Mince ¼ teaspoon of sweet Marjor mix with butter and pour over spinach. *Call STRIKE UP THE BAND and let's have a fanfare . . . for I want to introduce you to a cigarette whose smoking "performance" I think you'll applaud over and over again! It's CAVALIER! the distinctive, new King-Size cigarette that displays a perfect "balance" between cool mildness and smooth, mellow flavor. And now I'd like to take you behind the "scenes" . . . explain why CAVALIERS combine these two qualities that most smokers have always wanted in a cigarette. It's the tobaccos that go into these particular "longies" that make the BIG difference . . . a special, modern blend of fine tobaccos of the original Colonial type . . . which are naturally mild and delightful. Still, CAVALIERS are priced no higher than other popular brands . . . so get a smart, white pack today. On second thought, make it a carton . . . because I truly think you'll like CAVALIERS that much!

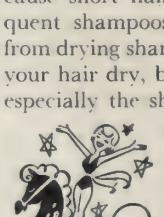
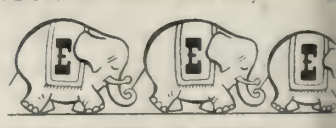
THE GRAND FINALE of summer is on . . . time for all good wives to think of Fall shopping lists! And if you're wise, you'll add plastic housewares with the "made of STYRON" label. There are many reasons why I say that . . . first, plastics are wonderfully light, durable and colorful. And second . . . the "made of STYRON" label promises you plastics at their best. Why just listen:

The Dow Chemical Company grants this label of quality only to those plastics which pass the rigid standar their Product Evaluation Com tee. This means the products been carefully examined for tional design, quality of workm ship and correct applicatio plastics.

This Fall you'll find "STYR housewares "dressed" in a pletely new range of gorg designs and colors . . . g chartreuse, coral, winter green turquoise. Look for the "mad STYRON" label and buy.



WINNING SMILE is the greatest personal asset anyone can have, and it depends almost entirely on beautiful, healthy teeth. I urge you to get decay-fighting IODENT, and brush your teeth twice daily. It's the only toothpaste made by a Dentist in two textures, No. 1 for Teeth Easy to Bryten (especially young folks) and No. 2 for Teeth Hard to Bryten (especially smokers). Now you can smoke and smile, too . . . for:



No other toothpaste so safely whisks away ugly smoke smudge and polishes your teeth to such sparkling brilliance as IODENT No. 2 with its delightful, refreshing flavor. No other toothpaste but IODENT No. 1 with its gentle texture is especially suited to growing teeth . . . and has a special flavor children love.

Mothers, to give your family brighter smiles buy both IODENT No. 1 and No. 2 . . . cost only 43c for the BIG family size tubes. Or if you prefer an IODENT with Ammonium Compounds to fight decay, get No. 1 Plus A or No. 2 Plus A . . . same low price.

THE GLITTERING SPOTLIGHT of fash is focused on short hairdos . . . yo fully flattering to most women. So k in step with style . . . and don't fret cause short hair demands more quent shampoos. But do stay a from drying shampoos . . . which le your hair dry, brittle and unruly especially the short ends. What's suggestion? That use new KRE Shampoo with its ural oil base . . . coaxes your hai glorious softness leaves it glowing natural highlights glossy, silken sheen. You'll find shortest, wispiest ends behave like angels; let you comb and style a la your fancy without the sligh stubbornness. Another thing you'll about KREML Shampoo (I kno do!) is the special cleansing qualiti its magic new ingredient "Folis makesyour hair look more beautifu cause it gets it clean, clean! See wh difference KREML Shampoo ma

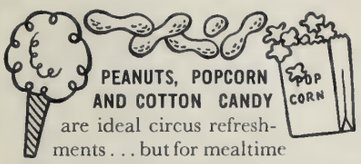
YOU'RE ALWAYS ON PARADE . . . s matter what your costume, g grooming is essential. So next time dress to go out, be sure you're groomed . . . with nary an embar ing grease spot on your clothes to your looks. And the quickest, ea best method is to use ENERG CLEANING FLUID . . . becau makes dirty grease spots go right b your eyes. Best of all, ENERG contains no caustics or acids . . . w means you can use it on even such cate fabrics as silks, laces, rayons velvets. That's why it's ideal for c ing practically everything under sun . . . suits, dresses, ties, blo skirts and hats . . . as well as upholst chairs, rugs and a wide variety of articles. I've never found anythi any price that does a better job ENERGINE CLEANING FLUI so keep it handy for regular and e gency use. Get the large economysi at yourDrug,GroceryandVarietyS

by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

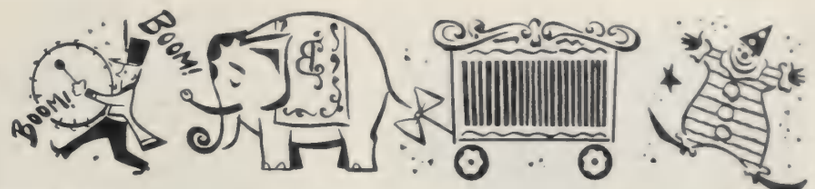
to add a gourmet touch to soups, stews and gravies. * Dice Rose- nd mash with turnips or carrots. * Dress up tomato and cheese with Sweet Basil. * Soak Tarragon leaves in vinegar to give salad gs, egg dishes and poultry extra tastiness. And remember, herbs "whisper" only . . . never shout their presence.

T'S A TREAT TO BEAT THE HEAT . . . and curtail your budget at the same time! Yes, you can do just that when you make this different drink . . . ICED POSTUM in your tall, time glasses! Why? With its grain-rich flavor it's a per- licious refresher . . . yet amaz- onomical. In fact, POSTUM u less than half as much per coffee and other "meal-'n'- ne" beverages. And that's you'll like about ICED M . . . for it's 100% caffein- at makes it the ideal drink for ps who are caffein-susceptibles, children, too. So look for M in the handy, new glass jar Grocer's "instant beverage" . . . then enjoy a delightful offer" made like this:



4 level tablespoons of INSTANT M in ½ cup of boiling water. ps water. Pour over cracked ice glasses. Serve with sugar and r prettify with whipped cream.

WONDERFUL TIME on my va- arlier this summer . . . every- as absolutely wonderful. We cabin in the mountains . . . escape from civilization, worry rk. There was one problem . . . where to get the bread, lls and other bakery products ed every day. But this was lved . . . because right in a near-by rural store there was an entire display of all kinds of fresh-baked goods . . . just like my food store at home. They were wrapped in CELLOPHANE too... so I bought 'em with te confidence. I knew oistureproof DU PONT PHANE keeps them fresh an. Besides sealing in oven- help them stay appetizing and mpting, it also acts as a shield dirt, flies and germs. You uy "blind" when you choose PHANE-packaged foods . . . see what you're getting and t you want!



THE FEATURE ATTRACTION at breakfast is toast . . . but it's important to have that toast piping hot . . . when and how Y-O-U want it. And that's what you get with the new GENERAL ELECTRIC Automatic Toaster . . . toast to your taste time after time after time. I wouldn't trade mine for all the world, and these 3 major advantages explain why: 1. You simply set the control to dark, medium or light . . . then the G-E Automatic Toaster will serve exactly what you "ordered." 2. Keeps the toast down or pops it up . . . until you, the family and the breakfast are ready for it. 3. Takes but a "wink" to clean, too . . . "thanks" to its exclusive Snap-in Crumb Tray. You just snap out the tray, brush the crumbs off and snap back in again. The G-E Automatic Toaster is the last word in beauty plus design and is built to last a lifetime . . . yet costs only $21.50. See it soon at your G-E Appliance Dealer's.

PEANUTS, POPCORN AND COTTON CANDY are ideal circus refreshments . . . but for mealtime and snacktime treats at home, my "cheers" go to OREO Creme Sandwiches! They're a "can't-miss" favorite with everybody . . . for never was such a heavenly creamy filling put between two such luscious chocolate cookies! But that's what you'd expect . . . because they're made by the greatest cookie lovers in the world . . . NABISCO . . . National Biscuit Company. So choose several packages of OREO Creme Sandwiches today . . . and as a very special treat for your very special family, "team" them up with this cooling, picture-pretty Peppermint Ice Cream. (Here's the recipe: Crunch about a cupful of pink and white candy peppermints. Stir into vanilla ice cream in refrigerator tray just before final freezing.) Did you ever taste cookies so crisp, chocolate-rich and heaping-filled with vanilla cream? I'll wager not . . . so look for OREO Creme Sandwiches with the red NABISCO Seal!

TRAINED SEALS are experts in the art of balance! But it's no trick for a smart woman to balance her menus and her budget . . . not while DEMING'S Salmon is handy on her pantry shelf! It's the "major attraction" of endless hearty protein main dishes that are amazingly budget-wise. They're all delicious, too . . . because DEMING'S is salmon at its best...delicate flavor and firm texture with a tantalizing tang-o'-the-sea. One place it really steals the "show" is on a picnic . . . just take these Salmonburgers along and see:

Mix 2 cups DEMING'S Salmon (1 lb. can), ¾ cup coarse cracker crumbs, 1 egg slightly beaten. Saute 1 small onion, sliced, in 1 tbsp. butter, then add to salmon mixture. Shape into 6 thin salmon cakes and brown quickly in butter. Serve hot between large buns. One taste will tell you why. . . .

Wise wives keep both kinds on hand . . . DEMING'S Sirloin with skin and backbone removed (that old favorite Red Alaska Sockeye), and DEMING'S Recipe Pink Salmon in the regular pack. Why don't you?

NO CLOWNING about this fact . . . men are all alike in liking homemade jams and jellies! And you'll like making 'em with CERTO, America's favorite liquid pectin product. Why? Because it's so quick-'n'-easy . . . with CERTO, you only need a one-minute boil. That's why you get about 50% more glasses . . . with more fresh flavor, color and fragrance packed into each. Want proof? Then try this success-sure CERTO recipe for Peach Jam:

Peel and pit about 3 lbs. soft ripe peaches. Grind or chop very fine. Measure 4 cups into very large saucepan. Add ¼ cup lemon juice and 7½ cups sugar; mix well. Place over high heat, bring to full rolling boil, boil hard 1 min., stirring constantly. Remove from heat; at once stir in 1 bottle CERTO. Stir and skim by turns 5 mins. to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 11 six-oz. glasses.

One taste and you'll agree . . . there's magic in the word "homemade".

FOLKS DON'T USUALLY like to be called lazy; I know I don't. But to be "thrifty with time" is now another thing. Especially 'round hot-weather-time . . . when tasks like making indispensable lemonade can really be tasks. Ahh . . . but there's REALEMONADE . . . the special answer to a housewife's fervent prayer. Fixes "wink-quick", too . . . for example: ½ to 1 cup of sugar dissolved into a cup of REALEMON BRAND LEMON JUICE . . . plus water & ice . . . and you have 2 qts. of delicious, frosty-cold lemonade! No fuss, no muss, no cutting or squeezing with REALEMON, the easy, modern way to refreshing lemonade. And REALEMON is reconstituted for uniformity of strength and flavor . . . eliminates all guess-work!

Pick up several bottles at your Grocer's today . . . REALEMON BRAND LEMON JUICE. I always make a gallon of lemonade at a time! REALEMON WITH SUGAR ADDED, featured in many stores, makes lemonade in just 5 seconds! Simply add 5 parts of water, and ice! Ask your Grocer for either unsweetened REALEMON or REALEMON WITH SUGAR ADDED.

JOIN THE CROWD of happy hostesses who are always guests at their own parties . . . never "slave" over refreshments nor worry about how they'll turn out! In other words, turn the "catering" over to Walter BAKER'S 4 in 1 Instant Sweet Cocoa Mix . . . then you save time, work AND expensive failures. Speed is its "middle name" . . . for it fixes "jiffy-quick". And I can vouch for the fact that results are perfect . . . literally "bursting" with that famous taste-enticing Walter BAKER flavor. But that's not all . . . Walter BAKER'S 4 in 1 makes not just ONE, but FOUR luscious chocolate delights. To wit:

1. Better Instant Cocoa than sweet milk cocoas. 2. Speedier, creamier Frosting than chocolate frosting mixes. 3. Smoother, mouth-melting Fudge than chocolate fudge mixes. 4. Richer, more scrumptious Chocolate Sauce than chocolate flavored syrups.

Expensive? Far from it . . . because BAKER'S 4 in 1 costs much less than most instant sweet milk cocoas. Try it . . . and soon.

ALLIOPE MUSIC is thrilling . . . yet nothing compares with the beautiful song of a canary. But remember . . . a complete diet is the first essential of lovely singing. And by a complete diet, I don't mean just an ordinary mixture of a few common bird seeds . . . but the 12 tested ingredients of FRENCH'S Bird Seed and Biscuit. The Biscuit is most important . . . it's the "plus" that puts song in his heart. CH'S Bird Seed and Biscuit has been favored for genera- d is the choice today of 7 out of 10 canary owners . . . your bird this merry variety and see if he doesn't respond e most thrilling notes you've ever heard! OFFER . . . a e, color-illustrated booklet called "Your Canary . . . e and Treatment" . . . FREE! Contains a wealth of information. See offer No. 1 under the "Big Top".

ENVY THE FAT LADY in the circus? Or do you want to use up those excess pounds while you enjoy delicious, low-calorie salads, desserts and main dishes? If so, see offer No. 2 (J3) under the "Big Top": FREE! "Refresher Reducing Diet Plan" . . . a wonderful 32-page KNOX Booklet with 56 scrumptious, but restricted, recipes and menus, scientific calorie-food-value charts plus dietary information to help make reducing easier and more pleasant without the feeling of hunger or the risk of protein lack. The leading part is played by KNOX, the real Gelatine . . . drunk in water or fruit juice and eaten as an ingredient in the various recipes. Why? Because KNOX provides useful protein without extra calories . . . lets you gain some of the benefits of a sound, satisfying diet.

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND - ABOVE ALL - SAFE!

THE PULLMAN COMPANY

(Continued from Page 91)

picked out a gray hackle and knotted it to his leader. And he knew suddenly that if he didn't speak his piece now, his courage would evaporate. He clipped off the end of his leader. He said:

"Ben, there's something I've been meaning to ask you."

Ben glanced up in alarm. "Don't tell me you and Kathie don't like it here in Vermont?"

"On the contrary. We're crazy about it, and so are the kids."

"Well, then." Ben went back to his fly tying, obviously relieved.

Hank started again. "This has nothing to do with Vermont," he said. "It's a temporary difficulty. That is ——" He hesitated. He should have thought out his request, some reasonable explanation. For a moment he considered postponing the issue; but then he plunged in. "I hate to ask this, Ben," he said. "But I've been running behind, things have piled up. If you could loan me a couple of thousand, at interest, you know, we could pay it back within a year."

For a while after that he kept on talking. He explained that they were going to retrench, that it was only temporary, that business hadn't been good. Finally he stopped talking, and the silence closed in around them. And yet it wasn't a complete silence, for he could hear the birds and the insects, and the lonely sound of water running over the rocks. He hadn't looked at Ben, and he didn't now. He slipped the fly box into his pocket and picked up his rod.

Ben spoke finally, and his voice had a false heartiness. "I'd be glad to do it, Hank," he said. "But I've always had a theory: 'Loan a man money and you lose a friend.' If it weren't for that—you can see how it is," he continued. "I've known it to happen over and over again. You have a barrier right away, an obligation." Ben fell silent. He was embarrassed and disturbed by the whole situation. He liked Hank Dixon, and Kathie and the kids. "It's not easy to explain," he added unhappily. "But if we're to live together up here, we have to be on an equal footing."

It was a sound theory, Hank knew. But what were you to do when the bank had given you exactly two weeks to meet a note? "Forget it, Ben," he said. "I see your point; it was just a shot in the dark anyhow."

They fished until almost ten. By that time they had a dozen eight-inch trout, and decided to call it a day. They walked back through the orchard, discussing the attributes of various flies, then climbed the hill to the house. Ben saw that Lydia and Martin had set up their easels out on the knoll. He walked over to show them his catch.

"Not bad, considering!" he exclaimed, opening his basket to display the shining, speckled little fish. "We'll ask Jenny to cook them for lunch."

LYDIA glanced into the basket, smiled rather vaguely, then wiped her brush off on a rag and turned back to her painting. She was wearing blue jeans and one of Ben's old shirts, and she looked about nineteen.

Ben was annoyed. No doubt Martin would stay for lunch and eat more than his share of the trout—after, of course, supervising the cooking. He said heartily, "Hank and I could do with a good breakfast. You get pretty hungry wading those streams!"

Lydia began scraping at her palette with a knife. "Tell Jenny," she suggested casually, and squeezed paint out of a tube.

Ben didn't know quite how to answer. Lydia was supposed to be running things, and he'd expected her to supervise his breakfast. He said doubtfully, "Do you suppose Jenny will be around at this hour?"

"Of course. Tell her to put on some extra coffee for us. You work up an appetite painting too!"

Ben hesitated. Then he walked up to the house, and arranged for his own breakfast. Afterward he felt somewhat at loose ends. Finally he sent Sharon over to the knoll to ask Lydia if she'd like to go down to the club with him. But the little girl came back with the reply that mother was too busy painting.

Hank had gone straight up to his room; and Ben felt uneasy about that too. He had been right, of course. A loan wouldn't help Hank in the long run; he'd just be in that much deeper. But still he wished the issue had never come up.

Finally he sat out on the terrace, in quite unaccustomed idleness. He considered phoning around for a golf partner, but there wasn't really time now. And then he saw that Lydia was walking across the grass with a tray in her hands. The tray contained a pot of coffee, two cups and some other things. He watched her place it between the easels, and then the two of them sit down together on the grass. The easels were on a slight rise, about a hundred yards from the house. He couldn't see their faces, but their actions indicated a very pleasant and friendly pantomime. Lydia poured the coffee, and afterward leaned back against an apple tree, in an attitude of contentment, and Martin sprawled out on the grass beside her.

NATURALLY you couldn't criticize your wife for painting pictures, or drinking coffee with a young man at eleven o'clock in the morning. But something about it made Ben vaguely uneasy. He remembered Betsey Rogers. They hadn't had an affair, but he'd been infatuated certainly. And now he was seeing a good deal of Dorothy Barnum, in New York. He'd take her to dinner, and then they'd go dancing, or to one of the supper clubs. He didn't know quite why he'd drifted into those relationships. But life at home had begun to seem flat and rather dull.

He was bored already, just sitting out on the terrace like this. And then he saw that Lydia was laughing, and that Martin was apparently making a sketch of her. She had certainly gone overboard for that painting business.

All during the long, lazy July days Lydia worked hard at her painting. She had no illusions about her talent as an artist; but she was convinced that Martin was honest with her, and that she was improving. Dorchester, a community ten miles from Kerby, had an annual summer art show over Labor Day, and one day Martin suggested that she enter two of her pictures.

"You have a quality that is salable," he said, with the kind of enigmatic grin that she couldn't interpret.

Lydia laughed. "Is that a compliment or the reverse?"

"I wouldn't know."

It was the middle of the afternoon, and they were having a brief rest. They had been painting lately in a narrow valley three miles from home. Every morning Martin would pack the easels and paints into the back of his jeep, and generally they brought along an ample lunch, so that they wouldn't be interrupted.

"No one knows the answer to that," he said now, after a pause. "Ask any artist why his pictures don't sell, and generally he'll tell you the public doesn't understand him."

He reached out and looped his thumb and forefinger around her slender, tanned wrist. It was a friendly gesture, companionable and somehow reassuring. Vaguely she recalled that something similar had affected her once, but not happily. And then she remembered. Hank Dixon had reassured his wife in just that way the day they arrived in Vermont.

And that, she thought, was what a woman needed in life—someone to rely on, to turn to in times of unhappiness and change. Someone who cared about her as an individual. She steeled herself, then, against another memory. For on that same day, while they were unpacking, she had asked Ben a question. But he had given her no reassurance.

Martin's fingers tightened around her wrist. And then he ran his hand up the smooth texture of her inner arm. Unwillingly Lydia experienced a shiver of weakness and of longing. She did not know why she felt so alone, so disturbed, so achingly alive. She thought, A woman whose husband takes her for granted is an easy mark. She has no defense against tenderness. He turned her hand then, and kissed the palm.

"I'd better get back to work," she said.

Fibs*

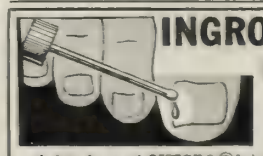
is the Tampon with rounded ends...the on Tampon "Quilted" for comfort..."Quilted for safety...

Next time try Fibs

{ internal sanitary protectio

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

APEX ALWAYS KILLS MOT



IS $10.00 A DAY WORTH A ONE CENT STAMP

NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED

Let me show you how YOU can make as high a day, without previous experience, by showing Christmas Cards, Stationery and Napkins to your neighbors, relatives and others. We print your cus names at no extra cost. No risk or investmen me a penny postcard TODAY and I'll send you co Selling Plan and samples on approval by retur

MERIT GREETING CARD CO
370 Plane St. Dept. 39 Newar

INGROWN NA
Hurting Y
Immedi
Relie

A few drops of OUTGRO bring blessed relief tormenting pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO t ens the skin underneath the nail, allows the n be cut and thus prevents further pain and d fort. OUTGRO is available all drug cou

I Have $50 For You!

Make $50 fast! Sell only 100 sensation- value 21-Card $1 Christmas Assort- ments! FREE tells you how to get big orders easily. Also show Gift Wraps, Stationery, Children's Action Books, Address Book and over 70 other fast selling items for all members of the family. Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards 50 for $1 and up. Start earning with FREE Imprint Sam- ples, Assortments on approval. Extra Profit Bonus Plan! Write now! Send N

PHILLIPS CARD CO., 391 HUNT ST., NEWTON

MONEY FOR YOU—SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS—UP TO 100% PROFIT FREE $ 50 NAME CARDS, and ST

Make Money Easily. $50 profit selling 100 Feature Boxes. Complete line big value, fast selling plastic, metallic Christmas and Everyday Cards. Smart gift items. Em- bossed designed cards, stationery, napkins, coaste name $0 for $1 up. No money or experience needed Fund raising plan for churches and clubs. Special offers. Cash bonus. Write for samples on approva

EMPIRE CARD CO., 215 FOX ST., ELMIRA, NEW

He made no objection, but for a while he there, watching her fumble with the nts. Then he stood up, stretched, and nt back to his easel. Almost at once he had t look of absorption on his face, so that knew he'd forgotten her already.

Every so often Jenny, as a special treat, uld take the children on a picnic. Some-es it would be in the evening, and they'd e sandwiches and chocolate milk down by brook; other times, at noon, they'd go a rt distance from the house, and cook ham-gers and corn on the cob over a fire.

enny had enjoyed it herself at first. But dually, almost imperceptibly, everything ut the summer had become an effort. She ned now that she had never taken the job. liked the Dixons, and the Farwells, too, she loved the children. They were all siderate, and easy to work for. But their of life, and Martin's part in it, she could understand.

enny had never had any trouble evaluat-life, for she measured everything on a is of Nature and need. You tried to lessen need by working d, and making se around you nfortable and py. But Nature accepted as an my as well as a nd. You knew that ny time the apples ht be blighted, or cows killed by in-ious disease. The could dry up in middle of sum-, or the corn be veled by frost. the more subtle agonisms—the ery of sleepless nts, the painful, ummoned happi-s when someone led—these things ny was beginning fear, in a bewil-ed, incoherent ne would look at ron, with her ndly, sensitive lit-face, and then see . Farwell out on front porch, thing with Mar- and she did not w quite how it le her feel.

Martin often stayed on into the evenings . At one time or another he had brought t of his cherished records up to the house he hill, so that while she was doing the er dishes Jenny would hear them talk-about Stravinsky, or Bach, or Sibelius. the middle of August she arranged a special picnic for the children, as a re-d for being extra good. This one had ice m packed into a container, and cookies ed like animals. Ronny and Sharon ed with the cookies, and afterward they nged a bucket with moss and rocks, for wildlife, such as tadpoles, that they nt manage to catch.

was a hot day, and the children took off r sneakers and waded around in the shal-pools. Jenny sat on the bank, watching n, and brooding aimlessly. And then she d Martin's voice, and his heavy foot-s coming down through the trees. "Hi, , your mothers sent me to tell you they'd long shortly. I understand this is some-g of an event!" He dropped down beside and lapsed into a contented silence.

nny didn't know whether to ignore him, e merely polite. But instead she heard elf say distractedly, "It certainly is an sion, Martin. We have animal cookies real ice cream, and we've caught three wogs already!"

Martin didn't answer. He had taken off shoes and socks, and now he was rolling his blue jeans. "Watch out, kids, Here I come!" he shouted. "The champion frog catcher of all time!"

The children were ecstatic. They tagged after him, screaming with excitement while Martin lunged through the water, raising a great turmoil, but nevertheless catching several frogs. Jenny watched, feeling close to tears. How could you hate a man like that? His vitality, his robust good humor, his genius—all of it combined into a personality so strong and so contradictory that you couldn't even find a way of resenting him.

MARTIN returned finally, panting from exertion, and very damp. He stretched out on the bank beside her, and lighted a cigarette. The children started building a dam, and the clouds near the sun were fleecy and pink.

"This is quite a place," he said. "No wonder Ben Farwell wants to own it."

"Does he?"

"Sure. He's buying the whole shooting match—orchard, house, even the wood lot. He's going to hire Luke Matson to run the orchard for him."

"I didn't know that, Martin."

Jenny was depressed by the news. In the back of her mind had been a persistent though unacknowledged hope. When the Farwells went back to Connecticut, things would right themselves again. Martin would begin taking her to dances and the movies, the way he had last summer. He would play music to her in his studio, and ask her to pose. It was almost three weeks now since they'd done anything at all together. She wondered if he realized that.

"It must be fun to buy a place like this just for a hobby," Martin said. "But at least the guy earned the money himself. He's not a parasite, like some around here."

"People can't help it if they inherit money," Jenny objected.

"But not many of them can help themselves afterward." He was leaning on one elbow, and now he flicked his cigarette into the brook. Then he reached up and slid his finger through one of her honey-yellow curls, savoring the texture with his thumb and forefinger. "You're a very beautiful girl, Jenny," he said. "Wild-rose complexion, velvety brown eyes; it sounds poetic, and it is. The total effect, I mean."

Jenny's heart was beating heavily, and she wondered if he knew he was being cruel. For in spite of the things he said, his manner was faintly teasing, faintly speculative—as though she were simply an interesting butterfly, pinned to a chart. She decided that she hated him; but she could think of no way of hurting him, for he cared only for himself.

And then, just when her hate was strongest, his voice became gentle and friendly again. He said, "You really are beautiful, Jenny. Somehow you don't seem to have fallen for any of this cheap stuff the kids go in for nowadays."

"I'm not a kid," she said inadequately.

"Perhaps not," he said. "No, I don't suppose you are. But I hope you get a break out of life. You deserve it."

And then they heard another voice. Lydia Farwell was coming down through the trees, humming something under her breath. Martin sprang to his feet. And though Jenny could not interpret the look in his dark eyes, it was quite obviously there—excitement, desire, perhaps even devotion.

August Afternoon

By Eunice Mildred LonCoske

O Love, reach out your arms and hold me fast.
The shadows of this August afternoon
Have lengthened quickly. They have now sped past
The caterpillar spinning its cocoon;
The bee which drowses in the foxglove flower;
The spider in its web; the torpid toad
Whose tongue flicks out to stay this golden hour!
O Love, glance down the tunneled, tree-lined road,
Its blackness swallows half my thigh and hand;
Creeps up to band my breasts; unyielding chips
At all things beautiful upon the land;
My luminous flesh . . . the kisses on my lips!

Stop perspiration odor...instantly...
check perspiration moisture with famous cosmetic deodorant

You're sure of yourself...through the longest day...with Tussy Cream Deodorant. It instantly stops perspiration odor... checks perspiration moisture. Antiseptic, too...for extra protection. Made by beauty specialists—on a fragrant, fluffy vanishing cream base, Tussy Cream Deodorant disappears without a trace...is kinder, gentler to your skin. Safe for delicate fabrics, too. Get Tussy Cream Deodorant, the cosmetic deodorant, in economical jars and tubes. 50¢ and $1 plus tax.

NEW! Tussy Liquid Deodorant in plastic squeeze bottle...a spray a day protects you against offending. $1 plus tax.

TUSSY cream and liquid deodorant

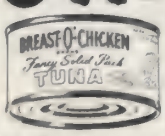
The French Dressing gourmets call "perfect"..

Subtly seasoned, with just a hint of garlic, Miracle French has a true Parisian accent!

...wonderful, too, when you vary it like this:

1. Blend 1 tablespoon honey and 2 teaspoons lemon juice with ½ cup Miracle French. Chill before serving. Good with fruit salads.



2. To ½ cup Miracle French, add 1 tablespoon chili sauce. Chill before serving.

3. Mash 2 tablespoons blue cheese; slowly blend in ½ cup Miracle French. Chill before serving.

Try it and see!

JOLLY TIME POP CORN
ALWAYS POPS BETTER

it's the young, the tenda' tuna
BREAST O' CHICKEN
brings you only the best O' tuna
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

We catch lots O' tuna...but we pack only the finest under our Breast-O'-Chicken brand. Buy white label for solid pack ...green label for chunk pack.

FREE recipe booklet. Write Westgate-Sun Harbor Co. 1995 Bay Front, Dept. J4 San Diego 13, California

Ben Farwell was excited about buying the Vermont place, and he drove Lydia to Dorchester one Friday morning, toward the end of August, to sign the deed. Ben was spending long week ends in the country now. Often he would arrive Thursday night, and stay until Tuesday. Ben explained to his wife, for the hundredth time, the advantages of the purchase he was making.

"We'll be able to come up summers," he said. "And perhaps in the winter too—for the skiing and all. And we'll be putting down roots. Fifteen years from now, if I want to retire, we can move up here and run the orchard, and the sugar bush, and raise sheep or something. We'll have a lot of friends and things to do. We won't be at loose ends the way so many people are."

He glanced at Lydia and saw that she was smiling, and watching the countryside. Her narrow, greenish-hazel eyes had a look in them that he couldn't quite fathom—a shining, young, dreamy look. But he wasn't sure she'd heard a word he'd said.

He slowed for a hayrack that blocked half the road, feeling uncomfortably let down. He couldn't make Lydia out lately. She used to be only too eager to comply with his plans. In fact, she'd been a little overanxious a good deal of the time, so that he'd felt guilty about not including her more. But now she seemed to be immersed in a life of her own. She was happy; happier than he'd seen her in a long time. But somehow, he felt left out. He squeezed past the hayrack, and stepped on the gas.

"Kerby was certainly a find!" he exclaimed. "You have just about everything here—hunting, fishing, even golf if you want it. And I've never known a nicer crowd of people."

He glanced at her again. She was wearing a white blouse and a strawberry-colored denim skirt; her hair was blowing softly around her face, and she was smiling. Ben remembered, with astonishment, the times he used to call her from New York to say he was staying in town; and the way she would sound half tearful over the phone, so that he'd feel impatient and resentful. Ben had never been much good at analysis. All he knew was that at the moment he wanted very much to turn into a side road, park someplace and take her in his arms.

He slowed the car. He said, "Aren't you glad we decided to come up here?"

But apparently she hadn't heard his question, for she was frowning. "I hope Martin can find a proper frame for Blue Hills," she said.

"Blue Hills?"

"One of my pictures," she explained. "Today is receiving day at the art show."

"Of course; I forgot for a moment," he said apologetically.

He swung into the main street of Dorchester, and parked in front of the drugstore. They climbed a flight of stairs to the office of Roger Bishop, the lawyer, and some of Ben's enthusiasm returned.

"This is an occasion," Ben said. "One that we'll always remember!"

He read the papers thoroughly, and then he and Lydia both signed them. But his mood was curiously divided—half elation, half a vague regret because something was missing. It should have been better than this, the occasion of buying a home together.

When they returned to the street Martin Somers' jeep was parked beside the convertible. Martin greeted them with a grin that Ben didn't care for—half sardonic, it was, and patronizing as well.

"How are the happy homeowners?" he asked. And then, before they could reply, he said to Lydia, "I have your pictures; come on down and enter them."

"Now?"

"Sure. Why not?"

"I suppose ——" she said. She sounded flustered, and shy, and very much excited.

Ben looked at her. And he realized he had never before seen her quite like this—vivid, tense, keyed to something he could not understand. His heart plunged suddenly into a strange, inarticulate misery; and he stood on the hot pavement, not knowing what to do.

Lydia got into the front seat of the jeep. "Tell Jenny we may be late," she said casually. "Martin will drive me home." She glanced over her shoulder at the pictures, stacked in the back. "Oh, the frames are perfect!" she exclaimed. "Almost too good!"

Martin waved cheerfully to Ben before he backed the jeep, with a rattle and a roar, and drove off up the street. They went half a mile to the high-school gymnasium, where the art show was to be held, and parked behind a row of cars. Then he turned and looked at her.

"Getting cold feet?"

"You know I am," she said accusingly. "You should have let me wait another year." And she added uneasily, "It's almost like having your subconscious pinned up on a wall, for a lot of strangers to stare at."

"You'll have plenty of company; don't forget that." He held up one of her pictures. He had chosen a frame of antiqued ivory, wide and heavily scrolled, which seemed to give depth to the painting. "It could be a lot worse," he said seriously. "You've got something, Lydia."

She followed him up the path to the gymnasium. Inside, dozens of people were milling around, stacking pictures, filling out forms and answering questions. The atmosphere was one of bustle, confusion and cheery anticipation. Martin took her elbow, and steered her over to a table.

"Here, I'll help you fill out your application."

Lydia's heart lifted. It was fun to be part of all this; it was fine, really. Martin was looking out for her; she didn't feel like an outsider at all. Almost without realizing it, she had managed to regain the thing that had escaped her years ago: the fact of being an individual, confident and responsible, with a varied life to lead, and work of her own to do.

The momentum of the summer increased during that last week of August. But Kathie Dixon couldn't help dreading the round of festivities that lay ahead of them over Labor Day—several parties, the art show, a golf tournament, even an auction which everyone wanted to attend.

In addition to all this, Martin Somers was insisting that they make an expedition to the top of Owl's Head, where he had discovered a fabulous view, and built a fireplace the summer before.

How they planned to accomplish so much in three days Kathie couldn't imagine. But the others took it completely for granted, especially Lydia, who seemed to have more vitality than she'd ever had back home in Greenwich. She was still a rather quiet sort of person, but at the same time there was something about her lately that attracted everyone they met.

Kathie didn't begrudge her friend any of this. But watching Lydia plunge so happily into a new life made her feel, by contrast, more than ever drab and tiresome. It was becoming difficult to hide her pregnancy; there were only one or two dresses she could wear with any safety at all. These were shapeless nondescript affairs, that contributed to an unaccustomed sense of inferiority.

Friday, waiting for Ben and Hank, who were driving up from the city, she felt more than ever on edge. Finally she curled up on the shabby, comfortable sofa, and tried to read. But almost at once Lydia came in, with a brown paper package.

"The samples have arrived," she said cheerfully. "Tell me what you think of them, Kathie."

She sat down on the sofa, tucked her feet under her, and opened the package. She was wearing a play suit of brown denim, new red sandals and bright red lipstick. She looked astonishingly young. Young enough to be Sharon's sister! Kathie thought.

"I'm going to do over every stick of furniture in the house!" Lydia said firmly. "It'll be fun too." She held up a square of figured linen. "How do you like this? I want to make everything very bright and country—but interesting too."

Kathie tried to concentrate on the piece of material, which seemed to depict peacocks in

WANT CASH QUICK

Sell only 100 Ass'ts — make up to $50! Complete line Xm Everyday Cards. New "Spang-l-ettes" and Famous "Pr Ass'ts; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up; tionery; Wraps; Notes; etc. Up to 100% pr No risk ... Money back guarantee. Re "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on appro

30 FREE SAMPLES

HERTELART, 305 W. Adams St. Dept. S-9, Chicago 6,

ALERT WOMEN EAR EXTRA QUICK CASH

BIG VALUE 4 MAKE 4 PROFIT TIMES 50¢ FREE SAMPLES

50 MONEY MAKING CHRISTMAS ASSORTMENTS

Thrill your friends, surprise your neighbors with America's outstanding Christmas and Everyday Cards. Bought on sight. Also Gift Wraps, Children's Books, Stationery & Napkins. Up to 100% profit. Write for details, samples on approval. PEERLESS GREETINGS, Dept. L-2, Box 825, Highland Park, Ill.

ROASTWELL

PATENTED GRAVYWELL
SELF-BASTING ... TENDERIZE

ROASTING PERFECTION
AT LEADING STORES EVERYWHERE OR WRITE
FLETCHER ENAMEL CO. DUNBAR, W. VA

AMAZING OFFER-
$40 IS YOURS

for selling only 50 boxes of Christmas Cards. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. Write today. It costs nothing to try.

FREE SAMPLES
PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS
STATIONERY
NAPKINS

CHEERFUL CARD CO.
Dept. 3-34, White Plains, N

id shades of green and blue. And then she the price tag—fifteen dollars a yard. She d, "I should think you'd want something pler up here in Vermont."
Lydia looked surprised. "Oh, I always nk it pays to get good quality." She ked up a square of rough, chartreuse green d said musingly, "I might use this for one the chairs."
The materials were heaped between them the sofa now—lovely shades of yellow and e and tan and blue, all differing in design d texture.
'I had Madge Bevans send them up," dia explained happily, "but I'm going to ke all the selections myself. You won't ow the house when I get through with it!"
Lydia was quite flushed with energy and asure now. She was holding up squares material, one after another, and Kathie that she never once looked at the price on tag. And that must be fun, too, that must a great deal of fun! She had told herself summer long that she didn't resent dia's wealth, her freedom from worry, her ely casual days. But now she could feel ething ugly twisting in her mind. It t fair! she thought. It isn't fair! Her ly felt heavy; her dress was shabby and tight. And perhaps this had been a dreary lercurrent to her thoughts all summer g, while she sat quietly, watching the ers. Ronny couldn't have a bicycle, but Farwell had invested a hundred dollars golf clubs. Little Pete was talented; he uld start piano less. But Sharon had her violin out in rain to spoil, and
one had scolded her.
s isn't like me! she ught frantically.
never been envious
re. Never in my le life!
he stood up. She l hurriedly. "You
e perfect taste; I'm the house will be ely, Lydia." And n she escaped to her
m. She went straight window, and looked at the high, rising ntains. She tried to steady herself. She ught, I'll have to tell Hank about the baby.
decision comforted her. Hank would erstand; they'd share this new burden,
g with all the others.
But she knew she could never tell him ut the feelings she'd had this afternoon—ut the sudden, bitter, perfectly senseless agonism. A man wanted to consider his superior to everyone, in her own mind well as his. That was essential to his pride his faith in himself. But she realized un-ly that it had been a bad mistake, coming ere to Vermont.
en and Lydia had been unfailingly gens from the very beginning. But genery can be a debilitating thing when you on the receiving end of it. Gradually, alt imperceptibly, she and Hank had lost ething.
ut it needn't matter! she thought anx-ly. It needn't! Not if we don't let it! Not if e strong!

T she didn't feel strong. The pressure of past weeks, the nervousness, the mount-tension, all seemed to combine now into a l of listless rejection. It was almost as igh she were giving up the struggle.
athie turned toward the bed finally. If was going to cry, it was better to get it with before Hank came. But as it hap-ed, she managed to restrain the tears.
after a while she fell asleep.

he trip from New York seemed endless to k Dixon that day. The holiday traffic heavy, and they'd left the city at the st hour—five o'clock. But the actual surement of time was in his own mind, in the squirrel-cage chasing of thoughts,
d and round, in a pendulum of suspense.
ause he had a chance now. But the den—their entire future really—rested in the hands of one man: Frank Waring. Ben Farwell had uncovered the prospect, apparently wanting to make amends for refusing the loan. And Hank had worked feverishly for the past three weeks drawing up an organizational study of a group-insurance plan. It was a big assignment, and if the contract went through things would ease up all along the line.

Now, for the hundredth time, he tried to figure up the score. The policy totaled half a million dollars. If he sold it his standing in the firm would be vastly improved; and the commissions would enable him to pay up the note at the bank—which he'd had extended—and meet most of their debts. It would mean they could go on living in their home, and could devise a restricted budget that would be at least possible.

BUT it was a mistake to think along these lines, for inevitably you lulled yourself into a false sense of security. The chances of landing the contract were fairly slim, but Frank Waring had said he could call up over the week end and get his answer.

Ben turned into a gas station, had the tank filled, and said, "Want to take the wheel for a while, Hank?"

Hank was wretchedly tired, but of course he agreed. They changed seats, and then he swung the car back onto the parkway, and tried to keep his mind on the road and the stream of cars flowing ahead of them. But still the pendulum swung back and forth. He'd devoted three strenuous weeks to that policy. If it didn't go through, the debts would still be there, demanding payment. He thought about Kathie. She hadn't complained, but the summer had done something to her. The ceaseless pinpricks of economy had needled them both in a dozen different ways.

Now he couldn't stop thinking about her—her gray eyes, her soft brown hair, her thin, intelligent face. She had always been popular, loved by her friends for her gentleness and her natural, unassuming charm. Yet she had a kind of gaiety too—an impulsive, adventurous side to her nature that had always delighted him. But this summer she had deferred to the others, letting Jenny run the house, and Lydia take the lead in their social life. She had been co-operative—too co-operative, he thought now.

He'd decided not to say anything to her about Waring, and the group-insurance policy, unless it went through. There was no point in putting her through the suspense, and the disappointment afterward if he failed. But the report might be favorable, and if that happened he could take her in his arms and tell her about it.

Once again he started estimating his chances. He even tried to recall the expression on Frank Waring's face when they'd said good-by.

"Give me a ring over the week end," Frank had said, genially enough. "It's something of an innovation for us, you know. I'll have to talk it over with Johnson first." So that's the way they had left it. Anything might happen. Anything at all.

Ben took over the driving when they reached Massachusetts; but the traffic was still heavy, and it was after eleven before they climbed the hill to the house. The lights were on in the living room, and they heard the strains of classical music.

The two men got out of the car, feeling stiff and tired from the long drive. The sky was studded with stars, and the big rambling house welcomed them.

"Even the air smells better in Vermont," Ben said. He looked at the house. He owned it now; this summer had added an entirely new aspect to his life.

They went in through the back, traversing the kitchen, the dining room and the hall.

(Continued on Page 99)

"Where did I come from, mother?" inquired a six-year-old, just home from his first day at school.

This is it,* thought his mother. She had read widely on the subject and knew exactly how to unfold the story of the birds and bees so that he would look upon sex as a normal, natural thing. So the mother told all. Then, curiously she awaited his reaction.

"I just wondered," the child said. "The boy who sits in front of me in school came from New Jersey."

For less than a penny waxed-through Cut-Rite prevents drying, keeps flavor in.

So Perfectly Pliable — Cut-Rite doesn't break or split when it's twisted—you don't waste it! Wrap small leftovers, like a piece of cheese or half an onion, in Cut-Rite and tuck them in a corner of your icebox. See how Cut-Rite saves space, cuts down on your dishwashing!

Protect Food Flavor — Cut-Rite is waxed all the way through to keep out flavor-stealing air. Costs less than a penny to wrap leftover meats in Cut-Rite, to keep them moist and delicious for other meals. Sandwiches wrapped in Cut-Rite keep their appetite appeal. A Scott Paper Product.

Famous cutting edge tears easily

... more women choose it
... love to use it!

I've found me a wonderful WAVE!

says

MARY MARTIN

star of Broadway's all-time smash hit

"SOUTH PACIFIC"

music by Richard Rodgers curls by MARY MARTIN, and

RAYVE HOME PERMANENT

"Do you wonder that I'm practically a professional at home permanents? My helper and I put up 72 Rayve curls every 3 weeks. That's because my hair has to be kept so short, and grows so fast.

"After that on-stage shampoo my hair gets a few quick licks with the brush—bang, bang, bang! And then I have to be back on stage. There's no time for hair-settings for me! A permanent that left frizzy ends just wouldn't do! I just had to find a home permanent that would 'set itself'—be just like naturally curly hair."

"I really love my homemade curls. I'll keep 'em—'South Pacific' or no 'South Pacific'! They are so easy to keep in shape—it's just like having naturally curly hair. That's what Rayve does."

"Not 3 or 4 shampoos a month—but 3 or 4 shampoos a day—that's what I get!" remarks Mary Martin blithely. "Lucky for me that you just can't wash a Rayve wave out. Mine stays as curly as new—right up till I cut it off. Every single time too!"

She figures she has given herself 31 permanents altogether since "South Pacific" opened. How is her hair doing? Very well it seems.

"I know it seems incredible, but my hair couldn't be healthier. If you'd feel it, you'd see! That's because Rayve is so very, very easy on hair. Goodness knows I've had all kinds—including some I thought were pretty good. But, really and truly, there's a difference between a Rayve home permanent and the rest. Rayve does give a softer, shinier, more 'naturally curly' curl . . . You'll see!"

Rayve
HOME PERMANENT

Rayve Refill, $1 (use any plastic curlers). Complete Rayve Home Permanent kit, $2 (with 60 plastic curlers)

Money-Back Guarantee! Yes, your money back if you don't agree with Mary Martin that a Rayve gives the softest, most natural wave you've ever had at any price.

(Continued from Page 97)

ney found Lydia and Martin Somers in the ing room, playing a symphony on the ionograph.

Lydia greeted them with a vague smile. e was curled up on the sofa, and she was earing the greenish, shimmering dress. Hello, you two," she said. "Would you like mething to eat?" And to Hank she added, Kathie fell asleep before dinner, and hasn't aked up yet. There are milk and sandches in the icebox, if you'd like to take em up to her."

"All right. Thanks."

Hank carried a tray up to the bedroom. e found Kathie asleep in the middle of the gging iron bed. She had pulled a comforter er her, but she hadn't undressed. He sat r a long time looking at her, and finally she ened her eyes. She smiled right away.

"Darling, you got here!" She started to e, but Hank came over and sat on the edge the bed.

They ate the sandwiches in silence, for wadays they didn't have much to talk out. The future was a blank wall of probns, the past a bright dream that had esped them.

Kathie didn't want to say, "How did your rk go this week?" for if he'd drawn a ank the question would depress him. And e saw then, with a pang of uneasiness, that ank was really exhausted this time. She d planned to tell him about the baby, but w she saw that would be a mistake. Any w pressure was out of the question.

After a while he said gently, "You'd better t undressed, darling."

"All right," she agreed. But she waited til he'd gone down the hall to the bathom before she slipped hurriedly into her ghtgown and wrapper. Because he mustn't ow. Perhaps even now something might ppen so that she wouldn't have to tell him, er.

Ben sat in one of the easy chairs, pretendg to listen to the last movement of the symhony. He had never really cared for music; was a language he didn't understand. But pparently this wasn't true of either Lydia Martin, for now they were listening intly, and with obvious appreciation.

Ben didn't analyze any of this; but he be n to feel let down. He had been looking forard to this week end in Vermont—to the untryside, the new friends, the wealth of tivities. But already the thing was going ur. Lydia's greeting, for instance, had cerinly been casual enough.

Ben shifted uneasily in his chair. He wonered if it had been a mistake, buying the ouse. Probably. But if Lydia wanted to, e could always go on seeing that fellow in ew York. There was no way he could stop r, unless he wanted to risk losing her.

His eyes strayed for the hundredth time her face. It was a gentle, sensitive face, not ally beautiful. But tonight there was a kind vividness about her, even in repose. He ought about Dorothy Barnum, and the her girls he saw in New York. And he alized that none of them could hold a candle his wife.

The music stopped with surprising abruptess. "Very nice," Ben exclaimed. "First te!" His voice rang out in the quiet living om; but Lydia looked as though she were ming out of a trance.

Martin stayed until after midnight, but efore he left he arranged to take Lydia to e opening of the art show the next afternoon. To Ben he said, "They're running the olf tournament on a two-day basis; but if ou get a chance, drop in and look at the ctures."

Ben was annoyed by the remark. Apparntly Martin assumed that he preferred golf any activity connected with his wife. But hat irritated him even more was Martin's ossessive way of arranging Lydia's plans.

"Be ready at two," he said, as he was aving. "And don't get the jitters. Your ictures have a good spot—just to the right center in the main gallery."

Lydia smiled. "Did you use a little perasion?"

Martin's answer was typical, for he merely shrugged, grinned, and slammed the kitchen door behind him.

Ben had had no intention of going to the art show. But now the thing rankled in his mind, even during important moments of the tournament—when he was driving from the fifth tee, for instance, or making a spectacular putt on the eighth green. The weather was perfect for golf that day—a slight breeze, deep blue sky, and feathery clouds to temper the sun. Finally Ben arranged to postpone his second match, and got in the car and drove to Dorchester.

He inquired the way to the high-school gymnasium, and was surprised at the number of cars parked outside. People were streaming in and out the front door; and he experienced a quite unaccustomed reluctance. He didn't know what you were supposed to do at an art show, and there wasn't a soul around that he knew. Inside, the place was even more formidable—for people flowed all around him in an endless, talkative stream.

The walls were hung solid with pictures. Ben accepted a catalogue, and started edging his way through the room. He was looking for Lydia, and finally he saw her, standing with a group of friends, laughing and talking happily. She was wearing a pale green linen suit; her hair was arranged with casual grace. But what struck him most forcibly was her look of belonging.

He managed finally to edge his way over to her. "Hello," he said.

"Oh!" She looked surprised. "How was the golf? I didn't think you'd be able to get away."

"The golf was all right," he said impatiently. He rolled the catalogue between his big hands. He said uneasily. "I haven't been able to locate your pictures yet."

But she missed his last remark, because a strange young man had come up, and was telling her something in a tense, excited whisper.

"Oh! Really! How wonderful!" she exclaimed.

"What's up?" Ben asked.

She turned to him then, her eyes shining. "It's Martin's painting of Jenny and Sharon. The Detroit Museum has bought it for eight hundred dollars."

"Eight hundred!" Ben was impressed in spite of himself. "Show me your stuff," he urged hopefully. "That's what I came down for."

But before she could answer, three more people came up and claimed her attention. It seemed there was a critic she had to meet.

Ben stayed around for another half hour; then he drove back to the golf club to see what was going on there. But he'd lost interest in the tournament, and he kept thinking about Lydia. They were all crazy about her; it was easy to see that.

Martin's reaction to the Detroit sale puzzled Lydia. Until then he had been genial, talkative, very much pleased with life. But as soon as he heard that his picture had sold his mood changed abruptly into a depression. Finally he said to her, "They want a different frame. Come on down to the studio and help me pick one out."

"All right." She had never been to his studio, but the idea of going there now, in the late afternoon, seemed commonplace enough. As soon as they were in the jeep she said, "What's up? Why the gloom?"

Martin was driving too fast, and now he struck the steering wheel savagely with his fist. "It's not good enough, that's all," he told her.

"The museum?"

"No, the picture."

She started to reassure him. She said, "Everyone was crazy about it."

But he stopped her almost angrily. "I know what I'm talking about. I knew it as soon as I saw the thing hung."

Lydia was silent. Any reply would only increase his antagonism; for she saw that he was deeply disturbed.

Martin turned into the dirt road that led to the studio, and at the same time seemed to relax slightly. "Well, let's forget it," he said gloomily. "I could have made the thing a lot better, but it's too late now."

In spite of herself she protested. "It's perfectly beautiful, and it was the first picture to sell."

"I'm not talking about that," he said in disgust. And then he raised his voice until he was almost shouting at her. "I know what I intended, and I know what I made of it."

She should have been upset, but she wasn't. His anger impressed her, for it was so obviously sincere. "Do we ever accomplish what we intend?" she asked quietly.

"Not often," he admitted, and led the way up to the studio.

The place was a mess, she saw, but an interesting one. Pictures and frames were stacked against the walls, several easels were set up, and there was a huge north window, with a splendid view of sky and mountains. For a while Martin wandered around, looking for frames.

Finally he said, "How about a cup of coffee? We need something after battling that mob."

She saw that he was already easier in his mind, and soon she learned the cause. He stood for a while by the mantel, staring down into the empty hearth.

"I'm going to do it again," he said then. "A different pose, and a different background, but the same basic conception. The next one will be better."

He went to put the coffee on, rattling around in the curtained-off kitchenette, and when he had finished that he seemed himself again.

She relaxed, as she always did with Martin. She said, "You could do with a broom and a mop in here."

Martin laughed. He brought the coffee in battered cups, and sat beside her on the sofa. "I can't imagine you wielding a broom," he said.

"You think I'm spoiled?"

"No. Just adorable."

She let him kiss her. Or perhaps she didn't let him, it just happened. Finally she drew away, but he kept his hand on her arm.

"No one ever comes here," he said.

"Just the same," she told him, "I'm going home."

"No, you're not. We're good for each other, Lydia. We need each other."

She shook her head. "That's not true. You'll never need anyone but yourself, Martin."

"Don't let's get mixed up in a lot of words," he muttered. "You're beautiful. You know that." He pulled her close again, so that her head rested on his shoulder.

For a moment she was quiet, feeling the strangeness of the studio, and of herself being there. Then she said, in a matter-of-fact voice, "Now you must take me home."

As she had expected, that made him angry. "You're just what I thought at first," he exclaimed bitterly. "A suburban housewife, and a dabbler!"

Lydia smiled. "That's quite a combination! You can't taunt me into anything. You ought to know that, Martin."

His anger vanished as quickly as it had come. But he looked puzzled. "You've changed," he said. "I can't figure it out."

"Perhaps. Or maybe I'm just myself again." She remembered the early years of her marriage—the confidence, the inner security. Had Ben done that to her, or was she responsible? She said gently, "We're not children, Martin. So let's not fight."

But he misunderstood her. "If you're thinking along those lines," he said, "you don't look much older than Sharon right now."

"Perhaps. But I'm still Sharon's mother," she said.

"You're a darling," he said, half under his breath. "And you're quite a person, too, Lydia." He bent to kiss her, saying, with a smile, "Just one more, for good luck?"

But she turned away, for she was still afraid of him, or perhaps only of her own inner confusion. She understood Martin now—the self-centered, almost violent contradictions of his nature.

They came out of the studio just as the sun was setting. The effect was spectacular—heaped-up golden clouds, and a pale green sky.

Martin put his hand on her arm. "Tomorrow I'm going to take you up Owl's Head; you'll never forget it."

She saw that he had already reverted to his old self. But still she could not shake off a vague feeling of melancholy. The sky was so beautiful; and even the leaves on the trees were touched with a strange, unreal light.

"This is a lovely place," she said.

He looked down at her. "When are you going to come and pose for me, Lydia?"

She smiled. "Is it safe?"

"Of course not," he said. "But I want to paint you."

She thought uneasily, Nothing has really been solved. She climbed into the jeep. She

"Oh, Bert, I think the novelty of housework has worn off."

THE MOST EFFECTIVE DEODORANT YOU'VE EVER USED!

Only New ODO-RO-NO Cream gives you all these advantages:

1 Stops perspiration quickly and safely.

2 Banishes odor instantly.

3 The only cream deodorant that guarantees full protection for 24 hours.

4 Never irritates normal skin—use it daily. Can be used immediately after shaving.

5 Absolutely harmless to all fabrics.

6 New, exclusive formula. Never dries up, never gets gritty or cakes in the jar as ordinary deodorants often do.

7 Double your money back if you aren't satisfied that this new Odo-Ro-No Cream is the safest, most effective, most delightful deodorant you've ever used. Just return unused portion to Northam Warren, New York.

Don't trust your charm to outdated, ineffective deodorants. Rely on the new Odo-Ro-No Cream, made by the leader in the deodorant field for more than 30 years.

New ODO·RO·NO CREAM

The deodorant without a doubt

GUARANTEED FULL 24-HOUR PROTECTION!

More cream for your money. New 25¢ and 50¢ sizes, plus tax.

said, "You'd better take me home, Martin, before you go back to the art show."

The phone in the Kerby house was in a small alcove off the dining room, and when Jenny came in to clear the breakfast table the next morning, she found Hank Dixon sitting by the telephone table. She had a tray in her hands; but he had not heard her come in, and something about his pose startled her, so that she stayed quite still for a moment, watching him anxiously. His elbow was on the arm of the chair, his forehead was banded with his thumb and forefinger, and his eyes were closed. But even more notable than his posture was the pallor of his face, and the look of deadly fatigue.

"Are you all right, Mr. Dixon?" she asked. "I mean, you haven't had any bad news?"

"No. No news, Jenny," he said. "The circuits are busy. The circuits are always busy in Vermont."

"I know," she agreed, not really knowing in the least what she was talking about. But his wretchedness was very apparent. "Couldn't I get you some coffee?" she asked. "There's a fresh pot on the stove."

He made a visible effort to relax. "Sounds like a good idea," he told her. "Let me help you."

"Oh, no, it's no trouble," she said hurriedly. "It'll only take a moment."

She carried a few things out on the tray, and fixed him a fresh cup of coffee. But she could not shake off a feeling of uneasiness, that was mounting gradually into a vague, undefinable dread. Yet actually the atmosphere in the household was one of gay anticipation, for they had chosen that day for the expedition up Owl's Head. Martin had insisted that she go with them, and let Mrs. Taft, who did the weekly cleaning, come up and stay with the children.

As usual, Martin's arguments had prevailed, and his enthusiasm was setting the tempo for the undertaking. He'd supervised the food for the barbecue himself—the bacon, the onions and the small steaks. And now he was preparing the potato salad—chopping celery, and making a monumental mess in the kitchen.

They were alone for a moment in the kitchen, and he stopped his vigorous chopping and looked at her soberly. "I'm going to paint you again, Jenny, before you go back to college."

"There won't be time," she said.

"We'll make time." He put his hand under her chin, and turned her face slightly. "That's it," he said. "The next one will be better."

She didn't know where the anger came from, but for a moment she was almost suffocated with it. Martin was self-centered, oblivious of any need except his own; and yet she loved him more than it was safe for any girl to love a man. She pulled away.

"If you've finished with that salad," she said, "I'll pack it into jars."

THE preparations for the barbecue were so complicated that it was almost noon by the time they started the climb. Martin walked ahead to show them the path and the others followed in varying order, picking their way among the rocks and trees. Kathie walked slowly at first. But when she saw that they were having to stop and wait for her, she quickened her pace.

Originally she'd planned to stay home from the expedition, on the excuse of having a headache. But then two things had happened to change her mind.

The first was yesterday afternoon, when she'd opened Hank's suitcase to take out his soiled laundry, and a letter had fallen out on the floor. Kathie had picked it up and looked at it, vaguely at first, and then with growing uneasiness. The letter was from the Midland National Bank. Finally, with a strange, tormenting reluctance, she had read it. The short paragraph was businesslike, yet threatening too. It said that Mr. Dixon's loan had been extended until September fifteenth, but that they expected to receive payment in full at that time.

Kathie had to read the letter several times before she was able fully to comprehend it. Hank had told her that he'd paid up the loans he'd made; but now she saw that he'd only been trying to protect her. It took a while to recover from the shock; and then she decided to ask Hank about it. She didn't want him going through this alone.

But before she had an opportunity to speak to him, she became aware of the phone calls. Twice last night, and again this morning, he'd slipped away on some flimsy excuse, and she'd heard him ask for the long-distance operator. Afterward, each time, his face had a kind of sick pallor that she couldn't bear to see.

Instinctively she'd known that something serious was happening, and that he didn't want to tell her about it. If she tried to question him now, he'd see how frightened she was; so she decided finally that she mustn't push him even farther into a corner.

KATHIE didn't actually think of the letter from the bank and the phone calls as deciding her to go on the expedition. But because of them her feeling of apprehension and guilt merged finally into a kind of despairing numbness. By protecting herself she was hurting them all. Finally, in her confused unhappiness, she simply acquiesced. Everyone expected her to go on the trip, and she went. Now, without quite realizing how it had happened, she was trudging behind Ben Farwell up a steep slope—trying to avoid the rocks and the brambles, and wishing already that she hadn't come.

She was desperately tired, and several times she slipped on protruding roots. Ben reached back and gave her a hand.

"You and me," he said, "we're out of practice. I've never been much for hiking."

Kathie was panting already, but she managed a smile. "I suppose it's different on a golf course."

"Sure. There's some point to it then."

The climb was strenuous, and took two hours. But when they reached the top they all agreed that the view was worth it. The panorama was so vast, in fact, that you could see the Adirondacks on one side, and the White Mountains on the other. Ben started in at once gathering wood for the fire. But then he saw that Lydia was leaning against a rock, talking to Martin. As usual the two of them seemed to be engrossed in conversation, though what they found to talk about he couldn't imagine.

Almost in spite of himself, Ben walked over and sat down on the other side of his wife. He plucked three red berries from a bush, and dropped them into her open palm. "Here's something to make jelly with," he said. He knew the remark was fatuous; but he was acting under some compulsion that he didn't understand.

Lydia laughed at him. "If I did you'd all be poisoned!" Her lips were the color of the berries, and her slender arms were smoothly tanned.

Ben lowered his voice. He said, "Are you glad I bought the house, Lydia?"

But before she could answer, Martin had jumped to his feet, pulling her with him. "Time to get to work!" he announced. A moment later Lydia was busily wrapping strips of bacon around the meat, while Ben himself was cutting green branches from the trees, according to detailed instructions.

They lay around on the rocks for over an hour after lunch, so that it was almost five before they reached home. Hank had been tempted to go on ahead, but he couldn't think of an adequate excuse. Four-thirty, he'd decided, would be a perfect time to call Frank Waring. Even if Frank was going out later to a party, he'd surely be home then. However, five o'clock might be all right, if only he didn't have to wait too long for a circuit.

Kathie was sitting out on the steps, sipping a cold drink, and listening to the others talk about the trip, when she saw Hank go in to telephone. At once her heart contracted with an almost unbearable dread.

The golden weather had held, though the sun was almost to the horizon now; and out on the lawn the children were racing around with the puppy, screaming and shouting at one another. But somehow the incredibl cefulness seemed to bring with it an added sion. She knew she was close to tears, ply from exhaustion; and she decided t the safest course would be to go upstairs ner room.

But just then the screen door opened, and nk came out again. He was still holding drink, but this time he was lifting it high the air.

"Well, let's have a toast, folks!" he said. ld man Dixon has done it again!"

Kathie's heart seemed to stop for a mont, and then it raced wildly. For Hank ked happy, Hank looked relaxed, Hank riding the crest of the wave! The others mbarded him with questions, and he anred not too coherently:

The biggest policy I've ever sold, and here put me on to the deal!"

He came straight over and bent to kiss her. it was the feel of his arms, so strong and ssuring, that made the tears stream down face.

Here, here, none of that!" Hank exmed in concern. "I meant to tell you vately, honey. I don't know what got inne!"

Oh, it's all right," she sobbed, "it's wonful. I just never dreamed ——" She blew nose on Hank's handkerchief.

This calls for a celebration!" Ben exmed. "That's wonderful news, Hank!"

Right you are!" rtin joined in. "Say word, and I'll make ther batch of barues!"

It's simply marvel-!" Lydia said. "And t Sunday afternoon Hank, you're quite ıy!"

ll of them were ıinely excited over ık's announcement, Kathie thought efully, Anyone can pathize when you're rouble, but it takes friends to rejoice! ank sat close be- her, holding her d. "I didn't want ell you anything l I knew," he said. was all so uncer-"

That's why you've been making those ıe calls?"

Sure. But Waring was never in. And you just believe I was on tenterhooks." But ıickly does the mind adjust itself that aly, to Hank, the tension of the past few ts might never have taken place. He ed, in a haphazard sort of way, of what it id mean to them. "We'll be free and now!" he said in a low voice. "I've ed the whole thing out. We'll have to go at first, but we'll manage things so we e ahead of the game whatever happens." n proposed a toast. "Here's to Frank ng, prince among men!"

His ears must be burning," Lydia said ily.

athie smiled. "And to think that he t have decided just the opposite!"

saw that Hank was talking to Martin ers now, saying emphatically, "Eight red dollars from the Detroit Museum. 's quite a sale, feller!" Hank was almost old self again—confident, assured, a l member of the group. He still looked and too thin; but the lines of tension gone, and so was the uneasy diffidence had worried her so. She thought aim- that if she'd known the phone calls a source of hope, she would have stayed from the picnic. But she'd been so ened that she hadn't been able to deıwhat the right thing was to do.

e sun vanished suddenly behind a ıtain, so that the valley below them was er, though equally beautiful. Kathie her glass. And that was when the first struck.

e talk flowed around her, lively and ı. Hank's hand was still on her arm, and everything was perfect; everything was absolutely perfect.

The second pain was worse, and quite undeniable. She stood up. "If this is really a celebration, I think I could do with a little lipstick!" she said.

Hank grinned. "Tomorrow I'm going to take you over to Bennington, to the inn. I've been planning that too."

"Yes, of course," she said vaguely, and left them. But a little later she called down to Hank; and he took the stairs two at a time, for he recognized the fear in her voice.

He found her leaning against the wall in the narrow hall, and he knew at once that she was ill. "What's the matter?" he asked. "Shall I call a doctor?"

"Yes, yes, you'll have to," she said, in a low, toneless voice. "It's all my fault, Hank. All my fault. Before this, I even wanted it to happen."

"Darling, what is it?" He put his arms around her then, but she turned away.

"It's my fault," she whispered. "Oh, Hank, I'll never forgive myself!"

The others were still out on the terrace when Hank joined them.

"We'll have to call a doctor," he said. "Kathie's sick." And he added, in a low, incredulous voice, "She's having a miscarriage; I'm afraid that it's pretty serious."

It took a moment before they adjusted themselves—a moment of suspended time.

"I wonder whom we should call?" Lydia asked hurriedly.

"Blanchard is a good man," Martin suggested. "I know him; I'll phone right now."

Martin went to the phone; Lydia ran upstairs to see Kathie. Ben put his hand on Hank's arm for a moment—a brief gesture of reassurance.

"She'll be all right," he said. And he added quickly, "I'll tell Jenny to keep the kids quiet and all that."

The doctor arrived fifteen minutes later. He was an older man, obviously accustomed to emergencies; and because he already knew Jenny, he asked her to help him. Lydia put the children to bed.

Ben Farwell drove to Dorchester for some medicine the doctor needed. He opened the engine wide. It was a relief to be doing something; inactivity was hardest of all at a time like this. But while he drove he thought, in an inarticulate way, about Lydia, and about the life they'd shared together.

When he got back to the house, three quarters of an hour later, Hank was waiting outside for the medicine. "There's some kind of shot he's going to give that may help," he said, in a hurried, confused voice. "Blanchard would like to get her to the hospital; but that's thirty-five miles away, and he thinks that it's too risky. He's already sent for a nurse, though." Hank's voice trailed off, and he hurried into the house with the medicine.

Ben looked after him. Poor guy! he thought. Just a couple of hours ago he was celebrating!

It seemed a long time since they'd clambered up to the top of Owl's Head, and exclaimed idiotically about the view. He remembered helping Kathie over the rough places; he remembered turning Hank down on that loan. He went up to his room, because there didn't seem to be anything else he could do. The door to the Dixons' smaller, sloping room was closed, but as he passed it he heard the doctor's harsh but encouraging voice:

"Never mind, Mrs. Dixon, this hypodermic is going to help."

He went to his room, and stood at the window, smoking one cigarette after another. A little later Lydia came in.

I had a letter recently from a man who in his youth had sailed a fishing schooner with his father in the North Atlantic. One night, he says, near the Arctic Circle, the dark came down, the fog closed in and the seas ran high. "I was at the wheel," he writes, "doing my best to keep her on her course and my father was standing close by. He knew we were in for a bad night. 'Well,' said my father, 'about this time the little woman at home is offering up her prayer for us to the God who holds the waves in the hollow of his hand,' and then after a pause, he cried, 'All hands on deck, put a close reef in the mainsail and let run the jib, we have to get that prayer answered.'"

—HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK:
Successful Christian Living
(Harper & Brothers).

The deeper you cleanse...
the prettier you look!

Your skin actually looks younger after cleansing with Woodbury Cold Cream! You'll discover your complexion is prettier than you knew.

For Woodbury Cold Cream cleanses deeper! It contains Penaten – the amazing new penetrating agent that actually goes deeper into the pore openings. That means Woodbury's wonderful cleansing oils go deeper to loosen every trace of grime and make-up.

And because of Penaten, Woodbury Cold Cream smooths more effectively, too. Brings rich softening oils to soothe your skin when it's dry and rough. Recapture that little-girl freshness again with Woodbury Cold Cream! 20¢ to $1.39 plus tax.

Woodbury Cold Cream

penetrates deeper because it contains PENATEN

NOW! Dental Science Shows That Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Reports in Authoritative Dental Literature!

2 years' research at 5 great universities—case histories of hundreds of people who used Colgate Dental Cream right after eating—shows the Colgate way stops tooth decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene known today! Yes, both clinical and X-ray examinations showed the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in all dentifrice history!

No Other Toothpaste or Powder Ammoniated or Not Offers Proof of Such Results!

Even more important, there were no new cavities whatever for more than 1 out of 3 who used Colgate Dental Cream correctly! Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results! No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent decay.

"The nurse is here," she said. "But the doctor thinks it may take several hours."

Ben turned around. "How far along was she?"

"Four months. That means all summer." She was thinking back, remembering the parties, the dinners, all the good-time gatherings they'd had. She said, in a low, uneasy voice, "I think they have been really up against it. I never realized ——"

"I should have," Ben said heavily. "Hank asked me for a loan early in July, but I turned him down."

"Oh, Ben!"

"I know. I'm kicking myself now."

"But you are responsible for that policy he sold."

"It came a little late, however."

"How do we ever know!" Lydia exclaimed unhappily. "How do we ever know anything!"

Ben looked at her. She was sitting on the edge of the bed, and she wasn't as pretty as she had been out on the terrace. He wondered what had happened to them, why he had this feeling that he'd lost her.

He said finally, because he couldn't help himself, "Lydia, tell me something."

"What is it?" she asked in surprise.

"It's just this," he said heavily. "We've been married quite a while now. But lately I've wondered. Do you still care about me the way you did?"

"Why, Ben!" She was silent a moment, struck not so much by his words as by the look on his face, and the tone of his voice—the urgency, and the unhappiness. She remembered, then, that the day they arrived in Vermont she'd asked Ben that same question and he'd shrugged it off as inconsequential. She said, in a low voice, "I wasn't sure it mattered to you, Ben."

"I know," he agreed heavily. "It's my fault." And then he added uneasily, "But you've changed, Lydia. I can't figure it out, but you used to be like this when we were first married."

She tried to think back. She'd had a job then; she'd had a dozen different interests, and a great many friends. But somehow she'd let most of it slide.

It wasn't altogether clear to her yet; but she realized that she felt different from the way she had before—happier and more alive. Something had changed her. Perhaps it was Vermont, or learning to paint again, or knowing Martin. Maybe all three combined. But somehow she had found herself, and in finding herself it seemed that she had found Ben too.

She said gently, yet confidently, "Of course I love you, Ben. But I wasn't sure that I could make you happy."

"Now you're talking riddles!" He came over and pulled her to her feet. "You've always had a lot of foolish ideas," he said, but she could hear the undercurrent of relief in his voice. He held her close and ran his strong fingers through her hair. "I guess I haven't been much of a husband," he said, "but I've always loved you, Lydia."

She didn't really believe that, but she knew that Ben would never understand.

"I want to see those pictures of yours down at the show," he continued firmly. "And I want us to do things together. Are you glad we bought the house?"

"Of course," she said. And she knew that would always be Ben's way. Underneath, he really cared. He didn't know how to talk about his feelings, but they were there just the same. She said, "I've been pretty selfish this summer, or I would have realized Kathie wasn't well."

"Not necessarily."

"It's true though. I've been wrapped up in my painting, wrapped up in myself—discontented, selfish, a very bad friend!"

He kissed her then. "No more of that," he said. "We never know what's going on around us."

"That's the strange part," Lydia agreed unsteadily. "Two people can sit in the same room together, and be going through such different experiences!"

Ben smiled reassuringly. "You always were one for trying to figure things out," he said; and just the tone of his voice told her, somehow, that he loved her.

They went out into the hall then, and saw that the door to the Dixons' room was still closed. But in the kitchen they found the nurse heating water and preparing things, while Jenny fixed her a cup of tea. The nurse sat stolidly at the kitchen table when the tea was ready.

"The doctor thinks about an hour," she told them, in a flat, matter-of-fact voice.

Jenny went upstairs to make sure the children were still asleep. They had all three been restless the early part of the evening, aware of some upset in the household. To console Sharon they had even moved her little cot into the boys' room.

When she entered the children's room, she saw that Martin was sitting on the window seat, staring out into the dark. She said, in a low, sharp whisper, "What are you doing here?"

"Pete wanted a glass of water," Martin said. "I was afraid he'd wake up again, and ask for his mother."

"Oh." She stood there, looking at the three children, and at Martin's great bulk in the window. Finally she said, "I'll get Sharon's other blanket. I think there's a storm coming up."

"There is a storm coming up," Martin agreed. He followed her into Sharon's jumbled but attractive little room. He said, "Did you guess? I mean about Kathie Dixon?"

Jenny considered. She said, "I knew she wasn't well. I thought of tuberculosis, and a lot of other things, but not the real trouble."

"And I was under the impression that she needed a sense of humor—some kind of spark plug to make her sit up and take notice!" he told her.

"You would think that!" Jenny said furiously. "That's just the way your mind would work!" She remembered Kathie's face on the pillow, the suffering and the unspoken fear in her dark gray eyes. She said angrily, "And I suppose you'd consider yourself the ideal spark plug. You're exactly that stupid, Martin Somers!"

"Why, Jenny!" Martin said in surpr
"I never imagined—I had no idea ——" put his hand on her arm, but she thrus aside.

"Don't you dare touch me!" she retor angrily. "If you want the truth, I th you're the most self-centered, conceited son I've ever met in my life."

"And you love me. Is that it?" He had firmly in his arms now, though she pus against his chest.

"Let me go," she whispered breathles
"Please let me go, Martin."

"Not now or ever," he said firm
"Jenny, how did you expect me to gu You're such a capable, self-contained li thing. And such a child."

"I'm not a child. Let me go."

He held her with one hand and tilted head back with the other. And when kissed her, her heart plunged wildly.

"Oh, Martin," she begged, "let me go!

"You don't trust me. Is that it?"

"Of course not. How could I, ever?"

"You think I've been falling in love Lydia?"

"I don't think anything. I don't care w you do!"

"You mean you never think of me? Yo not going to think of me at college?"

She said, "I wish I'd never met you. T much I am sure of."

"You don't know me, Jenny," he s
"I'm lonely too. Being an artist is a lo life. Being self-centered—well, I'll ad that; I can't help it. But it cuts you off, have to compensate."

She didn't understand him, but she k
she was helpless. Anyone who loved Ma was bound to suffer. He was unpredicta he was selfish, but she would never be re happy without him.

"You think I'm not dependable, is it?" he asked.

"I know you're not."

There was only a night lamp burning in room, and in its soft shaded light he searc her face. "Anyhow, you love me," he finally. "And, Jenny, I need you. I've needing you for a long time. I know now." He kissed her again, gently this ti
He said, "Why do you suppose I've wa to paint you all the time? You'll just hav be dependable for both of us, Jenny."

"Oh, Martin, don't say those things ur you mean them," she begged.

"And you don't think you'll like Gr wich Village in the winter, and Vermon the summer?"

"Oh, Martin, please!"

"All right," he agreed. "We'll talk ab it tomorrow."

He went with her to the children's ro
while she put an extra blanket on Sha
But there he took her in his arms again, as the storm broke.

"You're going to marry me," he quietly. And though she didn't answer, knew she would have to do whatever asked.

The rain lashed with sudden fury aga the big, rambling house; and the do straightened up and turned hurriedly to nurse. Kathie could hear the water peltin the roof, and then the sudden burst of th der; and all of it seemed to merge with exhaustion, and this tormenting under rent of regret. She asked the question, cause she had to know.

And the doctor said briefly, "It w have been a little girl, Mrs. Dixon."

They left her alone finally. But tho her mind was drowsy from the sedat that other awareness would not le Through the blur of tears she could see foolish design of the wallpaper—blue flo and pink robins—over and over again every wall of the room. She must have do because she did not hear Hank come in,
when she opened her eyes he was there.

He began smiling right away, puttin an act of cheerfulness which didn't fool in the least. "You gave us quite a s darling," he said, "but the doctor you'll be all right now."

(Continued on Page 104)

Rendezvous in a Bus Station

By Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

I sit near the entrance to quicker discover
The dashing approach of my overdue lover,
And watch while the doors spill a rushing brigade
Of what must be fugitives from a charade.
For here in full sail comes a dowager clipper.
And close on her heels is a snubby-nosed nipper
Who pops through the door like a cork leaping out of A flask of champagne. And there's surely no doubt of That beautiful girl. She is lilacs and smoke.
Then a little red hen in a pinfeather toque
Who mothers her bundles like eggs in a nest.
And there's a March lion who puffs out his chest
And blusters and flusters his small lady lamb.
And that little girl must be cookies and jam.
But here comes my love looming bright in the crowd,
The sun stepping suddenly out of a cloud!

Before you buy in August sales, check this new, important information about sheets!

TESTS PROVE SUPERFINE MUSLIN SHEETS GIVE GREATER STRENGTH, GREATER VALUE

Over 1,000 more threads, over 100,000 more inches of thread than regular muslins in each average size sheet insure a finer, firmer sheet at a price you want to pay

THE PERFECT TRIO—finer texture, greater strength, longer wear! You get all three in Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslins. Each Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslin has over 1,000 more threads, over 100,000 more inches of thread than a regular muslin of the same size. Result: a closer, firmer weave for a finer, stronger sheet. No wonder Lady Pepperells are the finest grade of muslin you can buy. Ask for them in white and 7 "personality" colors at your favorite store.

NEW PROOF OF GREATER STRENGTH! Tests prove Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslin Sheets are 33⅓% stronger than lower count muslins crosswise, and crosswise threads get most wear, are first to break when sheets wear out! Dollar for dollar, penny for penny, you just can't buy a stronger sheet for your money!

REAM IN COLOR—IN LADY PEPPERELL MUSLIN SHEETS! es, Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslins come in ven "personality" colors! Pink, spring green, each, aqua, rose, light blue, maize—choose the ne that flatters you most. Or, if you're a traditionist, ask for Lady Pepperells in classic white.

LADY PEPPERELL Superfine MUSLIN SHEETS

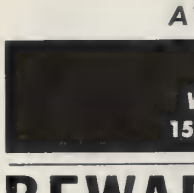
REMEMBER, Pepperell is a promise... of top quality in fine combed percale and muslin sheets

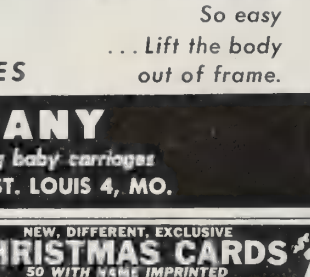
PEPPERELL FABRICS®

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS



GOOD AT FIGURES! Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslins average more than 144 threads per square inch—at least 12 more than regular muslins. When you buy an 81" x 108" sheet, you buy 8,748 square inches. Simple arithmetic proves there are 1,188 more threads, 104,976 more inches of thread in a Lady Pepperell Superfine Muslin Sheet than in a regular muslin of the same size.

or north, south or east but go in your



Welsh "Boodle Buggy"

LIFTS RIGHT OUT EASY TO CARRY

GOES IN THE CAR

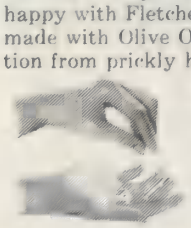
FOLDS FOR STORAGE

Save the expense of renting a crib — take your own Travel Bed wherever you go! Use it in the car, on train or 'plane — in tourist camp or hotel!

So easy ... Lift the body out of frame.

AT ALL LEADING STORES

WELSH COMPANY
World's largest manufacturer of folding baby carriages
1535 S. EIGHTH ST. · ST. LOUIS 4, MO.



BEWARE INSECT BITES
May Cause Infection As Well As Torment

Neglected bites from non-poisonous insects may cause dangerous infection! Oil-O-Sol soothes, cools, comforts — acts instantly to ease pain, itch, smarting. At the same time Oil-O-Sol serves to help control infection, reduce swelling, speed healing. A wonderful germ-arresting antiseptic for simple cuts, burns, scratches. Oil-O-Sol at your drug store.

NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE
Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS $1
50 WITH NAME IMPRINTED
Pen-'n-Brush STUDIOS
EARN EXTRA $$$ NEW BONUS PLAN earns you up to and OVER 100% PROFIT
$50 & MORE. Yours for selling only 100 startling new boxes. Other AMAZING profits with surprise items. You take NO RISK. Send postal card today for samples on approval. You also get free samples easy-to-sell personal Christmas cards, stationery, napkins. It costs nothing to try. Write TO-DAY.
PEN-'N-BRUSH, Dept. L-8, 139 Duane St., N. Y. 13, N. Y.

MY MOM keeps me "Moisture-Proofed" and happy with Fletcher Z.B.T., the baby powder made with Olive Oil. It gives me real protection from prickly heat, diaper rash and urine scald . . . as this simple test proves:

Smooth Fletcher Baby Powder with Olive Oil on your hand — sprinkle with water. See how Fletcher resists moisture — keeps skin dry and protected. Compare with ordinary powders.

Fletcher (Z.B.T.)®
The "Moisture-Proof"
BABY POWDER
WITH OLIVE OIL

Made by the makers of Chas. H. Fletcher CASTORIA

(Continued from Page 102)

"Oh, Hank!"

"Don't worry, Kathie," he begged. He stroked her arm gently, wishing he could get through somehow to the pain in her heart. "Don't be sorry, sweetheart," he said. "I'm going to take good care of you." And he added unsteadily, "But you must always tell me. Whatever happens, you must always tell me."

"I know," she whispered. "It was my fault. I was so afraid."

"I know," he said. For a moment he stared straight ahead of him—seeing the rain wash down the small panes of the window, seeing the whole dreadful blur of the summer. And then, because she needed it, he found plenty of courage. He turned toward her, and he was smiling again. "Let's start planning it now," he said. "As soon as you're strong enough, Kathie. We need one more baby in this family."

She tried to smile. "A little girl."

"Or a boy. Who cares?" He bent to kiss her. "Go ahead and cry, darling," he said.

She was able not to cry; she even managed a very convincing smile. She said drowsily, "Don't forget you've promised me a celebration."

He looked relieved. "As soon as you're well enough. One we'll never forget."

"Not here," she said, "not here in Vermont."

"No. Back home."

Where we've been happy, she thought. The pain of regret hadn't lessened, but she wasn't going to shadow Hank's life with it. That was her burden, and she'd never quite be rid of it. But now, already, she was locking it away in a corner of her heart—the dreadful confusion, the feelings of guilt, the little girl who might have been.

"I love you, Hank," she said sleepily.

He knelt by her bed, then, and took her in his arms.

The storm broke so suddenly that Lydia and Ben had to run out on the lawn and bring in the chairs and cushions. But after the doctor had driven off, and Martin had taken Jenny home in his jeep, they stood by the front windows, watching the lightning across the valley. "Vermont is quite a place," Ben said. "Are you glad we found it?" He had his arm around her.

"I can't believe it's been just one summer," she said. "I feel so at home here already."

"Remember the day we signed the deed? I didn't know whether you cared or not."

The house was quiet around them now, and Lydia smiled in the darkness. She was really beginning to believe in it now—the contentment, the simple fact of being loved. And that was something she must try never to question again. Because you couldn't cling to love, and you couldn't create it. You could only accept it when it was there.

TELL ME DOCTOR

(Continued from Page 31)

"Good! Now, let me understand this definitely—you've never had a pregnancy in your entire life?"

"No."

"No beginning pregnancy that was interrupted?"

"Indeed not! I told you ——"

"I understand, Mrs. Roe. I just had to get that point firmly fixed, because it eliminates one important possible cause for your trouble. Now let me ask you about your menstrual history."

"Why, I'm regular enough, Doctor, but I have a hard time every month."

"In what way?"

"It lasts a full week, and I have a great deal of pain at the beginning."

"Is the flow profuse?"

"I think it is, Doctor. I use about two dozen napkins."

"I see. Now, I'm going to have you taken to the examining room, to see what I can find out."

It did not take the doctor long to discover a possible source of trouble.

"I note at once," he told the patient, "that the uterus is out of place. It has dropped backward just about as far as it is possible for it to go, and—no, I am unable to manipulate it back into its proper position. I doubt there are adhesions, though, because it is otherwise movable and the tubes and ovaries appear normal, as far as I am able to determine."

"Would that displacement prevent me from becoming pregnant?"

"It could. Besides, if you were able to become pregnant, it would greatly increase the likelihood of spontaneous abortion. Now, I'm going further with this examination. First, we'll make the vaginal canal and the neck of the womb as nearly sterile as possible by means of an antiseptic. Then I'm going to introduce an instrument into the womb itself—careful now, and please don't move, though it will hurt a little. The displacement makes it quite a bit more difficult to accomplish. Very good! Now I'm going to perform the Rubin test by blowing carbon-dioxide gas into your tubes. The pressure is being carefully measured by this mercury column so that no damage is likely to occur. We'll gradually increase it. See how that mercury rises in the column? There—did you notice how it suddenly dropped?"

"What does that mean, Doctor?"

"It means that at least one of your tubes is open, because the gas found its way through it and suddenly was expelled into the abdominal cavity. At a pressure of a hundred and sixty degrees, it was. That's not too bad, though it could be better. Keep perfectly quiet, please. Now I'm going to put in an opaque oil under pressure, so that I can take an X-ray picture of the interior of your womb and tubes. Hold your breath, Mrs. Roe. That does it. Now we'll add a little more pressure and then make another exposure. And a third. Very good. Now I'll remove all this apparatus. Do you notice any discomfort, Mrs. Roe?"

"I—I have a sort of pain up under my shoulder. It hurts—quite a lot."

"I expected that. It is caused by the gas that entered the peritoneal cavity. I'm going to have you lie here while the plates are being developed, and I think you will find that the pain will pass off—I cut the pressure down as soon as the mercury column dipped and you didn't receive a big dose."

Less than an hour later the doctor was ready with his opinion.

"Before I sum up this case, Mrs. Roe, I want to question you upon one point which I neglected. Do you have any trouble at the time of intercourse?"

"Why, no, I don't think so, doctor."

"No pain?"

"Not particularly."

"The experience is satisfactory, you would say?"

"Yes, I think so."

"Very good. Now, in order for a pregnancy to take place, a healthy ovum must be produced, find its way into the Fallopian tube there be fertilized by a healthy sperm which has been able to penetrate to that point, pass into the uterus and there find a healthy mucous-membrane lining ready to receive it. Let us check on what we know of the probability of those steps existing normally in your case.

"We're going to have your husband examined as to the existence and state of health of his sperms. I think we can assume that semen reaches the proper place in your case, from what you have told me. I tested your cervical secretion and it appears normally alkaline. Were it acid, it would kill the sperms. The cervical canal is reasonably open, since I had no difficulty introducing the instrument for the passage of the gas. At least one tube was open, for the gas passed beyond into the peritoneal cavity.

"Now, here are the X-ray pictures. You can see a clearly defined shadow, marking the shape of the uterine cavity and the ca hrough the tubes. The left tube is ob-y open throughout, for you can see at ter end a collection of oil which has d through. Here on the right side, how-there is a break in the shadow and no s accumulated on the outside. I think ight tube has been somewhat distorted ing drawn out of its normal position by ackward displacement of the uterus. In words, the probability of pregnancy ring has been halved by this defect.

nly point we haven't investigated is to the actual production of an ovum, and nine its state of health."
an that be done?"
can, to a degree, though it requires a f detail work over a period of days, ning cells from the vaginal canal. It is a technical job."
ould it be attempted, Doctor?"
o make a thorough job, I believe it
d. However, there's reason enough for sterility in that displacement. It should tified if for no other reason than that ses you so much pain and discomfort month."
hat means an operation, then?"
ot a very severe one."
octor, do you always have to operate cases of displacement?"
y no means. Only when they cause toms and cannot be corrected by other res. In your case I am unable to get the s back into place by manipulation."
Vhat, then, do you suggest?"
irst have your husband examined. In eantime we shall see if we can estabhe fact of your ovulation."
an you really do that?"
Ve can make a pretty good try. Besides vaginal smears I mentioned, exam-n of a bit of lining recovered from the or of the uterine cavity may give us information. I can do that right here in ffice. Then there is the comparison of body temperatures, which is something ich you can assist."
ll be glad to co-operate in any way I

Vell, you can do most of this. It works vay: The normal temperature of the is accepted as 98.6. Actually, there are s some slight deviations from this fig-t has, for instance, been noted that n's temperature is slightly lower dure first part of the menstrual cycle than it is during the last two weeks of the same cycle: also, that the change from lower to higher takes place at about the time of ovulation. The variation is only a fraction of a degree, and for that reason the recordings must be made with the greatest possible accuracy.

"I'll give you an ordinary hospital temperature chart. Each morning, before arising, carefully take your temperature, rectally, for a full five minutes. Record it on the chart by means of a dot and connect the successive dots with a line, to form a temperature curve, or graph.

"When a rise of four to six tenths of a degree occurs after a preliminary drop, it is probable that ovulation has taken place. Of course, extraneous causes like a slight sore throat must be ruled out."

"I think that's wonderful."

"At least it's helpful, sometimes. Now, in the event that your husband's and your own physiology appear normal, I shall suggest that we put that uterus back into place by operative measures. I don't know what else we could do. We haven't absolutely complete knowledge of how these vital processes work, and sometimes it does seem as though a certain quality of sperm is unable to fertilize a certain egg, even though all appears normal."

"Tell me, Doctor, in case what we are going to do fails, what do you think of artificial insemination?"

For a long moment the doctor hesitated. "If you mean artificial insemination by means of the husband's semen, I have tried it a number of times with some success. I fit a cap over the cervix which holds the semen closely in contact with the opening of the uterus. It provides an excellent pool and probably affords some protection against unfavorable vaginal secretions. Too, the semen can be injected directly into the vaginal cavity. I think there is some merit in either method."

"Thank you, Doctor. You've given me an awful lot of your time."

"Don't forget—we aren't through."

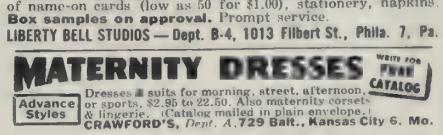
"I won't. I'll be here promptly tomorrow."

"Bring your husband, and I'll talk to him about the whole matter."

"I will, indeed. Thank you again, Doctor."

(To be Continued)

"I know just how it is. I've got one of my own."



Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE DIFFERENT BRECK SHAMPO
FOR THREE QUITE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIO

Hair is dry, oily or normal. If your hair is dry ask for the Breck Shampoo for hair – Breck pH8 Lather Oil Shampoo. There is another Breck Shampoo for oily ha Breck Lacene Shampoo. There is a third Breck Shampoo for normal hair – Br Regular Shampoo. During the summer months when hair is shampooed more o it is especially important to use the correct shampoo for your hair condit Breck Shampoos leave your hair clean, fragrant and lustrous. If you have a baby your home we believe you will enjoy using Baby Breck Lavo for your baby's b

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold. Look for the gold foil

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSE
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANA

"We like to live in each other's pockets." Sheheens and their four sons tackle work or fun as a team, with real zest for living.

It's all in the family

"Life is never dull." Sheheens married on $17 a week, cashed insurance for Niagara honeymoon.

Lebanese recipes combine with old-South dishes, make Lucile "one of the town's best cooks."

Meet the Sheheens, of Camden, South Carolina – first-generation Americans of the busy new South.

By EARL and DOROTHY SELBY

A FEW years ago, the Austin Sheheens, of Camden, South Carolina, had a chance to buy a big, rambling house with six bedrooms, three baths and a living room, "big enough to park the state of Texas in." Up to then Austin, his wife, Lucile, and their four sons had been living in a tiny cottage. The big house offered them privacy, "all the closets we'd ever need," and a view stretching clear to the horizon. Yet the Sheheens turned it down.

They chose instead a trim, white-shingled bungalow where the horizon extends only to other homes on three sides and a clump of trees on the fourth. Nobody has his own room; there is a constant scrambling for the one bath and Austin will tell you, "Seems like in this place all we ever do is bump into each other." But the pert Lucile explains in a drawl warm as the Southern sun, "We like to live in each other's pockets." The boys say, "You never have to ask where anyone is." Adds a neighbor, "You know the story about one for all and all for one. That's the Sheheens."

In particular, neighbors call attention to the way this family spends Friday nights, when all hands are on deck for the weekly house cleaning. It starts off as Lucile, her brown eyes snapping beneath her glasses, sings out, "All right, now, boys." Then 7-year-old Bob and Michael, 10, get to the small fry's baseboard-dusting task. Austin, Jr., 15, winds up his evening KP with a flourish and drifts into the living room to join 13-year-old Freddie, already at work on

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

"If I had a million dollars I'd have an orphanage, that's how much I like kids." Doctor advised Lucile to have no children—she wanted as many as possible. Older boys took over housework during her 14-month illness after birth of Bob, 7.

"Antiquing is my vice." Best buy: at $2.50 a mahogany table for which dealers have bid as high as $500.

Energetic Austin, president of Junior Chamber of Commerce, "is on every committee in town," Lucile says.

No "door-mat parents," Sheheens insist boys "always think things out for themselves— any fool can follow the crowd."

the Venetian blinds. Their father mans first the wax mop, then the vacuum cleaner, meanwhile casting an amused glance at his chunky five-foot wife as she tinkers with their antique pendulum clock. From the older boys' record player in the bedroom comes the chanting Ghost Riders in the Sky. Michael gets up from his knees to beat out a tap dance. "Y'all think you're Bill Robinson, maybe?" teases Freddie, the dimpled one. He argues the Civil War with Austin, Jr., who heatedly defends the Confederate cause and then breaks off to sing along with the Mule Train. A couple of hours later, Lucile serves up a freshly baked cake plus the batch of stories saved specially for her menfolk.

"Newnie" (15-year-old Austin, Jr.,) is a high-school sophomore, member of the football team; plans on college (currently favors Notre Dame). He may use family car two nights a week, but must be home by 11 P.M.

Freddie, 13, finds roar of hair drier shuts out distractions like Mule Train (via record), Mike's tap dancing and family "discussions" (real fights draw penalties). He edits his class paper at school, writes ultramodern music

"I'd like easy chairs in the kitchen so people could relax—it's the busiest room in our 7-room house."

Lucile buys staples at salvage stores, home-cans fruit, vegetables. Food for 6 (biggest expense), $40 a week.

"We go fishing and picnicking Sunday—after church." Sheheens' church is a vital part of daily living.

Austin's service station, a 1939 gamble, has since tripled its business against his fifty competitors.

Second son of Lebanese immigrant, Austin began work when he was 6; today a leading citizen, he grosses $13,000 a year. In opinion of mayor, men like Austin are the hope of the "new Camden."

Not long ago, the Sheheens had a Friday-night guest who remarked that while it was no surprise to see children help with the housework, it was a surprise to see this done so willingly. "How lucky you are," she told Lucile. "Lucky?" Lucile replied. "Austin and I have worked for our luck." From the start, both thumbed down outside care for the boys. Until three years ago, they never had a baby-sitter, using spare hours together to develop their sons both as individuals and members of a team. All four have been encouraged in special talents. But all understand that theirs are no "door-mat parents"; certain demands are made of them and certain rules enforced. As if it were the

Despite minor rebellions ("None of the other fellows have to wash dishes!") Sheheens generally agree housework is a family affair. "When the boys share the work," Lucile says, "I always have time to stop and share their interests."

As members of a devout Catholic family, boys are taught to respect "equality of souls," to "do what's right." Lucile's formula: "Praise them when praise is due, scold them and deny them privileges when they deserve it."

"If you are a bit hard on kids when they are young, you can be a lot easier when they are older."

"We want them to know we're here when they need us, but they must learn to get along without us too." Sheheens say the boys will choose their own careers.

"Time for baseball with the kids," courtesy Sheheen share-the-work plan. Friday nights all hands clean house. Time, 2 hours; pay, fresh cake, family talk.

most natural thing in the world, for instance, Lucile expects them to do chores ordinarily reserved for girls. Before they leave for school, their beds must be made and rooms tidied, the breakfast table cleared and dishes stacked. Afternoons, the silver is there to be polished; at night the washing up after dinner. Again, she unquestioningly expects them to have good manners. Women visitors are always "ma'am'd," men are "sir'd." Without ostentation, Michael hangs up hats and coats; Bob is laughingly termed "the world's champion ash-tray toter." Fights among themselves are punished by separation. Thus, the boys are careful to "just discuss" their differences, whether it's a question of who'll use the catcher's mitt or who has the "right" to beg off dishes for football practice. Lucile feels her discipline is reinforced by their Roman Catholic training. Taught to respect the "equality of souls," the boys are urged to apply this doctrine in daily living. Occasionally, Freddie brings up the color question and asks what his attitude should be. Or Austin, Jr., wonders whether to keep a friend the rest of his crowd has dropped. "Think it out for yourselves," Lucile says, reminding them that "Any fool can follow a crowd. It takes a real man to stand up and do what's right."

At 36, a cheerful extrovert who's sure things will turn out for the best, Lucile wears her curly hair flyaway style, refuses to try make-up, pays no mind to fashion. Her dark, hard-muscled husband, who's building up a thriving oil-and-gas business, rarely wears a tie and dislikes taking the time to buy a suit. Yet both have time for a garden, fishing, their daily lunch for two; above all, "time to enjoy life with our children." For although Lucile insists that (Continued on Page 112)

"See what happens when customers are treated right..."

"... They just keep coming back day after day. Betty and I have been shopping at A&P for a long time—and it all started over a steak. Man, it was good! And it didn't take long for us to find out that they're just as fussy about everything else. In fact, we like the way they do business!"

Yes, folks have found our way of doing business to their liking and more of them shop at A&P than ever before. They like the way we price-mark everything — on the items as well as on the shelf. They like the idea of getting an itemized cash register receipt for their purchases, which they can take home. They know every single purchase is covered by a guarantee of satisfaction or their money will be cheerfully refunded. And our "every day low price" policy assures them savings any day and every day. Things like these spell customer satisfaction to us at A&P.

Won't you stop in at your nearest A&P Super Market soon? Look over the wide variety of foods—compare the prices. We'd like you to be one of our satisfied customers, too!

"SIZED UP" . . . AND PRICED DOWN!

Several times a day A&P clerks check the fresh fruit and vegetable displays. Items that are perfectly good, but do not quite meet A&P's exacting requirements for eye appeal or uniformity of size, are removed. They are put on the "Quick-Sale" Table at reduced prices! Yes, A&P insists that you get real value for your money . . . every time.

WHY $5 GOES SO FAR AT A&P

Suppose you spent $5 for food at A&P—did you know that less than 7½¢ of that would be net profit to A&P? That's actually less than 1½¢ on the dollar! No wonder folks like to shop at A&P, where this low profit policy helps them to get more good food for their money. Wouldn't it help reduce your food bills?

ONE STOP SHOPPING

You'll find everything you want at A&P . . . for a snack or a banquet! Foods that are fresh, canned or frozen! Meats, vegetables, dairy products, beverages, baked goods! Everything! Come see how worthwhile it is to shop under one roof . . . at our "every day low prices.

Customers' Corner

Do you like the layout of your A&P Super Market? Is it clean and tidy at all times? Is the price marked on every item so that you can see it easily? If you have any complaints, or if you have any suggestions that will help us serve you better, we'd appreciate your letting us know. Please write:

Customer Relations Dept., A&P FOOD STORES
Graybar Building, New York 17, N. Y.

A&P

SUPER MARKETS

You'll never forget the day you try IMPROVED FELS-NAPTHA!

You'll say it's a 'WHITE' LETTER Day in your life . . . the first day you wash one of hubby's shirts with Improved Fels-Naptha Soap! That shirt will be cleaned as only good soap can clean it. And you'll both agree you've never seen a WHITER shirt!

Make every washday a 'WHITE' LETTER Day. Always use Improved Fels-Naptha—the only laundry product that gives you three washday advantages—

1. Mild, golden soap.
2. Gentle, active naptha.
3. Finer 'Sunshine' Ingredients for extra, brilliant whiteness and clearer, brighter colors.

IMPROVED
Fels-Naptha Soap
BANISHES "TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

(Continued from Page 110)

her boys toe the line, she also aims to create a home where they'll feel loved and wanted. She's never too busy to help Bob with his reading or hurry down to school to cut a stencil for Fred's paper. Knowing cream puffs or cookies are waiting for them, neighborhood kids troop through the kitchen after classes. "Routine!" she exclaims. "What does the word mean? I can always stop when the little fellows ask me out to see the birds and squirrels in the front yard or the big ones need a shortstop."

This relaxed philosophy, her husband believes, is one reason why the boys are so willing in their duties. Of course there are occasional backslides and complaints. "Why do I have to wash dishes?" Austin, Jr., asks. "None of the other fellows do." "You don't have to," Lucile answers. "We can get us a maid; but remember, if we take money for that, we'll have to cut down somewhere else—like maybe on your bicycle." Austin goes back to the job, and to bolster his ego both parents are liberal with praise that night. All the children have had their budget of spankings and reprimands. "If you're a mite hard on them when they're young, you can be a lot easier when they're older." Black-marked for talking too much in school, Bob and Michael found the movies out of bounds for six weeks. When Austin, Jr., overstayed his eleven-o'clock curfew, down came the ban on his three-nights dating privilege. Each boy is told to keep within his allowance or find outside work for extra money. So far, Freddie cooks Saturday lunch and baby-sits while his older brother works summers for their father. Neither Lucile nor Austin has tried to plan their sons' careers; both keep a tactful distance from personal problems. "We want them to know that we're here whenever they need us, but they must learn to get along without us too."

As a result, the boys have ample opportunity to try their wings in individual pursuits. Austin, Jr., plays tailback on the high-school football team and, by David Harumish trading, has built a stamp collection valuable enough, he thinks, to finance a year in college. Known in junior high as a man who gets things done, Freddie edits the paper, pulls down scholarship honors and, after a winter of piano lessons, writes violently modern compositions. With a natural flair for rhythm, Michael studies dancing, while the solidly confident Bob plans to be ■ magician.

BIG-FAMILY living is part of their parents' heritage; both belonged to six-children homes. Austin was the second son born to Abraham Sheheen, an immigrant from Lebanon, the tiny Middle East country that now is part of the Arab bloc. Landing at Newport News, Virginia, in 1896, he and his brother trudged 300 miles, peddling needles, thread, garters and other knick-knacks before they settled in Camden. Then, as now, the town was proud of its rich history. Here the great Battle of Camden had been fought—the Colonials' worst defeat—and here the surging tide of civil war had swept by. Here also, townsmen say, met the last legal duelers in America; to this day, when a state official is sworn in, he must take an oath that he has never dueled. Tradition, however, was not what Abraham and Joe Sheheen found interesting. They chose Camden because it was a good place to do business.

When Austin was six, he was already working in their general store. With his older brother Ernest, he opened at five-thirty, swept up and then carted to the sidewalk such items as horse collars and kerosene lamps, choice potatoes and smoked herring to tempt the passing shopper. Shortly after eight, they ran home for breakfast, but were due back ten minutes after school was out to work until late in the evening. The only delivery vehicle was Austin's wagon, and he was a familiar sight on Camden's dirt streets and flagstone walks. All through his high-school days, Austin followed this routine. Though he has the athlete's easy grace, there was no time for playing football or baseball; neither could he join the gang at the Wateree River's swimming hole. He had very few dates, but he did have an unspoken image of the girl he someday wanted to marry. She would be personable, talkative, fond of children, a girl who could share his work and religion yet also take the stuff of everyday life and make it a thing of magic.

UNAWARE that she was destined to fit these dimensions, Lucile was growing up quite differently. Her father, a practical romantic who'd eloped to America with his Lebanese sweetheart, had built a profitable grocery and watch-repair business in Columbia, South Carolina's capital. While Austin was passing up college and working without pay because his father needed him, Lucile's home had two servants. There was no reason to learn cooking; she saw more of the forty dolls in her playroom's three dollhouses than she did of a dust mop. His children found Fred Roukas strict (no dates for the four girls unless he'd met the boys) but loving (cheerfully, he let as many as thirty or forty young people make his home their castle for dinner, cards and dancing). Lucile never had to ask for an allowance, since he always had an extra dime or quarter to finance her shopping expeditions. "Father probably spoiled us," she admits. "But he wanted us to have our fun when we were young. Then no matter what happened we could always say we'd had it."

Lucile remembers being very romantic. "I was in and out of love every month or so." It took two years, however, for Austin to win her. She saw him first in her father's store, thought him handsome "but nothing that would interest me." Later, coming down the stairs for one of the family open houses, she suddenly found herself face to face with him. "There was nobody around to introduce us," she recalls. "We just stood there and gaped. Then we started talking, and before the night was through I bet my sister he'd ask me for a date. And I won." On his way home that night, Austin telegraphed the request he'd been too shy to voice in person. She accepted, "But on the night he'd asked for, a storm blew down the trees just all over the highway, so we had to break the date. I wouldn't give him any more after that so he started coming to our open houses. He'd talk to me when I was there and to daddy and mother when I wasn't. They came to appreciate him a lot quicker than I did." When Austin proposed, they'd still never been out alone and Lucile was more surprised than smitten. But she did allow him to escort her to parties where (the worst dancer in town) he waited on the side lines while she (one of the best) whirled with her other beaus. "I treated him terribly, but he was the best old thing. I guess he got indispensable."

No Regular Money Coming In

HOW do you manage to bring up a family, pay the rent, keep up appearances and "make do" on the spasmodic earnings of a struggling young actor who is, in the words of his pretty wife, "not a star, or even a name actor"?

Meet the Roscoe Todd Karns, Jr., second-generation Hollywood family, in—

"The Most Talented Kid in Town"

By Roger Butterfield

How America Lives in the September LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ey were married November 21, 1933, n navy blue with beaver trim, he in his winter suit. The wedding was quiet—e's father had recently died—and with ridegroom earning a bare $17 weekly, it also a wedding on a shoestring. To fi-e a Niagara honeymoon, Austin cashed s life insurance; to hold expenses down, planned to live with his parents. But n three months, Lucile discovered she pregnant and they had to find their own . "Lordy, I like to have cried inside," ays, remembering the four-room cottage Austin picked out. It had weeds grown e windows, a leaky roof and a dreary in-so grimed that they had to scrub inch of floor with lye. The rent, how-was only $10 a month and Austin was mined they'd make do on his salary.

r a time, the doing was hard. Lucile felt d lonely. She had trouble in the kitchen rtment, too, wrestling with the prob-of no hot water and a two-burner kero-stove. Early menus featured eggs—even good eggs," she confesses. "Then d hamburgers, hard as a rock, and peas, bullets, and rice, like mush. My first pie we fed to the chickens." They ed a vegetable garden, only to have it in a late-spring frost. Of course there no money for entertainment. Before baby was born, they saw only two es; it was splurging if they treated a borhood couple to an evening of s and cookies.

t little by little, things improved. Aus-owed the lawn and laid a stone walk; e planted a border of chrysanthemums etunias. Together they painted the walls rm yellows and creams, and soon home-curtains decked the windows. "In a " Lucile muses, "that was a wonderful , even if it did let the dust in some-fierce. The best things that happened happened there." By the best things, e means her children. "If I had a mil-dollars, I'd have me an orphanage—s how much I like kids." Actually, be-of a blood disorder, her doctor advised o have none at all. Each of her preg-es was toxemic and the couple figure medical bills have cost them $5000 since marriage.

neither partner complained, even after s birth, when Lucile was in bed for four-months. Both acknowledge now that ime was their "rockest bottom." Aus-as working night and day in a war-essen-ob; the grandmothers were sick and n't take over; help was impossible to find. To keep the household going, Lucile stationed her bed near the kitchen, the older children—then nine and seven—learned to cook; neighbors spelled one another to see the babies had proper care. In his spare hours, Austin washed diapers, made formula, did the late and early feedings, and bolstered Lucile's morale with the tiny gifts, sometimes no more than a flower, that a lover remembers for his lady.

TODAY, if you ask Lucile's personal recipe for a happy marriage, her prompt answer is, "Austin. That man," she marvels. "He can do anything. He can fix anything. You know that comic-strip character who says 'My Willie can do anything'? Well, I've got one of those." When she needed a cabinet big enough to hold her china, glassware and trays, Austin designed and built it, just as he laid linoleum for the bathroom and back porch, styled and constructed their garden furniture, and turned a pile of bricks into an outdoor fireplace. Lucile figures that his home-made valances probably saved them a couple of hundred dollars.

The home which provides this Mr. Fix-it with an unending string of jobs is a compact affair with bright green shutters. Part of a subdivision on the northeastern edge of Camden, it is surrounded by flowering shrubs, honeysuckle and mock orange. Red nandina berry bushes flourish near the front door. Pink and white camellias bloom by the sidewalk, and, in the back yard, thorny long-stemmed roses glow. Everywhere there is color—and Lucile loves it.

"If anything proves there's a God," she says, "it's color." Inside, her kitchen walls are a warm yellow. "Yellow makes me happy."

The older boys' back bedroom is austerely masculine with battleship-gray walls and maple furniture, but Michael and Bob have flouncy curtains and deep blue bedspreads. The living room is a soft dusty pink, with gold drapes striped in blue to match the rugs and blend with Lucile's cherished antiques. The living room is her pride, but the traffic is far heavier in the eight-by-twelve kitchen where Sheheens and visitors gravitate. Of an afternoon, when Lucile cooks, four or five friends drop in to chat and sample a recipe. One of her triumphs is "tably," a cracked-wheat salad; another is fry-bread, a golden pastry puff, which she'll send to a new neighbor instead of a calling card. As she rolls the dough, conversation bubbles on while kids racket in and out pursuing their own games. If Lucile were designing homes, she'd make the kitchen

The Sheheen Budget

Net income (monthly)	$458.00
Expenses (monthly)
Food	$160.00
Clothing	23.00
Furniture (annual replacement)	31.00
Utilities	19.16
Insurance	32.49
Medical	12.50
Recreation	16.66
Church	25.00
Telephone	3.25
Magazines, newspapers	5.58
Automobile upkeep	12.00
Mortgage payments	33.33
Laundry, dry cleaning	26.00
School lunches; piano and dancing lessons	22.08
Savings	10.00
Miscellaneous	25.00
	$457.05

Yearly Federal income tax of $300 is paid out of Austin's gross profits.

"With Satina in my starch ironing is 3 times easier!"

WRITES MRS. HAROLD F. MALOY
PORTLAND, MAINE

"SATINA SURELY SAVES ME TIME!" writes Mrs. Maloy. "It makes the little girls' starched dresses 3 times easier to iron! I never have to stop to clean my iron. No sticking—no dragging!"

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you use with boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

It not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, and stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free, full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings! Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself!

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

SATINA, Dept. B-4, Box 1260, New York 46, N. Y.
Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free, full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME_____

STREET_____

CITY_____ STATE_____

Satina II users say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

They'll be the busiest things in your wardrobe...

at one fine store in your city . . . write dept. L5 for full color fashion folder

Wool "Suitmakers" are Handmacher's brilliant salute to the new fashion for year 'round unlined suits. Glorious autumn tones in checked worsted, yarn-dye worsted or suave wool gabardine. Sizes 10 to 20, 9 to 15, proportioned sizes 10½ to 20½. $37.50 tailored by Handmacher

"YOU CAN FEEL THE GOOD FIT"

HANDMACHER-VOGEL, INC. ▪ 533 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 18

the biggest room—"and I'd have easy chairs so people could really relax."

Their friends, however, say that even without kitchen easy chairs, the Sheheen home is a comfortable place to visit. Every two months or so Lucile invites their whole crowd for six or seven tables of bridge. For these evenings she serves buffet supper: baked ham, her own butter beans, a tossed green salad, hot rolls, pie or cake and coffee. In the warm months there are wienie roasts and fish fries in the garden or up at the nearby Wateree Lake, where the family summers in a two-room shack. For outdoor occasions, Austin does the cooking, a hobby second only to hooking rugs with his wife. He laughs, "She lives in a man's world. I practice the womanly virtues. Life with Lucile is never dull," he adds. "She can balance my books; she can teach the kids to jitterbug. Anything she does just naturally works out."

As Example A, Austin points to her antiquing. In an area noted for the zeal of its collectors, Lucile is one of the most enthusiastic. At the flash of a telephone call, she'll join any willing friend in a day-long tour of crossroads auction sales. "Look," she says, "I don't drink, I don't smoke. Antiquing is my vice." Everyone admits that this "vice" skillfully stretches the family's $5500 income. In the living room, for instance, is a home-refinished mahogany pedestal table. Dealers have offered up to $500 for it. Lucile bought it for $2.50. At one sale an auctioneer tipped her off about a "mess of eyelet embroidery." After hours of waiting she picked up 500 yards, enough to curtain the whole house, for $5. With $50, she bought two mahogany beds, innerspring mattresses and a dressing table for the younger boys' room. And her "little luxuries"—the milk glass, hand-cut crystal powder jar and gold-leafed picture frames—cost less than a quarter apiece. In the garage—"My junk room, don't faint when you look inside"—are desks, rockers, tea wagons, ante-bellum parasols and even a pioneer's muzzle-loading rifle waiting to be repaired. Surveying the antiques strewn among boys' bikes, rows of mason jars and his woodworking lathe, Austin comments, "Everything here except our car."

> If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world. —FRANCIS BACON.

Because she's always trading, buying and reselling, Lucile figures that her antiquing averages out to very little cost. But should she need cash on the spur of a purchase, she usually has some pin money left from the $300 Austin gives her monthly to run the house. Until last summer, the Sheheens were admittedly "free and easy with the budget. We spent what we had. Period." Austin handled their money and frequently arrived home with gifts Lucile knew they couldn't afford. "He'd see something and couldn't resist it. Only thing was, we got so we didn't know where our income was going."

THEY decided to find out. Expenses were split into two categories: Hers (food, utilities, laundry, cleaning, insurance, medical bills and the boys' clothes, dancing and music lessons), and His (mortgage, car, their clothes, recreation, magazines and newspapers). Biggest item on his list is the $400 yearly mortgage payment. When they bought their bungalow for $4400, Austin needed a $1900 mortgage, but this was boosted to $3400 when they extended the dining room seven feet (to accommodate Lucile's table that seats twenty-four) and built a den. Because of gifts from the boys' grandparents and other relatives, Lucile can limit her clothing expenses to under $20 a month; insurance takes about $26, laundry and cleaning another $26.

Food, of course, is her major challenge. She spends about $40 a week for groceries—$2080 a year. But by patronizing two railroad-salvage and fire-stock stores out in the country, she gets staples up to 50 per cent under the regular price. In the Camden area, wild berries and plums are free for the picking along a hundred roads; in addition, Lucile has a vegetable patch that yields such fallible crops her husband says, "Seems anything she plants comes up like it w personal favor to her." The result is every fall, the Sheheen cellar bulges with quarts of canned beans, tomatoes, figs blackberries; 300 jars of jelly, and a me of soup stock, squash, okra, corn, peac applesauce and grape leaves—the last t stuffed with meat, rice and tomatoes favorite family dish.

LUCILE also saves through a small disco on meats and vegetables in the Shel store, now a fancy grocery and run by tw Austin's brothers. Austin stayed in the s until 1939, when he pulled out because $25 weekly salary wasn't enough to sup his family. With Lucile's encouragement mortgaged their furniture for a $500 d payment on a Texaco filling station. first month he lost $300, mainly becaus was too friendly with his credit. He was w the second month and made a little. S then, business has tripled, no small feat town where there are fifty competitors.

"If you made a door-to-door searc Camden," says City Manager Lott Ro "you'd have a hard time finding a man w done a better job of pulling himself up by bootstraps than Austin Sheheen." Fri point out that he is also the co-owner of a rage now, and works for the Texas Comp as sales agent and wholesale gas-and-oil tributor in two counties. He grosses a $13,000; after all t and expenses, his ne a touch over $5500. puts him in the to upper-10-per-cent inc bracket, and when a m packing company was organized last win Austin was named as nonsalaried president for the prestige brought.

Mayor Henry Savage says that young like Austin Sheheen are the hope of the " Camden." Until the war, the town was r content with its past, its cotton farming its tourist attractions. The postwar Cam is anything but content. In the last decade population (now 10,000) has nearly dou and sleek new plants of modern industry mushrooming on the countryside. The p example is the $22,000,000 duPont fac for making "orlon," a "wonder fiber" signed to take up where nylon leaves As elsewhere, industry has tended to lo traditional caste bars; now, everyone goe the same gymkhana, whether he arrive a station wagon or a model T. Amusem is plentiful, if not flashy. There are movies, a new stadium for high-school f ball; polo and the Carolina Cup races are spring attractions.

Nevertheless, two years ago, many C denites felt that there still wasn't en supervised recreation for teen-agers. T when Austin was made chairman of Kershaw County Recreation Commis he supervised the spending of $40,000 t the lack. Camden's $15,000 share wen build a teen-age canteen; also a playgr for Negro children. In the canteen Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, dance, play cards and listen to the radi making advance arrangements, their par may use it for parties. The Sheheens frequent hosts and chaperons; for more fifteen years they've been part of Cam civic life. President of the Junior Chamb Commerce, Austin is also treasurer of county orphans' home, and when the t needed a business manager to start a s pro baseball team, he was the unanim choice. Lucile helps energize the Amer Legion Auxiliary, as well as soliciting f for polio, t.b., cancer and other drives.

"It used to worry me," she says, " much time that man spent helping ot But once I realized how much it mean him, I decided the best thing I could d tag along too."

Says Austin, "Everything we've d we've done together. Whenever it was hands doing the work, it was her h steering them." THE or still-to-come warm weather

AROLYN SCHNURER, well-known signer: "My collections this season rect wonderfully slim and slender lines.
it that's no problem if you wear a AYTEX under everything. It's invisie under the scantiest swimsuit."

For vacation days to enjoy

TINA LESER, famous for originality: "My advice is — wear a PLAYTEX, the girdle that slims you where you need slimming, moulds you, holds you in complete comfort — and fits invisibly under the slenderest clothes."

For the first fashions of fall

CEIL CHAPMAN, New York designer: "The supple lines of this new silhouette make a woman look younger, more alive! And what an easy figure to have —with PLAYTEX. It gives the illusion of no girdle at all."

For all day, any day, every day

MAURICE RENTNER, known for his elegant fashions: "The slender, youthful silhouette is a figure every woman can have with a PLAYTEX girdle. It trims away inches, moulds your silhouette naturally, combines power with comfort."

Here's the girdle that leading fashion designers praise for every season, every occasion, every time of day!

INVISIBLE PLAYTEX® PINK-ICE

DE BY A REVOLUTIONARY NEW LATEX PROCESS, PLAYTEX PINK-ICE DISPELS BODY HEAT, SLIMS YOU IN COOL COMFORT.

PINK-ICE washes in ten seconds, dries with the touch of a towel, ready to wear again immediately. Made in one smooth piece of tree-grown liquid latex, PINK-ICE moulds your figure naturally, comfortably, whether you're sitting, standing or walking. In panty, panty with garter, and garter girdle styles at department stores and better specialty shops everywhere.

In SLIM, shimmering pink tubes,
PLAYTEX PINK-ICE GIRDLES $3.95 to $4.95

In SLIM, silvery tubes,
PLAYTEX LIVING® GIRDLES $3.50 to $3.95

Sizes: extra-small, small, medium, large
Extra-large size, slightly higher

INTERNATIONAL LATEX CORP'N.
Playtex Park ©1950 Dover Del.

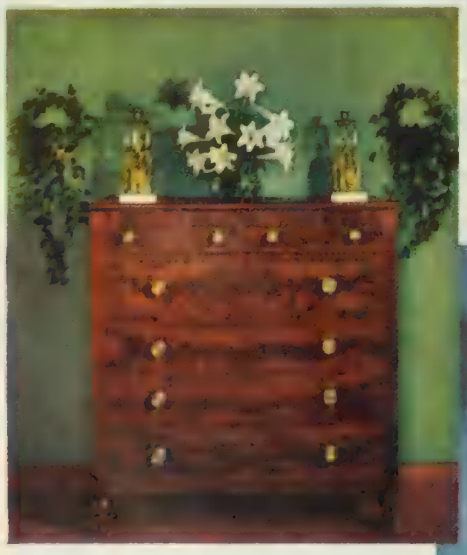
PHOTOS BY HAROLD POWLER



Southern mahogany sofas with an Empire feeling are fairly plentiful at old estate auctions. The armchair is typical of the period and has served the family for over a century. At the end of the sofa is a rosewood melodeon, used as a table.

ROMANTIC SOUTHERN ANTIQUES

• By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
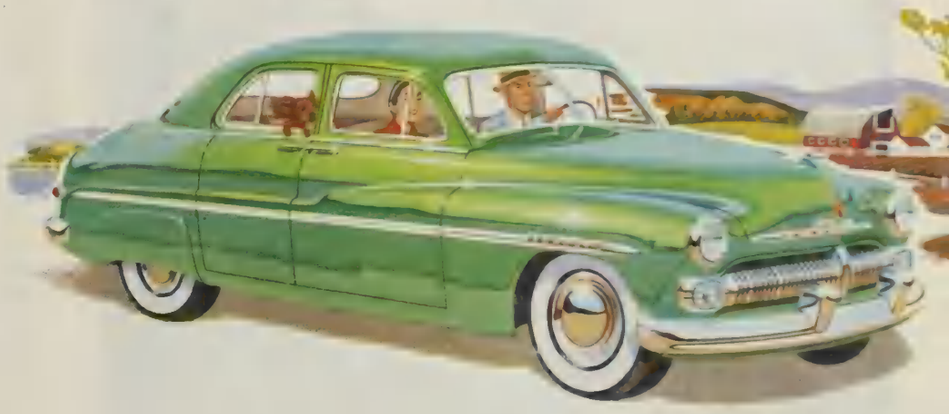
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

"Discovering an antique in a woodshed is twice as exciting as finding one in a shop," according to Lucile Sheheen, who knows all about such treasure hunting.

Mrs. Sheheen was referring particularly to the beautiful mahogany furniture made in this country, in the early 1800's, as an echo of the great eighteenth-century periods in England. (Continued on Page 122)

This great mahogany chest of drawers is still perfect and was bought for less than the cost of today's commercial copy.



Lucile Sheheen is an avid collector and found this mahogany table, painted gray, in a junk shop, priced at $1.25. Scraping and polishing renewed its beauty.

Here is Lucile's mahogany-and-satinwood secretary with two small hand-carved chairs of the period, now scarce and hard to find because there were few of them originally.

Who wins the battle of the open window?

A mussed hair-do and ruffled temper . . . or stuffy air and stony silence? It's a battle nobody wins . . . as every woman knows.

It's a battle that never begins . . . if you own a Mercury. Because Mercury's ventilating system gives you a complete change of air in a matter of seconds . . . with no annoying drafts.

It's just one of the important little things that make the great, big, beautiful new 1950 Mercury so blissfully easy to live with. It's just one of the reasons why more and more smart "happily-marrieds" are making Mercury their car. For other good reasons, check the quiz below.

What's your marriage A.Q.*?

Do you think it's dull to just "go for a drive" with your husband? (It's like having a date when you drive together in the glamorous new Mercury!) YES ☐ NO ☐

Does your husband make fun of your driving? (He certainly won't, if you drive a Mercury. You just can't help being expert.) YES ☐ NO ☐

Do you wonder, at times, if your husband still thinks you're pretty? (You're a picture in the smart, slick Mercury. It's so-o-o becoming!) YES ☐ NO ☐

Does "budget-guilt" make you squash your dreams of buying a new car? (The new Mercury is a money-stretcher! So long on mileage . . . so short on repairs!) YES ☐ NO ☐

Give yourself 10 points for every question you can answer with a "No." If your score is less than 40, hurry to your nearest Mercury Dealer.

*AUTOMOBILE QUOTIENT

She's married—She's happy—

She drives a MERCURY

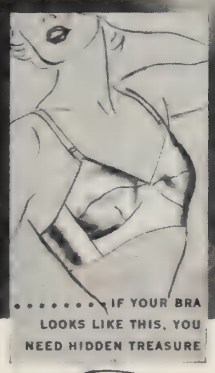
MERCURY DIVISION OF FORD MOTOR COMPANY

No Pads, No Puffs — the contours are built right in!



PETER PAN

SENSATIONAL NEW *Hidden Treasure

for the small or less-than-average bust

Magically, beautifully, naturally — your bust appears fuller, lovelier under all your fashions in Peter Pan's exciting new Hidden Treasure. No gadgets, no devices — never a fear of detection. The secret's in the patented "Magicup". Keeps its shape — and yours — washing after washing. Regular and strapless styles, $2 to $5.

IF YOUR BRA LOOKS LIKE THIS, YOU NEED HIDDEN TREASURE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PETER PAN FOUNDATIONS, INC. 312 FIFTH AVE., N.Y. 1 DEPT. J-3

Merry-Go-Round of Canada, 3643 St. Lawrence Blvd., Montreal, Quebec

Want Subtle Curves? Write for FREE booklet,

"YOUR NEW GUIDE TO BUSTLINE BEAUTY."

*Pat. Pend. T. M. Reg.

Baroness

Tweedies®

ALLURING FOOTWEAR

Quiet elegance

for that well-dressed feeling that reflects inconspicuously the inherent good taste you demand in your apparel footwear.

There is a dealer near you.

Tweedie Footwear Corporation

Jefferson City, Missouri

THE HIDDEN TAX BILL ON $50 A WEEK

(Continued from Page 54)

You Spend — Taxes Take

Bobby's too—although she'd rather he ate a hot lunch at the school cafeteria, which costs only 20 cents, because it is Government subsidized.

A typical weekly grocery list includes about $4 worth of meat, which Eleanor thinks is a lot but which she can't cut down on. "Bob is a meat-and-potatoes man," she says, "and I can't buy the cheaper cuts all the time. He does like spring lamb and a juicy slice of roast beef once in a while." On a $2.50 (four pound) leg of lamb, however, there are 88 cents taxes. The boys also like malted-milk drinks which, in a large can, cost 80 cents and of which, because of the sugar and chocolate flavor, there are some 24 cents taxes. They use oleomargarine instead of butter—although they live in a rich dairy area—because of the price of 41 cents per pound, but there are taxes on this too—about 14 cents. She also buys three loaves of bread a week at 16 cents each. There are at least 151 taxes involved in the making and selling of a single loaf of bread—totaling up to 6 cents per loaf. Milk is delivered to the door; it costs them about $6 for four weeks, of which about $2 is taxes.

All told, the weekly grocery bill is approximately $18.50
It is estimated that of this $5.50 goes into hidden taxes passed on by the food supplier, the processor, the distributor, and the retailer to the F.'s, Mr. and Mrs. Ultimate Consumer.

The next biggest expense is rent, although Eleanor thinks "You certainly can't call it high." Monthly, it's $18, or weekly 4.15 but the landlady says it may have to be hiked because of the property taxes included—$42.50 a year on their apartment alone, which comes down to, weekly 82

There are also some major expenses which roll around infrequently, but which have to be planned for regularly. Last summer they bought three tons of coal at $19.65 a ton—this winter, they had to add some more. This meant their yearly fuel bill was $78.60, or weekly 1.51 of which 33 per cent went for taxes, a total of 50
Their gas-and-electricity bill costs each week about 1.87
the taxes on which are 47
And then there is their phone, a luxury, Eleanor says, costing, weekly 1.16
On local calls, there is a direct tax of 15
There are also hidden utility taxes of about 14
Their water bill comes in twice a year; it costs $10.14 for the last six months, making the weekly cost 39 of which the hidden tax is estimated at 09
Their newspapers come weekly and cost 45
The hidden tax is reported to be 14

As for "necessary extras," as Eleanor calls them, there is, first, their annual vacation. Every week Bob puts $1 into a vacation fund at the plant; when his two-week vacation rolls around he has $50, plus a week's salary, plus an additional day's pay for every year he has worked there. Since he's worked there five years, this gives them actually two weeks off with pay. But Eleanor and he try to keep their expenses around $50, since the at-home expenses go on just the same, or they skip one year and have something bang-up the next (like the year they went to Florida). The taxes on this average weekly vacation cost of . 1.00 are hard to estimate, but since most of the money goes, as usual, for food, they are believed to be 30

Their summer motor trips or seaside visits are their biggest recreational item; "Bob's a stay-at-home man," Eleanor says. About twice a month they go to the local movie (grandmother baby-sits) where adult tickets are 50 cents each, making their weekly movie cost 50 of which 08
goes directly for Federal amusement taxes, and another 10 is estimated to go into hidden taxes. Most evenings, though, they sit and read, or Bob works on something he is fixing to sell, or Eleanor sews. She earns a bit of spare money on her sewing and expert cooking, but it isn't included in family income; it goes into her special fund for a set of china. Eleanor's bugaboo is the drugcounter—in four weeks she usually spends about $5, although if the food bill goes up, here is where she cuts down. But each month, there's either face powder or shampoo, toothpaste or hand cream, or it's time for a home permanent. Weekly this comes to around 1.23 included in which is the straight excise tax, or 20 and there are, hidden, other taxes of 31 passed on by the manufacturers, transporter and retailer. They don't drink, although at holiday time they like wine in the house. Four bottles usually see them through—which is, weekly, only 10 but of which this much is tax 02
Bob smokes about three cigars a week, a package of cigarettes and about a pound of tobacco a month. The total cost weekly is about 54 of which there are direct Federal and state excise taxes of 09 and hidden taxes of approximately 11
Bobby goes to the movies once a week, but since he is still under twelve, he gets in at half price 25 which means more direct and indirect taxes of 09 Chuckie manages to persuade him, or his mother, to take him about twice a month. He's half price, too, but on his weekly 12
there's still a tax of 04

	You Spend	Taxes Take
Although Eleanor can do most of her beautifying at home, Bob and the boys can't. Eleanor tries to keep them down to one haircut every four weeks, at 75 cents each. This averages out weekly	.56
There's no luxury tax on this, but hidden taxes are		.18
The kids have their own pet luxuries too. Chuckie likes coloring books and Bobby likes comics, and both like candy. All told, these add up to about $3.30 in four weeks, or weekly	.82
of which probably 28 per cent goes for hidden taxes		.23
Bobby also spends 10 cents a week Boy Scout dues	.10
but there's no tax on them.
Nor is there any tax on their contributions. They are church people and each Sunday there's change for the plate—and when community drives come along, they'll give what they can. Such gifts average around $4 a month, or weekly	1.00
Clothing, however, is a different matter. When small boys are growing there are countless pairs of shoes to buy. Though Chuckie can wear Bobby's hand-me-downs, and Eleanor is an expert at make-overs for herself and the children both, there's always something to buy—even if it's only work gloves for Bob. Yearly clothes (and their dry cleaning) cost them over $450, which comes down weekly to about	9.00
Taxes on cloth, on machinery, on distribution and on the stores themselves account for hidden taxes of		3.00
There are hidden taxes in the furniture they have bought, too, and in the extras they are still buying. This year it is new slip covers which cost $54, or approximately, weekly	1.00
Of this, probably there was this much tax		.30
There were also some household incidentals in the account. Just little things like new fuses when a fuse blew out, a bottle of Argyrol because Bobby's eyes were pink and irritated, a new bowl for the mixer when the old one broke, a scatter pin Eleanor couldn't resist, some cards to a friend who was ill and another whose birthday it was. Bobby had to buy a school photograph ($1.50) which made Eleanor think she hadn't taken any pictures of the kids for a long time, so she got a roll of film, and then, later, had it developed. "There's always something," Eleanor said. None of it seemed like much, but it added up to about $5, which, looked at by the week, is	1.25
and in which there was an estimated hidden tax of		.35
There is also insurance. Bob carries $3000 life through a group policy, and another $1000 outside. There's $500 on Eleanor's life, and endowment-life policies on Bobby and Chuckie of $420 and $435 respectively. All told, it's an annual bill of $123.28, which is paid at different times, but which averages out to a cost of, weekly	2.37
It is estimated that hidden taxes on insurance are 10 per cent on the F.'s family insurance; this comes to		.24
And there are what New Jersey (one of the 8 states without an income or sales tax) calls "real and personal" taxes. Part is just for taking up space — for existing in a New Jersey county. Part is on the furniture they own—"real property." The total is $5.25 a year, or weekly	.10
all of which is tax		.10
If there is any extra money—maybe every other week—they "borrow" the truck, put in ten gallons of gas, and take a ride or a Sunday drive. They get their gas wholesale—but they pay tax on it just the same. It costs 20 cents per gallon, or, by the week	1.00
Of this, this much is state tax		.15
this is Federal		.07
and there are still hidden taxes amounting to about		.09
If the cost of running and paying for their car came out of the family income—as it does in most families—this would not only swell their expenses, but also swell their tax bill. The truck cost $1492. Of this, it is estimated that $290 went for the 20 per cent taxes on the complex process of producing, delivering and selling an automobile. There are also direct taxes: the cost of the license, $24 on a truck in New Jersey, and the cost of the driver's license, $3, both of which are all tax. There are also the repair jobs that come as the car ages—about $100 worth of service and parts yearly after the first year. About $28 of this, for service taxes are especially high, goes into hidden taxes.
Although the F.'s are a healthy brood, there are, at intervals, doctor and dentist bills. Eleanor has to worry about low blood pressure; Chuckie has what the dentist calls "just naturally not good" teeth; Bobby developed an ingrown wart on his hand. Doctors' bills came to $38 last year; dentists' bills—including the semiannual checkup and cleanups—$49. The factory carries hospitalization on Bob; the family carry none themselves. Ordinary medical expenses can thus be said to average approximately, weekly	1.67
and of this, probably about 25 per cent goes to help pay the doctor's own income tax, or		.40
So, when the F.'s have spent their money (no, their budget doesn't balance) and paid for their board, keep and a spot of fun, they have also paid out a total of		$16.56 in taxes. It's just as if Bob worked almost 1 week out of 3—12.4 hours of a 40-hour week—a little over a day and a half—or 77.5 working days a year—not for himself, but for his local, state and Federal governments—without ever thinking about it.

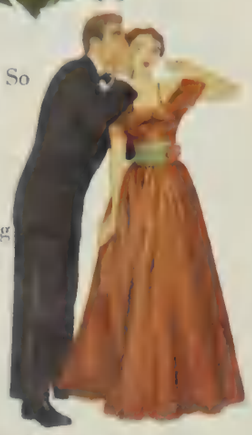
"When the national yearly tax bill of $55,000,000,000 is 24.8 per cent of the national yearly income ($221,500,000,000), everyone—from the one-day-old baby to the oldest citizen in the land, has a share in the pay-off. The strange thing is that no one knows for sure exactly what this share is. It can only be estimated. The JOURNAL, in checking a group of purchases down the economic scale, has used the best possible method to arrive at sound estimates. This is a valuable public service."
—Tax Foundation, Inc.



Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

Cashmere Bouquet

And—

New tests by leading skin specialists PROVE the amazing mildness of Cashmere Bouquet on all types of skin!

Yes, in laboratory tests conducted under severest conditions on normal, dry and oily skin types . . . Cashmere Bouquet Soap was proved amazingly mild! So use Cashmere Bouquet regularly in your daily bath and for your complexion, too. It will leave your skin softer, smoother . . . flower-fresh and younger looking! The lingering, romantic fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet comes only from a secret wedding of rare perfumes, far costlier than you would expect to find in any soap. Fastidious women cherish Cashmere Bouquet for this "fragrance men love".

Cashmere Bouquet —In a New Bath Size Cake, Too!

Now—At the Lowest Price In History!

OLD TIES LOOK NEW

This Amazing Easy Way!

Sanitone Dry Cleaners Announce National Tie-Cleaning Month (AUGUST 1 Thru AUGUST 31)

Give your husband the surprise of his life . . . a closet full of sparkling, spanking-new looking ties. You'll be amazed at how Sanitone Dry Cleaning brings drab, dull colors back to life—how stubborn, ugly spots vanish like magic. Original texture and shape restored to perfection!

Here's the chance of a lifetime come August 1. That's when Sanitone Dry Cleaners feature National Tie-Cleaning month. Don't miss this special opportunity to get acquainted with the different kind of dry cleaning that's best for ties . . . best for all your family's clothes!

WHAT TO DO! A closet full of messy, spotted ties! That's easy, lady, just bundle them up for your Sanitone Dry Cleaner and get ready for the surprise of your life.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Costs No More than Ordinary Dry Cleaning!

Thousands are switching everyday to the miracle dry cleaning that gets out all the dirt—SANITONE. Even the stubborn, ugly grime old-fashioned cleaning leaves behind vanishes. No trace of cleaning odors . . . even perspiration gone. Beautiful press lasts longer. Look up your Sanitone man in your classified phone book.

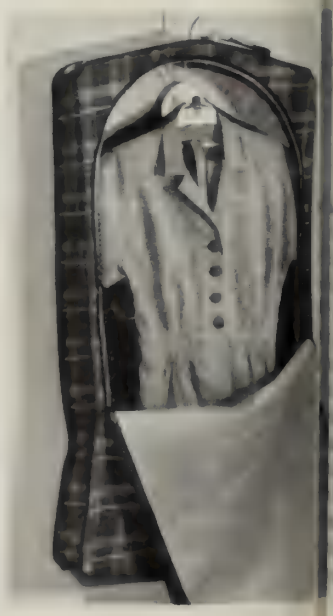
NOW LOOK! Just like new again, thanks to Sanitone. Wait 'til hubby sees them. Patterns and colors get a new lease on life. All spots gone. Original sheen restored!

A Division of EMERY INDUSTRIES, INC. • Cincinnati 2, Ohio

PHOTO BY DI PIETRO

PHOTOS BY ST

Packed up to Go



By Margaret Davidson

THERE'S a good chance your vacation ground, this summer, will be U.S. highway. Thirty-six million visitors, mostly motorists in family group are expected at our national parks and monuments alone. Vacation cloth and paraphernalia for as many as four can probably be stowed in your c since a typical luggage compartment will hold four Pullman suitcases, a h telescope case and a canvas carryall. (See above.) But do make sure y have a tryout with your own car the day before you start. Good news: T inexpensive fabric and plastic bags, light and not easily scuffed up, a better than ever. We picked those illustrated after ransacking the sho Traveling Closets . . . Garment bags, in sailcloth, canvas and plaid cotton, prevent unpacking and repacking. One type (left) comes in men's three-suit and women's six-dress sizes, and folds up into a suitcase. With dust flaps zipped up, both types can hang at full length inside a car on hooks often found at the side rear or on special hooks. Both should be placed so as not to block driver's rear-window view.

Unwrinkled Arrivals . . . F tended in a suit- or dress-length g ment bag, clothes travel unwrinkle But since most of them will go in su cases, take cottons, linens and woo with crease-resistant finishes, a knit materials. "Permanently starched cottons crush less eas Fresh changes like these save ti out for pressing. They can also worn throughout a long, hot and still be presentable at night rsonal Repair Kit . . . Nylon ments dry in a jiffy. For such ck laundry jobs, carry soap es or a powdered detergent in a tic nonspill container. Deter- ts are best in hard-water regions. on also needs little or no iron- But at times you'll be glad of a t folding iron and folding board. hoeshine kit, no larger than the sh on its under side, can have all kes for a high polish beneath its ing top. Everything shown, in- ding the fitted sewing case, first- kit and the clothes brush, will go zippered canvas bag the whole ily can dive into for repairs.

od Grooming En Route . . . p papers, paper handkerchiefs disposable towels and wash- hs will save you space and laun- But if you prefer regular soap washcloths, a nonleak bag is a t for these and for your jars and les of creams and lotions. Plas- fill-your-own bottles are light- ght and all-but-unbreakable; and e cosmetics are ready-packaged lastic. A comb-and-brush com- and folding toothbrush, with ilated case, are purse-size. Snug on-knit bags for shoes protect clothes. And a plastic raincoat s up small enough to fit into the board compartment. Expenses be kept track of in a diary, but an all the happy incidents you love to have on record.

Heavy Sports . . . Sports ment—tennis rackets, riding s, fishing gear—may be the ng of a vacation, but it's all el- to pack. It's heavy, besides. the shirts and slacks and hes that go with it are bulky, ially if you're headed for a r climate. A sturdy yet light- t case, made of fiber, inexpen- v ($11), and expanding to the of its fitted lid is just the for all such impedimenta. It e shipped ahead, if your car is limited, and can be returned same way. But its telescop- ility makes it handy to use for ot you're sure to collect.

ics, Beach, or Just Picnics combination vacuum jug and container is a picnic in itself. o parts can be carried as one. a beach bag in the other you're all set for a day's halt a stream, a lake or the ocean. freezer-bags are fine when hole family has damp bathing nd towels. Sun glasses are eye- for the road as well as for the And don't forget your sun lo- nd your beach shoes. Even injuries are anything but fun, vacation is strictly for fun.

more lustrous, lovelier hair because

Penquin

HAIR DRYER

dries hair without heat

. . . preserves precious natural hair oils

no scalp scorching no perspiring
no harsh blowing
no more nets, towels or ear pads no more dry or brittle hair
all these benefits for only 25c

INSIST ON Penquin HAIR DRYING at leading department stores and beauty salons

Consolidated Productions, Inc., Detroit 26, Michigan

Choice Distributorships Still Available

"Your beautiful cards are just what my friends are looking for!" MRS. BERGMAN New Haven, Conn.

NO WONDER SO MANY FOLKS

Make Good Money

In Their Spare Time . . . Without Taking A Job or Putting in Regular Hours . . . And WITHOUT EXPERIENCE!

HERE'S a friendly way to make a fine income, spare-time or full time. Show lovely Doehla Box Assortments of richly decorated Christmas and All-Occasion Greeting Cards, distinctive "Name-Imprinted" Stationery, gay Gift Wrappings. Many other Doehla items so exceptionally beautiful that your friends, neighbors, and co-workers will be delighted to give you big orders. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—our FREE BOOK shows you easy ways for any beginner to make money! You make up to 50¢ on each $1 box, even more on bonus orders. Mail coupon now—without money—for sample boxes on approval, including new "50-for-$1" name-imprinted cards. No obligation. HARRY DOEHLA Co., Studio L18, Fitchburg, Mass. (If you live west of Rockies—mail coupon to Palo Alto, Calif.)

Makes Money—and Friends Too

"The cards were so attractive they sold on sight. Friends gave orders unhesitatingly. I'm making friends, aside from my regular duties." —Mary Pasciucco, Brooklyn, N. Y.

HARRY DOEHLA CO., Studio L18, Fitchburg, Mass. (or Palo Alto, Calif.)

Please rush—for FREE TRIAL sample boxes on approval, money-making plan, extra-profit cash bonus offer. Also send FREE Book of easy ways for anyone to make money.

Name .....
(Please Print Clearly)
Address .....
City .....
Please state Zone No. (if any)
State .....

Exquisite Form
BRASSIERES

Distinctively Styled HI-LOW Witchery
in Nylon

STYLE 806
NYLON TAFFETA
White Only

STYLE 807
NYLON MARQUISETTE
White and Blue

B and C Cups ——— 32 to 40

$3.00

HI-LOW Witchery
The exciting difference is this simple small wire Pat.

EXQUISITE FORM BRASSIERE, INC., NEW YORK 16, N. Y.
Los Angeles 14, Calif. • Toronto, Canada

GUARD YOUR HAIR AGAINST Dampness
Droop

Save re-doing time, resetting cost. Wear a Venida Hair Net and thwart the elements. Preserve that fresh, "just done" look all day—all evening. Perfectly matching shades in styles for every hairdo. Save by the dozen!

Colors 20c 12 for $2.25 } single or double mesh { Grey, white 25c 12 for $2.75

Hand-made of human hair

VENIDA
The Guaranteed
HAIR NET rules the waves

SELL EXCLUSIVE SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS

EARN EXTRA MONEY IN YOUR SPARE TIME!
Showing Smartly Exclusive Sunshine line to Friends, Neighbors. QUICK SALES! SEND FOR SAMPLES ON APPROVAL & DETAILS OF $1,000.00 SALES CONTEST.
SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, Dept. LE-8, 115 Fulton St., New York 8, N.Y.

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet's Cream Hair Remover. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

BOWLING BALL!

YOU can easily win one of these nationally advertised Mineralite Bowling Balls, bored to fit your hand.

Send us only nine 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subscriptions or five 2-year Saturday Evening Post subscriptions, which you sell to persons living outside your home at the full subscription price. Renewals count the same as new subscriptions. (2-year L.H.J. subscriptions, $5.00. 2-year S.E.P. subscriptions, $10.00.)

Write subscribers' names and addresses on plain white paper and mail to address below, together with your name and address and check or money order for the total amount. In return, we'll send you the certificate with which you secure your Bowling Ball. This offer is good in Continental U. S. only, until October 31, 1950. Your own or your personal gift subscriptions will not count. Sorry, we cannot sell these bowling balls.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
335 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ROMANTIC SOUTHERN ANTIQUES

(Continued from Page 116)

This was good furniture, substantially built but defying a name classification, for American cabinetmakers went about the job with plentiful imagination and a free hand. They bought books of drawings put out by the English designers, Chippendale, Hepplewhite, the brothers Adam, and Sheraton, then simplified the designs to suit their own less-elegant craftsmanship.

The period of greatest production was from 1800 to 1835, or until Victoria became queen and introduced a new style of low sofas and chairs designed to suit her own short, plump proportions. All through the South and as far north as Philadelphia and New York, the big homes were being built and fine mahogany furniture was needed to go into them. So our native craftsmen made long sofas, looking a bit like Empire, handsome chests of drawers, sideboards, pedestal tables, secretaries, four-poster beds and comfortable armchairs with ottomans.

This is the kind of chair gentlemen of President Monroe's day sat in to read. Notice the dowel pins which hold the seat. Still beautiful and very comfortable. . . . The small chair table is a "whimsey" intended to hold teacup, fan and book.

There were no small chairs except those made after the Victorian influence began to creep in, and dining chairs so nearly like the English ones that museums and collectors have long since claimed them along with the great dining tables that accompanied them.

Then there were the "whimseys," made to suit the fancy or on order from a client who wanted his own ideas worked out. In fact, it is the abundance of these individual designs that has been responsible for the period's not being classified by a descriptive name, although a few designers, notably Duncan Phyfe, conformed to style and had their furniture named for them.

Among the delightful originalities still to be picked up are tables designed to hold bird cages, needlework cabinets, portable d with secret compartments, game ta sherry chests, Bible stands and dozen other interesting pieces usable and inte ing in today's rooms. The wood is solid hogany, rosewood or walnut, with an o sional piece in ebony or satinwood. The from which they were made came Southern ports as ballast, on sailing ve carrying a return cargo of cotton and bacco.

In the South, plantation owners wer the fashionable coast towns to sketch signs from the English furniture books make their own beds and sideboards home, often with the help of slaves. In many of the finest pieces of those days made by the Negro slaves who still reta their primitive skills in woodworking carving.

Early-American mahogany is today abundant in the North as it is in the S and much cheaper, for the scale of pieces is too grand for smaller Nort rooms, and the South is re-collecting it. will find it everywhere, in fact, for the '4 took their best pieces west—and there lots of emigrants from the South.

The furniture itself seems to be indestr ble, made of solid woods, elaborately dow and joined; it has withstood almost a tury and a half of use with little damage pieces seem ever to have worn out ex chairs, which you may have to rescue barns and woodsheds in the country. frames are still sound, but the hair pad will have become loose or disappeared.

You can find Federal or Southern hogany in estate auctions everywhere, as as in secondhand stores in the larger p where there seems to be little market because of its larger scale. Good mahoga and any sound piece that you like is go is the best antique investment today, will grow in value. All pieces mix well modern reproductions, while retainin proud distinction of their own.

Most of this century-old furniture n little doing over. No one seems to painted any except the smaller pieces, rubbing down and fitting chairs with webbing and upholstery will restore original elegance and beauty.

If you start collecting early mahogany your own use, don't play your colors fabrics down to it, thinking them suitab such old pieces. Originally this furniture used in rooms with imported textile luscious colors such as watermelon p damask yellow and the lavish hues popul Europe at the time. These colors still s mahogany to best advantage, while aged colors detract from it. Avoid tapestry in commercial weaves, and if make needlepoint for your pieces, do style shades in lighter, brighter hues suc live greens, rosy pinks, off-white, cornfl blues, or the deeper pastel tones that up your whole room scheme.

YOU CAN'T DANCE ALONE

(Continued from Page 36)

the football team. She understood how it was with me, about Mitch.

"Oh, Chotzie," I moaned, "what happens now?"

"Well, one thing," she said in a strange new voice, "you can't have Pelham Higgins Townsend and Mitch too." Directly, in some odd way, we weren't best friends any more.

Mitch didn't come near me. All morning I went around expecting his hand on my arm: his soft tantalizing touch that melted a person right down to the nub. All morning getting more and more desperate.

And vaguely aware of Pel Townsend offside, circulating in his usual tall, brown, geologic fog; he's a mining engineer at heart. He didn't seem to sense anything unusual, not his big-wheel brain. The only reason Pel wasn't elected later on to be valedictorian was his practical immunity to any su not connected with rocks; he was a be chemistry and physics, but glanced a English and Spanish merely enough to In trig, his natural politeness concealed the class that he was a full book ahead

In social science that morning . . . first, Pel made up his social science went along, scaring the daylights out of Clessy—a woman who actually hesitat mention even anything so "controve as race prejudice! If you can feature She's the skinny last hitch on a long str fine old local family and she was in a with Pel because he's skinny and fin local family too; but hardly the last I mean he had traveled, he had liberal Some old local families stand still an backward and some go ahead. Pel wa ow refreshes

tmosphere
s it cleans!

Notice the fresh new fragrance Sani-Flush releases as it goes to work. It's the one women themselves selected—light and non-lingering. Quick, easy, sanitary as always for making toilet bowls sparkling clean. Safe in all toilet systems. At your grocer's; same price. The Hygienic Products Company, Canton 2, Ohio.

ani-Flush

in the familiar yellow can
NOW FRESHLY FRAGRANT

AIPEX INSECT BOMB
KILLS
FLIES, MOSQUITOS, ANTS, ROACHES, BED BUGS, MOTHS, ETC.
Just spray — it works magic in your home
$1.69
At your drug counter or department store
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
INSECT BOMB

y Housewives Everywhere nq Their Clothes on POTLESS PLASTIC OTHESLINE
Wipes Clean... Fast... Easy!
Hangs Tight Year 'round!
SPOTLESS CORP.

STAMPED LINENS at 1/2 PRICE
You pay only ½ Resale Prices printed in our catalog. Make money selling, save money buying for your own use. Buy direct from manufacturer: Seamless Tubing Pillow Cases and Bolster Cases, Show Sheets, Scarfs, Vanity Sets, Bedspreads, Luncheon Sets, Banquet Cloths Show Towels, Fancy Aprons, Infants' Furnishings, etc. Complete embroidery instructions FREE. It's easy. Write:
IBEE ART EMBROIDERY CO.
22 West 21st St., New York 10, N. Y.

NT
0
ICK
Nationally advertised Card Ass'ts — sell only 100 — make up to $50! Complete line Xmas, Everydays, Wraps, Stationery, Also novel "Spang-l-ettes" and "Prize" Ass'ts; Notes; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up. Up to 100% profit. Money back guarantee. Request "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on approval.
30 FREE SAMPLES
CHILTON GREETINGS, 147 Essex St., Dept. S-11, Boston, Mass.

MAS CARD SALESPEOPLE Many territories open. Exclusive, styled name imprinted line sells quickly to nating people. Most orders $5 to $25. Large sions. Write today. JAY FULLER & STAFF Bank Bldg., Buffalo 2, N. Y.

anywhere else, but he would get up in her class and sound off, and that morning when he did, Miss Clessy said rather acidly, "Pelham, I wasn't aware you were running for President." And he said with a lot of ginger, for him, "How do you know I won't, Miss Clessy?" So she sat with her mind detached and let him unreel on the race question as if what he said were singularly remote from her and she was someplace else, in a hoop skirt doing a schottische. But we learned something. All year we learned more from Pel than from Miss Clessy, who was fighting a losing battle at holding the world back, poor dear. But in all fairness, I presume Miss C. would be home tatting if there weren't a teacher shortage; and they were not all like her.

I admired Pel very much. But I couldn't stand and talk with him in the rain and discover later the rain was wet, the way a girl could with Mitch. And he couldn't slip his hand under my arm and melt me, if you know what I mean. Not that I do, altogether. While understanding this emotional derangement perfectly, in theory, I also found out that a theory is no longer a theory when it begins to look like you.

So all that morning he came back I didn't catch sight of Mitch, but moved continually in his wake, pulled along by a sort of undertow. In the corridors an expression on the girls' faces said, "Someone wonderful just went by." Someone wonderful with hair like hot coals? Someone with shoulders yea-wide and a waist yea-narrow, and a beautiful lounging indifference? Be still, my perishing heart.

The class bell rang while I was still doing monitor work in the library and I sped to reach the chem lab in time. Easing in under the wire, there occurred a positive breeze from heads turning, looking from Pel to me—to Mitch. He was there. I sat down and my eyes wouldn't wrench away from the magic profile. Mitch. Oh, Mitch.

He began cruising a casual glance, making aggravating stops along the way; finally reaching me. The impact, the force of it—like a blow with feathers. His eyes, topaz with dazzling green points: "Jealous eyes," Chotzie used to say, "jealous heart ——"

"Miss Jennie Keith," said Mr. Holland, "will you explain what is meant by dialysis?"

"Why ——" I said brilliantly. "Why, it . . . that is ——"

"Pelham Townsend?"

"It is a method of separating crystalloid from colloid constituents."

. . . And knowing instantly from the way he looked, the impersonal way, he'd heard about Pel. Of course, oh no, they couldn't tell him how I went into deep mourning for two entire weeks after he left; or my stark anguish when he didn't write, oh no. And the Spring Formal happened soon after, he knew that. What could I do? Stay home and weep? But life goes on, and Pel asked me. "After all," as mama said, "a girl can't dance alone." They could only tell him—they: Chotzie?—how Pel had been giving me a big rush since September:

THE very first day school opened, gravitating to me desperately as if he'd had it on his mind all summer while he was off somewhere in a remote mining camp. His eyes made you think of notes on a cello—soft and brown and deep. He'd never looked steady at a girl before. He looked at me and blushed violently and began talking about rocks. He worked up such a fervor about a rich quartz vein I began thinking maybe I had one.

Well, I thought at the time, Mitch is gone. What difference does it make who gravitates? And I liked Pel, understand. Even in his glasses he was rather good-looking in a lanky, absent-minded way; you always wanted to make him a cup of good hot cocoa. And you could see he had made up his mind to be a good dancer, so he was.

Somehow, the afternoon wore through. At last it was time to wait on the gym curb for the school pokey, facing a pale watery sun—so far there had been no snow, and that depressed me too. Christmas coming, no snow. In the Sierra you get it to the window sills or none at all, but I love it. No one came to wait with me as Pel usually did. Mitch's jalopy didn't breathe up and stop, panting softly, as it had so often in the aching past. I stood there listening to basketball-practice voices, trying to sort out Mitch's stirring hoarse bellow—he was the best center we ever had. But he wasn't in the gym where he should have been if he was going back on the team; and the team surely needed him.

The back of my neck felt him approaching; all-overish, pulverized, waiting for the hand to slip under my arm. It didn't.

Chotzie was with him. They sauntered through the arch, oblivious, Chotzie laughing up sideways, Mitch's eyes crinkling, lounging along in his easy gait . . . Oh, Mitch. And Chotzie. If you knew Chotzie the way I knew Chotzie—but then, nobody did. A child, just a child, not exactly irresponsible, but on-the-wayward. I had been very patient with Chotzie, pointing out that attending football scrimmage was never going to bring up her average. She had all the team news hot off the gridiron; but news of the Early Gallic Wars left her conspicuously tepid.

WHEN you analyzed her carefully—and I began at once making a curbstone analysis—there really was not enough to Chotzie to hold Mitch for long. When all is said and done, Mitch was no Brain, I admit, but he had a mentality full of enchanting trivia and he liked a girl who could invent her own uptakes now and then, not cop them all off the radio. To me, "Drop dead" is not the final word in humorous retorts. But as I say, I'd been very patient with Chotzie; she was so little and helpless and none of the other girls liked her, they called her a predator and were lamentably catty in their attitude. You had to consider all the contributing factors—her home life, for one, which was substandard: her mother lived on alimony and would spend it all in one week end on slot machines and cocktail bars. You have to consider those things.

Besides, Mitch always said he preferred tall brunettes.

Seeing her climb in his nostalgic old jalopy had all the elements of being double-crossed by a cream puff.

Just then she caught sight of me. She sang out gaily, "By-by, Jen," for all to take note. "Bless you, honey."

"So long, Chotzie," I said. Bless you very little. For even though you understand what makes people that way, you can't help hating them a little when they hurt you. At least when it is new and raw, you can't. You can be ashamed of it and still hate them.

I watched them drive away, standing there lonely as a fire lookout; ravaged by an old junior love. Jealous. Miserable. A person can suffer even in high school, and don't think they can't just because you're older now and wiser, sitting cozy in your slippers beside your banked obedient fire. It was not always so, was it?

Embarrassing as it is to admit an adolescent phase that should have passed long since, I arrived home starving. Love and jalopy fumes always made me hungry. Refrigerator inspection broke out a square box with my name on it—something special, no doubt, from mama. Inside, ready to spring, crouched a perfectly revolting cream puff. Settling for two stalks of rather tired stuffed celery, I went in search of my mother. Should I tell her about Mitch's return? I was dying to talk with someone about it; but perhaps not mama. She had never been very discerning toward Mitch. Nice enough, but she never let it sift casually into her telephone conversations that I was going anywhere with him, the way she did when it was Pel.

Low growls in fits and starts, emanating from somewhere off upstairs, led me directly to the sewing machine. The little room foamed like after the explosion. For some abstruse and recondite reason, my mother can't seem to sew on so much as a button without hauling out all her odds and ends. Pausing in the doorway, I remarked, "Thought you said no dressmaking before Christmas." And an idea was forthwith born. After mature deliberation, it had occurred to me that the holiday dance was really the

ATHLETE'S FOOT*?

Effectiveness of Absorbine Jr.'s
WET-DRY ACTION
proved in scientifically controlled tests

*To help relieve Athlete's Foot misery—use Absorbine Jr. quick! Its time-proved "Wet-Dry" action kills all the Athlete's Foot fungi it can reach. Helps heal open cracks and promote regrowth of a smooth unbroken skin-barrier against reinfection! In carefully checked clinical tests, 3 out of 4 cases responded favorably.

◀EXAMINE the skin between your toes tonight. When open cracks appear it means that Athlete's Foot can strike. Swab skin with cotton soaked in the famous Absorbine Jr. Its "wetting" action removes the flaky dead skin and dissolves the stale perspiration products on which Athlete's Foot fungi thrive.

NOW POUR ON some▶ Absorbine Jr. Its "drying" and fungicidal action inhibits growth of all the infecting fungi it can reach. If your Athlete's Foot persists, see your doctor. Guard against reinfection. Don't share towels or bathmats. Boil socks for 15 minutes to kill the micro-organisms. Get Absorbine Jr. wherever drugs are sold . . . $1.25 a bottle . . . Introductory Size 15¢.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

ABSORBINE Jr.
America's No. 1 Athlete's Foot Stand-by!

"OH DAD, and just the right kind, too!"

Naturally, Janie's happy! Like most teen-age girls, she has pretty definite preferences in stockings. She knows that to get the kind she prefers, she has to look at the label and see the brand name. (That's the name the manufacturer gives the clothing he makes so that folks can tell it from others.)

Asking by brand name is the only way to buy anything—from clothes to golf balls. It's the only way to get the exact product you want.

Brand names mean protection. They make the manufacturer responsible for the quality of products that bear his brand name. Any manufacturer knows that only if you find his products good, you will buy them.

Brand names mean progress... each manufacturer works to improve his product and to make his brand name stand for even better quality.

Always ask for products by brand name—get quality, protection and ...exactly what you want. Incidentally, in this magazine, notice the ads for some of America's most famous brand names.

Brand Names Foundation
INCORPORATED
119 West 57th Street, New York 19, N. Y.
A non-profit educational foundation big dance, next to the Senior Ball—and a dress is a dress is a dress. The white net wouldn't do at all; a childish thing.

"Come in, dear," she said. "Move those things over. This isn't dressmaking, it's last-panic Christmas gifts," and mama held up a scrap of black satin with black lace ruffled around it. "Apron," she claimed.

"Ideal for serving burnt biscuits," and I barged straight ahead to the crux question. "Look. Could I change my mind about the formal?"

The lace-and-satin dropped to her lap. "Oh, you wretch!" with an exasperated eye lift, but not too exasperated. "I knew it. I had a premonition. Anyway, taking out your white net this morning, it's sort of yellowed. But perhaps the cleaner could ——"

"Mama, please. Please don't send it to the cleaner. I want to keep it just as it is."

With a peculiar glance, she switched her alleged apron onto the old day bed and picked up a pattern book.

The black lace ruffle happened to fall on an end of pink silk that showed through it. Fascinated, I sat staring and it began doing something to me, it began wrenching me with longing for a divine dress already shaping in my imagination: a dream dress that would simply knock everybody's eye out, even people who had been living in a big city. A dashing sophisticated formal ——

"Listen ——"

She looked up from her absorption in a quaint little junior-miss number, and I described my dress.

Massaging her forehead in a pensive negative stroke, "My dear child," lowering the boom patiently, "not black lace. Much much too old for you."

"But the dance is December twentieth and five days later I'll be eighteen! And you don't know what this means to me."

"Does Pelham ever really see what you have on?"

Pel. Who was thinking about Pel?

"I presume he does. He merely doesn't seem to, that's all." But I felt vaguely mean and calculating, not telling her about Mitch.

We scooped up the dress idea and shook it this way and that, and listened to it, and finally arrived at a compromise.

"—— a pink bodice, then," I conceded. "And ■ black lace skirt, over pink." She nodded agreement. "Strapless," I added.

"Not so fast, young lady. Black lace and strapless?"

"And when you bone the bodice," I crashed ahead, "sew 'em in good. Last year Chotzie dropped one and had to finish out the dance on adhesive tape and nerve."

"Well . . . all right. But pink washes out on you. You're so dark."

"It could be a deep pink."

Our thoughts made a pink tour. "Wait a minute!" she exclaimed and rose up, galvanic, beginning to paw through an old bureau drawer. "In here someplace," muttering, and at length coming up with a tissue-wrapped parcel held choicely in her hands. "This—Jennie, I've been saving this for years."

THE loveliest pink velvet I ever saw in my life. Luscious. Soft like a kitten; and the color: a sunrise. Lemonade dashed with grenadine. A shrimp salad on Fisherman's Wharf ——

"Panne velvet." She had a dreamy waltzing look. "I had a dress made of it, once. The waistline was around the hips and it ended at my knees."

"How utterly gruesome," I said.

"Well, it wasn't," she retorted. "Ask your father."

Measuring it off from nose tip, arm's length, "Two yards and a fraction over," I said. "Isn't it awfully narrow?"

"Eighteen inches, more than enough for your top, even on the bias. And how about," arranging the fabric around my shoulders in delectable puffs, "how about some little velvet bows scattered on the skirt, h'm?"

Coy little pink velvet bows nestling among the lace ick. Chintzy. It came to me consolingly that bows can get lost. Mama nudged me over to the mirror and oh, what that panne did for me! A leftover summer tan that had reached about the jaundice shade was now kind of gold, if that doesn't sound too vain. I couldn't tear loose from the mirror. Goodness, it would be awful to get clothes-crazy, like Chotzie. I mean for a girl who is aware of important issues in the world, who read good books and argued fervent politics and wrote letters to her congressman—lots of high-school students do, though the fact never seems to crack the newspapers—and whose valedictorian subject next June would thoroughly cover everything from Russia to the condition of the county roads; but at that moment all I could see was the dress. And Mitch's arm around sunrise-pink velvet and the band playing I'm in Love With a Wonderful Guy.

Because Mitch would ask me to the Christmas Dance. Me, not Chotzie. He would. It was unimaginable that he wouldn't, even in the face of all contrary evidence. Right here I stumbled on an ethical stone named Pel. Pel

For Anne Boleyn

By Elizabeth McFarland

These days of cloud surfaces
And water windows,
When the world walks on high heels
Pounding young! young! young! into the pavements,
One thinks of you, Anne,
A young girl romanticized in green velvet,
Standing as we all have stood,
Listening to the sly whisper
Of leaves in dark corners,
Observing the black gleam
Of spring rain on wet tree limbs,
Feeling the crab apple's sticky growth—
You lost your maidenhood
But were never deprived of it.
Locked in Henry Tudor's
Deep glittering caverns,
You were caught round the waist
And frozen in an attitude of wonder.
Other women long for your beauty
In the stirring April winds,
But they will pluck the summer blossom
Your arms could not reach.

hadn't asked me, yet; absent-mindedly, he neglected things like that until the latest hour, assuming of course I'd be going with him. And I would feel mean to tell him I wasn't, I'd feel like a dog, but what was the use of vain repining: how did I know Mitch was coming back?

Even if Mitch didn't ask me to go with him, he'd have to dance with me. And even if ——Well he'd see me there. In my dress.

"—— over a foundation skirt the same shade," mama was saying. "Little black lace ruffles round and round, all the way to the floor, sewn onto black net."

Ruffles. Little black lace ruffles. "Not ruffles, dear," I persuaded. "Flounces. Wide flounces. Three."

"Wide? Flounces?" She looked crushed. "All right, let's see now. Three . . . wide . . . flounces," spacing on the tape measure. "Your long-skirt length is forty-five inches, three into forty-five—fifteen." Looking up. "Have it your way, Jennie, but there is nothing lighthearted about a fifteen-inch flounce."

"Seventeen years is long enough to be lighthearted; and look—very wide at the hem. Stand-out. Circular."

"Have you ever tried sewing ruffles on a circular skirt?"

"Not ruffles; flounces."

This was rapidly stitching into a Thing. It looked as if all my plans directly or indirectly concerned with Mitch became devious, somehow, and I detest devious things; they make me think of gambling, which depresses me, and in the world I'm going to make there won't be any gambling. Everybody will know who is taking them to the dance.

"Well," I sighed, and handed the whole thing over to mama. "Do it whatever way is the easiest—don't go to a lot of bother."

I forgot that advising my mother to do anything the "easiest way" is a deadly challenge. She takes it as a personal affront, an invidious gratuitous insult to any skill she may possess. Give her a long sheet of instructions and she can blithely ignore them, but tell her "not to bother" and she goes in for the full course.

THE dress immediately became a Project. It had more parts than a Diesel motor. The bodice got cut into bias sections, three front, three back, and fitted like a coat of paint; a fitted bodice is gruesome when it doesn't fit, I finally convinced the family. And the skirt—well, the upper and under skirts both by some mysterious miracle became circular. Later. After we found material to match the velvet. That was some treasure hunt.

Velvet swatch in hand, I tried the three local dry-goods stores. A certain distraction was offered by Mitch and Chotzie driving nonchalantly up and down Main Street in the jalopy, Mitch hunkered down in the seat, his eyes slitted; and Chotzie's hair blowing like a halo in reverse, talking as if she had just made a down payment on a vocabulary. On purpose, they didn't see me as I cruised from store to store.

In Bert's were peach and salmon-pink and shocking, all kinds of pink but mine. Miss Haver took the sample to the door, holding it up to the light. "I haven't seen this exact quality and color for twenty years," she said. "I'm afraid you're going to have a bit of trouble matching taffeta to it."

The doorway blanked out and there stood Pel. "Hello," he said in his lost, pedantic way.

"Oh, Pel," I exclaimed impulsively, "how am I ever going to match this?" holding out the sample.

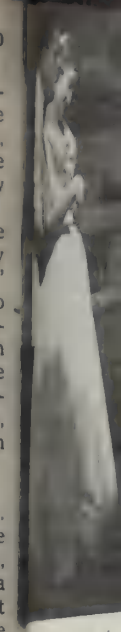
He examined it. "I have a piece of rose quartz this exact shade."

"You're a big help! Can I wear a rock?"

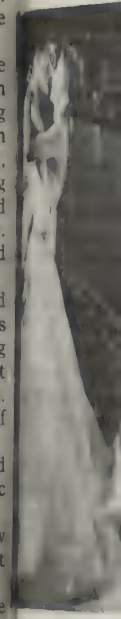
Looking mildly from the velvet swatch, he said. "Every now and then I match things for my mother. I'll be glad to try."

The following day he was absent from school. When I arrived home, the taffeta had been delivered to mama, an exact match.

But she was so slow. "At this rate you will never get it done in time," I fumed. She tried things this way and that, trial and error; the circular net skirt was spread out, taped to the dining-room table, which happens to be round, while she measured distance meticulously between each ruffle, made chalk marks, basted forever; finicking. The flounces turned out to be dismal. I saw her point and settled for ruffles—they transformed easily, as she used wide lace to begin with and simply cut it narrow with the pinking shears.



"Of course the edge won't take hard wear," she said, "but you're only going to dance in it."



And you can't dance alone. Who with, wa I only going to dance in it? Why be so anxiou when no one had even asked me? What Pel was more sensitive to undercurrents tha he appeared, and didn't mention it? Even a the last gasp. I began waking nights wit chaotic thoughts, all alone in a beautifu pink-and-black-lace dress, no place to wea it.

Mitch merely spoke, distantly; the littl green points in his eyes glittered. He re turned to basketball practice; I could hea his voice, waiting after school for the pokey— up and down my spine in tingles. There was big game scheduled with Hackettsville, th night before the Christmas Dance.

On the nineteenth, everything was finishe but the zipper. It was a dream dress; I coul hardly believe myself in it. And still, no on had mentioned taking me to the dance. Aft supper that night, I decided suddenly to g

(Continued on Page 126)

Suddenly, breathtakingly, you'll be embraced . . . held . . . kissed. Perhaps tonight. Be sure you're always lovely to love; sweet . . . alluring.

Your deodorant may make the difference . . . That's why so many lovely girls depend on FRESH Cream Deodorant. Test FRESH against any deodorant—see which stops perspiration, prevents odor better! FRESH is creamier, more luxurious and really effective!

Are you always Lovely to Love?

See for yourself how really effective FRESH is!

Make this simple test. Put your present deodorant under one arm. Put FRESH under the other arm.

See which stops perspiration, prevents odor better.

New... for head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap. Used regularly, it is 20 times as effective as other type soap in preventing body perspiration odor, yet mild and gentle.

imagine!

EXTRA CASH

FOR

- New clothes
- A new car
- Home repairs
- Vacations
- Club or church funds
- Charities
- Christmas gifts
- Unpaid bills

IT'S YOURS—SO EASY!

SELL NEW DELUXE CHRISTMAS CARDS AND GIFT WRAPPINGS TO FRIENDS

"They literally sold themselves."—R. L. Tom, Honolulu.

"Your line is the most complete in every way."
—R. R. Furfey, New York.

Yes, from everywhere praise comes pouring in for the Elmira line of amazing values! Friends, neighbors quickly buy new Metallic, Felt Appliqué, Comic, 2-in-1 assortments for Christmas and all occasions. Superb 50 for $1.00 Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Scented Stationery, Animated Books, Gift Items. Your profits to 100%. Special offers. Cash Bonus.

21 for $1.00 DELUXE CHRISTMAS ASSORTMENT NEW METALLIC CHRISTMAS CARDS AGLOW WITH BEAUTY!

ACTUAL SAMPLES MAKE MONEY FOR YOU

No selling experience required. Just show order-getting samples, including exclusive items. Boost club or church treasuries by having members sell this fast-moving, money-bringing merchandise. Start early and make more money. Mail the coupon at once for FREE samples Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Napkins, Stationery, Feature assortments on approval, FREE catalog and selling plans.

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO.
Dept. C-1145 Elmira, N.Y.

RUSH COUPON TODAY!

FREE
6 DIFFERENT SAMPLE PORTFOLIOS NAME IMPRINTED CHRISTMAS CARDS, NAPKINS, STATIONERY and 36-Page CATALOG COMPLETE LINE

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO.
Dept. C-1145, Elmira, N.Y.

Yes, I want to know all about the Elmira way to extra cash. Please rush me Feature samples on approval, free sample portfolios Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, Napkins, Stationery and free Catalog.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 124)

to the basketball game and started downstairs to see if papa wouldn't just adore seeing a perfectly thrilling game.

My mother's voice came up the stair well from the living room: "——Marysville and then Auburn, and finally do you know what that boy did? He chartered a plane at the airport and flew to San Francisco! We're not supposed to know, but his mother told me. It took his whole month's allowance, he is walking a mile home for lunches, and he has practically no Christmas money. And in the city, he had to go to Macy's, the Emporium, the City of Paris and the White House, before he found an exact match. Imagine."

Holding onto the newel post, my heart ached for Pel Townsend. Why did he have to be so nice? I could sympathize with him—he felt the same way toward me as I felt toward Mitch. Still and all, just the same, if I should happen to see Mitch after the game, and if he should happen to mention the dance—what would I say? I'd say "Yes." It is just something you can't help.

Papa said all right, he'd drive me to the gym and I could phone him when the game was over.

Even Miss Clessy was there with her brother. I went over and sat with a bunch of girls who weren't with anyone; and no sooner sat down than realized they were together because their boys were on the team and it made me look as if—well, no, it didn't because just then Chotzie arrived with canary feathers on her chin.

Glancing around, I saw Pel. Odd, because he thought basketball and football were sort of childish. We nodded. I may have blushed; he did for sure. He had a kind of purposeful air about him, though.

When the Hackettsville team came out, they had a tall Negro boy playing center. Mitch narrowed his eyes right down to slits when he faced him. He didn't look friendly. He didn't play friendly either.

Starting off by jumping the whistle—the merest fraction, just enough not to get a foul called on him, Mitch kept it up. He smashed into the Hackettsville player every chance, needlessly—and Mitch was heavier than the rangy other boy. Chotzie began yelling things—insulting things. A few others, I am deeply ashamed to admit, echoed her. What got me was Miss Clessy sitting there being deaf and impervious; of course she's a timid soul, but she's a teacher too. I sent appealing looks around; no one paid the least attention, they were caught up in the excitement of the game—Hackettsville had made most of the baskets so far.

Out on the floor, Mitch blocked the other center's tall basket shot; the ball debated on the rim for a tense moment, then fell through. I couldn't see clearly what Mitch did, but I saw the Negro boy wince.

Chotzie stood up and yelled something I won't even repeat. Somebody said, "Down in front." Somebody else said, "Shut up."

There was a time out and the coach moved in on Mitch.

PEL got up. He came down to the front of the plank grandstand and stood there. His voice was quiet. "One of the visiting players is receiving shameful discourtesy. This must stop."

"Who says so?" Chotzie yelled, as if she expected a laugh.

The place was so quiet you could hear a pin drop.

Pel looked up, searching her out. He just calmly looked at her; a junior called out, "We say so, that's who." As if he had been waiting for that, Pel returned to his seat.

The game continued. Chotzie lapsed into sullen silence. Mitch pulled no more fouls. Hackettsville won, forty-two to thirty-six.

The gym was almost empty and still I sat there, unmoving. Pel touched my arm. "Game's over. Time to go home," and he took my arm as I stepped down four planks to the gym floor, and all at once Mitch was there, waiting for us. Chotzie lurked in the background.

"Hey, Pelham Higgins Townsend," he said in a loud voice, ignoring me, "I hear you didn't like the game."

Pel looked around thoughtfully. "That's right."

"Just what was the trouble?"

"Poor sportsmanship," Pel said.

"You don't say!" Mitch rippled his eager biceps. "Would you care to step outside, Pigeon? I'll be glad to show you some real sport."

This seemed to be an academic discussion which Pel was viewing with considerable detachment. "Thank you, Mitch," he said evenly. "I don't care for that kind of sport. There is enough contention in the world today without adding to it. So—if I may be excused ——"

Mitch pulled down his lip in a sneering laugh and blocked the way. "If you may be excused. Pelham Higgins Townsend regrets. Chicken, huh. Shouldn't think you'd admit it, in front of your girl."

Chotzie made a shrill hysterical giggle. Pel sighed, a profound compassionate sigh, regretful; and Mitch waited.

"All right, Mitch," Pel said. "I'm sorry about this, but it seems to be the only way, sometimes. Wait here, Jennie." He started out.

"You're sorry already? Oh, man!" And Mitch made for the door, Chotzie after him. In spite of instructions, I followed.

Outside, Pel removed his glasses in an abstraction, handing them to me.

"You wouldn't care to reconsider?" he said politely to Mitch.

"Who you kidding, schmo?"

Pel turned facing him. "Very well," he said, "Are you ready?"

Mitch simply grinned, that being beneath reply. Doubling his fists, he lunged forward. Like lightning, something hit him. He staggered back, wavered uncertainly in a half circle, and crumpled to the grass. Chotzie made a startled gasp in her throat and bent over him.

That's all there was to it.

Pel was standing there feeling in his pockets. I handed him the glasses, he put them on; we walked away.

"The car is parked around the next block," he said. "Do you want to wait here while I bring it?"

"I'll go with you."

We walked a little distance in silence. I wanted to ask where he had learned to hit like that—mining camps?—but the subject seemed to be closed.

"Has your mother finished the c Jennie?" His hand slipped under my a felt strange.

"How did you know she hadn't?"

He regarded me in moderate surp "My mother has been helping her wit lace ruffles—seems the shirrer went ha on your mother's machine. I thought knew."

"That was awfully nice of your moth said.

"She enjoyed it. Only boys in our fa It is a beautiful dress; it will do you ju and only a very beautiful dress coul that." His hand tightened for an instant. the way, my rose quartz is exactly the s of your velvet. I'm polishing a piece to you, for your birthday."

STUPIDLY—but things had been happ so fast—I said, "What do I do with "Anything you like. You can keep remember me by." Looking up, I ran s into his eyes, looking down. "Among souvenirs, for that old nostalgia."

"Oh, no, Pel. I'm going to keep it wh can see it, all the time."

"Are you really?" His tone had a hu wonder. "Jennie, I would be interest hear your definition of nostalgia."

"Why ——" For a moment I cou think. "Why, I guess . . . Pel, isn't nost sort of a tender feeling for a time past you are happy to have escaped?"

We walked along looking up at the thinking about everything. "Not bad said. "Not bad at all. You have an int ing mind. And though one feels redunda say so, you carry it around in a bea package."

"Well, th—thanks."

"You do," he said solemnly. "It is h fair for one girl to be so brilliant and a beautiful, but since it is you, a numb people will always be happy about it. ticularly me. I mean I."

When we reached his father's ca guided me to the right-hand door and op it.

"Get in quickly," he said. "It's snow And so it was.

Pel got in on his side. He unfolded a arranging it carefully over me. The leaned and kissed me softly on the cheek started the motor.

I felt wonderful.

"I'm at the age when my folks wish it was any other age!"

"Why My Women Friends Say

They Wouldn't Miss a Stanley Party For Anything..."

WHEN I ENTERTAIN friends and neighbors in my home, they particularly enjoy having me i ite in my STANLEY Dealer. My D ler always sees that everyone has fu For instance, my Dealer gives each p on present an interesting prize! And fo being a STANLEY Party Hostess my D ler rewards me with valuable S NLEY Hostess Dividend Gifts. Such w ome STANLEY Hostess Gifts as pre- s silverware, cutlery sets, steak knife the famous Brown Beauty Set of t-Duster and Dry Mop. But fun and p es aren't why my friends say they w ldn't miss my STANLEY Parties for a hing. Here's the real reason:

"Such a Comfortable and Sociable Way to Shop for So Many Indispensable Products"

"My friends and neighbors know, as do millions of housewives, about the superior worth of STANLEY QUALITY PLUS Products. Products for better personal grooming! Products that save time and work while improving the cleanliness and beauty of every room in the home! They know that at sociable parties like mine they can shop in "living-room" comfort for these QUALITY PLUS Products. This is the real reason why my STANLEY Parties are so popular. Why don't you be a STANLEY Hostess, too?"

Your STANLEY Dealer Supplies You With This "Aristocrat Of The STANLEY Line"
STANLEY FURNITURE CREAM

One of the most popular of the many products brought you by STANLEY'S famous Hostess Party shopping plan is this QUALITY PLUS Furniture Cream—enthusiastically preferred by millions of women because

1. It's unrivaled in the superior way it cleans, polishes, preserves, protects the surfaces of your beautiful furniture.
2. It's so easy and pleasant to use, a creamy furniture cream, wintergreen-scented. Not sticky, it dries quickly, requires little polishing to produce a lustrous finish.
3. It saves time and work. Cleans off old fingerprints, protects against new ones. Removes grease spots, soot and dust films. Covers up minor scratches. Has high resistance to water, other liquids.
4. It gives your choice furniture that "like new" look. Brings out the beautiful grain of walnut, mahogany, dark woods. You can use it successfully, too, on high grade bleached or blond furniture.

*To learn how you can be a Stanley Party Hostess . . . or for any information about Stanley . . . write or phone your Stanley Dealer, your nearest Stanley Home Products, Inc., Branch Office, or Stanley's Home Office in Westfield, Mass.

Originators of the Famous Stanley Hostess Party Plan

STANLEY HOME PRODUCTS, Inc.

WESTFIELD, MASS.

Factories in Easthampton, Mass., and London, Ontario

Now try Stopette—the deodorant that changed a nation's habits!

Millions now spray perspiration worries away with amazing Stopette Deodorant in the famous flexi-plastic bottle.

A quick squeeze checks annoying perspiration, stops odor. You never touch Stopette . . . hardly know it touches you. Wonderfully economical, harmless to normal skin or clothes.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Wonderful for men, too!

2 sizes: 2¼ oz. $1.25; 1 oz. 60c.
At cosmetic counters everywhere.
JULES MONTENIER, INC., Chicago

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING CERTIFIED WASHABLE

Stopette
THE ORIGINAL
SPRAY DEODORANT

LAST DAY OF ALL

(Continued from Page 39)

cold; the train grunted, creaked, moved off, leaving you there. A bus was standing nearby.

"You the bus to Sandford?" father asked. He was always asking questions like that, refusing the evidence of his senses, wanting confirmation. Mother would take one look and know. The driver stowed their luggage away. He had a round face that looked as if it were made of leather, and chain-smoked until the bus was under way, when he flipped the last cigarette out the window. "Smell the sea!" father cried as they turned off the highway to a lesser road that ran along the shore. And then, "Look at the nets drying!" Like a kid on a holiday, not dignified at all.

Camilla, in the seat behind, was afraid that the other people in the bus might laugh at his enthusiasms. She was glad that he and mother sat together. She could pretend that she—well, she didn't belong to them. She didn't want to smell the sea. Drying nets left her cold, although she supposed it was what people would call picturesque. She'd have to make the most of it when she wrote to Judy and Kay.

The road seemed to get worse. It twisted and turned around every single inlet. The bus careened along, now climbing so that you caught a glimpse of the open sea away to the left; the next minute it would plunge down, and there would be a cove deep-cut in the cliffs, with the sea a wedge of blue out beyond, but the inner waters green and tranquil, where fishing boats rode at anchor or lay canted over, waiting the coming of the tide. Half grudgingly Camilla allowed herself to think it was like a picture out of the storybooks father used to give her when she was small.

When he and mother leaned over the back of their seat to press her for an opinion, she admitted reluctantly, "Yes, it's rather pretty."

"I thought you'd like it, darling," mother said, but in her most hopeful tone.

"Maybe we'll get a chance to go out with the boats," father said, and again Camilla felt as if she were so much older than father, much more—well, mature and sophisticated.

THE road became quite breath-taking. At times there was a horrid smell from the fishhouses in the coves, soon replaced by the aromatic pungency of spruce and the indefinable fragrance of dew-wet bushes and ferns, and berries ripening in the sun. Or, an inland stretch, with gulls wheeling on the outer fringes, a partridge and her brood fluttered suddenly from a ditch. Camilla felt herself yielding, not knowing then how precious all this was to become.

Rounding the last turn, the bus came out into openness. They were on top of a hill. The rounded fields flowed down in a patchwork pattern, studded with white houses, to the harbor and silver-gray fishhouses and the sea—the sea everywhere beyond, glittering in the strong sunlight.

"There it is," father cried. "This must be Sandford," and he leaned forward and demanded of the driver if it were.

Mortified, Camilla looked out her own window at the straggle of the village, the small spire of the church, the one or two stores; an aimless huddle. No hotel. Nothing. She wished again, vehemently, that she hadn't come and that father wouldn't keep making ecstatic remarks. Mother was different. She was always so sensible. The straggle of houses drew nearer. The bus driver stuck a fresh cigarette tentatively in the corner of his mouth. They rocked and swayed down to wharf level, then rounded up a slight incline and passed the general store. Could this be the main street? Gangling youths outside a kind of garage stared at them. Sea-browned children, barefooted in the dust, watched them as they drew up in front of a house that had a sign on the side of it saying "Post Office."

"Hi, Andy," the bus driver called. "Here's some people for your maw."

THAT was the first time she saw Andy. And she resented him, almost. A hotel porter would have come to get their luggage in a different way, not with hands tucked in the front pockets of dungarees, not slowly, as if he were independent and summer boarders a nuisance. The sunlight fell on a mop of fair hair and a strong, square-chinned face, golden-tan. His shirt, open at the front, showed a smooth-skinned chest, but you suspected muscles. Where his sleeves were rolled high on his arms, you saw them.

Hardly glancing at Camilla, he said, "Mr. Drake? Mom's expecting you people."

"This is my wife," father said, "and this is Camilla."

Andy smiled. You couldn't judge anything by that smile. He reached for their bags and Camilla wondered why a sudden excitement ran in her as they followed him up the road. A few strides along, he opened a gate in a lilac hedge which was thick with summer dust. There was a small grass plot behind it, a few flowers in a round bed, a veranda hung with Dutchman's-pipe—and an opening door.

A woman came through it, a youngish, motherly-looking woman, quite pretty, her hair drawn plainly back, a smudge of flour on one cheek, but smiling her welcome.

"Come in. Come in," she said. "Andy, you take those things on up. I hope you folks had a good trip."

As they went in Camilla thought, sniffing, that it smelled a bit like a farmhouse, clean, airy, and as if good baking were going on. There was a living room with big fat chairs, and old photographs on walls and piano. Magazines lay higgledy-piggledy on shelves, and she could see some books and games. She followed her mother and father upstairs. The ceiling of their rooms slanted under the gabled roof.

Camilla's room had a single bed covered with a quilted spread that her mother exclaimed over; the wide floor boards were painted a soft gray and were partly covered by hooked rugs with a pattern of shells and waves like the one on the spread, in soft blue and melon-green and fawn. From her window she looked almost directly down on the road. Up to the right it was lost against the sky, but down to the left she could see a segment of the cove and a headland beyond.

They met the other boarders at lunch, two schoolteachers—the Misses Harford—and a friend of theirs.

After lunch father said they must get into their holiday clothes right away and go down to see what the fishing boats had brought in. As the only other choice seemed to be to sit on the veranda, Camilla went along. On the wharf, men were forking fish into boxes that went up on pulleys into the dimness of the fishhouses. As they passed one of them somebody smiled and waved. It was Andy. The greeting lightened the whole afternoon for Camilla. When they went back to the house for supper the other boarders were off on a picnic and the dining room seemed empty with only the three of them. The evening stretched before Camilla, endlessly blank. They were just finishing their custard pie and coffee when Andy poked his head in.

Slim Cunning Hands

By Walter de la Mare

Slim cunning hands at rest, and cozening eyes—
Under this stone one loved too wildly lies;
How false she was, no granite could declare;
Nor all earth's flowers, how fair.

NOW AN IMPROVED Lotion TO REMOVE HAIR

Yes, it's IR— the new ZiP Formula f removing hair. Now offered for the fir time, this improved formula of the first an original hair removing lotion; the result o 40 years of know-how; the last word in eff ciency and ease of application. Stays smoot and creamy to the last dab. You simp apply a little of this fragrant toiletrie ov the hair to be removed, rinse, and you' free of unwanted hair! So easy; so pleasa to use; so effective; so simple; so econom cal! Ask for it at your favorite toilet goo counter.

NEW! ZIP FORMULA IR PRONOUNCED "EYE-ARE

Remember THE END OF HAIR

Oversized bottles at 25c and 69c

HAIR REMOVING LOTIO

LOOK . . .
Percale Sheets

HERE'S how you can earn these lovely combed-yarn sheets of a well-known m They come two in a package, the color is w and the size 81" x 99". They are yours if send us four 2-year Ladies' Home Journal scriptions or two 2-year Saturday Evening subscriptions, which you sell to persons li outside your home at the full subscription p Renewals count the same as new subscripti (2-year subscriptions L. H. J., $5.00; 2-year S. subscriptions, $10.00.)

Write subscribers' names and addresses plain white paper and mail to address be together with your name and address and c or money order for the total amount. In r we will send you your two percale sheets.

This offer is good in Continental U. S. only til October 31, 1950. Your own or your pers gift subscriptions will not count. Sorry, cannot sell these sheets.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPA
334 Independence Square, Phila. 5,

$50 If You Now Have At Least 10 Frie
Who Send Christmas Cards
we will show you how to make $50 e selling 100 boxes of thrilling ne Christmas Assortments in spare time, plete line of big values. Earn premiums plus bonus besides up to 100% profit. Send for F samples of exclusive Personal Christmas at 10 for $1 up, and Assortments on Appr WETMORE & SUGDEN, Inc., Dept.
749 MONROE AVE., ROCHESTER 2,

TALL GALS SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOK!
BUY DIRECT! MAIL PENNY POSTAL TO FOR OUR NEW FREE 24 PAGE BOOK!
Stage, Screen Stars, Society Shoecraft Tall Gals 5th Ave. Sh Famous for Fashion and Fit in to 12; AAAAA to C. Money back unteed if returned unworn in 10
SHOECRAFT 603 FIFTH AVE. - NEW YO

"You folks like to go for a row around the ove?" he asked. He spoke to them all, but is eyes waited for Camilla's reply.

How soon after that did it begin? How on before she began to listen for Andy's tep on the gravel path around to the kitchen oor, to watch for the bright gleam of his ead, to wait for the sound of his whistling n the way up from the wharf and the queer craping shuffle his sea boots made on the oad? He took her out in his dory, and they oated around, the two of them, on water rushed with the colors of the sunset. They ent in one of the larger boats to the outer lands with old Henry Jacques, salt-bitten nd talkative, who had been out in the storm ith Andy's father the night he was drowned. ndy stood in the swordfish stand projecting om the bow to show Camilla how they used harpoon. Standing there, straight-backed, aceful, the harpoon poised at a dynamic ngle, his bright hair streaming in the breeze ade by their going, he looked like one of ie legendary heroes they used to make allads about. The long Atlantic swells lifted iem up and set them down, so that at one oment he seemed to be dominating the y; the next, the sea. Perhaps it was then at the pleasure of being with him changed a half-fearful ecstasy that made the hours tween, the hours when he had to be down the wharf or out in the boats, mere point-ss time that had to be filled in somehow ntil she saw him again.

He borrowed a bike for her one day and ey went through the woods to a beach on e other side of the peninsula, stopping to ck berries in a clearing where they seemed ut off from the world. Camilla would ways remember the silence of the woods, a ence in spite of—or perhaps because of—e song of birds and the hum of insects and woodpecker tapping far away. Andy had ughed at her, standing there in T shirt and orts, slapping away the avid mosquitoes, r mouth and hands stained with berries. e picked some ferns and leaves and a trail-g plant with small red berries and made a ugh circlet of them and dropped it lightly her head. She said, "Silly!" pretending e was going to displace it, but he made a ick protective move. For a minute their nds fought for supremacy, then his caught rs and imprisoned them. They stood like at for what seemed a long time, she with r chaplet askew, he panting a little from e struggle, looking at each other as if the ole episode had caught them by surprise. kind of embarrassment began to grow be-een them. Andy let her hands go

"If we don't quit fooling around we'll ver get there and back by suppertime," said.

She often wondered what his mother ought of their seeing so much of each ier. Probably she thought nothing at all, ustomed to rely on Andy's help with her sts. Probably Camilla's own parents felt same way, and were grateful for anything that kept her happy. They all went out deep-sea fishing together, father immensely excited, though they caught only a couple of haddock, and mother seasick but persevering.

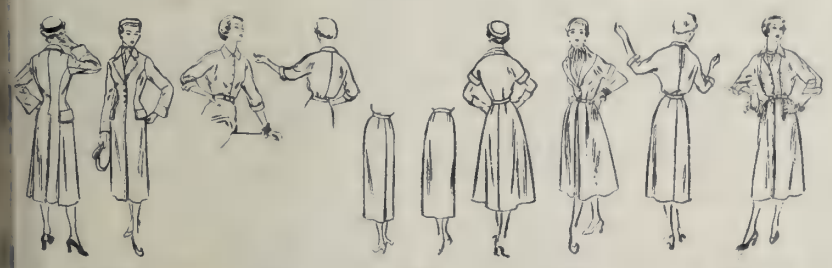
When they had been at Sandford only ten days father had to leave unexpectedly. An urgent telegram was telephoned through to the post office for him.

"Don't tell me you have to go!" mother said.

"I do tell you," father said ruefully. He looked like a small boy bereft of his toys by a sudden stroke of ill fortune, but bracing himself. "Well, I'd only have had a week and a bit more," he said; and Camilla remembered that this would be all for any of them.

Before the bus whisked him away around the corner by the store he called, "Good-by. Be good girls, both of you. 'By, Andy. Thanks for everything."

Mother turned and went slowly back to the house. A pang of loneliness for her struck Camilla. She left Andy and ran after her mother, staying with her for the rest of the day, urging her to take up the Misses Harford's suggestion that they go around to Herring Cove the next afternoon for a picnic; all the while knowing that they would have to go by boat and that Andy would be taking them in his dory.



The sun was hot, the breeze cool, the sea an intense, restless blue fringed with white. When they got to the cove they all walked around hunting sand dollars and shells and looking at the tiny crustaceans in warm rock pools. The four women spread the rugs on a heath-topped knoll, with some low spruces between them and the wind. The tide boiled and leaped on the jagged rocks below, and once in a while you could hear the bell buoy in the fairway between the mainland and Little Minogue. Andy said there was an interesting cave in a hollow just over that point, but they said they'd had enough scrambling for the present, that Andy's and Camilla's legs were younger than theirs and they'd better go along if they wanted to.

Mother called after them, "Be careful, Camilla," and for a strange moment she wondered if mother meant more than the rocks. But she soon forgot everything except being with Andy, running with him down to the edge of the waves on a bit of sand, reaching for his hand on a tricky bit of rock, clambering over the crest of the point and jumping down to a miniature crescent of beach caught between two horns of rock which shut her and Andy into an exclusive, tremendous world of their own. They examined the cave but it mattered only because for a moment of time it held them within its hollow. Andy found a scallop shell and gave it to her, but the years that went into its making mattered only because it was there, ready for that precise instant.

So it was with everything they said or did until, suddenly, Andy's arms were around her and his lips urgently against hers. When it was over she still clung to him, breathless, her head drooping against his shoulder. She

Back and Other Views,
Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 50 and 51

Vogue Design No. S-4126. Coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.
Vogue Design No. 7115. "Easy-to-Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6949. "Easy-to-Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7156. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Couturier Design No. 562. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $2.

For Enchanted Moments

For your enchanted moment (and it may come any moment) only one lipstick will do. It is Tangee! Because it is made by a newly perfected secret formula, you will discover:

(1) A finer texture... making it easier to apply. Still more important, it does not smear.

(2) Stays on longer... longer than any lipstick you have ever used.

(3) Comes in enchanting colors— the pink of perfection. Tangee Pink Queen—and six other glamour shades.

THE New Tangee LIPSTICK

LITTLE LULU

You'll like 'em for hay fever, too—Mister!

Little Lulu says: TO KEEP WEEPY EYES AND NOSES OUT OF THE RED—NO OTHER TISSUE'S JUST LIKE KLEENEX.* SOFT, STRONG, ABSORBENT KLEENEX TISSUES SOOTHE SNIFFLE-SORENESS, CATCH EVEN JUMBO-SIZE "KERCHOOS"!

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO. ★T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Relieve Pain Instantly Combat Infection from minor Scratches

WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions, Pimples*

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! Apply soothing CAMPHO-PHENIQUE. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use CAMPHO-PHENIQUE also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites, pimples.* Many doctors, dentists, nurses prefer this colorless liquid antiseptic. Doesn't stain the skin. Children like it, too. It's soothing, doesn't smart like ordinary antiseptics. Recommended over 50 years. Get it today!

Due to external causes.*

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

(PRONOUNCED CAM-FO-FIN-EEK)

THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

In every man's home...

Always for Good Mouthcare

LAVORIS

Tangy Cinnamon-clove Flavor

Refreshing

Detaches, Removes Germ-Harboring Film from Mouth—Throat!

FREE to STOUT WOMEN

Merely mail coupon for FREE Money-Saving 100-page Style Book. Styles proportioned by experts who know how to slenderize stout women. Also slacks, suits, coats, hats, shoes and underwear—all low priced. Mail the coupon now.

Lane Bryant DEPT. 32 152 EAST MARKET ST. INDIANAPOLIS 17, IND.

LANE BRYANT, Department 32
752 East Market Street, Indianapolis 17, Indiana.
Please rush me FREE 50th Anniversary Style Book.

Name
Address
Post Office State

Of course YOU CAN EARN Extra Money-

-with CHRISTMAS Cards!

Make money of [illegible] with nationally advertised "Feature" Christmas Box Assortment . . . 21 exquisite [illegible] designs. Sells for $1; up to 50c profit for you. 20 other exciting Christmas & Everyday Assortments: Christmas Stories, Gift Wrapping Ensembles, Humorous, Religious, New DeLuxe Foil, Novel "Pageant", Christmas Carols, 16-Card All-Occasion, Merry Christmas Comics, Children's Books, others. Added profits with low priced name-imprinted Personal Christmas Cards—shipped direct to customer. Also big Album DeLuxe higher-priced Personals and Gift Items. Mail coupon for Free Samples Personal Cards and 21-Card "Feature" Assn't. on approval. ORGANIZATIONS: Ask for Fund Raising Plan.

Amazing Value! Gift Ribbon Assn't. 50 yards for $1.00*

WALLACE BROWN, Inc., 225 Fifth Av., Dept. M-9, New York 10, N.Y.

M-9
Name
Address
City State

could hear the pounding of his heart, so near, so dear.

"I'm sorry," he said huskily.

She lifted her head. "You mustn't be sorry," she said passionately. "If you're sorry it only makes this a—a game."

"I'm not playing," he said, straight-lipped. "Are you?"

"No—oh, Andy, no. This is for keeps."

That made every time they had together afterward doubly significant. Camilla began counting them up, treasuring the ones still to come, but Andy seemed to ask nothing of the future as long as there was a tomorrow.

Once, as the last tomorrow of all drew inescapably near, he said, "You like it here in Sandford, Camilla, don't you? You wouldn't mind living here?"

"If it's with you, Andy," she said, curling his long, strong fingers around hers. "And you wouldn't mind living in the city, would you, if it were with me?"

"No," he said. "I expect I'd miss the boats and all at first, but I'd get over it."

It was inevitable that her mother should realize how things were with them, and deftly bring the question out into the open, at the same time making it seem ordinary enough to discuss casually.

"Andy will be lost without his playmate, won't he?" she said.

Recognizing the crisis, Camilla was forthright. "Mother," she said, "Andy and I want to get married. We love each other. That's terribly important, isn't it?"

"Yes," her mother said. "That's terribly important." She was being very understanding and kind, after the fashion of mothers, but Camilla could feel that she was keeping something back, that if she should decide to oppose them she could draw on powerful and frightening resources that were beyond Camilla's experience. She said, "Would you like living in Sandford all the year round? It's lovely now in summer, but you must think what it would be like in November, all gray and shut in."

"Andy would be here," Camilla said.

"Would—would he be as happy in the noise and crowds of the city for your sake?"

Camilla said proudly, "He'd come to the city and get a job there if that was the way I wanted it."

"That speaks well for him," her mother said. "In that case a great deal more would depend on you than on him, Camilla. Now I want you to do something very difficult. Try to see yourselves in a small, cheap apartment." The voice went on inexorably. "Try to see yourself introducing Andy to your friends—to Judy and Kay and Greg. Do you see what I mean?"

"Mother, that's horrible. That's snobbish. Andy's wonderful."

"That's the point, darling. They'd be trying to cut him down to size. We know what he's like. We've seen him here against his own fine background. But the others will judge him by the only standards they know." The distress in her mother's eyes was real.

Perhaps, Camilla thought, weakening, perhaps Andy was just talking big when he said he'd come to the city. Perhaps he only said it to please her. She saw him cooped up and miserable in a place that had nothing to remind him of nets and boats and the smell of seaweed at low tide. It would be easier for her in Sandford, even in November. A home was a home, wherever it might be.

"Then I won't make him go," she said. "We'll live here."

"There's father, too," her mother said as if she hadn't heard. "We can't leave him out of this."

"Yes, there's father." Camilla said it dejectedly. It would all have to be talked over with father, too, and dear knows how many other people, every word spoiling a delicate thing too precious for words.

She couldn't tell Andy about it any more than she could hold off that heartbreaking last day. And what could she tell him, anyway?

As they walked slowly down their favorite path through the fields, through the wood and down to the sea, she kept thinking, This is the last time. The last time Andy would s out the fattest clumps of berries and pi them for her and put them between her tee and kiss her. On the shore they sat press together in a nook where a rock, split by t elements, had fallen in angular slabs like chair.

"This time tomorrow I'll be gone Camilla said with a catch of her breath.

"Do you have to tell me?" Andy said.

Then they were silent, Andy staring out sea, Camilla trying to etch on her mind eve line of his face, the feel of his arm around h shoulder, even the faded blue of his jea

"Does your mother know—about us she asked.

"She hasn't mentioned it. Has yours

Camilla nodded, her eyes filling with tea

Andy reached a hand to pull tufts of s grass from a crevice. "I guessed it would like that," he said.

"Oh, no, Andy!" Camilla suddenly f the need to defend her mother.

"Then what?"

She looked around helplessly, as if by loo ing she might find the words in which t inexpressible could be held. It seems so ea and right, when you're lying in the summ grass or on the hot, drowsy sand, to feel th when two people love as she and Andy c nothing else matters. The world can be sh out. The beautiful thing you share is ke untouched, unspoiled.

"It isn't what you're thinking, Andy she said. "It's—oh, Andy, it's not being ab to keep things just as they are, you and m and lovely summer! Too many other peop seem to be affected by it."

She wanted him to deny it, to hold h tightly and tell her that their love was t big to be affected by anything. But he sa unhappily, "Yeah. I guess that's the w things are."

"It won't make any difference to m though, Andy."

"How do you mean?"

"When I'm home I won't forget. B you—there'll be other girls ——"

"There won't be any other girls," he sa

"We'll write," she said, trying to cling that poor comfort. "We'll write, won't w Andy?"

"Sure. But . . . I'm not much good writing," he said more unhappily than ev

When they had to tear themselves aw they walked back through the wood, throu the pasture where the wild raspberries gr and across the swampy hollow. Just befo they reached the road they stopped in thicket of small trees.

"Camilla—Camilla ——" Andy choke and caught her to him.

They clung, trembling, and kissed. frightening prescience sharpened Camill intuition. This was really the last time s would have with Andy, the last time s would look up into his face like this and the whole wide sweep of sky behind him, w clouds like brush strokes and a gull plan downwind, alone in immensity, the last ti she would know the sweetness of laying head against his chest and hearing the b of his heart.

And here was the last morning, mother trying to hurry her with her packi

Camilla put the yellow dress in her su case and picked up the denim slacks smud with tar from Andy's boat, then the pil shorts from which, as she folded them, a li rain of sand whispered to the floor. Then dress she had worn on the Sunday she Andy had shared a book, his elbow agai hers, their happiness without a flaw as t sang:

"Frail as summer's flower we flourish
Blows the wind and it is gone . . ."

She dropped the dress in a heap and ra her mother's room. "Oh, mummie!" cried, using the name she thought she grown out of long ago. "It's all over. ended. There's nothing left."

"My darling!" mother said, holding gently; and after a minute, "Camilla, ling, maybe you can't quite believe it r

STERILIZED
Q-TIPS
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
SWABS
GET NEW LAYETTE-SIZE
Economy Package
240 Q-TIPS 480 SWABS and SAVE MONEY
(AT ALL STORES)
ONLY 98¢

FREE TO YOU!
A BIG $1.00 Box of Beautiful Christmas Cards! Sent with Janes Art Studios Complete Sample Line. MAKE QUICK MONEY with 21 Card Feature Box! Also, 50 Name-Imprinted Cards with Envelopes — $1.00—largest size ever offered! Gift Wraps from Original Creators. Make up to 50¢ on every item. SPARE TIME—FULL TIME—NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED. 15 Days FREE Home trial. Big Bonus Plan. All Postage paid by us. You can't lose so write Janes Art Studios, Dept. 18F, Babylon, New York.

FALSE TEETH
That Loosen
Need Not Embarrass
Many wearers of false teeth have suffered eal embarrassment because their plate ropped, slipped or wobbled at just the wrong ime. Do not live in fear of this happening to ou. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the lkaline (non-acid) powder, on your plates. folds false teeth more firmly, so they feel more omfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate dor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at ny drug store.

I Said EXTRA MONEY
Selling MIDWEST Christmas Cards
e furnish FREE SAMPLES of beautiful PERSONAL-ED Christmas Cards low as 50 for $1. You keep up 50c on each 21-card DeLuxe $1 Assortment. EXCLU-IVE SECRET PAL, EASTERN STAR, Birthday, Gift raps, Scented Stationery, Kiddy Pop-Up Books, Gift ems, Monogrammed Matches. Nation's Largest Line. art extra money your way with FREE SAMPLES d Feature boxes on approval. Extra Cash Bonus. New arty Plan! Write today! MIDWEST CARD CO., 113 Washington, Dept. B-5, St. Louis 1, Mo.
50 for $1.00 With Name

CORNS
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢ and 50¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.
REMOVED BY MOSCO
our money refunded not satisfied. The Moss ompany, Rochester, N.Y.

ROUND UP EXTRA CASH!
SELL WESTERN ART CHRISTMAS CARDS
No experience needed. Friends buy new 21-Card $1 Assortment fast from samples we send you on approval. You make up to 100% cash profit: $50 on 100 boxes! Amazing value Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards SELL ON SIGHT from Free Samples. Extra money from Gift Wraps, Metallics, Stationery, Everyday, many more. Send for Samples.
WESTERN ART STUDIOS, 257 S. Spring St.
DEPT. 612 • LOS ANGELES 12, CALIF.

MAKE $50. plus FREE GIFT COUPONS!
FREE! 42 Sample Imprints, Xmas Cards Stationery apkins—Notes Gift and Sample Catalogs
Sell only 50 boxes imprinted Xmas Cards. Sensational profit-sharing plan gives you choice of over 300 gifts, and guarantees handsome cash profits on complete line. Write today! Send no money! Deluxe boxes on approval.
CREATIVE ART PUBLISHERS, INC.
45 Warburton Ave., Dept. R-1, Yonkers, N.Y.

but nothing is ever completely ended—or lost."

The words hadn't much meaning then, but Camilla gave herself up to the mother comfort of sheltering arms and compassionate voice.

Andy's mother came along to ask, "Could I help any?"

"Thank you," mother said. "We're almost finished."

"I hope Andy gets back before the bus goes," his mother said. "He had to go over to Little Minogue this morning to help Henry Jacques with some vinegar barrels. Henry's mate was taken sick." She went to the window and shaded her eyes, looking across the water to see if one of the boats rounding the point might be his. "He'd hate to miss saying good-by to you folks," she said.

Only then did Camilla realize how much she had been counting on a final glimpse of Andy. When everything was packed she went to the window too. All this—fields, road, sea—was Andy's, not hers. Perhaps she would never see it again. Was it better, easier, if he didn't get there to say good-by? She could see men down by the wharf and fishhouses, beginning to toss up the morning's catch. Surely Andy must be there somewhere, or was his boat still at Little Minogue?

Or, she thought, in a spasm of pain, perhaps for him it's like the closing of a book, like the end of a chapter. Maybe Andy is wiser than I am.

No; no, it was unbearable, never to see him again.

Now mother was saying that they must go. The postmistress' son had taken their bags for them. The bus was waiting. They said good-by to Andy's mother, busy already with preparations for the people who would be coming tonight to take the rooms that had belonged to them. They said good-by to the Misses Harford and their friend and walked down the road.

The bus driver stowed their bags on the rack and stood talking to the half-dozen people who were going to various settlements along the way, chain-smoking as he had that first day of their coming. At last he threw down his cigarette and ground it under his heel.

"All aboard, please."

I shall die, Camilla thought, with a last despairing glance down the road. The bus driver's hand under her arm gave her a little boost up the step.

Soon they were all on. The driver got in and slammed the door. He released the brake, snicked the ignition, pressed his foot on the starter, and the bus shook with the coming to life of the motor.

Then Camilla saw Andy running. At sight of him the relief was so great that for the moment she asked nothing more. He ran, not noticing or caring that people along the road, in doorways and gardens, stared curiously after him. As he ran his sea boots made a quick scuffing sound. Camilla saw the half-smile on his face as of triumph that, after all, he had got there, he had made it in time. She saw the way the sunlight shone around him, how bright his hair, how agile his body, how clean the line of his chin and mouth, how blue and direct his eyes.

I shall always, always remember him this way, she thought. Oh, Andy, if you hadn't come I'd have died.

The bus started slowly. Andy caught up with them.

"Come back—sometime!" he called. Running alongside an instant, his hand brushed the ledge of Camilla's window.

She leaned toward him. "Yes. Oh, yes."

Perhaps she would. Who knew? . . . Who knew?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

ONE man recently made a list of his wife's household duties, and it came to a hundred and twenty items. Next, he checked off each item that could be wholly or partly taken care of by some modern device. . . There were still sixty-two left.

She's as self-controlled as a laugh in church.

Discipline is a parent's objective, a child's objection.

When asked if she considered a soda and hamburger an adequate lunch a high-school girl replied, "Not without a candy bar."

Some widow's weeds are plowed under, some go to seed, some turn into blossoms.

A sense of humor in marriage acts as a lightning rod on a building: grounds the sparks from the air.

A flirtatious woman in a small town is as prominent as a penny in a church collection plate.

Wisdom from a colored maid I once had: "Children are like dishes with food stuck on them; instead of scrapin', diggin', whackin', just let them soak awhile and soon what bothers you will wash away real easy."

One value the horse had over the automobile: the kids had to slow down far enough away from the old homestead so father couldn't tell how fast they'd been driving.

She could not stand being set right, not even when she would bid no trump with two singletons.

The energetic child advancing into the home of a meticulous housekeeper is as likely to get trapped as the fly visiting the spider's parlor.

Home is a success when parents have a good time in it too.

The most polite children who visit us wipe their hands on the underfolds of the guest towels.

MOTTO OF A PERFECT HOUSEKEEPER
Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Has left tomorrow's work undone.

Where there's a will there's a way, and where there's a child there's a will.

The marvel of a certain neighborhood was the family of five sons who were always up for breakfast. Persons endeavoring to explain the accomplishment could offer nothing except, "The mother never raises her voice, father just speaks firm." . . . As if that didn't explain it!

"At home" should mean being ready to receive not only guests but children when they come from school.

The modern wastebasket fills up as fast as a swimming pool in hot weather.

Daughter to mother: "Teacher says she just loves to get excuse notes from you because you write her all the news."

A crop of home-grown lettuce is like a child: you just begin to enjoy the flavor when suddenly it goes into adolescence and becomes too strong for delicate appreciation.

"If there's anything I don't like, it's droopy socks . . .

"The kids say mine are always neat, even my old ones . . .

"That's because the tops of my socks are made with Lastex yarn. I can spell it—L-a-s-t-e-x.

"When I'm big, I'll make sure that my socks 'n girdles 'n all my stretchy things are made with wonderful

Lastex
Reg U S Pat Off

. . . the miracle yarn that makes things fit

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
1230 Avenue of the Americas • New York 20, N. Y.

Saving that smile till lunchtime?

Lunchtime means meat! And even tiny tots break into big grins when meat's on the menu—particularly Gerber's Meats. For each can of Beef, Veal or Liver has all the all-meat goodness of Armour quality cuts—specially prepared for babies, of course. That means true-meat color, true-meat flavor—plus complete body-building proteins. And of course you know your baby needs them every day.

You save every day. You can save as much as 55 minutes of valuable time and lots of Daddy's hard-earned money when you serve Gerber's Beef, for instance, rather than fixing Baby's meat at home. All Gerber's Meats are ready-to-eat. No scraping, no cooking, no work! It's as easy to serve them as Gerber's True-Flavor Fruits, Vegetables and Desserts.

More smiles per spoonful when Baby's on Gerber's—right from the first. For the Cereals, Strained Foods, Junior Foods and Meats are prepared by specialists who know babies' likes and nutritional needs. That's why doctors approve Gerber's, too—start to finish.

Gerber's
BABY FOODS

Babies are our business . . . our only business!

Bringing Up Baby

Hints collected by Mrs Dan Gerber (Mother of 5)

BONNET NEWS. Crisp white piqué is a favorite fabric for Baby's summer hat. Simplest to keep clean and perky is the kind that buttons at the back. This can be opened out flat for easy washing and fast ironing.

FRUITFUL TIP. Some lunchtime soon when you have a bit of Baby's Gerber Fruit left over, make yourself a tasty sandwich, like so. Blend the fruit smoothly with a bit of peanut butter and a dash of salt. Or mix it with cream cheese and softened butter. Very tempting on wholewheat bread or toast.

SUMMER STORM WARNING. If lightning is likely to throw your electric light system out of kilter (at home or at your vacation spot) keep a flashlight handy for sudden emergencies.

VACATION "VITTLES" FOR BABY. You can buy Gerber's Strained and Junior Foods almost everywhere you go these days, but to avoid getting caught short one of our readers suggests this. "Take along several containers each of the Gerber's Fruits, Vegetables, Meats and Desserts Baby likes so much. Then you'll be covered until you locate a grocery that carries Gerber's from start to finish."

SEE WHAT UNCLE SAM SAYS. A recent bulletin from the U. S. Department of Agriculture offers this bright idea on bringing up Baby. To keep your tot quietly amused on a sizzling day, tie a bright balloon to the crib, carriage or playpen. Watching it move seems to fascinate small folks in a big way. Keeps them cool, quiet and happy for quite a stretch.

WHAT DO YOU SAY? All of us other mothers are interested in hearing from you on your favorite Baby Care Tips. Put them in the mailbox when you have a minute. Just address the envelope to Mrs. Dan Gerber, Box 45, Fremont, Michigan.

MIDSUMMER GIFT. Send for your free samples of Gerber's 3 good-tasting Cereals. Dept. 88-0, Fremont, Mich. In Canada, Gerber-Ogilvie Ltd., Toronto.

TOGRAPH BY ELIZABETH P. RIEGEL

The child who is constantly nagged or reproved at mealtime may become so emotionally upset that he cannot or will not eat.

"My Child Won't Eat"

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen
President, Chicago Board of Health

NE of the puzzles still laid before doctors most commonly by mothers is the child who "won't eat." This statement in itself is, of course, an exaggeration. hildren eat something. And any child is well, and whose experiences with have been happy ones, eats most gs with appetite and enjoyment, at most of the time.

ence, when the doctor hears that fa-r, "My child won't eat," he knows his first step is to find out whether the is in good health. If his examination s up no physical condition to account ack of appetite, he then explores the time situation in the home.

henever this problem is brought to my questioning along the second line, I have satisfied myself that the ngster isn't sick, usually brings out a re something like this: A table where ood is abundant, nicely prepared and ed. The children are well dressed, hair ed and faces clean. A typical com-ble, prosperous American home.

or this is a complaint of homes where is plentiful. At a Fresh-Air Fund sani-m of which I was director, set up to eedy youngsters, appetites were enor-s. When we put some "eating prob-" with our charges to see what would en, they, too, began to eat ravenously. mber of wealthy parents who had ob-ed the experiment then asked if they t bring their own spoiled offspring to learn to enjoy food!)

owever, if we listen to the conversa-at the attractive, well-stocked table I just visualized, the chances are we will something like this:

ATHER: As I was saying ——

OTHER: Excuse me, John—Michael, t have you done with your napkin?

ICHAEL: It's right here, I ——

ATHER: Don't you talk with your th full!

MOTHER: Sally, eat your carrots!

SALLY: I don't like carrots!

MOTHER AND FATHER: Sally, eat those carrots!

And so it goes, throughout the entire meal, perhaps ending in shouting from the parents, tears from the youngsters, maybe a refusal by Sally to eat anything at all. Is it any wonder that the young fry develop complexes associated with eating? Meals are charged with tensions and hostilities, when they should be relaxed and enjoyable. The children's anticipation of food is darkened by the knowledge that they will be lectured from the time they sit down until they leave or are sent from the table.

Or perhaps it develops that the child who "won't eat" simply won't eat certain foods. Mother, determined to carry her point for nutritional reasons, or because she feels a principle of obedience is involved, makes an issue of it.

Many parents have had evidence that the child who is constantly nagged and badgered to clean his plate or to mind his manners is likely to do just the opposite. Otherwise, we doctors would not be getting all these cases of children who won't eat. But few parents realize how deep and how far-reaching the results may be. It is known that nervous tension and emotional upset interfere with proper functioning of the digestive system. Prolonged and repeated upsets may result in lasting digestive disorder.

A man I know suffered from dyspepsia, and had a long list of foods which, if eaten even in tiny amounts, would incapacitate him. After he had been happily married for a while, he began to find that he could eat anything! He then realized that constant childhood conflicts, centering around food, had been the reason for his "delicate stomach."

Emotional and personality results may be as long-lasting. The child who is constantly nagged or yelled at at mealtime may

THE NEW-FORMULA JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Proved by exhaustive clinical study to be an unusually effective preparation to PREVENT IMPETIGO

PREVENT RAW BUTTOCKS PREVENT DIAPER RASH PREVENT HEAT RASH

MOTHER! You can minimize the danger of your baby's suffering from the four most common skin irritations of infancy—with regular daily use of new Johnson's Baby Lotion.

This new-formula lotion actually kills the germs that commonly cause impetigo and diaper rash. And its unusual physical and chemical properties make it highly effective in the prevention and treatment of excoriated buttocks and heat rash. It is soothing, snow-white—non-irritating to delicate baby skin.

No other product known can give your baby such complete protection. Get new-formula Johnson's Baby Lotion today!

Skin irritations reach new low in 8 hospital tests!

New Lotion proves superior. Johnson's Baby Lotion was tested against generally accepted methods of care in 8 leading hospitals for over 10,000 cumulative baby days. With ordinary methods as many as 55% of the babies suffered skin irritations. In the same instances, with new Lotion care, skin irritations of all kinds dropped to an average of less than 2%!

Impetigo epidemic halted. In one large Eastern hospital, an epidemic of impetigo had been a serious problem for four months. New Johnson's Baby Lotion stopped it within one week!

Protect your baby with new Johnson's Baby Lotion!

Use after bath, at diaper changes. Smooth a few drops of Lotion over baby's body regularly, every day. It will keep his skin softer, functioning better. And you'll never have to worry about skin irritations that make baby so miserable.

No "ammonia diaper" odor, either. New Johnson's Baby Lotion prevents that unpleasant odor, keeps baby smelling sweet and nursery fresh. Give your baby this amazing new care from now on!

Available in 49¢ and 98¢ sizes

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

When "Childhood Constipation" upsets your 6-month-old . . .

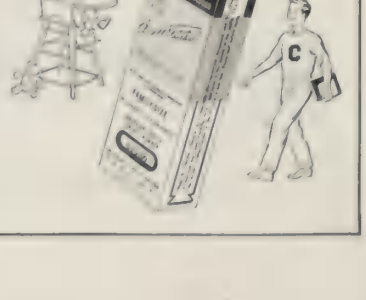
When your baby is upset because of "Childhood Constipation" give him Fletcher's Castoria. The mild yet thorough laxative that's made especially for his delicate little system. Your doctor will tell you Fletcher's Castoria does not contain a single harsh drug. So gentle, it cannot cause griping, diarrhea or discomfort. So pleasant tasting even very young babies take it willingly.

or troubles your 6-year-old . . .

When your growing child is troubled by "Childhood Constipation," remember this: Strong, adults' laxatives . . . even in reduced doses . . . may be too harsh! Give Fletcher's Castoria. It's thorough and effective—yet so gentle it will not upset sensitive digestive systems. Tastes so good—children take it without any struggle. So keep Fletcher's on hand at all times—it's made especially for infants and children . . . children of all ages!

give Fletcher's Castoria



The laxative made especially for infants and children . . . children of all ages!

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

"From high chair to high school!"

respond by withdrawing, or else by becoming aggressive and hostile. Long after the battles at table have been forgotten, he may carry a behavior pattern that will make life more difficult for him. No item of diet, no point of manners is worth that.

"But he needs eggs and vegetables," mothers will wail when I point out these facts. Or, "We can't just sit there and let Michael and Sally eat like little beasts!"

In my experience, the greater part of the tension over eating that exists in so many otherwise happy homes could be relieved if parents would remember one simple fact: children are children, and they cannot be expected to behave like adults.

In the first place, they are little animals. Many of the refinements and restrictions of behavior that we impose on them when they begin to eat at the family table are foreign to their natures and difficult to master.

Even after these are seemingly mastered, there may be periods of backsliding, as when the child becomes of school age, and turns to outside friends and interests. This is often a period of messy mealtime behavior, but it means that the child is growing up. Not until a youngster is eleven or twelve (and at about that time table manners will get better without any outside aid) is he developed enough physically and emotionally to do the things many parents expect at a much earlier age.

In the second place, it is a known fact that little folk are naturally suspicious of new dishes, and that there are many individual dislikes and aversions, some physical and some emotional in origin.

When Sally consistently resists carrots, she may be responding to symptoms of a hidden condition akin to allergy, or she may simply be asserting herself as an emerging individual personality. The latter is so normal and universal that doctors have charted definite patterns of food refusal, to be expected at various ages.

Tots of two and three years, for example, are likely to turn down green vegetables; at five, it's root vegetables that are in dis
At six and seven the dislikes swing to c vegetables and desserts, especially thos are strongly flavored.

Another factor is that during peri slow growth, as from three to five, app are naturally smaller, and interest in declines. Many parents, not understa this, continue to pile the child's plate
The very sight of the huge quantit knows he is expected to eat may destr appetite when a youngster is in a growth stage.

In any age period, it has been foun dislikes are fewer, and appetites keener parents have taken pains to keep mea happy and free from conflict.

This is not to say that children sho allowed to run wild. Neither do I p doing away with the balanced diet. A c minimum of discipline is needed, but a ant, understanding attitude on the part parents will insure that the discipline become of the nagging kind that precip
a more or less permanent emotional cri

If you've a child who "won't eat," laxing about it. Put a small serving of f the child's plate and then forget abo matter of eating. If new or disliked dis served, balance them with something familiar and liked, disregard the po that are left. If your family mea hitherto have been marked by reprim see if you can't introduce a bit of party instead. In the rare cases where rejectio widespread as to have possible nutr effect, ask your doctor's help. But do food, or the way your youngster gets his mouth, become an issue in your ho

In my own family, whenever we b discouraged about the children's prog table, we would invite a guest for dinn variably the children responded with pany manners" and delighted us. May "company manners" we displayed our toward our children, as well as towa guest, had something to do with this.

A PRIMER ON THE COLD WAR

(Continued from Page 12)

help—others to live. That will mean the sacrifice of many ambitions on all sides.

Q.: For what may we hope?

A.: Despite the intensity of the struggle, it is possible to discern common realities superior to the struggle. All countries need one another as markets, and as sources of materials they do not possess. Every country has a way of life peculiar to its own history and genius, which it is jealous to preserve. All want peace and are instinctively hostile to those who incite to civil and international strife. All want psychological and emotional security and hope for a greater degree of economic security. And it is doubtful whether the leadership of any nation, however despotic, dares risk an atomic war.

The situation, being dangerous, calls for calmness, confidence and prudence. America should be strong, but not bellicose or provocative, and should abjure foreign adventures. We should earnestly strive for internal peace by upholding justice, and mitigating class and racial frictions, taking a dim view of all who, from any quarter, left or right, fan the flames of internal hatreds. Anticommunists who recklessly attack their fellow citizens on mere suspicion contribute, like communists, to the disintegration of morale.

We should be prudently generous, but we should also remember that even God can help only those who help themselves. We should have confidence—which with domestic peace is entirely justifiable—that the United States can, if attacked, defend herself against all comers.

And we should learn, I think, to take a little longer view of history. Danger and crisis are nothing new in the world.

External enemies have never yet destroyed a great nation without the collaboration of that nation's errors and imprudences.

The Soviet Union is undoubtedly busy creating a vast despotic centralized empire, but such empires are always vulnerab subject to all sorts of internal risks—to for instance, involved in mere chan personalities at the top! Being rigid, th also brittle. They are highly artificia not at all in harmony with nature.

And nature has a persistent way of her own revenge.

Many developments that we canno sibly foresee may and probably will div course of history from its present im
The cold war can be changed, or end the emergence of new political, soc religious forces that no one at prese predict. If one believes that there is a reality unifying mankind, one would this, and be on the watch to recogn and work with it. The cold war also simply peter out, as both sides suffe the burden of maintaining it, or as the
of some natural catastrophe afflicting
the other or all of the participants.

In my own belief, the cold war is the of the overambition of all the Allies last great war; their decision to w
"total" war, for "unconditional s der"—a war of unlimited objectives, for a Utopian dream of total agreem follow total victory. History does not like that. The release of unlimited forc unlimited objectives can with difficul halted by the defeat of the enemy. Wa struggle tend to take on a life of their After all great wars it takes a long ti humanity to sober up.

Meanwhile, it would be well to reca admonition of Lincoln in the great S Inaugural Address, and remember though, in God's will, offenses may "yet woe unto him from whom the o cometh." If the west rushes into war only be because we are afraid of ours not of the Soviet Union. It is better one's opponents have the nervous b downs.

THE

IF ONLY IT WERE YESTERDAY

(Continued from Page 52)

left the road and crashed into a tree. had never known, she did not know as she stood there, whether it had been berate or not.

he had never hated Jessie, she thought. en her widowed mother died and left her a nine-year-old half sister to rear, she accepted it as a duty. She might have ried at that time, but no man wanted to ot an orphan, and for long years she had e her best: sat along the wall at dancing ol, while Jessie's curls bobbed and her t white skirts fluttered; saw to her edu- on, her clothes. And watched the boys always seemed to surround her.

hen as time went on there had been four s of wonderful peace. Jessie had gone to ge, and had spent her vacations with ds. For the first time Amy was living a f her own. She felt younger, gayer, for be- Jessie she always seemed faded and old. it was during that period that Randolph on began to pay her some attention. ot as a lover. She knew that now, but at he liked her; and she bloomed under his est. She was still blooming when Jessie hed college and came home to stay.

all fairness, prob- , Jessie did not ze that he was 's property. But had seen his face n Jessie came into arlor on her way to something or r.

s this the little r?" he said. "And so little at that." e knew then it all over. Not at , of course. He her out occa- lly, and Jessie had all sorts of around her.

ttle by little, ever, the balance ed, especially the accident. n Jessie was ght home she was definitely the he came to see. that he ignored . When Susan, arlormaid, admitted him, he would stop. Hi! How's our invalid today?"

Expecting you, I dare say," Amy would dryly.

e could not break herself of that habit, iting so he had to speak to her. Once or she was tempted to tell him of the fancy vs and bed jacket with which Jessie pre- d for his visits. "All fixed up for you," she ed to say. "Lipstick, too, and a new man- ." She never did, however. He did not for one thing. She would hear him ing the stairs, carrying a book or a box owers. And Susan going back to the ce quarters, probably to whisper that as back again, and wasn't Amy's nose f joint!

TEVER Jessie thought, she had never ed her for the accident.

he road was slippery," she said. "The mply skidded off the road. It was my ck to get hurt. That's all."

t one day after they brought her home spoke to her about it. "You know that was my fault, Jessie," she said. "I don't protecting, if that's what you're doing." sie had looked rather odd. "It's all over, " she said. "Anyhow, you're my half . You've always been good to me. I owe lot for that."

only did my duty," Amy said, and d out of the room. Neither of them had loned Ranny, but there he was between and they both knew it.

y had been frightened after the acci- It seemed to her, too, that her head- were coming oftener, headaches which drove her almost crazy with pain and made her do strange and impulsive things. One day she went to a psychiatrist, giving another name and wearing her oldest clothes. But he had been quite useless. He wanted to talk about her childhood, and when she said she had reared a half sister he had almost gloated.

"I see," he said. "How old is she now?"

"Twenty-two."

SHE could not see him, but she felt he was looking at her. "Get along pretty well, I suppose," he said. "No trouble, of course?"

She assured him there was not, but he could not let Jessie alone. He kept on about her, and at last Amy got up, flushing angrily. "Why should I resent her?" she demanded. "After I've devoted most of my life to her!"

"That in itself might be a reason," he said, smiling. "Women who have to care for old mothers often hate them without realizing it."

She had never gone back to him after that, and her headaches were, if anything, worse.

She had been having one that day. She leaned against the wall of the apartment house and tried to think about what had happened. In a way, it had started innocently enough. As she had to be cut, she had put the two sleeping tablets in Jessie's sherry so she would be asleep when Ranny came. She had not meant anything more than that. But later when she went into the room it had looked so easy. Jessie asleep and the gas heater burning.

Suddenly she felt very cold. The wind was blowing her coat, and she wrapped it around her and walked on. She could no longer hear the siren, but she knew the police were there at the house. For the first time the instinct for self-preservation asserted itself. So far she had not thought about herself. Now she realized that she must do so, must have an alibi for the last few hours. Perhaps if she went back to the party it would help.

After all, why not? It was her brother John's daughter Brenda who was making her debut. And it might not be over. Certainly they had seen her there before, John and Emily, his wife, and Brenda. Even her own two maids, Susan and Hilda, whom she had loaned Emily for the cloakroom. That had left only old Nora, the cook, in the house with Jessie, and Amy had told her not to go upstairs until Jessie rang her bell.

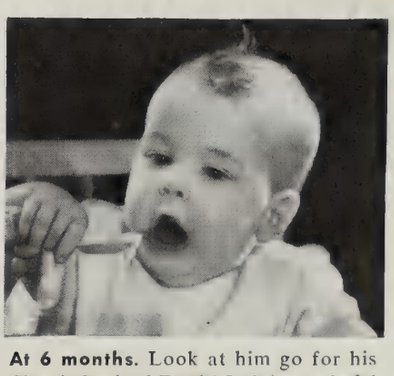
She knew now that had been a mistake. Or had it? Wasn't it natural to let Jessie sleep?

As she walked on she went back over the afternoon, shivering as she did so. When she arrived at the party Susan and Hilda had been busy in the cloakroom, and although she was almost blind with headache she saw that Susan had had her hair done at the hairdresser's and was wearing a pair of ridiculous high-heeled shoes. But they were there and she knew they would be there for hours.

She stopped suddenly when she remembered that. If they were still at the party, who had rung Jessie's bell? Certainly not Jessie. Then who? Her heart began to beat fast until she remembered that Nora had probably been worried after all and gone upstairs. But it had been too late, or else why were the police there?

When she reached John's house she stopped under a street lamp and looked at her watch. It was after seven, but evidently the reception was still going on. Cars were lined up

The Heart Remembers



By Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman

The heart remembers lovely things:
The rainbowed cloud, the running brook,
The fragrance of immortal springs,
Poems from a favorite book,
The wedge of geese against the sky,
The castles built in campfire embers,
And all Love's banners going by. . . .
The heart remembers.

Will your baby's future tell this story?

At 3 months. Hugh Starke started life with two wonderful gifts. The first—a wise Mommie who followed her doctor's advice. And second—a wise doctor who took care to prescribe the best for Hugh. For instance—when Hugh was ready for solid foods his doctor specified Clapp's Cereals. (Doctors know Clapp's Cereals bring babies more iron than unfortified cereals.)

At 6 months. Look at him go for his Clapp's Strained Foods! Isn't it wonderful the way babies love them. Think of all the extra nourishment babies get in Clapp's Foods! (They're pressure-cooked to bring babies more vitamins and minerals.)

At 18 months. A sweetheart if ever you saw one! Healthy, bright as a button. What delightful proof that babies thrive on Clapp's extra nourishment. With 16 strong, white teeth to his credit—Hugh is becoming a Clapp's Junior Foods champ.

12 years. A long time since his baby food days! But Hugh's picture tells you that here's a youngster who had a good start! Mother! Make sure your baby gets the best start too. Start him on Clapp's Baby Foods today. You'll be glad you did!

DOCTORS HAVE BEEN RECOMMENDING CLAPP'S BABY FOODS LONGER THAN ANY OTHER BABY FOODS

Product of American Home Foods

NEW-AND OH SO WONDERFUL!

There's a New and Wonderful Member in the Johnson's Baby Products Family, too!

JOHNSON'S COTTON TIPS!

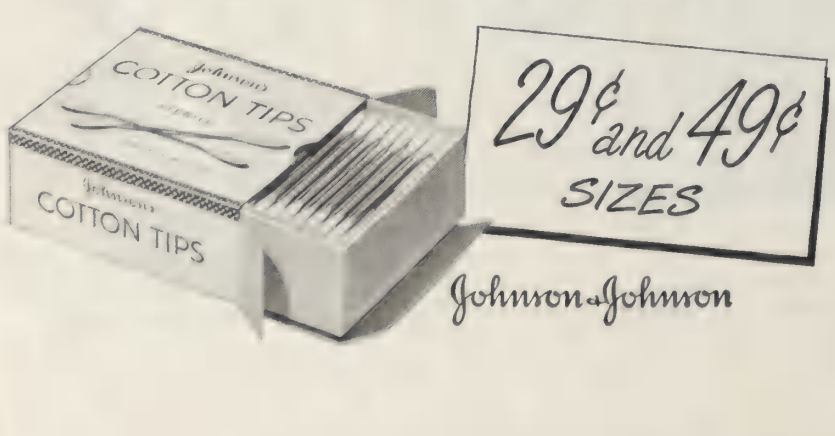
Now! For your baby—cotton tips that mean assured protection in everyday care.

Extra soft and gentle. Extra safe. Made by Johnson & Johnson, makers of baby products you know you can trust.

Maximum safety and comfort for Baby!

Johnson's Cotton Tips are specially sterilized, right in the box, under the famous Johnson & Johnson quality-control method.

They're made of the softest, purest absorbent cotton, the same fine quality you choose for your own medicine chest.



Extra Conveniences!

Thrifty double tips:
Johnson's Cotton Tips are ideal for cleansing—for applying Johnson's Baby Oil or Lotion.

Cotton firmly anchored:
The cotton on Johnson's Cotton Tips is spun directly on the sticks—stays firm in use.

Handy new drawer box:
Easy to open—fits on a narrow shelf. Protects Johnson's Cotton Tips till the last one is used.

Get Johnson's Cotton Tips for your nursery tray—today!

along the curb, and she could hear faintly the strains of the orchestra.

Apparently they had heard nothing yet, and she turned and went up the steps. The door was open, and a chattering group of young people was just leaving. John's butler, Saunders, was in the hall, and the caterer's men were still moving about with trays of drinks.

Saunders seemed surprised to see her again.

"I dropped a handkerchief," she said. "One of my best. Is—is my brother still here?"

He looked even more surprised, and she realized it had been an error.

"I thought I saw him going out," she said hurriedly. "It's been a nice party, Saunders."

"Yes, madam."

But perhaps he knew something after all. He was gazing at her suspiciously. Maybe she looked queer. Maybe she looked as if she had just murdered her half sister. She stiffened her shaking knees and slowly climbed the stairs.

At the end of the big drawing room Emily was sitting, looking exhausted after the long hours on her feet, but Brenda was still standing in her long pale blue dress, apparently as fresh as ever. She would probably go out and dance all night, Amy thought. Or no. Of course she wouldn't. Not tonight.

Emily raised her eyebrows when she saw Amy. "You must be a glutton for punishment. I thought you'd gone long ago."

"I just went out for a little air. I have a headache."

But Emily was watching her shrewdly, and unexpectedly Amy's legs gave way beneath her. She sat down abruptly in the nearest chair.

"I dropped a handkerchief," she said. "One of my nicest ones." Then, when Emily said nothing, she drew a long breath and looked around the room. "I didn't see the flowers before. They're very nice."

Emily smiled. "Yes," she said. "There are a lot of them. John said we looked like a first-class funeral."

Amy jerked at the word, and her handbag slid from her lap to the floor. Its contents were dumped out, and of course there was her handkerchief for everyone to see. No one mentioned it, however. Brenda dropped to her knees and began gathering up the contents. She picked up a small bottle and looked at it. Then she stared at Amy.

"What in the world are you doing with sleeping pills?" she inquired. "I thought you objected to them."

Amy was startled. She stared at the bottle. She recovered quickly, however. "I don't take them," she said. "They're Jessie's." Then all at once she saw a way out. She lowered her voice. "I don't like to leave them around where she can get at them."

Brenda stared up at her. "What on earth do you mean by that?" she inquired.

"She has despondent spells," Amy said. "When she thinks she'll never get better. She has frightened me more than once."

Even Emily wasn't smiling now. She looked hard at Amy. "I thought she'd been exceptionally cheerful lately," she said. "She was gay enough yesterday when I saw her. Look here, Amy, don't you feel well?"

"I'm all right," Amy said, her lips stiff. "Just one of my headaches."

She closed her eyes, feeling dizzy and sick with the heavy scent of flowers. Like a funeral, John had said. Like a funeral!

THE last callers were about to leave, and Emily groaned and got up. She forced a smile, and as they departed she motioned to the orchestra to stop. All at once there was a welcome quiet. The men picked up their instruments and left, and Emily sat down again and kicked off her slippers. Brenda, having repacked Amy's bag, gave it back to her.

"Do you really mean that you're afraid Aunt Jessie would take an overdose of those things?" she asked. "It seems so silly. Why would she kill herself? She's getting better all the time."

"I just think it's wiser to be safe," Amy said and got up. "Well, I'll have to be going. You must be exhausted. It's been a nice party, Brenda. Thanks for asking me."

She straightened her hat and moved ward the hall and the stairs. Her knees w steadier now, but she felt she had to get of the house. And she did not like the w Emily was still watching her.

"Good night," she said. "It's getting la They'll wonder at home what's happened me."

Brenda was looking at her too. "Can' get you something for the headache?"

"Don't bother. Nothing helps it excep night's sleep."

She had started for the hall when Em stopped her. "Aren't you going to look your handkerchief?" she said. "Or is tha in your bag?"

"I had another one," Amy said and, tu ing back, went rather hastily into the libra There, and in the long dining room behi she made a perfunctory search in case son one was watching. And as a matter of fa someone was. Emily, soundless in her sto ing feet, had come in and was taking a sm sandwich from the table.

"I'm starved," she said. "John and I have a tray later on. No use cooking dinne wonder where he is, anyhow. Of course hates parties. Want something to eat?"

BUT Amy did not want anything to eat. she wanted was to get away.

"I don't see my handkerchief," she sa "If you come across it just keep it for me."

"All right." Emily sounded faintly skep cal. "Oh, I knew there was somethi Thanks for sending your maids over. T cloakroom downstairs must have been a rio She took another sandwich. "You ought try these," she said. "They're pâté. By way, Ranny Mason came after you'd go but he didn't stay. He hurried off. May he took John with him. John's very fond him, you know."

Amy stared at her. "Fond of him!" said. "John's almost twice his age. It's diculous."

"I can think of a reason." Emily smi and lit a cigarette. "And incidentally, may drop in tonight," she said. "That is John ever gets back, and I'm able to stand my feet. I know John wants to talk to and Jessie."

Jessie! But he wouldn't talk to Jessie. N ever again. And with Emily's eyes on her was back in Jessie's room, her head thump and Jessie asleep with the window open a the gas heater burning. She had gone bes the bed to speak to her, but Jessie had answered. So she had closed the windo turned out the flame in the heater and th turned on the gas again. It had been an i pulse, dark and deadly, like the crash. O this was different. This was death. S turned so pale that Emily got up quickly.

"Sit down," she said imperatively. "P your head down between your knees whil get you a drink."

The whisky helped somewhat. Amy w able to sit up, even to look at the clock.

"I don't know what came over me," s said. "I suppose I was overtired." And wh Emily said nothing she got up. "It's half p seven. I'd better take the maids home. Th must be through now."

Because she was determined not to home alone to face what was waiting the Emily, however, only took another sandwi

"They're probably having supper dow stairs," she said placidly. "They can w over later. It's not far. Or we can take th when we come over. Unless you need them

"We can manage," Amy said, and we out into the hall.

There was a different sort of activity th now. The caterer's men were carrying out t small gilt chairs, and in the drawing ro someone was pushing furniture about. Fr the kitchen below came sounds of excit laughter and the smell of fresh-made coff

For the first time she wondered why Jo and Emily were coming over that night, af a day like this. It must be important, s thought numbly. But she did not want to Emily again. Not after the way she h looked at her: as though she was acti strangely, as though she was not normal.

The hall and cloakroom below we deserted save for men carrying out the lo

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

Ladies' Home

JOURNAL

The Magazine Women Believe In

September 1950 · 25c

CAN A NATION AFFORD HEALTH FOR ALL ITS PEOPLE?—By Rebecca

Beginning a series for all new husbands and wives
OUR OWN YOUNG MARRIEDS

Continuing the amusing sequel to Cheaper by the .
BELLES ON THEIR TOES

THE SNOB, a complete-in-this-issue novel—By Richard B. Gehman

VOL. LXVII, No. 9

CONTENTS

SEPTEMBER, 1950

AL PARKER
(Cover Artist)

"As a boy I painted clothespins and named them for movie stars, illustrated the lyrics on player-piano rolls and wrote detective stories on shirt cardboards. Grandpa Bender, a steamboat captain, who didn't think much of my early infatuation with the saxophone, gave me a year's tuition to the St. Louis School of Fine Arts. The JOURNAL's mother-daughter covers are among the results."

WIDE WORLD

REBECCA WEST
(Can a Nation Afford Health for All its People? Page 36)

Cicily Fairfield (her given name) has been writing since girlhood in England. She took her writing name from an Ibsen character after doing an article for a feminist magazine her mother had forbidden her to read. Her most recent book, The Meaning of Treason, a report on British war criminals, confirmed her position as the world's best woman reporter.

RICHARD B. GEHMAN

"I am nearly thirty and come from Lancaster, Pennsylvania. I went to high school there—never did get to college. I started off working on a local newspaper, from which I was fired. In 1942 I was drafted, and for two years I edited an Army-published newspaper for civilians in Oak Ridge, Tennessee. I sold some short stories, which beguiled me into thinking writing was easy. The Snob (Page 34) is my first fiction in two years."

Complete-in-One-Issue Novel

The Snob — Richard B. Gehman — 34

Fiction

Somebody's Always Chasing Somebody — William Brandon — 38
Escape From the Past — Gertrude Schweitzer — 56
Not a Care in the World — Frederick Nebel — 58
The Violin — John Barrett — 66

Special Features

The Sophisticates are Not the Wise — Dorothy Thompson — 11
Calling All Souls — G. M. White — 11
Tell Me Doctor—No. 8 — Henry B. Safford, M.D. — 31
Can a Nation Afford Health for All its People? — Rebecca West — 36
Belles on Their Toes (Second part of three) — Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey — 40
Our Own Young Marrieds — 54
There's a Man in the House — Harlan Miller — 62
That's All We Need to Know About You — 63
How America Lives: "The Most Talented Kid in Town" — Roger Butterfield — 189
Baby's First Year — Photos by Wayne Miller — 214
Parents and Pets — Carmen Stone Allen — 226

General Features

Our Readers Write Us — 5
Under-Cover Stuff — Bernardine Kielty — 14
Homeless Children in Butte, Montana — 23
The Receiving Home — Margaret Hickey — 23
Reference Library — 24
Making Marriage Work — Clifford R. Adams — 26
What's the Answer? (The Sub-Deb) — Edited by Maureen Daly — 28
Fifty Years Ago in the Journal • Journal About Town — 33
This is a Tub-Ringer — Munro Leaf — 84
Ask Any Woman — Marcelene Cox — 90
Bringing Up Parents — Dr. Barbara Biber — 152
Treat Childhood Fears With Love — Dr. Herman N. Bundesen — 207
Diary of Domesticity — Gladys Taber — 223

Fashion and Beauty

Fall Trends — Wilhela Cushman — 42
Fall Costume Complete — Wilhela Cushman — 46
Fall Hats — Ruth Mary Packard — 48
The Wool Dress Idea — Nora O'Leary — 50
Model Plans for a Maternity Wardrobe — Nora O'Leary — 60
3 Steps to a Prettier Skin — Dawn Crowell Norman — 160
$100 Pattern Wardrobe — Nora O'Leary — 200

Food and Homemaking

On a Saturday Night — Ann Batchelder — 64
Line a Day — Ann Batchelder — 68
Easy to Live With — Gladys Taber — 120
Conversation Piece — Ruth Mills Teague — 132
Main Dish for Four $1 — Louella G. Shouer — 196
Quick and Easys for Two — Louella G. Shouer — 230

Architecture and Interior Decoration

Belle Mead — Richard Pratt — 52
Bare Elegance — Henrietta Murdock — 198

Poetry

Esther Wood 12 • Phyllis I. Rosenteur 81 • Martha Savage 92 • Nancy Byrd Turner 102 • Hannah Kahn 115 • G. M. White 124 • Jesse Stuart 130 • Elizabeth-Ellen Long 135 • Lucille Watson 147 • Elizabeth McFarland 155 • Emily I. Alleman 164 • Margery Mansfield 172 • Joseph Auslander 181 • William Stafford 213 • Eleanor Stanley Lockwood 218 • Harriet Gray Blackwell 224 • Jeanne-Alix Maisonville 232

Cover Design by Al Parker

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1950 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U.S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U.S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U.S. and Possessions, Canada, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas: 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries, 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U.S. payable in U.S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

...rilling! Gives
...ng new brightness
...fine washables!"
MAWR CLASSICS
...ling maker of smart play-time clothes

NEW ...FLAKES
WITH
...NT-ACTION

...ent for ...turers ...s new ...l white ...ng new ...f your ...fresh, ...o-wear ...silks— ...n you ...Flakes with "Radiant Action." It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy!

Longer wear for nylons! Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long! Get a box of new Ivory Flakes today—it's America's largest-selling flake soap! The only flake soap with the famous Ivory name!

P.S. Ivory Flakes are perfect for dishes, and so very kind to hands!

...y to wear...it's Ivory Flakes care
99 44/100% PURE!

Very personally yours

This was the jaunt you promised Joan—before you remembered what day it was. But even if you were one to beg off, you needn't—with the new, softer Kotex.

You sidestep discomfort; thanking your stars for this wonderful softness that holds its shape because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it.

No "outline" anxiety follows you as you stroll among the crowd. There's no such thing as revealing outlines, with the flat pressed ends of Kotex . . . and that special safety center gives you extra protection, whichever absorbency you have chosen. For Regular, Junior or Super answers your individual needs.

Super Kotex in the Brown Box—extra absorbency for more-than-average needs.

Junior Kotex in the Green Box—for women who prefer a slightly narrower napkin.

Regular Kotex in the Blue Box—perfectly suited to the needs of most women.

New Kotex Wonderform* Belt made with DuPont nylon elastic—non-curling, non-twisting. Washable. Dries fast.

choose Kotex than all other sanitary napkins*

Our Readers Write us

Teaching by Bad Example

Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Editors: Is there any difference between the gangism that excludes decent high-school youngsters from fraternities and that which excludes decent adults from comparable activities in their community—or even from the community itself? While it is doubtless true that adults can make a better adjustment to rejection, the cruelty is the same. And the motivation is the same: fear, based on a feeling of insecurity.

It has been my experience that very young children can learn ethical behavior and see the point in respecting rights and feelings of others. But you can't teach by precept that which isn't backed by example—and there lies the rub. "He ought to be hanged" . . . "Killing's too good for her" . . . "We ought to go drop a bomb on 'em"—these remarks are heard every day. We can't live by one code and expect our children to live by another.

Sincerely,
MRS. MAX C. SHANK.

A Great Tradition

Oakland, California.

Dear Friends: I certainly have enjoyed the article about Cyrus Curtis: his picture, beard and all, reminds me of my father, a Methodist minister. I recall most of the writers mentioned in the article. (What a versatile man Edward Bok was!) Mrs. Curtis and Mr. Bok were great editors—never have been equaled, in my opinion, until the present team of editors.

Most sincerely yours,
NELLIE P. LEWIS.

Aw, shucks.—ED.

Small Wolf

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Dear Editors: "Never underestimate the power of a woman," eh? Well, may I add that you should never underestimate the power of a three-year-old male? B. J. (Before Jeffrey) I was the one to grab the LHJ the minute it came and spend an hour with it—but now my son grabs it and will not even let me peek at it until he has carefully "read" every page.

And let no one rise up and call him a "sissy." No one within reach anyway! This little guy is really a husky. He is three years and three months old now and weighs forty-four pounds and is 41½ inches tall. But he is not all brawn! He has been talking since he was eight months old.

Sincerely,
OLIVE HAYS.

Why Chase Men?

The Hague, Holland.

Dear Editors: For almost a year I am an admiring reader of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It is a most appetizing magazine. And, especially for a European, it is interesting to learn about the way of living of the American woman, her ambitions and interests, but I am amazed how much trouble the American girl has getting herself married. So I should like to ask a few questions:

1. Is it generally impossible for the average girl to get a man without using all kinds of tricks?

2. Is it absolutely impossible for her to wait until the right man turns up and meanwhile find satisfaction in work, study or just ordinary life?

3. Are these man-sick creatures really the standard type of "nice American girl"?

Sincerely,
KITTY VAN DEN BERG.

Ans. 1. She doesn't have to use all kinds. 2. Not impossible, just improbable. 3. No—some are sick of men. —ED.

Homework for Citizens

Cassopolis, Michigan.

Dear Editors: I was interested in your editorial, Our Schools Are What We Make Them. In our community the parents are interested in trying to find some solution to the inadequacies of our school, but we meet with difficulties. What to do with the older teacher who is pitiable, yet so crotchety that she produces nervous tension in her classroom? What to do about the younger generation of teachers who feel no responsibility for the students beyond drawing their pay? What to do about the students in high school who attend classes mostly when the spirit moves them? These are problems the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools will have to help us solve.

Yours truly,
MARGARET S. BISHOP
President, P.T.A.

Picking and Choosing

Casablanca, Morocco.

Dear Editors: I enjoy every issue of the JOURNAL, and especially congratulate your "book condensation editor," for I think he is doing a really good job of book picking.

Yours truly,
MRS. R. BRUNEL.

Final score for 1949: Twenty-one JOURNAL features published as books (Profile of Youth to appear in the spring of '51). Twelve of these made best-seller lists; ten were selected for distribution by major book clubs. Of seventeen book-length features, all but one appeared in book form.—ED.

How Quick and Easy?

Little Rock, Arkansas.

To the Editors: From time to time in various magazines (your own included) articles tell housewives how to prepare a meal in thirty or forty-five minutes. Some even have little clocks showing time allotted for every action. But never—and I mean never—will anything like that work, except in complete solitude, with doorbell disconnected, phone off the hook and children locked up in a closet. Here's what happens:

Start dinner (thirty minutes allotted by the magazine). Doorbell rings—cleaners. Take care of cleaners and back to dinner. Johnny and neighbor locked in death struggle; peace conference, then back to dinner. Phone rings—ironing girl can't come tomorrow or any time this week, back to dinner. Mike bumps his head—time out for consolation and liniment, back to dinner. Sissy is tired of the play pen and yowling her head off. Change diaper, back to you-know-what. Johnny must have a Superman's cape—matter of life or death. Get Superman's cape and then back to dinner. Doorbell again—paper boy to collect. Baby's eating time—feed baby and b. t. d. Phone rings again and a sweet voice inquires if I will answer a question—it is an opinion poll: "Should mothers work?" Oh, well, b. t. d. Mike wet his pants—change and b. t. d. Baby is getting sleepy. Time out to fix bottle, pajamas,

"Thrilling! Gives sparkling new brightness to your fine washables!"

says BRYN MAWR CLASSICS of New York, leading maker of smart play-time clothes

NEW IVORY FLAKES
WITH RADIANT-ACTION

"It's wonderful!" "A beauty treatment for fine washables!" say leading manufacturers and department stores about this new wonder care.

Now, after washing—your bright and white fashions will dazzle you with sparkling new brightness! The soft flower colors of your lovely lingerie will blossom out with fresh, new beauty. And all your lovely-to-wear washables—wools, cottons, fine silks—will come out sunny bright when you wash them gently in new Ivory Flakes with "Radiant Action." It's the mildest, safest soap you can buy!

Longer wear for nylons! Change from strong soaps to gentle, nightly care with Ivory Flakes and keep stockings looking fresh up to twice as long! Get a box of new Ivory Flakes today—it's America's largest-selling flake soap! The only flake soap with the famous Ivory name!

P.S. Ivory Flakes are perfect for dishes, and so very kind to hands!

If it's lovely to wear...it's worth Ivory Flakes care

99 44/100% PURE!

there's lasting loveliness in solid silver . . .

Even lovelier than the roses on your party table is your Reed & Barton sterling. Its beauty is enduring . . . its grace and elegance forever yours in precious solid silver. For each of the many famous Reed & Barton sterling patterns is fashioned with timeless beauty to assure you lasting satisfaction.

REED & BARTON

STERLING

MADE BY ONE OF THE WORLD'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS — ESTABLISHED 1824

6-pc. place setting approximately $24.50 to $33, including tax, at leading stores.

Helpful Hostess Hints: For fascinating booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess," send 10c to Box 990 L., Taunton, Mass.

get her to bed and b. t. d. Holy cow, the phone again, hubby this time—an old Army pal in town, do we have enough dinner for an extra? Get the boys out of tub and into their pajamas. Dinner now well under way and the situation fairly well in hand, but my thirty-minute dinner has taken more than an hour and a half to prepare.

Oh, yes, articles say I can always find fifteen minutes to work on face, hair or hands and again resemble a human being. When? Right now I am beginning to think I am some sort of machine. Just oil me once in a while and stuff me with a vitamin every so often and I can go on indefinitely. I had better quit this fooling around and go start (yipe) dinner.

Yours in perpetual motion,
FRANKIE GUINLE

Talent Scout for Sis

San Francisco, California.

Dear Ladies' Home Journal: I have been reading about the Undiscovered American Beauties and I've decided that my sister, Maureen, is as pretty as the girls that win. She is 16½ and very nice to me.

I hope in six years, when I'm as old as she, I'll be as pretty and go out on as many dates as she does. Her sister,
JOANN BLOOMBERG

P.S. Please send back the picture for she does not know I took it.

The Charm of England

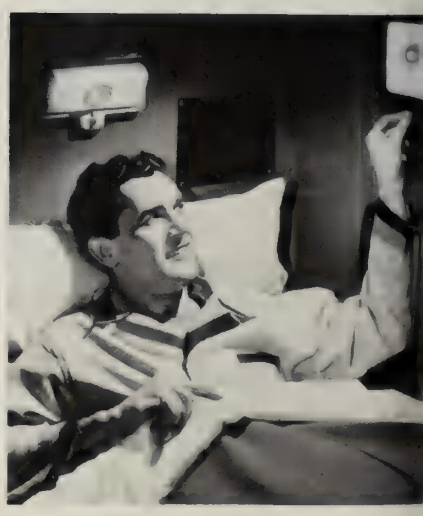
Warwickshire, England

Dear Editors: When he heard that I was to be an exchange teacher in England for a year, dad arranged for me to receive the JOURNAL every month so that, as he said, I "could show the English what America was really like." But when we ordered that subscription, neither of us dreamed that I would have a "JOURNAL holiday."

It all began with the letter you published from Mrs. Ironside-Wood, of Clopton Hall, inviting Americans to visit her. Like many other people, when I first read her letter, I thought, "How kind of her," and that was all. Gradually, however, it dawned on me that she might let me pay a visit to Clopton Hall. After much writing back and forth we arranged a suitable time.

I arrived at the railway station with a small suitcase and a bewildered expression, and Colonel Wood recognized me immediately. We drove through a calm English dusk, with rabbits and night owls flashing from the hedges. When we arrived at the hall, a warm welcome, a cup of excellent coffee and pleasant conversation made me feel at home.

My room was a large one, with a view of the "golden chain" tree bending toward the moat. Bits of decoration throughout the house reflected the varied homes of a "regular army" family—snarling tiger rugs from India, a curved Arabian dagger, embroidered hangings, prints of army scenes, portraits of young men in uniform, and drinking goblets that were really silver loving cups won in army athletic contests.



Sunday we went to services in the old church in the village, and in the afternoon a tea party provided an excuse for a swirl of "army" conversation. That night Colonel and Mrs. Wood told how they had bought the house, worked on it in the face of wartime restrictions, and had changed it from an abandoned tangle of nettles and creeper into a gracious home. They had done most of the redecorating themselves, hiring professional painters only to paint the two-story hall.

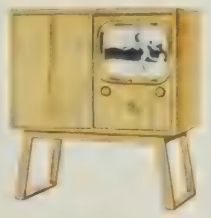
As they talked, Mrs. Wood sorted through some music at the piano, and suddenly said, "This is our song. We sang it first here in the drawing room, surrounded by packing cases and those odd bits of furniture that removal men always put in the wrong places." She began to play Bless This House, and they sang it together.

(Continued on Page 8)

You sleep, too, when he goes Pullman

Ask him to GO PULLMAN

COMFORTABLE, DEPENDABLE AND - ABOVE ALL - SAFE!

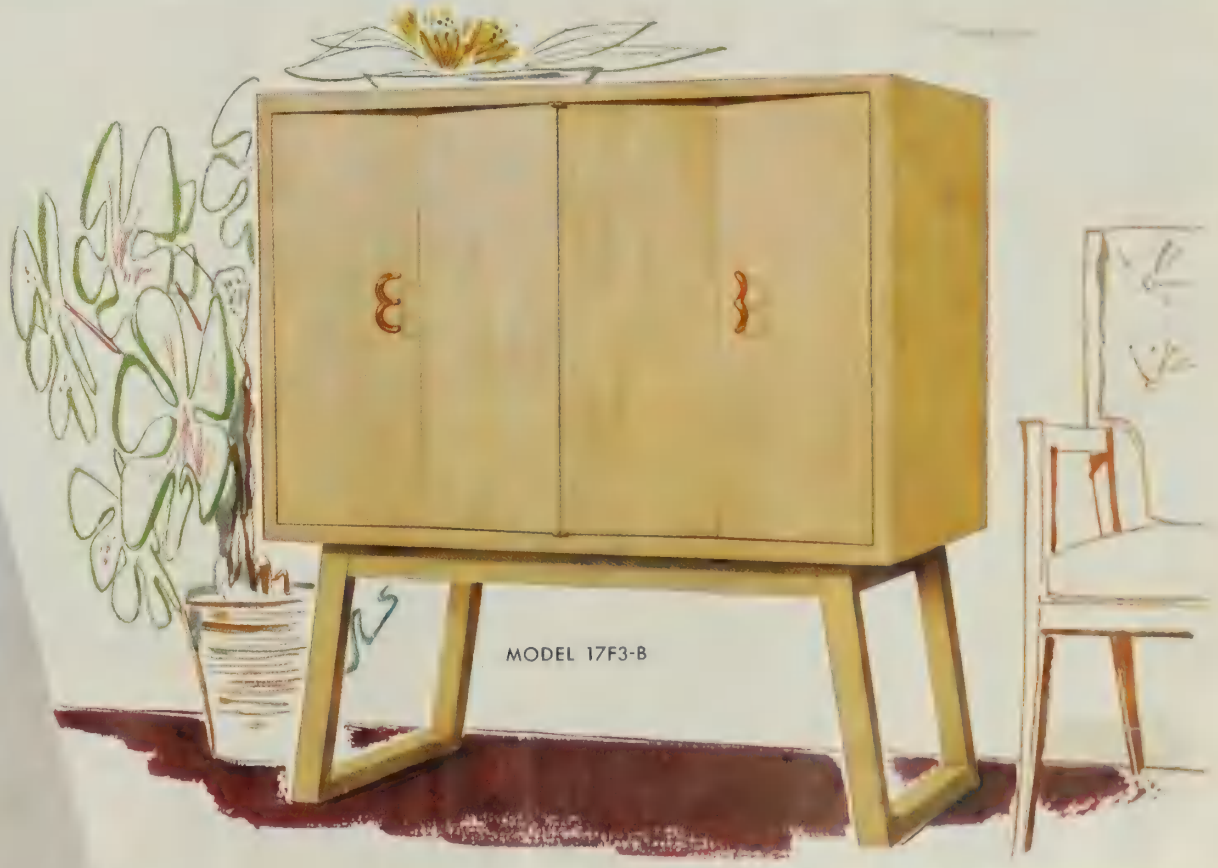


RAILROAD TRAVEL AT ITS BEST

1950, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

CHOSEN "Best Dressed" BY

FASHION ACADEMY



and acclaimed Best Buy of the year for "distinctive cabinet styling"

For America's most fashionable homes . . . twenty-nine Motorola Fashion Award models . . . in your choice of modern or traditional styles and fine-grained woods. Maggi McNellis selects a striking, modern Motorola off-the-floor combination console with life-size 17-inch rectangular screen, 3-speed phonograph, and famed Golden Voice AM/FM radio. New space-saving center-hinged doors in handsome cabinet of combed limed oak. Come see "Fashion Award" television, now featured exclusively by your Motorola dealer.

Motorola TV

MAGGI MC NELLIS . . . ALSO FASHION ACADEMY WINNER AS "Best Dressed"

Star of TV Shows . . . CBS "Maggi's Private Wire" . . . NBC "Leave it to the Girls." . . . Gown by Ceil Chapman.

Balbriggans

that win your heart

and warm your nights

No need to shiver your night life away—just wear Munsingwear balbriggans! On the gown the yoke is softly shirred, and the fully gathered skirt cascades softly from an elastic waist. Or, pajama-clad, you smile at winter with a dainty Peter Pan collar and ruffle-trimmed bodice.

Gathered wristlets, full-cut trousers. Red blaze, Aqua mist, Blue heaven, Pink dawn. Sizes 14 to 20 $3.95
Matching gown at $3.95.

Piped edging, gathered wristlets. Aqua mist, Blue heaven, Pink dawn. Sizes 14 to 20 $3.95

for the finest in knit sleepingwear . . .

Munsingwear®

at better stores everywhere

(Continued from Page 6)

Monday we paid for our day of leisure. We made hay on the front lawn! I still contemplate my blistered hands with pride, because they remind me of sunshine hot on my shoulders, the laughter of two tumbling children, the smell of freshly cut grass, and the distant cry of a cuckoo in a neighboring pasture.

Thank you for a pleasant holiday, and for the excellence of your magazine.

Sincerely,
ESTHER MARY AYERS

Wants a New Woman

Price, Utah.

Dear Editors: Oh, if only there could have been such articles in my youth as Tell Me Doctor and Profile of Youth. I like all the articles, but I think How America Lives is my favorite. I wish the JOURNAL would start another series to help specific women to look their best—and start with me. I need to be completely taken apart and put together again with a much better arrangement which I seem to be unable to master.

Very sincerely yours,
MRS. HARRY HOUSTON

Lifetime Wedding Gift

Beirut, Lebanon.

Dear Editor: When I married thirty years ago, I asked my husband for a lifetime subscription to the JOURNAL as a wedding gift. At the time, I was living in the Sudan, Africa, with no friends at all; and the JOURNAL was my only friend and teacher. From it I learned to cook, sew, do all the housework, and most important, to bring up my babies. For twenty years I stored the issues in two big cases in our attic. In 1940, after many arguments, I sold the old magazines for $130.

Now I am the proud mother of five young men, and a daughter who also appreciates the JOURNAL. The most wonderful thing is that I am still looking young, and that is due to the advice I got all through these years from your wonderful magazine.

Yours truly,
SALINA SALIBI

British Pen Friends

9, Evesham Road, New Southgate, London, N. 11, England.

Dear Editors: The British-American Fellowship for the interchange of correspondence between people in Great Britain and the U.S.A. will make every effort to find suitable pen friends for all who will write giving details of their age, interests, and so on. The exchange of letters, cards and magazines is bringing enjoyment and interest to people on both sides of the Atlantic and helping to eliminate many mistaken ideas people in the two countries hold about each other's way of life.

I am, therefore, writing to ask whether I may invite your readers to take part in this correspondence scheme too.

Yours truly,
C. E. MUMMERY
Hon. Secretary,
British-American Fellowship.

Fight Against Undulant Fever

Sarasota, Florida.

Dear Mr. Kahler: Here are a few facts about undulant fever which may interest—possibly help—many of your readers. The estimated number of cases in the U. S. ranges from one to four million, with only some 4000 cases reported annually. The U.S. Public Health Service has undertaken an intensive research project in brucellosis, trying to find better methods of diagnosis, treatment and prevention.

The death rate is insignificant: only about 2 per cent in the acute cases. Patients with chronic brucellosis do not die of it—they only want to die. (I know, for I am a victim.) While brucellar organisms will invade tissue through cuts and abrasions, it is about the only known bacteria which will penetrate the unbroken skin. Handling raw meat with the bare hands is a common method of infection. Few laboratories which are competent to test for brucellosis will do it. They are afraid of it, and where one finds a laboratory doing these tests, one generally also finds one or more victims of undulant.

Sincerely yours,
LYDIA ALLEN DeVILBISS

Your skin turns velvety instantly with Ardena Velva Cream

The moment you smooth it on, your skin is like silk velvet to the touch. This matchless Elizabeth Arden cream has rare beauty-giving qualities. So effective . . . yet so gentle it is ideal for even the most delicate skin. Now will it fatten full faces.

Basic Beauty Ritual

CLEANSE with Ardena Cleansing Cream, 1.00 to 6.00
REFRESH with Ardena Skin Lotion, 1.00 to 9.50
SMOOTH with Ardena Velva Cream, 1.00 to 6.00 prices plus tax

Elizabeth Arden
691 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. 22, PLAZA 9-2010

Last thing at night...
first thing in the morning...

To Keep that Breathless Charm

THERE'S something so freshening and so cleansing, so delightfully exhilarating about Listerine Antiseptic that countless fastidious women make it a daily "must". They consider it a first-aid to charm.

And, of course, before any date these sensitive persons wouldn't think of omitting it. Listerine Antiseptic sends you forth with a welcome feeling of greater assurance that your breath is beyond suspicion...that you are indeed at your best. It freshens and sweetens, not for mere seconds or minutes... but usually for hours.

Undoubtedly, you are a Listerine Antiseptic user and know how wonderfully it contributes to your sense of well-being. If you are not, now is the time to begin. You will never regret it.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

first aid to good grooming... LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

Now your hair can look Vitally "Alive"...

Read why PRELL leaves it so Radiantly soft, smooth, Younger-Looking!

VITALLY "ALIVE"—More Radiant than with cream or soap shampoo, in hardest water!*

Prell's patented cleansing ingredient leaves your hair looking gloriously "alive"—leaves it with more youthful loveliness. No ordinary cream, no soap shampoo, leaves hair as shining as Prell, in hardest water. No other shampoo is like radiantly-clear Prell—Prell is different, amazing!

VITALLY "ALIVE"—Easier to curl*

Whether you have a natural wave, a "fresh" permanent, or not much curl at all, your hair has more "spring" after shampooing with Prell. Hair is softer and more manageable—curls and waves set more easily.

VITALLY "ALIVE"
—More youthful-looking!

Does your hair seem dull, "lifeless"? Then you'll be thrilled with the sparkle your hair has after Prell—the charming "younger look," so vital and alive. Try different, wonderful Prell today for more youthful hair-loveliness.

Created by Procter & Gamble

THERE'S NO OTHER SHAMPOO LIKE NEW, DIFFERENT PRELL!

for that VITALLY "ALIVE" LOOK!

CALLING ALL SOULS

(Red-Feather Fable, No. 2)

Once again it was time for the people of the village to restock their community chest. The call went out for durable souls to help bring the stuff in. A good many volunteered—mostly the same souls who had done the job before. There were several women who had so much to do that a little more didn't make any difference; several men who were accustomed to doing community work as well as many other things that kept them busy far into the night; and there were even several souls who ran soulless corporations and naturally had a lot of soul left over.

The rest of the people in the village pretended not to hear the call or, upon examining their souls, decided they would never stand the hard wear. They knew that collecting for the community chest was tiring on the ectoplasm—feet, too—and there were three good reasons for letting somebody else do it. Then there were a few really strong souls who were too timid to show themselves. And a number of people who just sat on their souls and grumbled.

"Somebody's always after something," they said—although they knew the community chest took care of many needs in one. "I don't believe in the community chest," some said—although they didn't say what they would recommend to take its place. "All those poor souls giving their time and effort—they are probably only protoplasm," others complained. "I'll give direct to those who need it and not to any chest." (These particular ones had forgotten they could do both.) But there was one person, only one person in the entire village, who said right out loud, "I don't want to do any asking and I don't really want to do any giving. I have a lot of work and expense for myself and it's downright painful for me to fork out any cash!"

When the souls who had volunteered heard this, they couldn't think of a single pleasant, convincing way to approach such a person. (All the manual said on this subject was not to begin with "You don't want to contribute to the community chest, do you?" or likely that would be the case.) So they asked the chairman of the village council, who was wise about such matters.

"Oh, him," he said. "Don't worry about that poor soul. You will find his name on every list of donors. His name is Anonymous. He is really one of us." —G. M. WHITE

The Sophisticates are Not the Wise

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

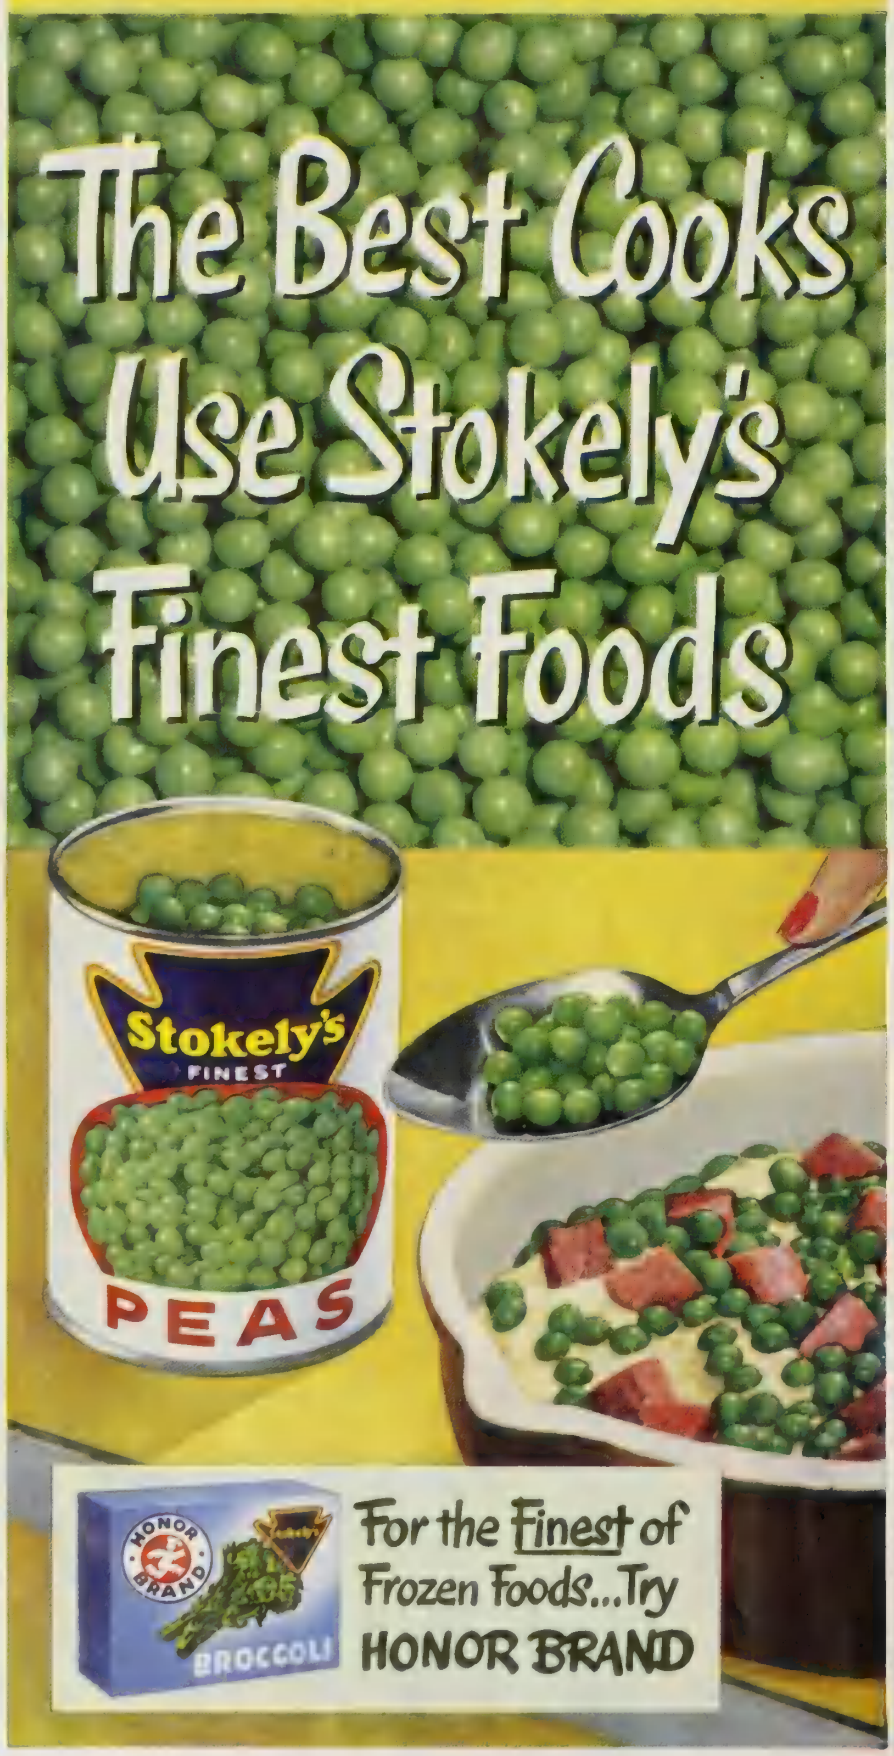
WHEN the history of these times is seen in retrospect, posterity may marvel that human civilization and culture were brought to the edge of the abyss, not by the simple but by the sophisticated, not by the uneducated but by educated men whose contempt for "old-fashioned" values blinded them to some of the most obvious facts of life.

The sophisticated mind surveys an issue from all sides, and is discontented with every proposed solution, since none corresponds to the "ideal." On the other hand, the sophisticated mind is also capable of rationalizing every thesis pro and con. "There is much to be said on both sides," the mental sophisticate argues, and then proceeds to say it, charmed with his own polemic and his control over words, whose meaning it is so easy to distort by subtle shadings and associations. He is like a brilliant lawyer, willing to take the case for or against the defendant and to argue either, with equally brilliant facility, without actually committing himself to either thesis.

For this is the further characteristic of the sophisticate: He does not renounce public discussion to retire into contemplative struggle with the truth. He actively (and influentially) participates in it, contributing to sway simpler minds, in this direction or another. But he rarely assumes moral leadership, because moral leadership demands the taking of personal responsibility and the making of personal decisions and choices. The mental sophisticate, firmly anchored in mid-air, avoids such decisions, and regards their avoidance as a sign of peculiar superiority. The world is so beneath him, he feels, that he will not stoop to decisions on its level. His decisions, he inferentially implies, are in a realm inaccessible to the ordinary mind, in a world of the "ideal."

A distinguished and rather involved and esoteric novelist, who nevertheless has taken considerable part in public political discussions, was asked some time ago, "How do you stand on communism?" He replied, with considerable aplomb, "I am not a communist nor an anticommunist."

The awed interviewer of the VIP author did not presume to follow this up with the obvious question, "What the dickens are you?" though the question would have been most pertinent. For the writer—whose name is irrelevant, since I present him here as illustrative of a type rather than as a personality—has, in



VOTED "BEST COOK"

Mrs. Paul Peyrat, Minneapolis, chosen Best Cook by Edgewater Methodist Church group.

Is Mrs. Peyrat choosy about ingredients? You bet! As choosy as Stokely is about the peas they label Stokely's Finest. Only special seed, bred for flavor, grows peas like these. Picked at prime, rushed from pod to can to seal in that vine-fresh taste. Tender, delicious. Try them! Reach for Stokely's to get the finest peas for fine dishes like:

HASTY-TASTY CASSEROLE: Mix 1 can cream of mushroom soup with 2 tbsp. liquid from No. 303 can Stokely's Finest Peas. Dice cooked ham to make 1½ cups. Arrange layers of ham, drained peas and soup in 1½ qt. baking dish. Top with ⅔ cup grated cheese. Bake 25 min. at 350°F.

his lifetime, eloquently pleaded the cause of national conservatism, valiantly championed the civil liberties of antiliberty communists, and vehemently attacked the right to civil liberties of Fascists. It would therefore have been no adequate answer had he replied, "I am an artist," for (except for the command of an inimitable style) there has been nothing of art in his political interventionisms, for or against this cause or that one, and on no higher level than that of more ordinary special pleaders. He has simply—while participating in the struggle—reserved for himself the special privilege, as an artist, to stand aloof, and to influence others, without himself being compelled to take a stand.

This, which calls itself superiority, is actually a combination of arrogance and irresponsibility, of pride and cowardice, and it accounts for the decline of the faith of simple men in intellect per se, for a cynical attitude toward art and the artist, for a distrust of the educated, and for a growing primitivism and barbarism.

For the function of the artist is not to avoid judgment, but, as a great and thoroughly responsible artist, Walt Whitman, averred, to be judgment—judging, "not as the judge judges, but as light, falling around a helpless thing."

The simple mind, unconfused by the pyrotechnics of its own ratiocinations, and living in life, not in some vague ideal, knows that it is impossible to be neither a communist nor an anticommunist, and be at the same time a morally responsible man. For communism throws down an inescapable challenge. Communism does not argue; it states. It does not suggest discussion and compromise; it says, "He who is not for us is against us." It demands unconditional surrender—of whole peoples and of every individual mind and soul—and it demands this surrender with a gun in its hand.

Now, there come some—the sophisticated and finicky—who say, "But look at our own society. Can one call it a 'true' democracy? Is there universal justice? Do all minorities within it enjoy equal freedom? Is there not evil everywhere, on both sides? Must we not clean up our own house before we take a stand against others?"

THIS attitude reminds me of a Jewish story: A man coming home, and finding his house burning to the ground, clapped his hands, danced with glee and cried, "Now those bedbugs are getting it!"

Or of the Irish story: A man is held up by a gunman who demands "Your money or your life!" He replies, "Take my life; I am saving my money for my old age."

They are like a patient who, informed that he has cancer, argues against an operation on the ground that if he had perfect health, he wouldn't have got cancer, so decides to postpone treating the cancer until his teeth have been repaired.

The struggle in which the twentieth century is engaged is not a mere "ideological" struggle in the mind, fought with words, or to be banished with words. It is a struggle fought with deeds, demanding moral decisions which, in turn, imply actions—as all moral decisions do. The systematic organization of conspiratorial groups for subversion and sabotage, in every country; the organization of great armies, equipped with every modern weapon, to invade and capture weak republics, adding each new conquest to their physical and brachial strength under single-minded leadership—these are not figments of the imagination. They are facts, not occurring in the realm of idea, alone or even primarily, but in the realm of will—will to power, decision to use power.

In the face of that fact and challenge, the sophisticates of the West have infected the whole of our society with their own occupational disease, which is lack of will. Unable to make up their own complicated minds—which would require a definite uncompromising choice—they have confused simpler (and wiser and more honest) minds, until the whole West has been like King Canute "who thought by talking to the waves, he could keep back the sea."

WHERE they should have counseled building dikes, they have counseled letting the sea seek its own level—the while this political and military sea rises to the level of the highest mountain of Tibet, and seeps into the cellars of Greenwich Village, the penthouses of Park Avenue, the faculty chairs of American universities, and the counsels of Government.

And simple men, listening for a great voice to fulfill the poet's eternal function and affirm faith and resistance, and man's noble, if tragic, destiny, hear little except that life is a mess anyhow, and one thing is about as bad as another, or, as the artist, Matisse, remarked, "Painting a church—it's the same as painting a dance hall." Until these simple men, who do not of themselves confound simple faith with simplicity, finally prefer to turn to barbarous leaders, who, at least, are men of will.

The confusion of intellectualism with intellect, of argument with judgment, of sophistication with wisdom, of rationalization with reason, of a "humanitarianism" which defends every criminal with the humanism which protects goodness and truth—this confusion is the malaise of our times.

And it is these sophisticates, neither for nor against communism—nor God, nor Love, nor Truth, nor Duty, nor Faith—who, far more than conscious communist agents, have undermined the moral bastions of this country and of all the countries of the West. They have not even had the wit to recognize their own mortal enemies. For the totalitarian world has no use whatever for sophisticates.

In a healthy, free and unmenaced society, they are its entertainers and its wits. They have their function. But it is not the function of leadership, direct or behind the scenes as wire pullers and ghost writers for puppets. Theirs is not the function of a true nobility, which every society, however democratic, requires. For the essence of nobility is that it makes decisions, accepts responsibility, and commits itself to the preservation of society and the defense of its greatest values.

The great mind is a complicated mind that overcomes its complications in silent responsible struggle, fusing their rainbow colors into the limpid light of Truth, so clear that the simplest mind sees, welcomes and understands it.

The Great Mind writes a Gettysburg Address, and the words are, at one and the same time, Word and Act, Thought and Will. On the highest level the word returns to God, and is God. But it is never the word of a sophisticate. THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Wind Song

BY ESTHER WOOD

Last night the wind was wise and sad:
Greece and Rome and old Bagdad.
Past hills of time and fields of age.
Egypt and an ancient sage.
Voices spoke from long ago,
Plato . . . Socrates . . . and Poe.

Today the wind is new and gay:
Kites and cherry boughs and May!
Oh, like a child it skips along.
Wanton lips and careless song.
Tease and mischief, sweet and sass,
Never was a younger lass!

But build your fires warm and bright.
It will be old again tonight!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Food Bank!

This Modern Woman is a "food banker" with her Deepfreeze Home Freezer food bank. She accumulates vast quantities and varieties of foods by depositing them for safekeeping. She serves any food any time she desires, simply by withdrawing it and thawing it! • The modern woman keeps "banker's hours" with her Deepfreeze Home Freezer because she spends so little time at kitchen tasks . . . she cooks ahead, bakes ahead, buys ahead and makes one deposit to cover many withdrawals • Her beautiful Deepfreeze Home Freezer food bank pays interest, too, in the many hours and labor saved, in the economies of buying in quantity when quality and price are right! • Let your Deepfreeze appliance dealer prove with your food budget that a Deepfreeze Home Freezer pays for itself with the money it saves. See him today!

GO BUY THE NAME—Deepfreeze

© 1950 Deepfreeze Appliance Division, Motor Products Corporation

HOME FREEZERS • REFRIGERATORS
ELECTRIC RANGES • ELECTRIC WATER HEATERS

Only the products of the Deepfreeze Appliance Division, Motor Products Corporation, North Chicago, Illinois, can carry the trademark Deepfreeze registered in the United States Patent Office.

TRADE-MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

HOME FREEZERS

Every Wear-Ever coffee-maker incorporates the results of exhaustive research by a great American university to determine the exact coffeepot construction for making the best coffee every time. You'll find the right size and type Wear-Ever coffee-maker at your favorite department, hardware or housefurnishings store.

WEAR-EVER CORN POPPER
For fun on Halloween. Makes a party of any occasion. Also useful every day as an extra 3-qt. saucepan. Recipes included. $2.95

50th ANNIVERSARY SPECIAL!
Greatest advance in pressure cooker history! New easy action cover—New Cam-lock Handle—Lightness you'll love.
4 qt., was $12.95, Now $9.95.
7 qt., was $16.95, Now $14.95.

PERCOLATORS		DRIP POTS
2-cup	$2.25	2-cup	$2.95
4-cup	2.50	4-cup	3.25
6-cup	2.75	6-cup	3.60
8-cup	2.95	8-cup	3.95
12-cup	3.50	12-cup	4.50
16-cup	5.45

All prices slightly higher in the West

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if not as advertised therein

WEAR-EVER

50TH ANNIVERSARY 1900 1950

© 1950 TACUCO

THE ALUMINUM COOKING UTENSIL COMPANY, DEPT. 1809, NEW KENSINGTON, PA.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"For a minute this deficit had me worried . . . I forgot I was working for the government."

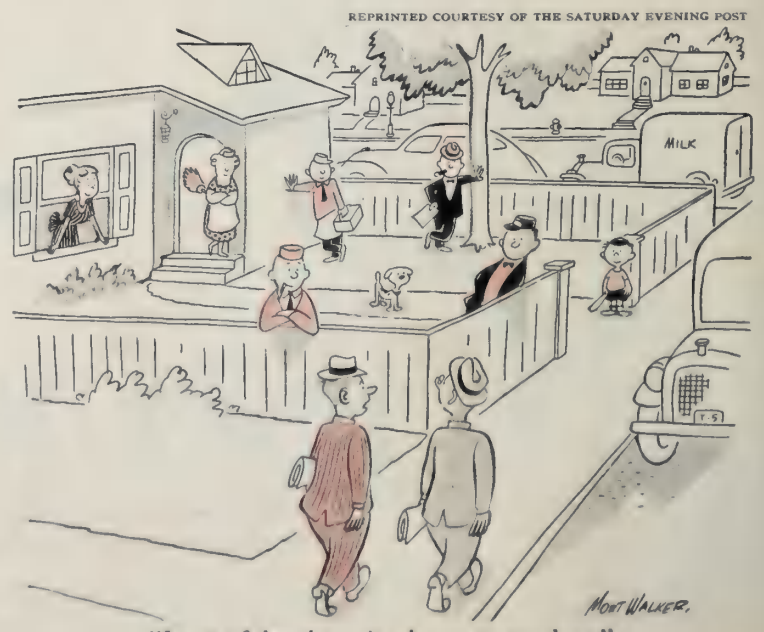
FORTY out of every 1000 persons in the U.S. were employed by Federal, state and local governments last October, announced the Census Bureau.

"One of the first things I learned and loved about the Government," says Betty MacDonald*, "was that I wasn't the only bonehead working for it. There were thousands of us who didn't know what we were doing but were all doing it in ten copies."*

Betty—of THE EGG AND I and THE PLAGUE AND I—has had all kinds of jobs. ANYONE CAN DO ANYTHING is her account of them. Anybody-can-do-anything-especially-Betty, was her older sister Mary's slogan, but Betty successfully proved Mary wrong time after time.

"A bill," says Betty, who carried on through a depression, "is a thing that comes in a windowed envelope and causes men to pull in their lips and turn the oil burner down to sixty degrees and women to look shifty-eyed and say 'Someone must have been charging on my account.'"

"Fortunately, we could all wear each other's clothes (the first one up was the best dressed). Our clothes had categories: 'clean,' 'dirty,' 'work,' 'date' and 'terrible' (which we wore around the house)."



We'd be sore if we didn't get a chance at a new Betty MacDonald book. This book, like her two others, is wisecracking and caricaturing, but it's good-tempered and filled with laughs.

•

Down-Easters will enjoy the back-country tang of DON'T SHOOT THE BILL COLLECTOR, by Preble D. K.

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I sort of dread coming home on paydays."

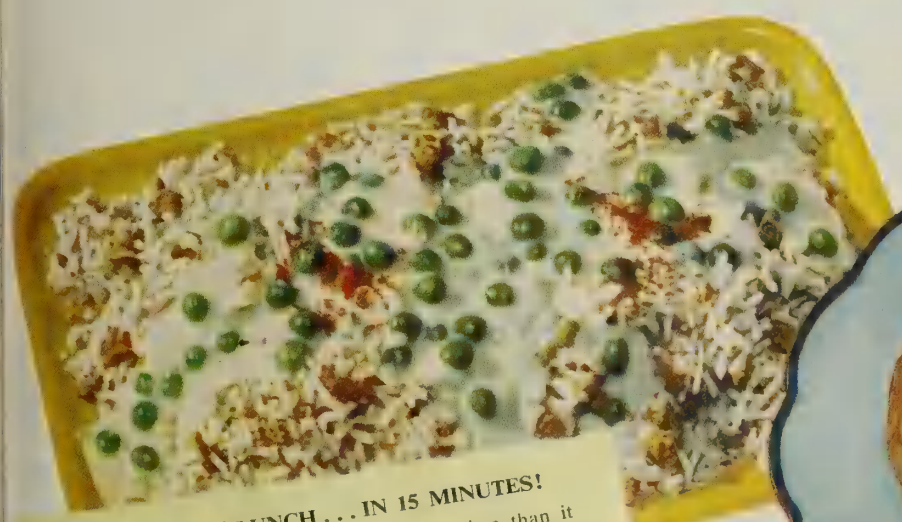
Fix 'em fast...serve 'em proudly!

TWO-IN-ONE VEGETABLE . . . IN 18 MINUTES!

Stewed Tomatoes and Rice. Wonderful to serve with pan-fried sausages! Sauté thinly-sliced medium onion in 2 tablespoons butter until tender, not browned. Add 3¼ cups canned tomatoes, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon sugar, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, blending well. Add 1 package (1⅓ cups) Minute Rice. Bring quickly to boil, fluffing rice gently with fork once or twice. (Don't stir.) Cover, remove from heat. Let stand 10 minutes. The rice will absorb the fine tomato flavor and rich-red color—a trick no rice but Minute Rice can do! Serves 5 or 6.

DESSERT DAZZLER . . . IN 20 MINUTES!

Danish Cherry Rice. Here's the kind of glamour that usually means hours of work and years of cooking experience. But it's one of those Minute Rice miracles—quick and a cinch to do! Combine ⅔ cup Minute Rice and 2 cups milk in large saucepan. Bring to boil. Cover loosely and boil gently 15 minutes. Remove from heat; add ½ teaspoon salt, 2½ tablespoons sugar, ¼ cup chopped blanched almonds, ½ teaspoon vanilla. Chill. Fold in 1 cup cream, whipped. Top with warm sauce made with a No. 2½ can pitted Bing cherries. Mix 1½ cups juice with 5 teaspoons cornstarch. Cook 5 minutes. Add drained cherries. Serves 6.



PRE-COOKED RICE IN A PACKAGE—

A sensational new idea!

- ★ NO WASHING!
- ★ NO RINSING!
- ★ NO DRAINING!
- ★ NO STEAMING!
- ★ PERFECT RICE EVERY TIME!

At last it's happened! Now you can have fluffy, snow-white, perfect rice with NONE of the tedious preparation regular rice requires.

Minute Rice is fancy long-grained rice—pre-cooked by a patented process. You dump it in water, bring to a boil. No other cooking's needed. Keep this amazing Minute Brand product on hand, and serve real glamour rice dishes often!

TODDLERS' LUNCH . . . IN 15 MINUTES!

Veal-Rice Treat. Lunch is ready—in less time than it usually takes to get the youngsters' hands washed. Prepare ⅔ cup Minute Rice as directed on package, adding a speck of pepper with the salt. Let stand 10 minutes. Add 1 can (3½ ounces) chopped veal (junior food) and 1 tablespoon butter. Reheat. Serve with creamed peas. Serves 3. So delicious—everybody will want to share it with the kids!

DINNER PLATE DANDY . . . IN 25 MINUTES!

Rice-and-Chop Special. With Minute Rice for dinner, you can fix the rest of your meal while the rice takes care of itself! Just put Minute Rice in water on the stove, as package directs. Take it off when it boils. In the meantime sauté your pork chops, cook zucchini. Serve with cranberry sauce. Then serve dinner! (A pat of butter, a sprinkle of paprika on the fluffy white rice makes it extra-delicious!)

For perfect rice without the work ★★★ pre-cooked

MINUTE BRAND RICE

A Product of General Foods

the invisible "it" in fashion

FIT

Some ENNA JETTICK Styles are made in sizes 1 to 12 widths AAAAA to EEE

$7.95 to $9.95

Here are some shining examples of new fashions endowed with the so-important "it" factor! Extra-smooth-fitting ENNA JETTICKS smartly styled for dress, business or leisure. Your local dealer has them in stock . . . try them soon!

ENNA JETTICK SHOES, INC., AUBURN, N. Y.

THOSE COMFORTABLE Enna Jettick's

America's Smartest Walking Shoes

®

(Continued from Page 14)

Hatch, who tried bill collecting in Maine when times were hardest, and made friends as well as money. That people really like to pay their bills is his assuring theme.

•

When a woman picks up her magazine just brought by the mailman, and sits down for a second to look it over, she merely thumbs it through. (This is according to polls taken over the years.) She reads only titles and glances only at the pictures. Until she comes upon a picture of food. There she pauses. If it is a chocolate cake, she is sunk. She reads the recipe through, then another, and where has her morning gone?

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I'm sick of planning meals. Just bump the shelf and I'll take whatever falls off."

ANN BATCHELDER'S COOKBOOK has 500 recipes. No more need be said to LHJ readers, but oh! that Creme Brûlée and Baked Alaska! That Herb Soup and those Swedish Meatballs and the good old-fashioned Scalloped Oysters!

Wellesley's daughters will want Elizabeth Manwaring's favorite recipes. SEASONED TO TASTE. The selection was made by Gladys Taber. It's a very small book with only fifty recipes, but as piquant and sophisticated as was Miss Manwaring herself. (Buy through Wellesley College.)

A third delicious cookbook is BETTY CROCKER'S PICTURE COOKBOOK, loose-leafed and thumb-indexed—a practical and attractive wedding gift.

"There is one thing that has no excuse under heaven. And that is poor, weak, miserable, ashamed coffee," says Ann Batchelder with vigor. How good, we wonder, was Balzac's coffee? He drank it all night long nearly every night for nearly thirty years, as he wrote The Human Comedy. William Dean Howells called coffee "the cup of happiness." And Voltaire, at the age of eighty, drank fifty cups a day.

•

Gladys Taber lives the seasons through in the peace and busyness of Stillmeadow. In September she watches the school busses moving once again over the country roads. She has time for reading. Around the 22d or 23d, comes the first black frost. STILLMEADOW SEASONS is all that you think of and hope for in the way of happy living.

•

When Field Marshal Earl Wavell died, we took out OTHER MEN'S FLOWERS, his poetry anthology, and turned the pages. Though he may long be remembered as the great desert warrior of World War II, this beautiful anthology should live quite as long—on the bookshelves of all poetry lovers.

(Continued on Page 18)

Perma·lift
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
BRASSIERES
THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN

only

PERMA·LIFT

Bras give you

"The Lift that never lets you down"

Look for the Magic Inset

Because you love to look lovely, you must wear a "Perma·lift"• Bra. Delicately designed to assure the fashion favored curves you crave, it magically, lastingly supports your breasts from below. Wash it, wear it—the Magic Insets lift you always. Select the style just made for you—at your favorite corset department. Priced so low you can have several—$1.50 to $4.

For comfort beyond compare, wear a "Perma·lift" Magic Inset Girdle—No Bones About It—Stays Up Without Stays.

•"Perma·lift", a trade-mark of A. Stein & Company Chicago, New York, Los Angeles (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

We have the key to your room!

On campus and at home, the well-dressed room begins with Bates... the brilliant new bedspreads and draperies that key its color, key its character. Designed from the young viewpoint, Bates are woven from a strictly practical viewpoint; even with the hardest wear they won't get limp or shabby. Lint-free and wrinkle-resistant, they are wonderful for sitting on. And you'll find that washing actually improves them! At fine stores everywhere. a complete collection of new Bates patterns.

Bates

QUEBEC

(left) in new shades of rose, green, brown, aqua, dark blue, slate. Bedspread and matching draperies, each $5.95. Bates extra wide "Harmony" draperies shown, in solid colors, $7.95

Bates

LAUREL STRIPE

(below) with bright leaves and stripes, in claret, blue, aqua, green, yellow. Bedspread and matching draperies, each $6.95

Bates

PICCADILLY

(left) bedspread with rounded corners and cream fringe, in aqua, brown, dark blue, green, rose, slate, $6.95. Shown with Bates new "Harmony" draperies in coordinated solid colors; extra wide 42 x 90 inches, $7.95

All prices slightly higher in the West.

CAMPUS TESTED! · CAMPUS APPROVED!

Bates

BEDSPREADS AND MATCHING DRAPERIES

BATES FABRICS, INC., 80 WORTH ST., N. Y. 13

CHOOSE AMERICAN

FOR SPARKLING DISTINCTION

The fascinating beauty of American handmade glass is glamorously expressed in Fostoria's popular American pattern. For here is a solid splendor of simplicity in design with a jewel-like capacity for reflecting light and color. But American has other virtues, too: you'll appreciate its all-day usefulness from a cheerful breakfast to friendly dinners. And the rugged durability insures years of gracious table settings. So come along to your favorite store and gather inexpensive American to give, get or keep. It's open stock in over 180 practical gift-suggesting items.

FOSTORIA

FOSTORIA GLASS COMPANY • • • MOUNDSVILLE • WEST VIRGINIA

(Continued from Page 16)

It amused him, Wavell tells in his foreword, to set down in a notebook, not very long ago, the poems he could repeat entire or in great part. He did it with a view to discussion with his son who shared his liking for poetry.

Other Men's Flowers is that collection—which he knew by heart!—and which his son urged him to have published.

•

We sometimes long to read a good, rich, exciting, picaresque novel again, full of adventure and changing scene. An obituary which came out in the papers not long ago could provide just such a plot: Prince Maximilian Melikoff, last surviving member of a royal Georgian house, fled to Canada after the Bolshevik revolution. He became a cavalry instructor in Iran, a ballet dancer in Rome, a tennis teacher in San Remo, a chicken farmer in Nice, a professional gambler at Monte Carlo, a leopard trapper in Kenya, an employee of a food-distributing company in New York, a mushroom salesman, a motoring-school secretary, and when he died he was a stableboy in England.

•

SO MANY DOORS, by Oakley Hall, a strong book about the love life of a bulldozer driver, is an authentic picture of a class of society that, before Doctor Kinsey, the refined public knew far too little about. It is the story of a tragic passion, between a tall, muscular, thin-hipped tractor driver and a spirited, innocent (for a time) pretty girl

REPRODUCED FROM THE NEW YORKER BY PERMISSION. COPYRIGHT 1948, THE NEW YORKER MAG., INC.

"Is there a Mrs. Kinsey?"

brought up carefully on a ranch by a father who loved her too well. It is hard to take, but it is not "tough" for toughness' sake. To this reader it seems more important and better written than the somewhat similar attacks on the same kind of problem by James M. Cain.

•

One day in 1930, in Tuckahoe, New York, a policeman was asked to take six boys under his wing. The boys had been charged with rifling a penny vending machine. The mothers appealed to Milt Gibbons, the cop, and the judge of the Westchester County Children's Court backed them up. He asked Milt to keep an eye on the youngsters and keep them out of mischief during a probationary period.

This was the birth of a fine idea. Milt Gibbons fixed up some athletic equipment in his own cellar, and taught the boys wrestling and boxing. Other boys joined them. More and more came in. And ten years later Tuckahoe had a record of not one reported case of juvenile delinquency. Out of that cellar group grew the Tuckahoe Police Associates, from which has grown the vast network of Police Athletic Leagues, as we know them. Milt Gibbons is now the mayor of Tuckahoe and the P.A.L. is cele-

(Continued on Page 21)

"It's simply amazing how many of my back-to-college things, my dresses . . .

"my girdles, bras, pantie-girdles, all-in-one . . .

"my best-fitting slip and most glamorous nightie . . .

"my favorite campus shoes and even my dressiest pumps, all hav the comfort blessings of

Lastex
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

. . . the miracle yarn that makes thing

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPA
1230 Avenue of the Americas • New York 20,

Such carpets too costly?

You're in for a fine surprise!

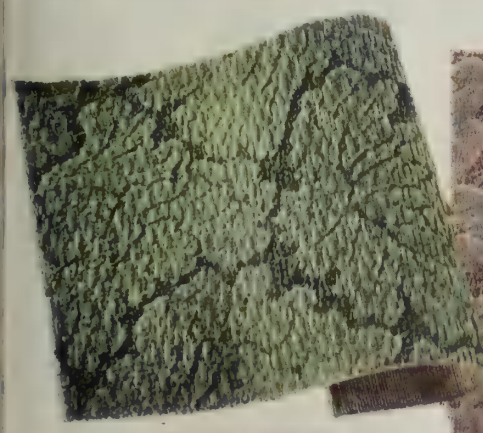
Let your Bigelow dealer show you!

Perhaps you've already decided what you want to pay for a new carpet. Maybe hundreds of dollars. Maybe only $80 or so. Whatever it is, you'll find genuine Bigelow Carpets at your price! Plenty of them!

Every Bigelow Carpet has those luxurious good looks. But famous Bigelow style... fabulous Bigelow wear... are not out of your reach! Prices begin as low as around $6.75* a sq. yd.!

And every Bigelow Carpet is made of top quality imported wools, treated to keep lively, springy, handsome, year after many a year. Whether you want an average-room-size carpet ...or room-shape, cut to fit the contours of your room... or a wall-to-wall installation, make sure you get a carpet that bears the famous Bigelow label.

Chorale 1140-3001. Another new Bigelow masterpiece. Fashionable carved effect that's so high-style! So low-priced at about $11.95* a sq. yd.



Brentford 1190-8004. Bigelow's brand-new and easy-to-love sculptured leaf design carpet. Happily priced at about $8.95* a sq. yd.!

Beauvais 1040-1807; about $10.95* sq. yd.

Brentford 1190-8002; about $8.95* sq. yd.

Serenade 406-91193; around $15.95* sq. yd.

Chorale 1140-3004; about $11.95* sq. yd.

Fervak 1020-9440; around $8.50* sq. yd.

So many styles to choose from! Here's just a small sample of the many magnificent styles Bigelow offers —at every price level. No matter what your tastes are, Bigelow has the carpet style to match — at your price!

Consult the booklet, "Bigelow Home Decorator." Tells, shows how to achieve beautiful rooms. Get it from your Bigelow dealer, or send 25¢ to Bigelow's Home Service Bureau, P.O. Box 791, New York 46, N. Y. *Prices subject to change. Slightly higher in the West.

Bigelow
Rugs and Carpets

Beauty you can see... quality you can trust... since 1825

MARY MARTIN
Star of Broadway's all-time smash hit "SOUTH PACIFIC" says:

"I've found me a wonderful WAVE!"

"I expect I've had more firsthand experience with home permanents than any living soul! Once every 3 weeks—(my hair's so short!)—and 72 curls to a permanent."

There's nothing but a good brushing be the smart little curly-head above and th belathered mop at the left. "That's why a permanent's so wonderful," says Mary. "It your hair acting and looking just like 'na curly'—that soft and manageable."

"2093 shampoos and 34 permanents—that's what I've had since 'South Pacific' opened. Honest!" says Mary Martin cheerfully. "People can't see why I have any hair left—but, the fact is, it's never been healthier in its life! Rayve's very, very easy on your hair."

Mary's hair grows practically a half inch every week, she says. Since it must be kept less than 2 inches long for that on-stage shampoo—the permanent has to be cut off every 3 weeks—and Mary has a new one!

"I just couldn't have frizzy ends—I had to find a permanent that would look soft and natural and would set itself. I just had to find Rayve—! Believe me, there's a big difference between a Rayve home permanent and the rest—and I've tried them all. It really does give you softer, shinier, more manageable curls. Every time, too. Try it—you'll find out!"

Rayve
HOME PERMANENT

♪ "The waves softer...naturally curly' looking ...and actually shiny!" ♪

Rayve Refill, $1 (use any plastic cu Complete Rayve Wave Kit, $2 (w plastic curlers).

Money-Back Guarantee! Yes, your back if you don't agree with Mary that a Rayve Home Permanent giv softest, most natural wave you've had at any price.

"I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair," sings Mary Martin nightly, and while the spellbound audience gasps with delight, she washes her hair with real suds, real water. "But you just can't wash a Rayve wave out," says Mary Martin. "It lasts till you cut it off!"

John Lund co-starring in
"No Man Of Her Own"
a Paramount Picture

"John Lund's hands get La Cross care"

says FRANCES JACOT
Studio Manicurist
Paramount Pictures, Inc.

While it takes only three basic instruments to give a manicure," says Miss Jacot, "it takes instruments of La Cross precision quality to give a perfect manicure." That's why many professional manicurists prefer La Cross to any other manicure instruments. And that's why celebrities like John Lund, whose hands get La Cross salon care, choose La Cross instruments for home manicures, too!

Cross Triple-Cut with Cleaner nt... finishes t files... 25¢ ers from 15¢

La Cross Nail Clip . . . precision pocket clip-plus-file . . . 50¢

La Cross Toe Nail Nippers . . . extra-strength, ultra-keen blade action . . . $3.50

La Cross
America's Finest Manicure Instruments Since 1903

HNEFEL BROS. CORP., NEWARK 3, NEW JERSEY

(Continued from Page 18)

brating its twentieth anniversary this September. More power to them both!

After the bad end that certain European youth movements came to—Hitlerism, Fascism, Communism—the natural outlet for animal spirits which the P.A.L. offers should be most wholesome. As Professor Bonn (WANDERING SCHOLAR) said of the young people in politically backward countries: "They know that something is wrong; they don't quite know what. . . . They find their parents out of date, even if they love them. They distrust the ideals of an older generation, not because they have found them false, but because they want to live in a world of their own making." (The country doesn't have to be politically backward for this filial point of view.)

•

"She sits on the floor, front paws together in unexampled neatness, tail curved to body, and regards with round eyes one of the two humans toward whom she feels in a special way. She has eaten, she is feeling well. She wishes merely to look; although her kind have lived with man for upward of four thousand years, racial memories do not satisfy personal curiosity."

So starts the perfect cat book, CATS AND PEOPLE, by Richard and Frances Lockridge, better known up to now by their Mr. and Mrs. North series. Try the section about dogs and their cat trouble. And about the cat on the doorstep considering a venture out into the world. Cat fanciers will be completely absorbed from start to finish.

•

Television is funniest when it is most silent—the mere shrug of the shoulders, half a sentence, just a vague flutter of the Adam's apple, says critic John Crosby. He believes that silent comedy goes down particularly well right now because the spoken gag has worn itself out on the radio, and sickened us all. If the comedians would all shut up for a while and just make faces, television, he implies, might become endurable.

REPRINTED COURTESY OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"I'll put it this way—you'd think it was wonderful if it was on your television set."

After all, this was Harpo Marx's technique, and think what it did for him! Al Shean, partner of Mr. Gallagher, started Harpo off as a silent comedian when he wrote a vaudeville act for the then unknown Marx Bros. He failed to write in a part for Harpo, and to make up for the omission announced that he meant Harpo to imitate a certain French actor who never opened his mouth. Which explains how we got one of the great comedians of our time, equaled only by Harvey, the Rabbit, who wasn't there at all.

When the Marx Bros. played Waukegan, they got to know a little Kubelsky boy who played first fiddle in the orchestra. Thirty years later he was known as Jack Benny.

the
NEW SHAPE
is the
NEWS

The new-shape "poncho" jacket. News because, though it takes its shape from the traditional blanket-like South American cloak, it's a high-style modern fashion. That's new design with an interesting inspiration!

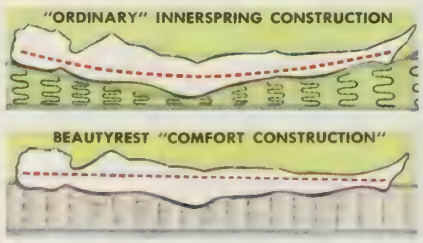
The new-shape Modess box. News because it, too, is an example of inspired design! Cleverly takes its shape from many kinds of boxes . . . you'd never guess the wrapped package held Modess. Another tactful feature . . . the new box is pre-wrapped before it even reaches your store.

Only Modess comes in the new-shape, secret-shape box...pre-wrapped!

You may have said to yourself, at one time or other: "Of course I always dreamed of owning a Beautyrest, but can I really afford it?"

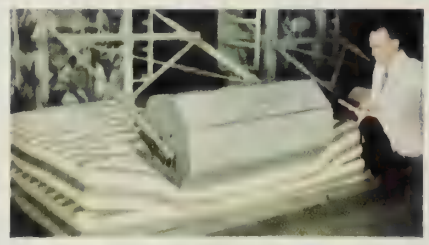
If you can afford one cup of coffee a day, you can afford the "luxury comfort" of Beautyrest.

Here is how it works out: Beautyrest is $64.50 It's guaranteed for 10 years. Divide the price by the 10 years, and you actually pay about 1½¢ a night.



In short, you get the greatest luxury value in mattresses for less than the cost of your morning coffee. Hard to believe, isn't it? Yet true!

Your dealer has a special X-Ray Mattress Demonstrator that will show you the inside story of why Beautyrest is so much more comfortable than any other mattress. Stop in and see it today!



The luxury of a BEAUTYREST...yours if you can afford a daily cup of coffee!

Glass of Water Proves Difference. Note how water glass on spring doesn't spill when near-by springs are pushed down. Proof that each of the 837 springs in Beautyrest acts independently. Gives you just-right support . . . "Levelized Support". . . all night long!

You Rest Better. Chart at top shows ordinary mattress. Springs are tied together. Pull each other down, form hollow. Lets body sag. BUT see how independent spring action of Beautyrest lets you sleep with every part of your body supported correctly!

Longer Life. "Torture Tester" at the United States Testing Co. proves that Beautyrest lasts over twice as long as any other mattress tested. For Beautyrest took 740,744 more poundings, from 275-pound "Torture Tester" roller than next best mattress.

TESTS PROVE BEAUTYREST FIRMEST!

Dr. Taylor

A test that was made recently at the United States Testing Co. by Dr. T. Smith Taylor proved Beautyrest the firmest of all mattresses tested.

Proof: A man was lowered onto heat-treated plastic sheets covering the mattress. When plastic cooled, the depth his body had sunk into the mattress was measured. Beautyrest proved FIRMEST, the most "levelized" of all!

Only Simmons makes BEAUTYREST

ALSO FROM THE HOUSE OF SIMMONS: Beautyrest Box Springs, ideal companion to Beautyrest* Mattress, $64.50 Deepsleep* Mattress, $39.50. Hide-A-Bed.* Babybeauty* Mattress. Ace* Spring.

*TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE COPR. 1950 BY SIMMONS CO., MDSE. MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

HOMELESS CHILDREN . . .

The Receiving Home

By MARGARET HICKEY

WE have fought vigorously against diseases which may take life, but have been slow to realize that failure to insure every child a good home may prove fatal too. Over the past forty years, the guiding principle in child care has been that foster families were better than institutions for children deprived of their natural homes. But Leon H. Richman, executive director of the Bellefaire Regional Child Care Service of Cleveland, points out that "at no time in the history of foster-home placement have there been enough foster homes to meet the need."

Today's Need is Acute

In 1930, there were 140,000 children in institutions and 74,000 in foster homes. In the meantime, provisions of the Social Security Act have spared thousands of children separation from their homes. Still, according to the 1940 census, 200,000 children were in institutions, and another 200,000 in foster families. Children's Bureau officials believe that the 1950 census will show considerably higher figures. Besides the children already in institutions and foster homes, there are many others awaiting placement for whom there are no takers.

In communities that have no receiving homes, neglected children often are held in detention houses or in jail, babies sent to hospitals, to await transfer to institutions, or to foster families if they can be found. Real homes for such children seldom are to be had on short notice. Even if they were, however, placement of children before they are mentally and emotionally prepared to join their new families can have disastrous results. Confused, anxious, frustrated youngsters need care and social education to ready them for entrance into new family surroundings.

Interim Care is Important

In some communities, women's groups have taken the lead in establishing or maintaining small institutions to care for homeless children until more permanent arrangements can be made. This type of home makes it possible to determine and serve the individual needs of children. If they are from broken homes, there is opportunity for both children and parents to test their feelings during separation. For those who are to find foster families, this interim care helps pave the way to easy adjustment.

In Richmond County, Georgia, the Augusta Junior Woman's Club helps maintain the county's four juvenile homes. The county pays the children's board, but the club furnishes clothing, medical and dental care, and all other necessities. The children, all from broken homes, remain wards of the Juvenile Court until foster families are found. In Florence, South Carolina, the local Altrusa Club raised the money and purchased the Florence Altrusa Foster Home. Other local groups furnished it. Public funds keep it in operation.

The Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth, scheduled for the first week in December, will be watched by all who are concerned with the well-being of the nation's children. Investment in health, happiness and security for every child will safeguard our greatest wealth—tomorrow's children.

THE END

In Butte, Montana

THIS is a story about a little boy who was so thin his arms were about the size of a broomstick, and so hungry that he scavenged in garbage cans like an alley cat.

This is also a story about a two-year-old girl who had had so little to eat that she didn't have the strength to lift a spoon to her mouth when she got one.

And the story of two children, shut in a car on a freezing night in January and forgotten by their parents. And another child, about five, with dark straight hair and big, black, Indian eyes, who was found playing in the street one midnight—and if she ever had a home, no one, not even she, knew about it.

It is also a story about a group of businesswomen who created a home for these lost and hungry children who had no place to go but jail when their parents abandoned or neglected them.

The setting is Butte, Montana—but it could be anywhere. There are, unfortunately, sad-eyed and starving children in any city you wish to name. The welfare workers know it; the police know it; and when the city's civic-minded don't know it, it's because they hate the thought and won't face it.

In Butte, it was Mrs. Mary Phillips, at the Child Welfare office, who first faced it. She herself was a widow with three children to raise. Every time she saw a little tyke—and she saw many in her work—who looked hungry or ragged or scared, her heart seemed to turn over.

"What we need is a home for neglected children," she kept saying over and over to anyone who'd listen, and even to those who wouldn't. But for years people just clucked their tongues sympathetically and said it surely was a shame, and nothing was done.

Then Mary became one of the charter members of a club. She wasn't much for clubs—not that she'd been in many, but because she thought that for busy women they were a waste of time. This club, however, promised to be more than just another club. In the first place, it was composed solely of workingwomen in executive jobs who didn't

(Continued on Page 227)

PHOTO BY JOERN GERDTS • PIX INC

Youngsters enjoy happy childhood in this home for neglected children in Butte, Montana. Established by the local Soroptimist Club, the home provides care for unfortunate children regardless of race or creed.

FOR naturally BEAUTIFUL HAIR...

"Pure Castile is the Best Shampoo!"

Attractive Carol McGuinness, with one of New York's large advertising agencies, says "I use Conti Castile Shampoo because it leaves my hair silky-soft, lustrous and easy to manage." Charming Carol is typical of the many thousands of career girls who praise Conti because it keeps their hair naturally lovely. "I certainly agree with beauty authorities," says Carol, "that pure castile is the best shampoo!"

Plays Safe "There's no secret, it's the olive oil in Conti that leaves my hair shimmering with highlights," says lovely Carol. "Soft, and more manageable, too!"

Goes for Golf "I'm out-of-doors as much as possible, but frequent shampooing with Conti keeps my hair from becoming dry and brittle."

For lovelier hair... today... tomorrow... and always

Conti Castile
THE PURE SHAMPOO

Reference Library

Wrong Number?

With a little effort you might do something about becoming the right number. Why don't fellows ever call?

PERSONALITY A PROBLEM?

1022. How to be Popular. 5c.
1514. Personality Report Card. A self-rating chart. 5c.
1658. Do Boys Like You? 5c.
2269. How About a Date? Why don't you hear this more often? 5c.
1532. Know Your Man. Don't be a one-man girl. 5c.
2270. Nix on Necking. 5c.
2306. Speak Up. Learn what to say and what not to say. 5c.
1539. Do Girls Like You? 5c.
2275. Don't Shy Away. How to overcome shyness. 5c.
1228. Rating for Dating. How do you rate? 5c.
1669. Going Steady. What to do about it. 5c.
1344. Act Your Age. 5c.
2272. Memo for Manners. 5c.
2276. Sub-Deb Club Handbook. A guide for club work. 5c.

APPEARANCE RATED HIGH?

2253. Let's be Lovely. Tips for good grooming. 5c.
2268. Glamour for Glasses. 5c.
2277. Facts About Figures. Exercises for a streamline figure. 5c.
1378. The Way You Wear Your Hair. 5c.
1207. Mirror Magic. Complexion hints for you. 5c.
2324. Count Your Calories. To reduce or to gain. 5c.
2322. Clothes Checkup. Check your colors and styles. 5c.

HOSTESS HELPS

2271. Banquets to Give. 10c.
1377. Games to Play. Keep the party lively. 10c.
1303. Let's Dance. Prom ideas. 5c.
1504. Let's Eat. Party food. 5c.
2254. It's a Date for a Party. Twelve holiday parties. 5c.
1376. Parties to Give. 10c.
2210. Let's Have a Party. 5c.
2307. Dance Doin's. 5c.
1515. Fun Outdoors. Fresh-air stunts and parties. 5c.
1691. Halloween Antics. Parties for Halloween. 5c.

JUST FOR MEN

1192. Gentlemen Preferred. Do gals make you uneasy? Gain confidence—know your dating etiquette. 5c.
1668. Know Your Girl. 5c.
1546. If I Were a Man! A gal gives her opinion on what to do. 5c.

LOOKING AHEAD

All you want to know about different jobs. For teachers, for students, for Sub-Debs. You may order booklets in lots of 100 at $7.50 per hundred—for class or club use. Mixed or single titles.

2440. Modeling . . . . . 10c.
2441. Home Economics . . . . . 10c.
2442. Journalism . . . . . 10c.
2443. Secretarial Work . . . . . 10c.
2444. Fashion Designing . . . . . 10c.
2445. Teaching . . . . . 10c.
2446. Nursing . . . . . 10c.
2447. Library Science . . . . . 10c.
2448. Law . . . . . 10c.
2449. Fine and Commercial Art . . 10c.
2450. Physical Therapy . . . . . 10c.
2451. Theater . . . . . 10c.
2452. Social Work . . . . . 10c.
2453. Medicine . . . . . 10c.
2454. Airline Hostessing . . . . . 10c.
2455. Dancing . . . . . 10c.
2456. Music . . . . . 10c.
2457. Merchandising . . . . . 10c.
2458. Public Relations . . . . . 10c.
2459. Advertising . . . . . 10c.
2460. Radio . . . . . 10c.

We will gladly send any of these booklets if you'll order by number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes. Allow two to three weeks for delivery. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

ORDER BLANK

BOOKLET NUMBERS

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

There's a bit of London

. . . in the fascinating, colorful, new Yardley "Lotus" Perfume. Use it when you want to feel your most dramatic, make it part of your charm on brilliant occasions, let its magic remind your escort how proud he is of you. And for your own daytime delight, use "Lotus" Cologne and Dusting Powder freely . . . they're lighter versions of the same entrancing fragrance.

"Lotus" Perfume
$3 to $17.50, plus tax

"Lotus" Cologne
$1.50 and $2.50, plus tax

"Lotus" Dusting Powder
$1.65, plus tax

YARDLEY

Yardley also brings you "Bond Street," Fragrance and April Violets Perfumes.

Yardley products for America are created in England and finished in the U. S. A. from the original English formulae, combining imported and domestic ingredients. Yardley of London, Inc., 620 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

Making Marriage Work

What story begins on a wedding day? Perhaps your story, for it takes more than a belief in fairy tales to make the ending "... and they lived happily ever after" come true.

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

Adjusting to Marriage

THOUGH a wedding is often described as "the culmination of romance," it is more constructive to think of it as the beginning of a new kind of life. Marriage is the most intimate, vital and potentially rewarding of human relationships, but it is not a guarantee of happiness. Rather, it is a framework within which happiness can be attained.

If your marriage is to be happy, you must work at it just as you would work to make any other undertaking succeed. Your first concern will be to hasten the process by which you and your husband identify with each other. And your efforts should begin on your wedding day.

Differences between husband and wife are an inevitable part of marriage, just as differences between any two individuals are an inevitable part of life. But the way in which you adjust to those differences determines your ability to identify with each other, and so the unity of your marriage.

In one study, the area in which adjustment was most quickly achieved was that of mutual friendships. Next came religious activities, followed in order by relationships with in-laws, social activities, management of income, and last, sex relations, with only half the couples achieving a satisfactory sex adjustment within a year. And there cannot be much happiness in the marriage until adjustment is achieved within at least four of these areas.

Mutual friends. From the beginning of your marriage cultivate persons whom you both already like. If your husband dislikes some of your friends, either see them when he is not around, or gradually discontinue the friendships. But don't force their company upon him. (If he has friends whom you cannot learn to like, don't begrudge him an occasional evening with the boys.)

Religious activities. Religion is an important force in stabilizing family life. Take the lead in associating your family with a church, and encourage your husband to share your church activities.

In-law relationships. Because so many mothers find it difficult to let go of their children when they marry, most friction with relatives comes through the mother-in-law. Don't take your problems to your mother; and don't blame your husband if his mother offers unwelcome advice. When you and your husband have achieved unity, in-laws are not likely to come between you.

Social activities. A circle of friends whom both enjoy is an ideal basis for a pleasant social life. Don't undertake so many engagements as to interfere with your husband's rest, or to overstrain the budget. And do cultivate some simple pastimes that the two of you can enjoy together.

Management of income. The way you spend your money has more bearing on the harmony of your marriage than the amount you have to spend. Whatever plan you adopt, make sure you and your husband work it out together.

Sex relations. The sex relationship is the physical expression of the spiritual unity of marriage. Though biological factors may hasten or delay satisfactory adjustment, it can never be achieved without the spirit of true selflessness.

It may not be possible for you two to achieve perfect adjustment in all these areas, but you can work out a compromise which will avoid conflict. Marriage is a way of life offering two partners their best opportunity to satisfy their motives and enrich each other. On the use each makes of the opportunity depends the ultimate happiness of both.

Are You Resentful?

THOUGH there are emotions more powerful and more violent than resentment, few are more corrosive in their effect. If either partner in a marriage feels chronically resentful of the other, harmony is disrupted even though the marriage itself survives. A sense of injury dulls appreciation of the small pleasures of everyday domestic life; it also destroys the capacity to evaluate grievances, big or little, real or fancied.

Worse still, the feeling of resentment is contagious. The wife who habitually interprets her husband's actions as intentional affronts is encouraging a similar aggrieved attitude on his part.

Any program of improvement must begin with the recognition that both partners contribute to the difficulty, and that both must work to correct it. Each must identify with the other, and each must accept the other as a well-intentioned individual who does not deliberately try to make the marriage unhappy.

As soon as understanding is achieved on these points, the atmosphere will begin to improve. Attention to the following suggestions may help you to hasten improvement.

- Make it a point to find out what details of your domestic life irritate him, and do your best to eliminate them. Things that seem to you too petty for him to fuss about should not be hard for you to give up. Perhaps it annoys him if you call him to dinner before you are ready to sit down, or if you leave the car out when you have driven it last. If you discontinue such minor offenses, he may be more co-operative about bigger problems.

- Cater to his tastes—in food, in household arrangements, even in your appearance. Indulging his wishes, even if they are whims, is a sure way of convincing him that you really want to please him.

- Cultivate politeness for family use. If a guest dropped in on a hot afternoon, you would suggest a cold drink. Why not show your husband the same consideration? Ordinary courtesy can do a great deal to dispel hostility.

- Finally, try to ignore the annoying things he does. This is your hardest task. You feel that if you give in to him, he should indulge you. He should, but your most effective way of getting him to do so is by setting him a good example.

If you wholeheartedly practice these suggestions for six months, your husband will have little to resent—and you will be out of the habit.

Are You Good Parents?

Parents who fulfill their practical and psychological obligations to their children usually have happy marriages as well as happy, healthy children. Check your affirmative answers.

1. Do your children get enough rest, sleep?
2. Are they lots of fun?
3. Do they tell you about their outside activities?
4. Are they attending Sunday school (if old enough)?
5. Do they frequently invite friends home?
6. Do they bring their sex questions to you?
7. Do they have home duties suitable to their age?
8. Do they have regular medical and dental checkups?
9. Does each have a small personal allowance?
10. Have they separate places to keep their things?
11. Does your husband spend time playing with them?
12. Do you and your husband agree on their training?
13. When you two argue, is it done privately?
14. Are they permitted to make some decisions for themselves?

If your score is less than perfect, there may be valid reasons for it. Even so, if you missed as many as two checks, something needs to be done to compensate.

Do You Agree?

My daughter, aged eight, asks many questions about sex. Is this normal?

Yes. Girls of this age are frequently more inquisitive than boys. You are to be commended for giving her frank and honest answers.

A GALLERY OF MASTERPIECES

IN Third Dimension Beauty

There are now six Wallace Sterling designs by William S. Warren. Each is a work of art, sculptured to express a mood of beauty. Pictured above, from left to right, Grande Baroque, Sir Christopher, Grand Colonial, Stradivari, Rose Point, and the new "Romance of the Sea." Each is created in full-formed "Third Dimension Beauty"—beauty from every possible view—front, profile, and back. Each Wallace Sterling pattern is truly a treasure . . . distinctively beautiful . . . sought-after wherever fine sterling is sold. See all six Wallace "Third Dimension Beauty" designs before you decide upon your sterling silver. Six piece place settings from $27.40 to $37.50.

WALLACE STERLING Silver

COPYRIGHT 1950 WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, WALLINGFORD, CONNECTICUT · SINCE 1835 · WALLACE SILVERSMITHS, TORONTO, CANADA

What's the Answer?

"I'm sixteen, five feet six inches tall and self-conscious about height. I'm always comparing myself with people on the street—do they think I'm odd-looking?"

Ever meet anyone who thought Candy Jones, Maggi McNamara or Jean Patchett was "odd-looking"? They're top models—and most of them are at least as tall as you are! Good grooming, more confidence, and you can try for the long-stemmed-beauty class yourself. By next year, most of your crowd (especially boys) will have caught up to your size. So walk, dress and act up to your height while you're waiting.

"My dates always seem flat because I never know what to talk about. Can't you give me some topics and phrases which will always 'break the ice'?"

About the best phrase for defrosting conversation is the simple question, "I'm having fun, aren't you?" And the best way to get a happy answer is to plan a busy evening ahead of time—skating, dancing, movies or bowling. Double dating helps, too, 'cause then the talk gets split four ways. But don't worry too much about clever chitchat and making like Milton Berle. You're dating, aren't you? And that means somebody likes you just the way you are right now!

"About two or three times every summer I go to formal dances, but am always puzzled about where to put a corsage when I wear a strapless formal. Any ideas?"

A single flower can be pinned in your hair or fastened to a narrow velvet ribbon worn round the neck. Small corsages look smart tied to the wrist like a bracelet, or, if your dress has a small bunch of flowers that can be tucked in, stems down. To go exotic, try fastening the flower to your shoulder with cellulose tape, and wear glamour that way!

"My problem is one many girls have. ow can I give a party in a small apartent and still invite the whole crowd? ow can we have fun with just about no ace at all?"

How about a party that starts at our house and ends at your house—ut goes on the move for its fun? I mean a de luxe scavenger hunt with all the trimmings. Divide the crowd into teams with lists of items that might be suitable to fill boxes for teens in Europe or for a local orphanage. This game is for keeps; otherwise the old rules are the same. First group back is the winnah! Have boxes on hand to pack the things, and plenty of soft drinks and sandwiches, buffet style, for everyone.

"As with so many teen-agers, both my skin and hair are oily. Right after shampooing, my hair looks fine—by the end of the week it's as bad as ever. What can I do?"

Let's face the face problem first! Try washing three times a day with mild soap and warm water. Then pat on astringent or witch hazel with pads of cotton. Don't hesitate to wash oily hair twice a week. Expose your hair to lots of sun, wind and brushing. Make this care a happy habit—it works wonders!

"I've got a nice big, fat problem! I liked a certain joe for some time. When he found out that, he lost interest. How can I be friendly and still play hard to get?"

Some boys are just naturally the "go steady" kind; some are not. Some like starry-eyed gals, some like just-pal types, and some like a different girl every Friday night. So there is no answer. Just stay friendly with each boy you date—and try your luck at understanding him too. Every time you play this boy-likes-girl game—there's a different set of rules!

"The boy I like is a senior at the school where I'm in my first year. He dates girls in his class but never me. How can I make him like me?"

There'll be gaps in your date life if you wait for that tall, dark but unavailable senior to make a date bid! "Cradle robbing" is still a major date offense. Think he's tops if you like; don't wait for him to ask you out. Look at it this way: you can write fan mail to Greg Peck—but you don't really expect him Friday night!

"I'm a junior in high school and popular, but the boys here are so goofy about dating. All they want to do is come to my house to visit—they never ask me out!"

Some fellows begin dating in stages. First step is to get up enough courage to visit a girl at home. Next, they get up enough courage—and jingling money—to suggest a movie date or two. And then when school party or prom time rolls round, you'll probably be first on the list! Why not have some at-home fun now and save the friendships till they come in handy for the big date nights?

WHAT'S YOUR WHISTLE RATING?

You've probably heard the old joke: "Boys are like trains. Girls like to hear them whistle even if they're not going anywhere." If your whistle rate is low lately, why not read our Sub-Deb booklet, MIRROR MAGIC, No. 1207, and CLOTHES CHECKUP, No. 2322. Just 5¢ each from the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Are you always Lovely to Love?

Suddenly, breathtakingly, you'll be embraced . . . held . . . kissed. Perhaps tonight.

Be sure you are always lovely to love; charming and alluring. Your deodorant may make the difference. That's why so many lovely girls depend on FRESH Cream Deodorant. Test FRESH against any deodorant—see which stops perspiration . . . prevents odor better! FRESH is different from any deodorant you ever tried—creamier, more luxurious, really effective!

New... for head-to-toe protection, use new FRESH Deodorant Bath Soap. Used regularly, it is 20 times as effective as other type soap in preventing body perspiration odor, yet mild and gentle.

Dreaming about Luxury?

GET THESE FLATTERING COLORED SHEETS AT A PURSE-PAMPERING PRICE

Pepperell has taken colored sheets right out of the "someday" class, made them an everyday luxury at an everyday price—in both Combed Percale and Superfine Muslin. Remember, there are more Pepperell colored sheets in use today than any other brand. Pepperell knows what you want—brings you seven "personality" colors as well as white. Dust ruffles, too, come ready-made in Pepperell matching sheeting. Put color in your night life today!

Lady PEPPERELL SHEETS

IN SEVEN GLAMOROUS "Personality" COLORS

LADY PEPPERELL COMBED PERCALES

You get extra luxury, extra smooth texture at no extra price. Short, stubby fibres are combed out, leaving only finer, longer staple cotton!

LADY PEPPERELL SUPERFINE MUSLINS

Have over 1,000 more threads than the lower count muslins. Extra threads mean extra strength—make these the finest grade of muslin you can buy!

Pepperell Manufacturing Company
Boston, Massachusetts

Remember, PEPPERELL IS A PROMISE...OF TOP QUALITY IN COMBED PERCALE AND SUPERFINE MUSLIN SHEETS

PHOTO BY MUNKACSI

Tell me, Doctor —PART II

"I guess I had to learn the hard way, Doctor.
And now that I've learned—it's too late."

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

THE woman was apparently in considerable pain, for she winced as she seated herself in the chair reserved for patients. The glance which the doctor gave the wan face might have appeared cursory to his patient, but she would have been surprised had she realized how much information he had gathered.

"I see that you have been sick for several months," he said. "Your color is bad—hemoglobin below sixty per cent, I should imagine—and you have lost considerable weight."

"That's right, Doctor. More than fifteen pounds."

"My next question is one that I usually ask every patient. Have you ever had an abortion?"

"No, Doctor, nor a miscarriage. In fact, I've never been pregnant."

"I see. Just how long have you been ailing?"

"It's going on two years. I've been in the hospital several times."

"And what did they do for you in the hospital?"

"Nothing much, as far as I could see. Just kept me in bed until I felt better. But I can't afford to stay in a hospital the rest of my life."

"I can well understand that. What did they say was the matter with you?"

"Something about my tubes—I didn't understand what."

"Hm! Did you have a bad vaginal discharge not very long before you began to have internal trouble?"

"Yes, I did; and I was treated for it quite a while."

"Were you cured of it?"

"No, I wasn't. I got tired of going to the doctor and paying for all those visits, especially when it looked as though I wasn't getting anywhere. So one day I told him I was through—and that was all."

"Did you know what you had?" the doctor asked quietly.

"It was a venereal disease."

"Gonorrhea?"

"Yes. I don't know where I got it. It must have been ——"

"Do you mean to say," interrupted the doctor, "that knowing you had such an infection, you stopped treatment?"

"I told you—I got tired of going there every day and being smeared with little balls of cotton on sticks. The doctor was in a huff about it, but I never went back to him. After all ——"

The doctor said peremptorily, "You were a foolish woman not to have done as you were advised—criminally foolish! If you couldn't afford private medical attention, there are clinics. You never would have got away with it in this town!"

"How did you know it wasn't here that it happened?"

"It couldn't have been, because it would have had to be reported to the Health Department, and they follow up such cases."

"I don't see what business it is of the Health Department."

"They make it their business, and a good thing it is, too, for the protection of others as well as the one infected. All you managed to accomplish was to let yourself in for two years of trouble."

"But—shouldn't that doctor have cured it up quickly?"

"He was doing his best, I have no doubt. We were just getting penicillin at that time and had to rely upon local treatment largely—and it was sometimes tedious. I'll bet you got worse after you left him."

"I did. I got so bad I had to pass my water every few minutes, and it burned something awful."

"I can believe that. Well, let's see in what sort of condition you've been left."

"It's about as bad as it could be," the doctor said a little later, speaking from the foot of his examining table.

"You're sure it was gonorrhea, doctor?"

"As certain as I could be without recovering the gonococcus, which is something I doubt we'll be able to do at this late day. A specific infection of this sort travels a lot differently than one following an abortion, for instance."

"I can't understand what you mean."

"I'll take a couple of minutes to explain, even though it can't make much difference to you—no, I'll take that back, because it does make a difference in the treatment available.

"The gonococcus is a tiny, twin-celled microorganism which is very virile at the height of his career, though with the lapse of time he does grow old and die, in the same way as does every other living entity.

"The gonococcus attacks mucous membranes, any mucous membranes he can find; and you are lucky, with all your carelessness, that you didn't get some of this infection in your eye. I even knew a doctor who lost the use of an eye by getting a drop of pus in it from a patient he was treating. In your case that gonococcus was deposited in the vagina, and then invaded the uterus,

(Continued on Page 212)

Copyright, 1950, by Henry B. Safford, M.D. This is the eighth of a series of articles taken from the book to be published early in 1951 by Renbayle House, Publishers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Nothing Like Tide!

TIDE WASHES CLOTHES MIRACLE CLEAN Without Rinsing

Just wash—wring out—hang up!

No other washing product is made the way Tide is made. Just try Tide without rinsing. Take your wash right out of the suds—put it through the wringer—and hang it up. Tide keeps the dirt suspended in the sudsy water. When you wring out the clothes, the dirt runs out with the washwater . . . and clothes come from the wringer bright, white, and clean! And they dry soft and fluffy . . . iron easily! What's more, skipping the rinsing saves wear and tear on clothes. Saves time, work, and hot water, too. Get Tide today—and remember! Other products may look like Tide . . . others may talk like Tide . . . but they just aren't the same as Procter & Gamble's Tide!

WHICHEVER WASHING METHOD YOU USE . . .

with-or without-rinsing

TIDE DOES A BETTER WASHING JOB THAN ANY SOAP ON EARTH!

Fifty Years Ago In The Journal

A TERRIBLE hurricane and flood in Galveston, Texas, killed 5000 persons in September, 1900. Booth Tarkington wrote his remarkably popular Monsieur Beaucaire, the bubonic plague hit Glasgow, Scotland, and all Mormons were driven out of Mansfield, Ohio, with a pelting of rubbish.

"Until quite recent years," says the September, 1900, JOURNAL, "the land about the White House was a sort of farm. Where the Treasury now stands was a vegetable garden. Where children now roll eggs on Easter morning was a cow pasture. Beneath the front portico was a dairy."

"The President of the U. S. purchases his carriages and horses at the beginning of the administration. Usually he has four horses and as many carriages."

"Most housekeepers," remarks Mrs. Rorer, "feel that it is necessary on Saturday to bake so many cakes, so many loaves of bread, and so many pies, simply because their mothers did before them. The monotony of this destroys the appetite."

Admonishes Margaret E. Sangster. "Slang is always inelegant and utterly unfit for the lips of a well-bred girl."

Cost of living: "Chickens on the coast are twenty-five cents a pound, but in the South and the interior you can buy a good-sized young hen for that amount."

Everything About the House:* "The most healthful way of heating a bedroom is to have a fire in an open fireplace."

Mrs. Rorer tells how to conduct a cooking class: "Teach your pupils that a microscope and a thermometer are as necessary as a saucepan to the modern housewife."

Who really decides which is the Right or the Wrong side of the Tracks?

WHEN Kenneth Neff met Roberta Jean Bowman he was twenty years old, and was regarded as totally worthless by almost everyone who knew him. The estimate was shared by those who had directly observed his idleness (his parents, and those disgusted employers who put up with him for short periods) and those who drew their own conclusions (M· across-the-street nei to her cat, when she down the street with ets, that she could ever amount to any

Kenny lived in Bu ant and prosperous vania where patter clearly defined that ate are regarded as p way of life, which is that is, except the Kenny Neffs, whom, unless they are very careful, it ultimately destroys.

Kenny's trouble started when he found out that he was pretty good at drawing pictures. One day in the second grade he took up a fat red wax crayon and drew a crude Little Red Hen, which teacher praised and tacked on the fiberboard strip above

In a department-store elevator the other day, Dawn Crowell Norman's two fellow passengers were a girl on crutches with one foot in a plaster cast, and a friend the girl had just met. "Why do you look so worried?" the friend was asking. "Well, my foot will be out of the cast tomorrow, and I just don't know what kind of cane to buy that will be most becoming."

Outside of metropolitan areas, a fifth of all the single houses going up today are being built by the owners themselves. . . . There are now women workers in every major industry in the U. S. Women are most important numerically in the textile and apparel industries; they make up nearly nine out of every ten workers, for example, in the manufacture of women's and children's underthings. . . . Whenever a certain Chicago mailbox thief stole any money, he sent five dollars to a prison chaplain for the inmates' welfare—a big problem to the chaplain, who worked overtime finding the rightful owners of the money. . . . Sixty per cent more people were killed in auto accidents last year than on planes.

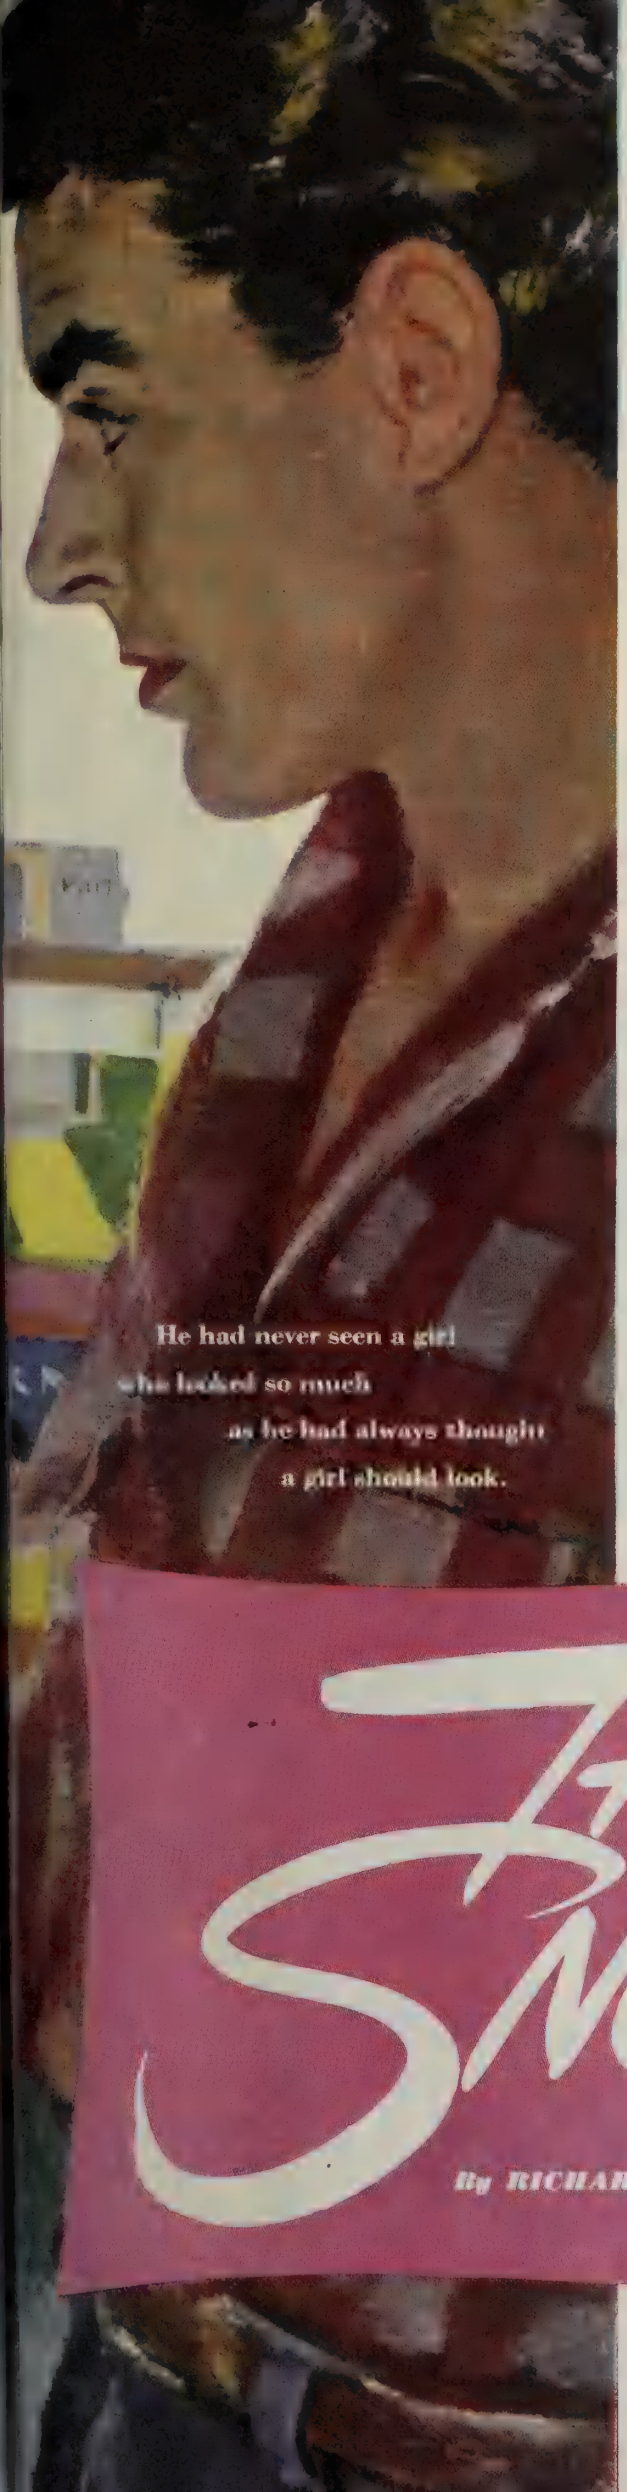
With Belles on Their Toes in its second installment in this issue, and already spoken for by the movies, its family predecessor in the* JOURNAL—*Cheaper by the Dozen—is making motion-picture records by having the biggest second-month sale of any picture in the running.

A tiny girl walked into the Workshop recently with her mother. The child was dressed to the nines in little-girl ruffles and frills and ribbons; a white bonnet with rosebuds around it; short white gloves, pink socks and white Mary Janes. And when she turned around, what was she toting on her hip but a holster and a six-shooter!

We celebrated here at the Workshop recently one of the peak years in JOURNAL history—a record-breaking year in many respects; in not merely circulation and the like, but in editorial achievements, like the stunning success of The Little Princesses. And at this party given in honor of the Goulds' by their staff of editors, coming as it very properly did on the fifteenth anniversary of the commencement of the Goulds' successful tenure, one of the features of the occasion was a half-hour newscast of the high spots in JOURNAL history since 1935, recorded by CBS commentators Eric Sevareid and Bill Downs, with tonal effects managed by Mitch Miller, musical director of Columbia Records. Mary Bass quietly planned the production as a big surprise, Joan Younger prepared the script, and for thirty minutes the Goulds and the rest of us had the pleasure of hearing the JOURNAL'S biggest fifteen years dramatically described. We only wished that all you readers could have heard it too.

J. DI PIETRO

15 Journal years: Joan Younger, Mitch Miller, Mary Bass.



Out in Detroit recently, watching a night ball game with General and Mrs. Marshall, Margaret Hickey, who had just been re-elected a Governor-at-Large of the Red Cross at the National Convention there, was moved at the tribute paid to her illustrious companions by the fans. "Even the Tigers couldn't compete in popularity that night with the general and his wife," she told us—"and the Tigers were winning the game." Miss H. was equally moved by what the general had been saying, as head of the Red Cross: "I've worried a great deal about how to make the public more conscious of the fine work done largely by women volunteers, and the necessity for more of them. I haven't yet found the solution—the work is done so quietly, therefore efficiently . . . and that, unfortunately, doesn't make the headlines."

Our Miss Hickey gets around.

Miss Hickey, who never stands still, was recently in London presiding at the United Nations Seminar, a feature of the International Congress of Business and Professional Women, working there with women from twenty-seven nations; had just before spent two days in Washington with the Department of Defense, as a consultant on woman power. There she heard Under Secretary of Defense Stephen Early say, "I have been impressed for a good many years with that slogan of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL—'Never underestimate the power of a woman.' As a matter of fact, we might very well adopt for the theme of this conference a modification of that slogan—'Never underestimate the military power of a woman.'"

THEY MAY LOOK LIKE TIDE!
THEY MAY TALK LIKE TIDE!
CLEANER! CLEANER! CLEANER!
but in your wash
THEY JUST
THE SAME AS Like Ti THES MIRACLE
Rinsi

Who really decides which is the Right or the Wrong side of the Tracks?

THE SNOB

By RICHARD B. GEHMAN

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

WHEN Kenneth Neff met Roberta Jean Bowman he was twenty years old, and was regarded as totally worthless by almost everyone who knew him. The estimate was shared by those who had directly observed his idleness (his parents, and those disgusted employers who put up with him for short periods) and those who drew their own conclusions (Mrs. Emma Maurer, an across-the-street neighbor, who used to say to her cat, when she saw Kenny shambling down the street with his hands in his pockets, that she could tell that boy wouldn't ever amount to anything).

Kenny lived in Buchanan, a small, pleasant and prosperous city of Central Pennsylvania where patterns of behavior are so clearly defined that all who protest or deviate are regarded as peculiar. The Buchanan way of life, which is the way of life of most Eastern cities of 100,000 or less, is rich, rewarding and comfortable for all—for all, that is, except the Kenny Neffs, whom, unless they are very careful, it ultimately destroys.

Kenny's trouble started when he found out that he was pretty good at drawing pictures. One day in the second grade he took up a fat red wax crayon and drew a crude Little Red Hen, which teacher praised and tacked on the fiberboard strip above the blackboard. All the children were impressed, Kenny most of all, for it was the first occasion on which he had not been reprimanded or punished for doing something that pleased him. From then on, even in arithmetic class, all he did was draw pictures. He was normal in every other way—he played shinny with the other kids on the block, got in fights with them sometimes, complained to his mother about the same old food and had the usual children's diseases—but he was happiest when he was by himself in his room, working on a picture.

In Buchanan life is fairly simple for the young men. They graduate from high school and go into their fathers' businesses, or become stockroom boys or clerks or apprentice bookkeepers in the downtown stores, or they start out at the great plant which squats at one end of the city. They never draw pictures.

Kenny continued to draw all through grade school, junior high and high school, and from time to time he would announce to his parents that he wanted to be an artist. His father, Christian Neff, and his mother, Elizabeth, were pious, conscientious, self-effacing souls who knew their place in the city's scheme of organization. They were people of moderate means, and they were horrified at their son's proposal: the word "artist" seemed to exemplify every variety of shiftlessness and debauchery they could imagine. But slowly, as Kenny's voiced intentions became less juvenile and more emphatic, it became evident to them that he was sincere—crazy, perhaps, but sincere. Thus Christian was driven into what, for him, was an extraordinary sacrifice: as Kenny's graduation from high school approached, Christian offered to send the boy to college. (Continued on Page 162)

Can a nation afford health for all its people?

By REBECCA WEST

The question of socialized medicine concerns everyone today. England's ablest reporter, Rebecca West, presents in this important article a detailed, objective study of Britain's Health Plan. It is presented here with full understanding that what may be good for one country may not solve another's problems.

PHOTO BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

HAVE you ever found yourself, while you were making movements for a certain purpose, being stared at with a grin by someone who thought your movements meaningless, and you probably crazy, because he did not know your purpose? The other day my husband came on an old gentleman standing in the drive of my house, looking up at me as I stood at a window, waving both my arms. He was evidently thinking, "Ah, poor dear, she has gone over the edge at last." Actually I was trying to shake down two thermometers at once, because I had two invalids in bed with flu, and the doctor was waiting on the telephone to hear what their temperatures were. I had seen the old gentleman and had correctly interpreted his expression, and I could not have been more exasperated.

Well, sometimes we feel like that in Great Britain when we hear and read what foreigners think of our National Health Service. Even what Americans, whom we do not class as real foreigners, think of it. They seem to see it as a meaningless extravagance, which has been wished on us by a Labour Government that wants to provide social services for the sake of providing social services, and skins the taxpayer to pay for them, without regard for the efficiency of medicine or the comfort of the patient. And we find this exasperating. If they would only come a little closer and watch what we are doing, they would see that it has a purpose.

The National Health Service is not meaningless. It is a specific response to a specific challenge. It is not right to say that it was "wished on" Britain. You might as well say that our housing program was "wished on" us instead of regarding it as the government's fulfillment of its duty to replace the houses damaged by the blitz and to provide new ones for the expanding population. We had to do something about the damage done by our recent history to the medical care of the British people and our hospitals, and the National Health Service is what we did.

It is not even a specially Socialist idea. If you obtain the campaign guide used by the Tories in the general election of this spring, you will find plainly set down there that "it can never be too often stated that the Conservative Party is wholeheartedly in favour of a National Health Service available to all." They have been committed to that for the last six years. When the Labour Party joined with the Tories in wartime to form the Coalition Government they brought the idea with them, and the Tories adopted it; and it was a Tory minister who handled the first draft of the National Health Service Act in 1944. When Mr. Churchill campaigned before the general election of 1945, he gave a pledge that he would introduce such a service; and some of the younger members of the party had done such thorough and ingenious work on the scheme that when the Labour Government got in, they were able to make shrewd and helpful criticisms of the bill it introduced. These were received with the affected indignation which is part of the game of party politics, but most of them were noted and the faults corrected. In a sense the present National Health Service is a collaboration between the parties; and if a Tory Government should be returned at the next election, Labour criticism would keep it a collaboration.

It is no use thinking that the Tories were against it. It is no use thinking the doctors were against it. From 1930 on, the British Medical Association has been considering plans for a general medical service for the nation, and in 1938 and 1943 issued reports putting forward suggestions, some of which are incorporated in the present National Health Service system, (Continued on Page 139)

Somebody's always ch

Chase one man to get another—that spells trouble!

HENRY locked the door but forgot about the window, so Alice came up the fire escape.

She said, "You rat, you."

"Come in before you fall," Henry said. "You're going to kill yourself, climbing up that thing."

"You deliberately locked me out. I saw you peeking when I was on the stairs. You saw me coming."

Alice stood on the window sill and jumped over the radiator to the floor. She was wearing a red skirt and a belted plaid coat and a white beret. She looked as if she might be advertising something, but she also looked, Henry had to admit, piquant and attractive in a purely physical sort of way. In fact, she looked more lovely than ever. He had been having this feeling, of late, each time that he saw her. He kept telling himself that eventually it would go away.

"Well, I'm busy," Henry said.

"But I had to see you," Alice said appealingly. "Hank, I've found him. I really have. Really and truly."

"Again?"

"He's a poet. His name is Dimmick." She gazed briefly into an enchanted land and then pulled off the beret and plaid coat and went to a mirror on the wall and remodeled her close-cropped bronze-colored curls with the heel of her hand. She was wearing a green vestlike business over a white blouse. She looked like a Christmas tree, a very shapely Christmas tree. She said, "I simply can't begin to describe him. I'll make some coffee first and then tell you."

Henry said, crouched behind his bastion of books and papers, "I'm working. I've got to study."

"Then I can sit down and be as still as a mouse until you're finished."

"I won't be finished. I'll never be finished. Go make the coffee." Henry slammed his books shut one by one. He stacked his papers and put them aside.

"Now you're mad. Your eyes are glittering, the way they do." Alice sat down on the cleared top of his desk. She said unhappily, "I wish you didn't hate me so."

"I don't hate you. You won't let me get any work done, that's all. You've gotten ubiquitous. You're driving me nuts. You're in and out of here nine times a minute, whenever I'm home. How can I study?"

"But you know how much I depend on you. And I only want to get married. There isn't anything ubiquitous about that. Any nice girl wants to get married."

"You're thinking of 'iniquitous.' Ubiquitous means you're in my hair, like bats. I'm trying to carry sixteen hours of classes and I'm working twenty hours and I need thirty for study and you expect me to spend forty in conversation. That's been going on for the five months I've been living in this building. Give or take a week while you got acquainted." (Continued on Page 209)

Henry said, "Do you remember when I made that pass at you?"

ng somebody

by William Brandon

ILLUSTRATED BY

Belles on their Toes

By FRANK B. GILBRETH, JR., AND ERNESTINE GILBRETH CAREY

Continuing the hilarious adventures of the Cheaper By The Dozen clan . . . Shopping  for six boys . . . Mother's school for motion-study engineers  . . . Putting together the efficient kitchen . . . The lynching  party . . . The Ashtray Christmas . . . And how Mother got a new nose.

When her husband died, Lillian Moller Gilbreth was left with eleven children and Dad's growing motion-study business. This is her story. The children, from eighteen-year-old Anne down to two-year-old Jane, helped. Even Tom, the man of all work, despite his pained grumbling, doubled as cook, yardman, governess and duenna.

II

WITH Mother home, the girls' self-imposed ban on dating was automatically lifted. Anne and Ernestine went back into circulation, hopefully rejoining their beach crowd of previous summers.

The competition was unusually stiff, because there were about three times as many girls as boys. Most of last summer's crop of males were now in college and had summer jobs on the mainland. It was apparent that in order to get rings on their fingers, belles would have to be on their toes.

Morton Dykes, besides being tall and good-looking, had brought a Hupmobile roadster to the island and had rented a motorboat. So he had long since been admitted—in fact, shanghaied—into the crowd. The group collected each morning, before going into the water, in a hollow formed by three sand dunes, near the Cliff Beach Bathhouse. Of all the sheiks encamped on those semisecluded sands, Morton had amassed the largest and most eager harem.

Copyright, 1950, by Frank B. Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey

But in spite of the manpower shortage, Anne at first wouldn't have anything to do with him.

Anne may not have been a raging beauty, but she was no strain at all upon the eyes, especially in her new bathing suit. Also, there is a possibility that Morton had become tired of having a half-dozen panting females hurrying to strike a match every time he put a cigarette in his mouth. In any event, he did everything he could to get back in Anne's good graces.

"I don't see why you always give me the cold shoulder," he told Anne one morning, sitting down beside her on the sand.

"If I weren't a lady," said Anne, "I'd give you something that started from the shoulder. And the result would be even colder."

"I don't see what you're sore about."

"Look," Anne whispered. "There are at least fifteen beautiful women here who are dying for you to come and sit with them. Why don't you go make one of them supremely happy? And leave me alone."

"But I've just known them for a few weeks, and you and I are old buddies."

"My Buddy," Anne said sarcastically. "You'd better shove off, Buddy, before your mother sees you associating with the lower classes."

"You mean on the boat?" Morton asked. "Listen, I've been wanting to tell you about that." (Continued on Page 70)

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

Bob and Jane snuggled up against Mother. "Does it hurt?" they asked.
"Oh, Mother, are you all right?"

FALL

Fur-lined, three-quarter brushed-wool coat, jersey dress, Hattie Carnegie.

High-collared, russet tweed coat by Hattie Carnegie.

Wool dress, sealskin scarf—Pauline Trigere.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

TRENDS

Fashion, at certain times, comes between a woman and her personality to such an extent that the comment "What a smart dress!" is more commonly heard than "What an attractive woman!" This fall the woman comes first. Your best fashion question is "What looks best on me?" The big, free-from-the-shoulder coat of bulky fleece or chinchilla walks side by side with the fitted, waistline coat, both frequently double-breasted. The suit with a longer jacket is a trendmaker, but the shorter jacket is still in fashion. The skirt is narrow and the dress slim, but straightness often takes the form of pleats and many skirts break into a low, gentle flare. Pockets, by twos and fours, are too interesting to go out. The pretty, turned-back cuff and long, crushed, shiny capeskin gloves are still in. We see coat collars rising high, half enclosing a small capped head, and suit revers cut low, almost to the waistline. Velvet and fur are marks of this season's becoming fashions. Fur collars and fur trimming return to coats. Fur buttons and engaging fur shoulder pieces go with wool dresses. There is a velveteen suit in every collection. Colors are autumn-leaf shades — russet, rusty red, sharp yellow and brown — shades of coral, tree-trunk grays, and all the blues from royal to blue-violet to navy.

Think of a coral jersey blouse or gold taffeta scarf with a gray suit, a black day coat with a turquoise lining, a red velvet evening coat lined with mauve satin. Wear black and white in new ways: white organdy revers on a black velvet dress, a fresh gardenia with a black cap-beret, a black-and-white tweed suit worn with black fox. ▪ By WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

Carnation-red cashmere suit—Omar Kiam of Ben Reig.

BAG BY JOSEF, HAT BY JOHN FREDERICS. OPPOSITE PAGE: BAGS WITH COATS BY ALAN MILLER.

FALL TRENDS

Dickey-dress, scarlet wool with linen, by Larry Aldrich.

Longer jacket suit—Omar Kiam of Ben Reig.

Happily, this fall, no woman need say, "I cannot afford to be in fashion this year," or "I'll have to wait till high fashions appear at a lower price." The very same fashion trends exist today at practically all prices. Skirt lengths seem to be settled at 14½ to 15 inches from the floor. The absence of extremes is your best assurance that this year's clothes will be "good next year."

Lynx-collared travel coat, low back belt, copy of Jacques Fath.

vy-blue velveteen, tapered hipline, by Adele Simpson.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

)ouble-breasted coat, sealskin trim, Christian Dior-New York.

lack-and-white tweed, circle of black fox—Omar Kiam of Ben Reig.

VELVET HAT BY MR. JOHN

FALL COSTUME COMPLETE

Women who love dresses will find many fabrics and silhouettes this year, at varied prices. ▪ By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

$25.00	Red wool jersey dress, high pockets
5.95	Shiny black feather helmet
5.95	Black suède slip-on gloves
7.95	Black suède bag

$44.85 Persian-lamb scarf, $39.95

$25.00	Rayon crepe dress with knee flare
5.00	Bandeau of velvet and veiling
7.95	Black velvet bag, a slim rectangle
6.44	White kid gloves

$44.39 Silver-fox scarf, around $50.00

$29.95 Flat pleated silhouette, beige wool jersey

10.95 Felt cloche, velvet cord and tassel

2.95 Hand-sewn cotton gloves

10.95 Red calfskin top-handle bag

4.00 Gold earrings and clip

$58.80

$29.95 Rayon faille suit, slim silhouette

12.95 Lattice-crown velvet hat

6.44 Slip-on gloves, white kidskin

7.95 Double-handle suède bag

$57.29

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RICHARD AVEDON

$35.00 Claret velveteen—slim, button-front dress

16.95 Two-tone, brushed-felt sailor

2.95 Hand-sewn beige cotton gloves

$54.90

Ropes of mink, $22.95 each

BLACK CREPE, RED JERSEY, BLACK FAILLE, CLARET VELVETEEN BY SAMUEL ZAHN; PLEATED JERSEY BY EDWARD KRISEL. PERSIAN SCARF BY AARON REISS. BLACK BANDEAU BY ROSE COLBY, FEATHER HELMET BY FORTUNE, LATTICE-CROWN HAT BY MR. ALF, SAILOR HAT BY BILLIE RUSSY.

CLOCHE, CAP, SIDESWEPT BRIMS GO WITH EVERYTHING THIS FALL

BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

Above: velours cloche, fawn color, by Mr. John, to wear with all the browns. Mink coat by Maximilian.

Below: Helmet in turquoise velours by Hattie Carnegie with violet wool suit and multicolor beads.

Purple suit by Larry Aldrich, gray jersey by Jane Derby, red calfskin bag by Richard Koret, alligator bag by Arthur Gilmore, turquoise beads by Lilly Dache.

Cap-cloche in black velours by Christian Dior-New York, with a fresh gardenia, jet and pearls. Fashion of black and white.

VELOURS

BEAVER

FELTS

Wing-brim coral velours hat, by Lilly Dache.

PHOTOS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

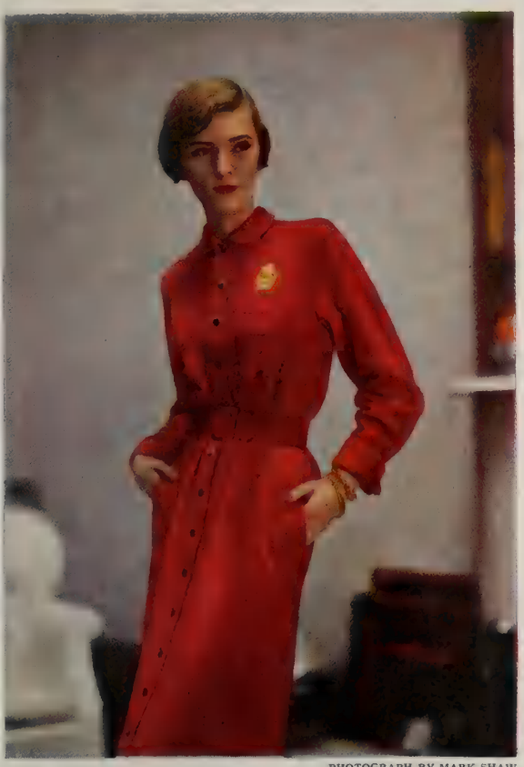
Brimmed hat in velours, Angora stole—Mr. John.

The beaver cloche, with a chinchilla reefer suit by Omar Kiam of Ben Reig. Red capeskin gloves, calf bag.

Feminine printed challis in a charming tucked-front blouse. Vogue Design No. 7017, 12 to 20. Wear it as a dress with contrasting skirt and cummerbund of wool jersey. Vogue Design No. 7018, 24 to 32 waist.

Ever popular gray flannel with detachable white linen collar and cuffs. Without the collar, the neck is finished with a neat neckband . . . pretty, worn with scarves. Try fur accessories. Vogue Design No. 7124, 12 to 20.

The wool



© VOGUE

Slim blue wool tweed with convertible neckline. Rows of stitching on collar, cuffs, pockets. Vogue Design No. 7122, 12 to 18.

BARANDUKI MUFF AND BELT BY HAROLD RUBIN, BRIMMED HAT BY IRENE, LEOPARD BAG AND BELT BY MR. JOHN. OPPOSITE PAGE, RED HAT BY IRENE, TURQUOISE FUR FELT HAT BY SUZY, MINK STOLE BY ESTHER DOROTHY. ALL JEWELRY BY BRAMAN SCHRIPPS.

dress idea . . . in six Versions for fall

Of all the dresses one gets real pleasure out of, a good wool usually heads the list. Its season is long . . . from the first cool day through spring. It looks well under a coat or a fur jacket. If it is a classic design, you can go on wearing it for years. It has the "never-wear-out" quality which is so wonderful when you like a dress. And you are sure to, if your pattern is becoming and the fabric of good quality . . . perhaps a neutral gray flannel, a pin-checked worsted. Try having gloves or a hat made from the same fabric. • By NORA O'LEARY

PHOTOGRAPH BY MARK SHAW

Wool jersey in a button-front classic. The dress is cut straight without a waistline seam, is shaped only with the belt. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7103, 12 to 20.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GENEVIEVE NAYLOR

One of the prettiest patterns we have seen! Slim soft dress with beautifully cut collar, cuffs and pockets which give it a very custom-made look. Vogue Couturier Design No. 574, 12 to 20. Perfect for fur cape-stole and fur felt pillbox.

Paris-inspired black-and-white checked worsted with pin-tucked white linen dickey. Black braid outlines the horseshoe-shaped neckline, the side-front closing, and the cuffs. Vogue Design No. 7165, 12 to 40.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.: or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ontario. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Back and other views, sizes and prices on Page 227

BELLE MEAD

One great example of the grandeur that was Tennessee which has not gone with the wind

By RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

Back about the middle of the 1800's, when Lincoln was still practicing law over in Illinois, and when Harriet Beecher Stowe, way up in Maine, was just starting to compose Uncle Tom's Cabin, families of fabulous wealth in the rich agricultural region of Western Tennessee were striving to outdo one another in the magnificence of their mansions. Built with dramatic disregard for cost, on a palatial scale, and romantically furnished, the three houses generally acknowledged to have come out on top in this great race for elegance were Belle Mead and Belmont, at Nashville, and a monumental residence some forty miles to the south, called Rattle and Snap.

Of the three, Belle Mead, shown here, is now by far the best preserved; still seeming to breathe the carefree air of the 1850's. Hardly a house I know has held so closely to its past.

The house had a previous, now unpictured, past, dating back forty years or more from the early fifties when a disastrous fire provided William Strickland, who had come out from Baltimore to design his famous capitol at Nashville, with an opportunity to rebuild Belle Mead as you see it now. As it rose then to outrival all the other great houses of the region, it has now outlived all but a few of its rivals, most of which today are fading memories of an era long-since ended.

Belle Mead, seen here reflected in a heart-shaped pool, stands in its still stately park, handsomely kept, and seemingly unmindful that Nashville is now surrounding it.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Collectors today would give their eyeteeth for the lush Victorian pieces, carpets, curtains, with which the tremendous double drawing room of Belle Mead is furnished.

The high-ceilinged hallway with its curving staircase is one of the sights.

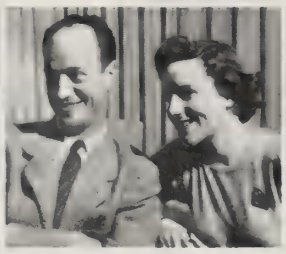
Two majestic beds fail to daunt the heroic scale of the high double bedroom.

our own young

ALAN BRADY

Betty and Bob Hoffman

HERB KRATOVIL



Marion and Rod Wilson

HERB KRATOVIL

Betty and John Gray

HARRY SALTZMAN

Marjorie and Bob Lee

HERB KRATOVIL

Nancy and Fred Russe

HARRY SALTZMAN

Elizabeth and Dan Hoffman

Nora and John Smi

THESE ARE THE JOURNAL'S YOUNG MARRIEDS: fourteen young women and fourteen husbands who never underestimate them. In a series of articles they will share with young marrieds everywhere the beginnings of wisdom: the fun and work of starting a home—good food on a budget, furnishing inexpensively an attractive home—just plain getting along with each other, for instance. Our young marrieds did a good deal of their growing up on the JOURNAL, the part after twenty, that counts most. "And you can't spend your days," they say, "around a place where marriage, a home and children are considered the greatest fulfillments of a woman's life without wanting that sort of life yourself, can you?" Although they are different as squares in a patch quilt, our young marrieds have this in common: not an office day goes by which doesn't in one way or another lead to a deeper understanding of home and family—as these personality vignettes will demonstrate.

HARRY SALTZMAN

Betty and Bob Hoffman have the highest score on pets—two rabbits, a cat and a dog.

• • •

Take Betty Gray, for instance, an assistant editor in our food department. Betty has a six-month-old daughter and a young son, Stephen, aged three. When she came to the JOURNAL more than four years ago, her husband was a lieutenant in the Navy. They had married in 1943, set up housekeeping in a two-room-and-kitchenette apartment, and Betty was struggling with exactly the problems she now helps millions of young brides to solve in the pages of the JOURNAL.

When Betty and John finally got an apartment with a large living room in one of New York's big new housing developments, they started entertaining—sometimes as many as eight or twelve. "I like to go all out on party food," says Betty, "for no dish is better than its ingredients. But I like to keep the menu simple too. A favorite party dinner of ours begins with homemade onion soup, which may be kept hot for hours in the oven in little individual earthenware pots; a hearty beef stew (use the bone in the soup), with carrots, potatoes and fresh green peas; tossed salad and rolls. We put two or three card tables at one end of the living room, set them with linens and silver before the guests get there, borrow chairs from the neighbors. We serve the food from a buffet at the other end. I like to have everything possible done in advance because I hate to miss what's going on; and try to think through every detail of a party: where to put coats, whether there are enough hangers in the closet, plenty of pencils and paper for games, if any, afterward. Coffee measured out ahead, greens washed and cold, everything cleaned up in the kitchen. The guests who have babies bring them along, and we put them in with Stevie for the evening."

The Simmons' two-floor apartment has the look of an artist's studio—Ellie is a full-time, free-time painter.

HARRY SALTZMAN

HERB KRATOVIL

Nora and John Smith's "clearing house," a kitchen bulletin board.

• • •

In Marion and Rod Wilson's household, Rod helps out by taking the laundry to the Launderette (they do everything themselves, including sheets, towels and shirts). "Rod says, I must add, that his shirts are his pride and joy," says Marion, "and I'm satisfied to do them until I can find a Chinaman who can launder them for less. It takes me fifteen minutes per." Marion and Rod have done a replastering job as well as all the painting in their new apartment. Recently they've taken all their picture frames, loot from family attics, and grouped them over the sofa. "We cut out favorite pictures and simply fasten them in from the back with common pins. Every two or three weeks we find some new pictures to stick in." Marion is editorial assistant in the Pattern Department.

• • •

Betty Hannah Hoffman stepped out of Smith College into an editorial apprentice's job at the JOURNAL. Later, she took over the writing of the Fifty Years Ago column. She writes How America Lives articles these days, visiting families all over the country and writing at her Bucks County, Pennsylvania, farm. Two lively young sons guarantee never a dull moment of home life. She reports: "Ever since the electric dishwasher freed my husband from drying dishes, the division has been fairly hard and fast: my responsibilities are indoors, Bob's are out. For him: cutting an acre of lawn, keeping six acres of fence in repair, doing all outdoor painting, washing the car, feeding a dog, cat and two rabbits. Only thing he won't do is gardening—he'll dig, but he won't weed. I hate to spend my few leisure hours under a broiling-hot sun trying to hoe while the kids pull up all the carrots, so next summer we'll probably just have flowers—more fun, less work than vegetables. My labors revolve around the cooking, house cleaning, daily laundry and kids: not too bad, as I have a cleaning woman a day a week and an automatic dishwasher and clothes washer." Betty always writes first thing in the morning—"I run down like a clock during the day; come evening, I'm an idiot!"—so that on writing mornings she drives over to her sitter's house with the children, and stays there, working in peace and quiet while the sitter and the children drive back to Betty's farm and spend the morning.

• • •

Marjorie Lee, formerly full-time poetry editor, now writes poetry as well as occasional free-lance articles at home and takes care of her two toddlers, aged two and four. She admits her shortcomings in domestic skills with this amusing anecdote: "The most unforgettable gift I ever gave my husband was a pair of Argyle socks for Christmas. They were the first thing I had ever knit (I doubt if I will ever knit again) and took me two months to do. The Saturday morning is strictly reserved for Traceys' chores.

HARRY SALTZMAN

Rod and Marion Wilson frame masterpiece reproductions of paintings and group them in an interesting arrangement.

marrieds

Fourteen strong, they do double duty as homemakers on the Journal and in private life. In this article and in those to come, they'll share their solutions for some basic, practical problems of daily living young marrieds everywhere are facing.

ALTZMAN

anne and Jim Tracey

HARRY SALTZMAN

Ellie and John Simmons

HARRY SALTZMAN

Polly and Todd Cooke

HERB KRATOVIL

Dawn and Bob Norman

HERB KRATOVIL

Helen and Joe O'Donnell

HERB KRATOVIL

Mary Adele and John Morris

KRATOVIL

Miriam and Jim Skardon

second sock is still unfinished. Bob wears them as they are, and people are constantly noticing that the red overstitching is missing on one of them. I had intended to finish it, but it seems a shame since he finds some sort of perverse pleasure in the fact that they don't match."

Marjorie and Bob lived in a small apartment till they moved to a house in the country, were faced like all young marrieds in the same situation with the problem of huge furnishing expense, so they moved most of the furniture from their apartment living room into a small den for themselves, made a combination living-dining room out of the dining room. "We have a sofa along one wall, a couple of bookcases, lots of little stools that nest together, for parties and buffet meals. The regular dining table juts out from a window, with four chairs at the table, two used around the room. We can entertain happily sixteen or eighteen here. The actual living room has taken on the function of a playroom for the kids, and we won't be decorating it for a year or two."

HIGGS—BERMUDA NEWS BUREAU

Miriam and Jim Skardon honeymooned 7 months ago.

• • •

Nancy Crawford (Russe), a Bryn Mawr graduate, has discovered that meals at their house have to be quick and easy, with only occasionally a complicated or time-consuming dish. "I once made a lemon meringue pie, and it took me five hours," she recalls of her bridehood days a year or so back. "Why do they say 'easy as pie,' I wonder? Usually we have one hearty hot dish, a big salad, rarely anything more than apples and cheese for dessert." Nancy came to the JOURNAL in 1947 and discovered that food could be more fascinating and satisfying than playwriting, her original collegiate ambition, now that she is assistant to Ruth Mills Teague on her Conversation Piece features.

HERB KRATOVIL

• • •

Polishing is not reserved for sonnets alone by our poetry editor, Elizabeth McFarland (Hoffman). Her favorite domestic chore is polishing silver and copper, perhaps utilizing these meditative moments to compose her verse. "My husband, who is a bright morning soul, just naturally makes our breakfast," she says. "He believes in large breakfasts as a matter of principle, and rather delights in enforcing it. On Saturday and Sunday, Danny loves to make 'fancy eggs'—bakes them in a casserole, covered with bread crumbs, grated cheese, dabs of butter, Worcestershire sauce and a little thyme." Of housekeeping chores she says, "Danny empties the garbage and brings up fireplace wood. We have no rule about dishes; whoever happens to be in the mood, or unbusy, does them, and sometimes they don't get done at all." The Hoffmans have settled in Philadelphia's historic Clinton Street (also noteworthy for having housed nine JOURNAL editors in the past five years).

HARRY SALTZMAN

Elizabeth McFarland Hoffman likes to polish silver—especially if Danny reads to her.

• • •

"Some people say I wasn't brought up by my family at all, but by the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, I came here at such a tender age," says Dawn Crowell Norman, our beauty editor. "My first job was receptionist. Then I was general office girl; after that I was promoted to the Fashion Department, where my first assignment was to dust off the magazines." Dawn's modest remarks do not mention that during this period she sold the JOURNAL her first short story, that she learned to compose photographs and she became one of the youngest associate editors on a national magazine. She is now the mother of a five-month-old daughter. At home, weekday breakfasts are Dawn's to prepare; over the week end her husband not only gets breakfast, but serves it to her in bed! "Bob does most of the food shopping. I make the beds, do the dishes and straighten up in the mornings."

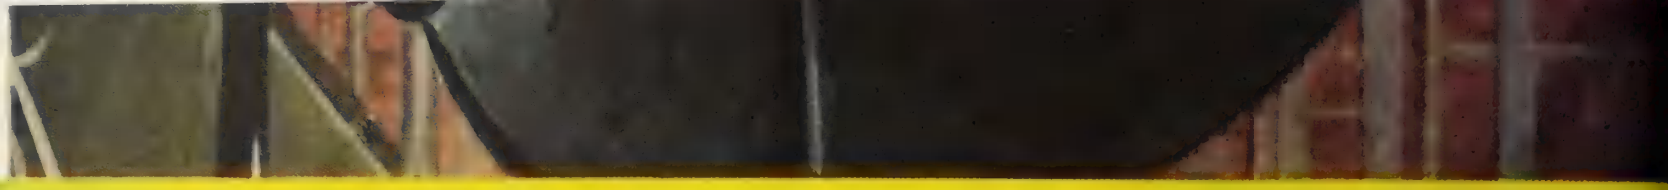
• • •

Jeanne Tracey, editorial assistant in the Sub-Deb Department, was married three years ago, while her husband was still in school. "Our decorating 'scheme' or 'style,'" says Jeanne, "was pretty well settled for us by two or three really lovely antique pieces which we received as wedding presents. Since then, we've been trying to pick up worthy companions for them at bargain prices, refinishing them ourselves.

"We found an old table and four chairs of light oak. When we bought them, they were covered with six layers of paint and one of varnish, so we borrowed a blowtorch and went to work on them down in the cellar. While one of us would work the blowtorch, the other would quickly scoop off the old paint as it bubbled and melted. (You have to be very careful or you'll burn the wood, but it is a really effective method.)

"We finished them off with a chemical paint-and-varnish remover, sanded them and waxed them. Refinishing antiques is a major project with us, so we invested in a small sanding and buffing machine, for about fifteen dollars, worth its weight in gold!"

Bookshelves, obviously, were the Russes' first new-apartment need.



HERB KRATOVIL

• • •

Iowa-born of a journalistic father and mother, Eleanor Simmons came to the JOURNAL in 1947. As a staff member for three years she read manuscripts, wrote captions for articles, went out on research and reporting assignments. Now a mother and a free-lancer, she writes, paints and contributes ideas for this article series. As romantic as the stories she reads, she reports on her second anniversary: "We spent our last anniversary (and my birthday as well) in Bucks County, in a hotel with a won-

(Continued on Page 232)

Escape from the past

By GERTRUDE SCHWEITZER

DAVID MERRIAM squeezed into the Madison Avenue bus and tried to obey instructions to "stepinarear." More seasoned New Yorkers stood where they chose, but Merriam, after six years in the great town, still had his innate respect for order, even after everything that had happened to him.

Nothing about him would have made you remember him rather than anyone else in the bus. He was quietly dressed, tall, a little too thin, with a rugged, pleasant face. You would have judged him to be in his early forties. Actually he was considerably younger. Ten years ago he had not even looked his age, but circumstances had changed that.

As he rode uptown, he thought, like any other man, about his job, about the advertising agency that employed him, and about his wife, Iris, with whom he was very much in love.

After a time he became consciously aware of the ordinary trend of his thoughts, and the awareness gave him great satisfaction. He had not once looked around anxiously at the faces of his fellow passengers—it was probably weeks since he had done this anywhere, though he had thought he would never conquer the panic that had once come upon him whenever he had to mingle with strange people. Perhaps eventually he would forget that there had ever been such panic—forget, even, that his name was not really David Merriam.

He got off the bus at 94th Street and walked the half block to his apartment house. He had been married for two years—time enough for the bloom to have worn off a little, but it had not worn off. When he heard Iris' voice calling out a greeting to him, he glowed with the same delight as on the first evening that he had ever come home to her.

She came and kissed him, and he held her a moment and then let her go. He was afraid to hold her too long, afraid of boring her with his love for her (Continued on Page 122)

He said this much to her, "My life is not an open book. You are taking a chance if you marry me."

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY FREDMAN

He, for whom caution was so essential, suddenly found himself asking her to have supper with him.

Lifting the pair of tiny shell earrings, she said again,
"Boyd, no! How lovely!"

A man by the hand is worth two on the run

By FREDERICK NEBEL

BOYD JOHNSON got back the middle of May, lounging comfortably behind the wheel and letting the dove-gray convertible loaf down the long, easy slope into town. The top was down, the radio played dance music. The late-afternoon sun was in Boyd's eyes, but large, expensive sunglasses took care of that. He wore no hat, but his black hair didn't toss in the breeze; it was cropped, wiry. His hands, his face were nut-brown. A smile kept nibbling at his lips. It was good to get back.

It was always good to get back. But then, after Labor Day, along about the end of September, it was always good to get away again. Far away. South. Florida. Good men in his line didn't grow on trees and he could walk into a job anywhere. Almost anywhere. He glanced up at the elms overhead and felt his heart swell with the joy of returning.

The village green split Main Street in two, one-way traffic on either side. Boyd pulled in alongside the big New England Motors building and got out. He stamped his feet, first one, then the other, to shake down the legs of his costly doeskin slacks. He fastened one button on his sports jacket, a rare number straight from Collins Avenue in Miami Beach, and touched the collar of his casual nylon shirt. He looked like a million and was worth, in cash, twenty-two dollars and fifty cents.

The town was the same. Nothing had changed, not a bit, and this was the way he wanted it. It was reassuringly familiar. Like Kate Edson. Kate didn't hear him when he strolled into the automobile showroom. She was mulling over the week-end meat specials on the back page of the Governorstown Bulletin. Besides, Leo Dellarocco was using an electric impact wrench in the shop out back and the echoes made a hard, violent clatter. Boyd idled among the four new cars on the floor, looking them over, examining the price tags. When he reached the low partition that separated the showroom from the office he leaned on the counter and grinned. The clatter of the electric wrench stopped.

Boyd said casually, "I'll take that thirty-four-hundred-dollar convertible, but I'll want some extras—nylon seat covers, a spotlight and a special grille guard. Cash, of course."

"Oh-oh," Kate said. She was not surprised, really, seeing him. They'd all been expecting him. Like the birds, he came and went with the seasons. No ties. No responsibilities. There was a tender twist in her smile as she leaned back in her chair. There was a familiar catch in her throat; it deepened, reached her breast, so that she felt the need of taking a long breath.

"Hello, Boyd."

"Katy."

He was smiling, he wasn't serious, but the way he said her name, the tone of his voice, was like a caress. It had a way of cornering her, scaring her, making her want to run. Sometimes it angered her, made her feel a fool. Sometimes, afterward, in the dark in her room, she wept.

"Kate," he said, and now his voice changed—louder, matter-of-fact. "Kate, you look swell. No kidding, you're a sight for sore eyes. How's things? How's your pa?"

"Fine. Pa's fine. Gosh, Boyd, honest. I've never seen you come back so brown. You look wonderful. Have you seen Sam and Grace yet?" (Continued on Page 217)

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

Tweed tunic with turtle-neck dickey, sweater, or scarf. 7128.

Summer version in linen with ruffled short sleeve. Crisp white dickey and short gloves.

Gay red print smock, fullness falling from yoke. Allow extra ¼ yard for border. Vogue Design No. 7063. 12 to 20.

Gray-and-white checked worsted jumper with crisp white linen detachable dickey. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 7128. 12 to 20. Slim gray flannel skirt with cutout. No. 7187, 35 to 43 hip.

MODEL PLANS

...for a maternity wardrobe

Friends invariably tell you how pretty your face looks and how well the few extra pounds become you ... when you are pregnant. And it is generally true. However, how your figure looks is quite another problem. Mary Jane Russell, a professional model, posed for these pictures when she was between seven and eight months pregnant. The secret of her slim-skirted look is the design featuring a U-shaped panel in the front of her skirts. This allows the skirt to fit smoothly over the hips and to hang straight and slim below the lower edge of the jacket. (Continued on Page 178) • By NORA O'LEARY

Black bengaline or rep jacket. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 5597; Small. Medium. Large. Black velveteen skirt. No. 7187. Fur muff and neckpiece. gay red velveteen hat.

HAT BY ELIZABETH MARKS. MINK MUFF AND SCARF BY HAROLD RUBIN.

© VOGUE

An authentic Chinese jacket makes a glamorous evening jacket with long cutout skirt. Vogue's adaptation of jacket. No. 7155; Small. Medium.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GENEVIEVE NAYLOR

At home" in a comfortable cotton-damask ballet-length obe. "Easy-to-Make" Design No. 6851: Small. Medium. Large.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order," from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ontario. (Connecticut residents please add sales tax.)

Back: and other views on Page 234

THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE

By HARLAN MILLER

I like lean meat; at adipose cuts I take umbrage. After our last roast beef turned out to be half fat, I phoned our jolly grocer and threatened to go on a diet of frankfurters and headcheese. He laughed and laughed, on the erroneous theory that I was spoofing.

The man next door complains, in a gruff moment, that he spends too much time arguing with his young about their tireless nocturnal pursuit of pleasure. "With a life expectancy of maybe twenty years," he demands, "why should I knock myself out to finance and regulate the diversions of my kids with a life expectancy of fifty or sixty years?" He talks like a bachelor.

"Whoever gets up at night to close the windows during a rainstorm," observes Peter Comfort, walking to the bus line rather than try to find a parking space downtown, "gets the upper hand in a household, through sheer moral grandeur. In my family it's my wife."

Cheerful thought for a man with daughters: you can often finagle more chores and errands out of a suitor or a defensive son-in-law than you can from your own son.

After he'd achieved a $200 monthly grocery bill and four underground garbage cans, the most solvent man in our block installed a garbage grinder in his sink. "Four garbage cans," he explains, "are more ostentatious than a three-car garage."

My grandmother always said the greatest new household boon in her time wasn't electricity or automatic washing machines or gas stoves—to her it was linoleum. Her granddaughter-in-law thinks it's fried chicken or chop suey delivered hot at seven o'clock for twelve guests—and no servant strain or dishwashing.

The vainest man at our country club is chagrined to discover that his bald temple, which looks so tiny in the mirror, looms up as big as a baseball diamond when he gets his picture in the paper. "For new hair," he says wryly, "I'd pay $1000 a square inch."

We've reached in our family what the diplomats call a standstill agreement: no more purchases of anything but food for ninety days, except by unanimous consent. So help me, this time I vote "No!" on every emergency wheedle.

Our town's husbands seem on the verge of a small victory: they'll yield to Emily Post's ruling that, though a man can't invite his favorite ladies to dinner at the house, his wife may invite her favorite men—provided they may occasionally take a woman to lunch, overtly. Within reasonable limits, of course; pending a revision by Mrs. Post.

Though Junior shaves only three times a week and I often twice a day, he uses more of my shaving lotion in a week than I use in a month. Apparently he uses it in lieu of water.

This summer we seem to have bought a Trojan army of ragweed along with our expensive grass seed. Or could this be the Russian revenge for the potato bugs our planes have been dropping on the Ukraine?

One day soon I'll assemble the priceless, fabulous accumulation of gadgets in the house (mine) and all the useless bric-a-brac (hers) and stage an exhibition—and maybe even an auction sale. (If I could resist gadgets, we'd have saved enough to finance a trip to Europe.)

If I don't praise my consort's new hats or frocks as if they were Picasso masterpieces, she pouts that I don't like her clothes; she manages to convey the impression to our friends that I have a heart of flint. . . . All she really wants in her feminine way is my praise for the clothes which I don't admire.

"My husband usually plays bridge like a guerrilla," confides Betty Comfort, root-feeding a puny evergreen, "except when we play with Junior and our coed daughter. To them he doesn't dare reveal his bridge in its true colors."

I detect pressure from school to let our youngest take lessons on a plastic flute. "It might lead to the clarinet," says his teacher's note. That's what I'm afraid of. (In a family with five or six kids and that many flutes, it could be catastrophic.)

When you smell TNT on the breeze from the Korea maneuvers or another pre-Armageddon tryout, do you let your seventeen-year-old boy stay out later at night, or do you keep the pressure on for earlier hours? You want him to have all the fun there is. But you also want to see as much of him as you can—while you can.

One of our town's schoolmasters complains that to get ahead he must join Rotary and play bridge with the right people. Is that bad? Anyhow, the right people to play bridge with are the ones who don't hold good cards.

Why do we feel so flattered when daughter admires one of her mother's frocks or Junior falls for one of dad's jackets so enthusiastically that he confiscates it, more or less permanently? (I wish I could wear his jackets as well as he wears mine!)

Ours is a quiet neighborhood; we can overhear a lovers' quarrel on a doorstep several houses away. But we can't hear 'em when they make up.

In a way, this has been the summer of my dreams, playing tennis with our sons, shooting baskets and tossing a baseball. . . . All I had to do was bribe 'em, browbeat 'em and lock all the exits.

We have partially recovered from what we laughingly called our vacation—a summer-long series of skirmishes with our young and their irrepressible chums. (The climax came when we kidnaped 'em bodily for a vacation trip.) But after they've been back in school a few days we'll recuperate.

When your youngest happily chooses to spend a summer with the family instead of going to a boys' camp this year . . . and your daughter beams proudly while her beau washes your car or fixes a leaky faucet . . . or Junior concedes spontaneously that the chores and disciplines you've imposed on him with hesitancy and misgivings are perfectly reasonable . . . and your Princess of Sheer Delight tolerantly forgives your innocent sins and shortcomings as mere boyish peccadilloes . . . and the family table talk becomes gayer, franker and more absorbing at every meal . . . then you realize that bachelors lead lives of quiet desperation.

That's all we need to know about you!

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

Ask your dinner partner these eight questions the next time you go to a party. You'll have everybody in the room hanging on the answers and wanting to give you theirs. The answers in themselves are so much fun that you may never get down to the serious business of attempting to reveal their significance, but if you do, here are some tips for the guidance of the amateur psychologist. The implications are endless, so have yourself a time! Answer the questions yourself first; then read what your answers tell about you.

If you could choose the age you would like to be for the rest of your life — What would it be?

The most significant question is the question about the age you would choose to be permanently. The age you choose generally represents the period in your life when you either (1) felt at the height of your powers or (2) were happiest. Those who wish to return to infancy or early childhood suggest a lack of emotional maturity: they long to return to a period when they did not have to shoulder responsibility. Those who wish to remain at the age they are, are usually well-adjusted, successful people. Those who wish to be older are always young—maybe in their teens or early twenties. After men get well along, they generally choose an age ten years or more younger. It's pretty normal for a woman to want to stay thirty the rest of her life!

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

If you lost everything you own — What would you do?

Those who would start right out to make a new career are apt to be the people whose own efforts were responsible for their success the first time. If you would settle for a small, routine job, you're pretty sensible but don't have much spirit. If you would jump out the window, you're confessing to very few inner resources: without possession of material things, your life would be nothing.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

If you could choose one place to live the rest of your life - Where would it be?

If your answer to this question is the place in which you have been living, your life has been satisfactory and full of interest. If you choose some remote place, you are somewhat of a dreamer, yearning for things which are never quite within your grasp: what is the present never comes up to your expectations. If you don't identify with any place, you tend to be an unstable character having no strong attachment or loyalties.

What is your greatest frustration?

If not being able to excel in some form of sport such as tennis, golf, and so on, is frustrating, you have a high degree of competitiveness in your make-up. If you feel that meeting social obligations frustrates you, you are essentially shy. If failing to achieve your goals in life oppresses you, you have a tendency to an inferiority complex: you have to keep proving to yourself that you really are good.

ACME PHOTO

If you were caught in a fire and could grab one object - What would it be?

(All family and pets are safe.) If the object was a pair of pants or an article of clothing to cover your dishabille, you are of a rather cautious and conservative disposition. If the first thing you think of is some sentimental keepsake, you are essentially a romantic. If you turn to a valuable possession, you are pretty materialistic; and if you grab money, license, and so on, you are practical.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

If you had just 24 hours to live — How would you spend them?

If you would choose to spend them with your loved ones, you are of a deeply emotional nature. If you choose to spend them alone, you are of a moody, reflective, discontented nature. If you would choose to have one final fling, you are a fatalist: you would take whatever fate dishes out to you with equanimity. If you would keep the knowledge to yourself and do what you ordinarily would do, you are a strong character.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

What is the most embarrassing thing that has ever happened to you?

Almost everybody is embarrassed if caught in some ridiculous situation. If your greatest embarrassment is that conventional, you're normal. If you're embarrassed because you can't live up to expensive standards in home, entertaining, clothes, you are a bit of a phony. If you are embarrassed at meeting new people, you're almost normal—shyness is not an unattractive quality if not too acute.

menu

Tomato Juice

Baked Beans—Brown Bread

Glazed Canadian Bacon

Pickled Prunes

Apple Horse-Radish

Coleslaw with Dill Dressing

Apricot Cake

Coffee

PHOTO BY STUART-FOWLER

servant strain or dishwashing.

The vainest man at our count chagrined to discover that his ba which looks so tiny in the mirror, l big as a baseball diamond when picture in the paper. "For new hai wryly, "I'd pay $1000 a square i

We've reached in our family w call a standstill agreement: no anything but food for ninety unanimous consent. So help me
"No!" on every emergency whee

Our town's husbands seem o small victory: they'll yield to E that, though a man can't invite to dinner at the house, his wif favorite men—provided they take a woman to lunch, overtly able limits, of course; pending Mrs. Post.

by Ann Batchelder

IF this doesn't remind you of Boston, from Bunker Hill to Beacon Hill, why then I'm Abigail Adams. It's as New England as Cape Cod and the Old North Church, as Plymouth Rock and the lobster pots of Maine. And as familiar to every New Englander as the Green Mountains of Vermont and the towering peaks that hold New Hampshire in their possessive and jealous embrace.

It's a tradition. As faithfully observed as Fourth of July. It's baked beans for supper—every Saturday night. I don't know how it started or why, but I feel sure that Paul Revere and the Adamses and the "embattled farmers" all shared the same rite, came the end of the week. For this was—and is—New England, where customs are customs to be minded, and where traditions are not ephemeral but as lasting as a treasured heirloom.

Ways change—beans do not. Now you may run to the grocer and buy for your dinner very elegant baked beans. Some are done in a spiced tomato sauce, some are as plain as a Pilgrim mother's bonnet. But good. Or, being ambitious and wanting to make the most of that comfortable old brown bean pot your grandmother gave you, or the shiny new glass one that some wedding guest bestowed on you a spell ago, you resolve to bake your own. Resolve, too, to go all the way and get out those baking-powder cans you so frugally saved, and in them steam up your own style of good brown bread. For baked beans would be lacking in something very important if they weren't aided and abetted by another strictly New England product—transplanted now from coast to coast—brown bread. So to aid and abet you in your resolution to produce the glorified bean and the sweet steamy richness that corn meal, when done right by, can bring out, I give you the ways and means of getting things this way.

(Continued on Page 136)

menu

Tomato Juice

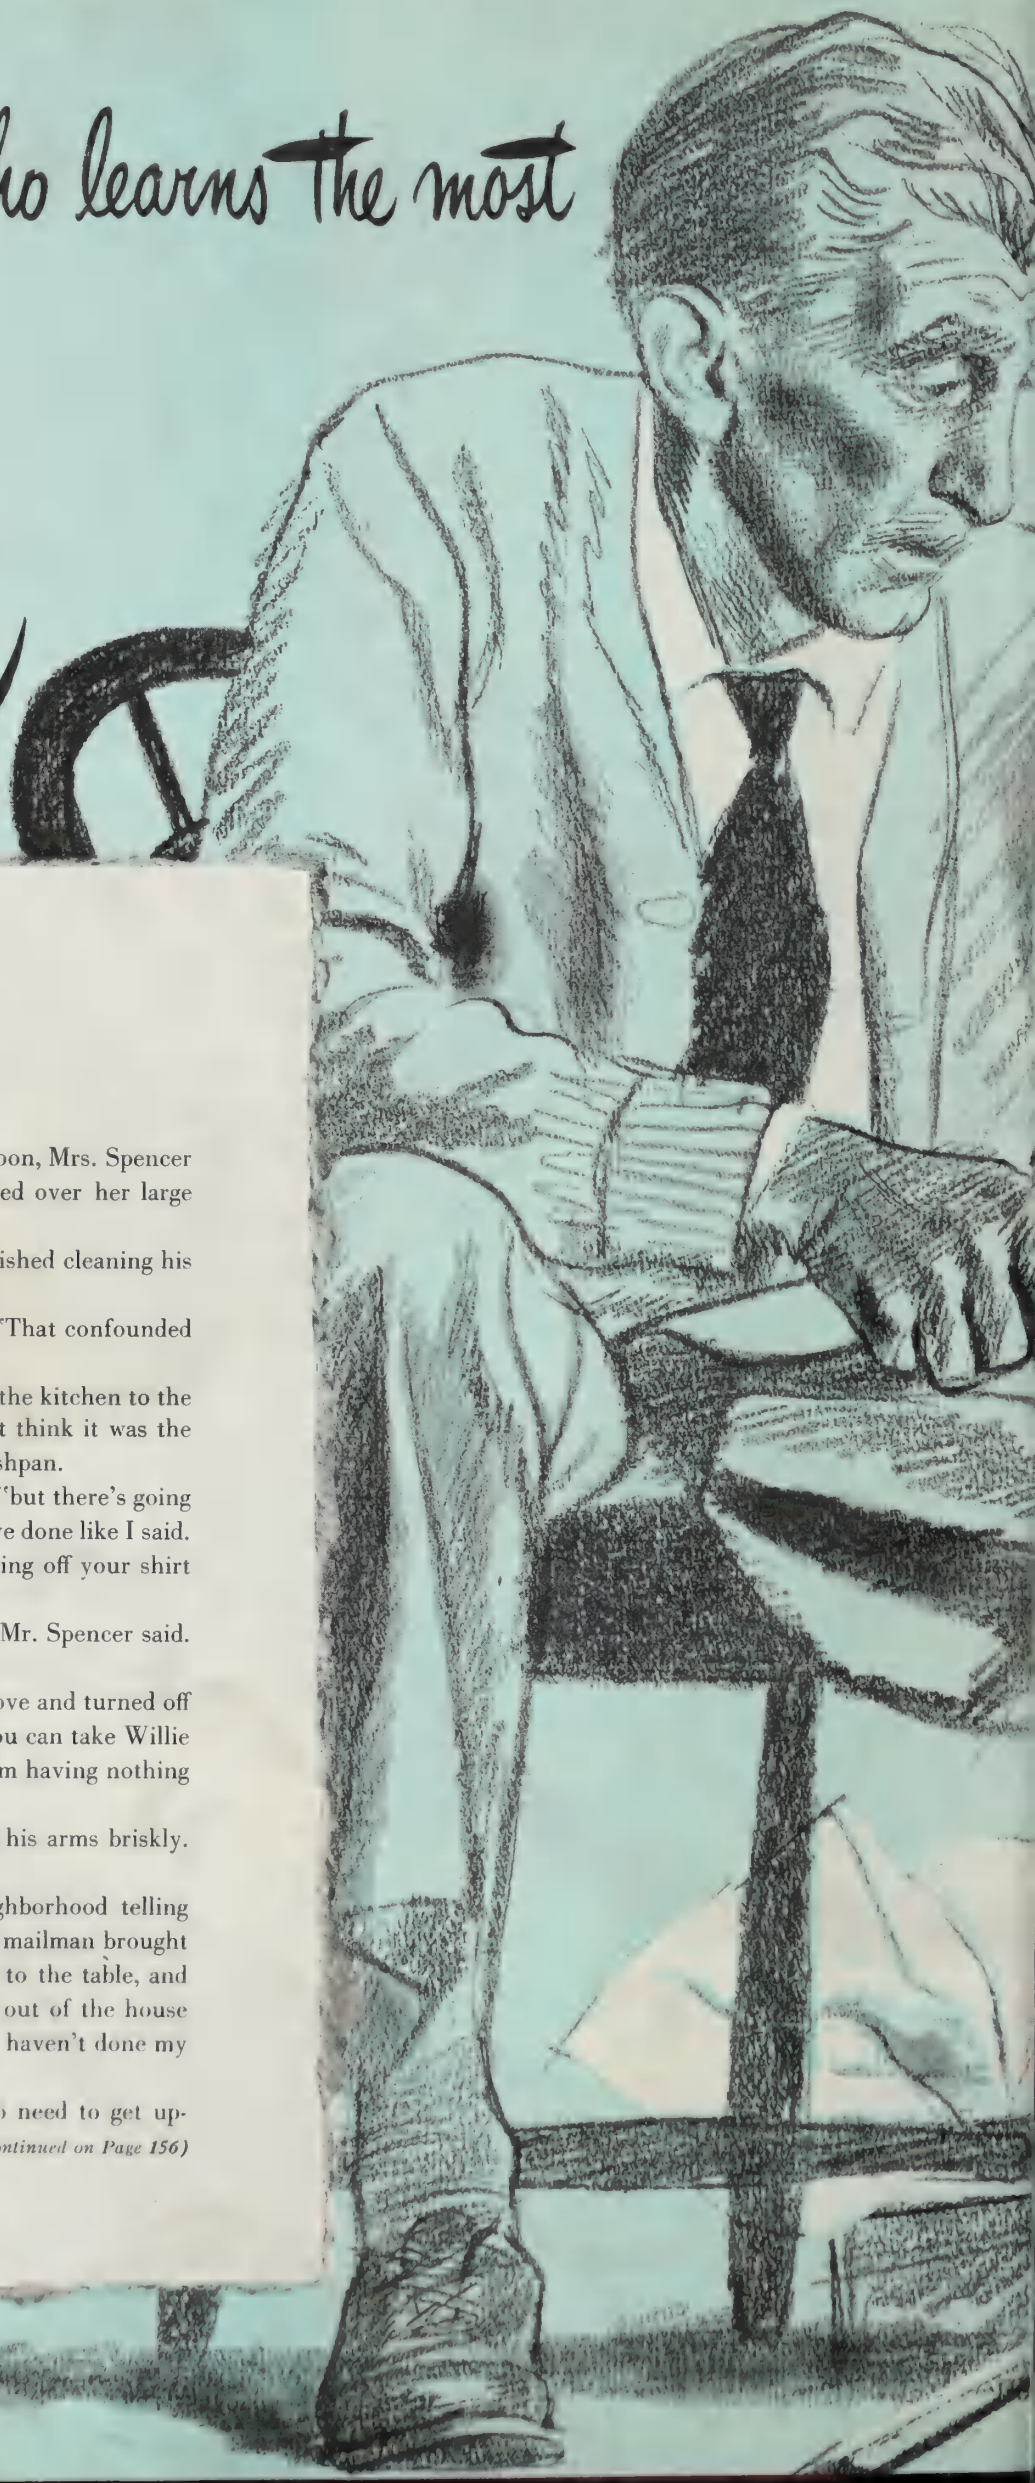
Baked Beans—Brown Bread

Glazed Canadian Bacon

Pickled Prunes

Apple Horse-Radish

Coleslaw with Dill Dressing



Apricot Cake

Coffee

PHOTO BY STUART FOWLER

The Violin

Who learns the most

By John Barrett

WHEN her husband came home from work on Friday noon, Mrs. Spencer was waiting at the back door. Her fat arms were folded over her large bosom. "Well," she said grimly, "it's come."

Mr. Spencer glanced up at his wife. Then he carefully finished cleaning his shoes on the iron scraper. "What's come?"

"You know very well what I mean," Mrs. Spencer said. "That confounded violin. It's at the post office."

Mr. Spencer grunted. He walked past his wife, and across the kitchen to the sink. "From the look on your face," he said, "a body might think it was the Day of Judgment." He began running hot water into the dishpan.

"It's all right talking," his wife said, following him over, "but there's going to be a crying fit when Willie sees that violin. You should have done like I said. You should ——" She straightened up. "What are you taking off your shirt for? Aren't you going back to work?"

"They laid off all the plasterers on account of the rain," Mr. Spencer said. He tossed his shirt over a chair back.

"That's fine," Mrs. Spencer said. She went over to the stove and turned off the burner under a pan of soup. "That's just dandy. Then you can take Willie down to the post office yourself right after lunch, because I'm having nothing more to do with it."

"I'll take him down," Mr. Spencer said. He lathered up his arms briskly. "By the way, where is he?"

"Goodness knows. He's been running all over the neighborhood telling everybody about the violin he's going to get ever since the mailman brought the card at ten o'clock." She carried the pan of soup over to the table, and poured it into three bowls. "And he's been running in and out of the house like a wild man. I haven't been able to get my floor washed; I haven't done my shopping; I haven't been able to do a blessed thing."

"Now, Jennie," Mr. Spencer said soothingly, "there's no need to get upset. He's sold his salve, and now he gets

(Continued on Page 156)

ILLUSTRATED BY Thomas Tarbin

when you have to teach a boy a lesson?

"In the picture it was a different color," he said in a subdued voice. "It was kind of red. This one's just brown."

Fire a Day

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 There's a question I would like to ask. Why is it that when a guest comes in a room he or she invariably chooses the only uncomfortable chair in the house, and can't be budged out of it and fidgets all evening, and so do you? Anybody know?

2 One of the best berries, for my money, is the old-fashioned blueberry. From muffins and griddlers to dumplings and puddings, it's as versatile as they come and as good frozen as fresh—or almost. Here's a recipe you may not know.

3 This one is a blueberry trifle. That's the name for it, and don't get it mixed up with pie or something. To make it, line a deep dish with thin slices of white cake. Then cover the cake with a thick layer of blueberries, liberally sprinkled with fine macaroon crumbs. Keep this up till the dish is full, cover with the macaroon crumbs. Now pour over it a cold vanilla-flavored soft custard. Chill it very chilly in the refrigerator. It's delicious.

4 There are so many garnishes that, laid end to end—leaving out whipped cream, which has no end—they'd reach from here to the North Pole, and I can prove it. Here's one for ham that's more than a garnish. Take thick slices of apples cored but not peeled. Dip each one in fritter batter made Italian style. Fry in deep fat until brown. Drain. Sprinkle heavily with brown sugar—yes, brown—and a dusting of cinnamon. It's the brown sugar does it.

5 A salad or two will come handily to the harassed last-minute cook. Take molded mounds of salmon steak seasoned with lemon juice and arrange each one in an inside lettuce cup. Mask with Russian dressing, and garnish (that word again) with sliced ripe and green stuffed olives.

6 Chapter I: I'll tell you something that will make you famous, or nearly so. Drain a can of big imported sardines, without skin or bones. That's the first step. Set them aside for further consideration. Have ready some hard-boiled eggs. And, when the time is ripe, there must be plenty of buttered toast—hot.

7 Chapter II: Now, in the chafing dish, if you have such, or the double boiler if not, make a rich cream sauce, not heavier than Jersey cream taken from a milk pan. To this add plenty of mild American cheese cut fine, and cook until the sauce is all smooth and yellow. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Slice your eggs and add to the sauce. Be sure the mixture is very hot. Arrange the sardines on the toast and pour the hot sauce over them. This is an unforgettable dish and perfect for Sunday—or any night—supper or luncheon.

8 May as well spill the news now, for it's bound to get out soon. It's an avocado mayonnaise, elegant on salads, fruit salads, with fish or stuffed tomatoes. Take 1 cup avocado pulp put through a sieve. Now add to 2 tablespoons cream 1 tablespoon lemon juice and beat it well. Season with salt, pepper and paprika to taste and add to the avocado. Beat in 1 teaspoon prepared mustard. Beat some more and chill before you use it.

9 Part 1: Get yourself some of those sweet Georgia peaches. For a dozen or more allow 2 cups sugar and 1 teaspoon cinnamon. Pare peaches, cut in halves, remove pits. Cook them in a little water, according to the juice. When half done, add the sugar and cinnamon. Now simmer them until done. Don't scorch. Keep an eye on them.

10 Part 2: These peaches should be served in this way: Make a beautiful creamy soft custard flavored with 2 teaspoons almond extract. Put the peaches in a deep glass baking dish and pour the custard over them. Make a meringue. Heap it over the fruit and brown it in a quick oven. Chill and serve with almond macaroons. Sound good? Is good.

11 If cauliflower is like last year's Easter hat to you, and you're tired of seeing it around, cheer up. Try this on the old perennial and I think you will change your mind.

FRED BOND

CHURCH TIME

On Woodstock Green you hear the bells
Ring loud on Sunday morning,
And each one separate, desperate, tells
The old-time heavenly warning—
On Woodstock Green it's best to be
A little toward the heavenly!

12 Put a fine white cauliflower, an onion, salt and a couple of small sweet peppers in a kettle of cold water and parboil it. Drain it well. Separate the flowerets and put half of them in a deep glass casserole. Add little pieces of butter or margarine, sprinkle with Gruyère cheese cut fine or grated, then squeeze in a little lemon juice. Now repeat this with the rest of the flowerets, only now add thin slices of lemon. Cover well with fine cracker crumbs, more small pieces of butter or margarine and bake until brown and done in 375° F. oven.

13 Pretty and cool and different from other salads is a mixture of chopped walnuts and crisp inside celery stalks mixed with mayonnaise tinted green and used to fill the centers of small ring molds of tomato aspic. Arrange them in lettuce cups, trim with cress and pass the mayonnaise. Cream-cheese balls rolled in very fine chopped walnuts go along, and salted, toasted crackers.

14 Answer to query: If you are worried over what is left over from meals, there are two ways to avoid any waste. One is to eat out, the other is to start a soup kettle. That will take care of everything from chop bones to piecrust. Don't let life get you down.

15 Asked not long ago to turn out a bill of fare for a family Sunday dinner, I thought back and came up with this: iced melon, a fine fricassee of chicken with hot biscuits, broiled tomatoes, corn on the cob, strawberry mousse and white cake with chocolate frosting. And I could eat this dinner more days than Sunday, if I had the chance.

16 Piecrust mix is one of the handiest things to have in the house. You can make up a receipt and as you roll it out, spread or dot with butter, fold and roll, as for puff paste, about three times, and you're ready to polish this off into cheese-sandwich sticks. (By the way, wrap up your dough in a ball and package it in wax paper and chill it at least two hours before you use it.) To continue ——

17 Cut off a piece of the dough and roll it out to about ¼ inch thick. Spread one half with grated sharp cheese—and season the cheese quite well with white pepper or paprika. Roll out the other half of the dough and cover the cheese. Press down carefully. Cut out in small sticks about two inches long and bake on a cooky sheet in a quick oven. It's the pepper that pulls the trick—but don't overdo it.

18 Speaking of hors d'oeuvres—as we weren't—this one was among those present at a party where I was a guest. Small fingers of sautéed bread were abundantly spread with liver pâté, and all over the top were crushed French-fried onions. A little red star of pimiento nested in the center. Oh, my!

19 A salad meal that everyone will vote for is this: Select good-sized green peppers, as nearly alike as you can find. Cut in half and then cut a thin slice from the bottoms so they'll stand upright on the plates. Take out all the membrane and every single seed. Ever bite into a green-pepper seed? Don't.

20 Second verse: Now put them in the coldest place in your refrigerator and let them be until they're almost frozen solid. Like porcelain they will be. Fill the peppers with lobster, shrimp and crab meat dressed lavishly with mayonnaise. On top of each have a bright red lobster claw. This is one of the most attractive pieces of business you can imagine—and easy to do.

21 Mint's in the garden—or at the grocer's—so what about doing some crystallized mint leaves? Select large leaves. Dip each leaf in egg white beaten to a froth, then in sugar. Spread out on wax paper in a warm, dry place and allow to crystallize as quickly as possible. Keep in a tightly covered tin box between layers of wax paper.

22 Almond-crumb sundae is a new one. Combine 1 cup cake crumbs with ¼ cup chopped almonds. Spread on a cooky sheet and toast for ten minutes in a moderate—350° F.—oven. Use as a topping for vanilla ice cream.

23 Small tomatoes, hollowed out, filled with creamed spinach, covered with cut-up bacon, then with fine buttered crumbs, and baked, will make spinach more popular.

24 Nothing is smarter than the cheese tray with its assortment of beautiful cheese. Remember to set out the cheese scoop and shaver. And if you arrange to have each cheese rest on a perfect grape leaf, you will get that water-lily brooch in the jeweler's window comes Easter.

25 It's still summer. The last rose hasn't bloomed alone or otherwise yet, and September is a wonderful month for out-of-doors entertaining.

26 So for a summer buffet dessert, instead of ice cream or to complement ice cream, have a big bowl, sitting in another bowl of crushed ice, filled with Bing cherries, sliced strawberries and pineapple fingers—sugared and served with a sauce of flavored whipped cream or smooth sour cream.

27 One word, and I'll be done about cheese for now. But I want you to bear in mind that a perfect cheese sauce has the texture of cream, the color of cowslips and the flavor of —cheese. That's all.

28 For a dessert in a matter of minutes, melt some chocolate-peppermint wafers (the kind that come in long cellophane rolls), and pour over slices of pound or other plain cake. Top with chopped nuts.

29 One last thought for the hors d'oeuvres tray: wrap tiny gherkins in very thin slivers of rare cold roast beef. Fasten with toothpicks.

30 If I haven't gone all out on a little of everything this time, I'll put on my slippers and sit by the fire and think up some fine-and-dandy things for the next time.

School Days are Soup Days

by Anne Marshall

MARSHALL
Home Economics
H Soup Company

Nutrition experts say the schoolday lunch is a vitally important meal for the growing child—to replenish energy. Whether eaten at home or carried to school, this lunch should include a hot dish. They say it helps the stomach to receive and to digest the meal. Also, a hot dish seems to make sandwiches, fruit and salad taste better.

Dieticians agree that an ideal hot dish is well-made soup. Soup tempts the child . . . is easily ed . . . substantial, yet never heavy. Thus, young bodies ell nourished—young minds stay keen for study or play.

SCHOOLDAY LUNCH EATEN AT HOME

(menu shown above)

Vegetable Soup
Pear and Cream Cheese Salad
Chocolate Pudding Milk

If your youngster comes home at noon, you might sit him down pretty often to a lunch like this. With breakfast several hours behind him, the child's energy needs replenishing at noon. A lunch including this almost-a-meal-in-itself vegetable soup will set him right for an afternoon of school or romping.

"In bed with a cold"—'phones Mother to teacher. And, at noon, she appears at her hopeful's bedside bearing this appetizing and nourishing tray—chicken noodle soup, poached egg on toast, cherry gelatin, and milk.

SCHOOLDAY LUNCH CARRIED TO SCHOOL

(menu shown at right)

Tomato Soup
(in vacuum bottle)
Peanut Butter and Jelly Sandwich
Marble Cake Whole Orange

If you have the daily problem of packing a lunch, then here's a sensible way to provide the needed hot dish for your junior or junior miss—tomato soup in a vacuum bottle. Prepare the soup as cream of tomato, by adding milk instead of water. That way, it's extra-nourishing, and the child also gets his quota of milk. Most children simply dote on this soup.

Dental Research Indicates You Can Help

Prevent Tooth Decay With COLGATE Ammoniated Tooth Powder

DENTISTS THEMSELVES USE and recommend ammoniated dentifrices to aid in controlling tooth decay, especially for growing children. For cavities already formed, and to safeguard mouth health, visit your dentist regularly.

Colgate's Great Dentifrice Gets Teeth Naturally, Sparkling Clean—And Even Children Love Its Minty Flavor!

You can actually see and feel the difference when you use Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder! Its foamy cleaning action removes clinging film so well, teeth appear cleaner immediately. And its delightful flavor refreshes your mouth and breath. Moreover, laboratory tests indicate that using it regularly, as directed, may help you avoid pain, worry and expense of needless tooth decay.

Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder, a product of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet research laboratories, is based on a formula developed by University of Illinois scientists. Contains the wonder-ingredients: Dibasic Ammonium Phosphate and Carbamide. Large-scale clinical tests are now being conducted to confirm its full benefits in preventing tooth decay. Buy it today, for your whole family!

3 Definite Benefits
TO HELP PREVENT TOOTH DECAY

1. Using Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder after meals and before retiring helps neutralize destructive mouth acids considered by many dental authorities a leading cause of tooth decay.
2. It inhibits growth of acid-producing bacteria, Lactobacillus Acidophilus.
3. It helps dissolve and remove from teeth gluey film in which acid-producing bacteria thrive.

GUARANTEED BY COLGATE: Try Colgate Ammoniated Tooth Powder. If you don't agree it's the finest ammoniated dentifrice you ever used, we guarantee to refund your purchase price in full, plus postage. Just return the unused portion to Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., Jersey City 2, N. J.

4oz. 43¢
2oz. 25¢

COLGATE
Ammoniated Tooth Powder
With a Flavor the Whole Family Will Enjoy

BELLES ON THEIR TOES

(Continued from Page 40)

"If you think there's anything to be ashamed of in a large family," Anne told him hotly, "you're a bigger wet smack than I think you are."

"And that," called Ernestine, who was sitting a few feet away, "would set a world's record."

"It wasn't your family," Morton insisted, dropping his voice so that only Anne could hear. "It was that loud-mouthed little fugitive from the old folks' home, with the cat on his shoulder."

"You're talking about the man I love," Anne warned, but the shortage of boys was acute, and she seemed to be weakening. "We're all crazy about Tom, and he's nothing to be ashamed of."

"I hadn't heard about your father, and I never had met him. And I saw that man. And I thought . . . and, well, and mother thought ——"

"I don't believe you'd better tell me what you thought or your mother thought," Anne said. "I don't believe I'd consider it flattering, and I have a strong feeling that Tom wouldn't either."

"Let's forget it." Morton smiled. "Relax and have a smoke. And let's be friends, eh?"

He reached for a package of cigarettes, while a bevy of females, who hadn't missed a thing, clutched for their matches. Anne looked quickly around the tops of the sand dunes, to make sure none of her brothers were spying.

"Okay, Buddy," she grinned. "Light it for me, will you?"

He put two cigarettes in his mouth, chose among five blazing matches that were being poked into his face, lighted both smokes, and handed one to Anne. She took two long puffs and inhaled deeply.

"That's the first cigarette I've had since I left Northampton," she said contentedly. "It tastes fine." She took another drag and inhaled again.

Ernestine, whose mouth had dropped open, watched admiringly and enviously as Anne puffed, expertly knocked off the ashes with her little finger, and finally flicked the butt over a dune.

"I DIDN'T know you did that," Ernestine whispered, sidling over to Anne. "You go at it like you've had plenty of experience."

"What are you talking about?" Anne asked innocently. "Go at what?"

"You know very well what I mean. Puffing away at that cigarette like a dope fiend. I didn't know you dissipated."

"There's lots of things you don't know about me. Besides, everybody smokes in college."

"Can I have one?"

"You're not in college."

"Can I just try one?" Ernestine whisp

"I should say not. It's going to be enough when I tell Mother I smoke, wit having to confess anything about ru your morals."

"Anybody," Ern asked loudly, "g ciggie?"

"Let her have one," said Morton, had heard most of the whispering. "I kid." He tossed her his package, and a of unused matches.

"I seem to have left mine at ho Ernestine said.

SHE took out a cigarette and tapped end of it on the thumbnail of her left h as she had seen Morton do. Then she ta the other end. She put the cigarette a of the way into the center of her mouth lighted it.

"Put that out," Anne said in her "You're making a spectacle of you You're supposed to smoke those things eat them." No one except Anne was pa any attention.

Ernestine puffed, without inhaling, took the cigarette from her mouth. " certainly," she said loudly, spitting out f of tobacco that were clinging to her lips tongue, "soothes my jangled nerves. N ing's worse than when you run ou ciggies."

"Ciggies," Anne whispered. "My c

"What makes it do like that?" Erne asked her, contemplating the brownish raveled end that had been in her m "It's all coming apart."

"You're supposed to hold it in your not your tonsils," Anne said. "If y going to smoke, at least wait until I show how, and stop humiliating me in public

Ernestine thought there was merit to suggestion. She placed the moist fag tween her thumb and middle finger timistically took sight on the top o tallest dune, and flicked. The ciga shredded open and landed six inches her hand, where she buried it quickly i sand.

Later that morning, on the way home the beach, Anne told Ern she had st smoking about six months before, and intended to break the news to Dad she got home for summer vacation. Dad died, she hadn't wanted to ad Mother's immediate worries, so she d say anything about it.

"Everybody smokes all the time at lege," she said. "I didn't my freshman but it's hard to keep refusing them, l wet blanket."

"Did you get the habit?" Ern want know.

(Continued on Page 78)

"I can't tell if it's done."

The Marchioness of Milford Haven

BEAUTIFUL AMERICAN BRIDE OF THE GREAT-GREAT-GRANDSON OF QUEEN VICTORIA

The Marchioness of Milford Haven—Her dark hair and eyes emphasize her cool, white skin. "I am especially fond of Pond's Cold Cream," she says. "It removes every trace of dirt, leaves my skin refreshed and soft."

Lady Milford Haven's lovely face singles her out wherever you see her. It is a charming recorder of her fascinating self—perfectly in tune with her inner composure, her exquisite taste, her intense glamour.

Every woman's face should give a lovely preview of herself to others. For your face is the you that others see first, and remember best. Make sure, then, the messages it sends of you are stirring, happy, charming—a You that everyone loves to see!

That amazing woman—your inner self can help you discover a delightful New You ing is more poisonous to charm than the ve picture so many women have of themselves. —you can be lovelier. Within you a wonder- wer can help you discover a new you. It grows

It's become a byword—
's Engaged! She's Lovely! She uses Pond's!"

from the interaction of your Outer Self and Inner Self—the way you look and the way you feel.

This power has a way of lighting you with confidence, when you feel you are lovely to see. But, it can gray you into "miss nobody" when you don't look charming and right. It is an emphatic reason never to forget the daily rites that add so to your outer loveliness—your inner happiness.

"Outside-Inside" Face Treatment

To make the most of your face you have to do something about it! You'll find this treatment with Pond's Cold Cream acts like a touch of magic. It creams away that tired look—leaves skin soft, fresh! Always at bedtime (for day cleansings, too) give your face this care with Pond's—this is the way:

Hot Stimulation—a quick splash of hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl light, fluffy Pond's Cold Cream all over your face to soften, sweep dirt and make-up from pore openings. Tissue off.

Cream Rinse—do another soft Pond's creaming to rinse off last traces of dirt, leave skin immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—a tonic cold-water splash.

This Pond's treatment acts on both sides of your skin. From the Outside—Pond's Cold Cream softens, sweeps away dirt as you massage. From the Inside—every step of this treatment stimulates circulation.

Lady Milford Haven says: "This Pond's beauty routine gives lovely results." You will love it, too. So—don't wait! Start this special Pond's care at once. Get a big jar of Pond's Cold Cream—today!

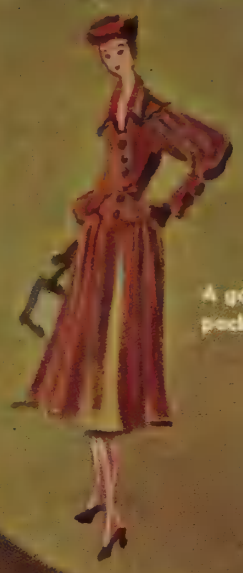
REMEMBER—It is not vanity to develop the beauty of your face. When you look lovel / it sets free a happy belief in yourself. This sings through your face—brings others closer to the real Inner You.

Late-day sweater in rayon bouclé

You're so right

...versatile

Wonderful, washable rose-sprigged rayon challis



Fall's first dress is rayon, of course . . .
fluid, drapable, color-bright viscose rayon in a myriad assortment of textures and weaves Right now, see your favorite store's fall showing of exciting fashions born of fine rayons
. . . in many fall-important fabrics—rayon crepes, rayon velvets, rayon sheers, rayon suiting rayon gabardines, rayon flannels, and so many others that are beautiful . . . on y

GREEN...one of fall's all-important colors

Crisp dotted rayon net to dance in

Drapable rayon crepe for easy-long flattery right...

in RAYON viscose rayon

A good traveler in packable rayon crepe

Draperies, curtains and upholstery . . . just three of many important uses of rayon to beautify your home

Go rolling in herald-bound rayon velvet, so important this fall

The chair covering . . . a handsome example of always popular rayon upholstery fabrics

Sheer loveliness . . . a rayon chiffon blouse

...bonsive . . . that's the word for viscose rayon . . .
... that's why talented designers and
...ic-makers choose beautiful rayons
...the clothes you love to wear.
...ting rayon can give you
...t you want . . . long wear,
...y ironing, crease-resistance,
...hability or dry-cleanability,
...fortable absorbency, grateful
...mth, and best of all, perhaps—
...olette of colors beyond compare!

DU PONT

BROWN...so right in flattering viscose rayon

Rain- and wrinkle-shedding sharkskin, and a plaid taffeta umbrella—both acetate rayon

Acetate rayon satin and faille over faille taffeta

you're right, so in RAYON

luxurious acetate

Smooth-fitting, easy-washing acetate rayon satin

When you want to touch a fabric, caress a fabric, drape it gently in graceful folds . . . when it's alluring . . . it's oh-so-often acetate rayon. Fabrics made of rayon keep their freshness, hold their gracious, flattering lines, wash like a 'kerchief, dry fast as fast, and a cool, cool iron is all you need for their good grooming. Look, this fall, for fabrics and fashions in acetate rayon, always fashion's luxury fiber.

Bridal tradition—pearl-embroidered acetate rayon satin

Wedding-party acetate rayon taffeta with winging cuffs

CHARCOAL...dramatic underscore to fashion right...

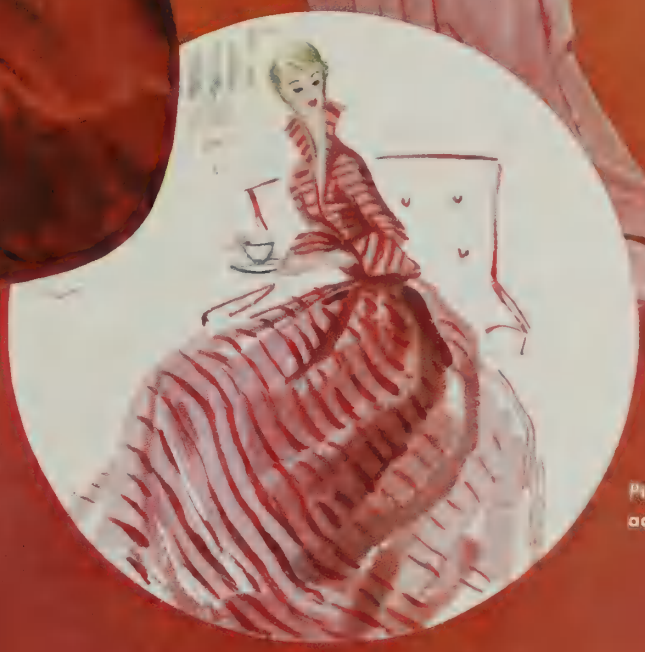
rayon



BREATH-TAKING RED...in acetate rayon

...in luminous acetate rayon slipper satin

At home in one of today's smooth-flowing acetate and nylon sweeps

Picture-making satin-striped acetate rayon taffeta

It's a luxury fiber for luxury fabrics

but oh so-easy to budget . . . glamorous, gala acetate rayon.

The fiber you know in gentle, soft-as-skin lingerie . . .

in dramatic rayon satins, in important rayon taffetas,

in crisp-as-winter rayon ottomans, bengalines and failles.

Add glamour to the life you lead!

Look, when you shop, for acetate rayon—it looks so lovely on you.

The accessory story . . . in soft-spoken acetate rayon velvet

DUPONT

Year-round men's suitings with life-of-the-garment
viscose rayon linings

Blended crepe with surface depth
. . . rayon chenille trimmed

Viscose rayon's responsiveness . . . acetate rayon's luxury are wedded for beauty, miraculous versatility when both fibers are blended or combined
"Cross-dyes" that give fabrics arresting color-contrast, excitement, surface interest that's shimmering bright or mat-dull
. . . fragile beauty, satisfying wear
. . . all this and more too you'll find in fall's newest fashions of fabrics woven from viscose and acetate rayon you're right

in blended fabrics of

VISCOSE and

BLUE. . . a fall favorite in fashioned fibers

Skin-soft viscose and acetate rayon crepe

HEATHER . . highlight of so many fashion fabrics

Leisure-time luxury . . .
pleated crepe and lace

. . . so right

low you've seen two types of rayon—viscose rayon and acetate rayon —on these six pages. And now you've seen just a sample of the ide range of rayon fabrics and fashions at every price in your avorite store's fall showings. When you see "rayon" on a abel, you know the fabric of your fashion is made from one or ash of these "fashioned" fibers—fashioned for just the job hat the fabric has to do—to make the fabric glamorous, o make the fabric strong, to make the fabric take to color, to tubing, to cleaning, to make the fabric dramatize you. You'll find abrics and fashions of both these fashioned fibers, viscose and acetate ayon, in fine fashions by important designers, as well as in ractical, budget-minded clothes. This six-page ollection of high-spot fall fashions is a contribution
o the textile industry—and to your good fashion—by Du Pont, ne of America's leading producers of fine
uality yarns in viscose and acetate rayon.

ACETATE RAYON

Year-round suiting
—fashioned for smartness and service!

Fashioned fibers for fashion fabrics

DU PONT

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING...THROUGH CHEMISTRY

For rayon—for nylon—for fibers to come . . . look to Du Pont

FOR A HEALTHIER, SAFER SCHOOL YEAR

Twenty-four million American children will return to school this fall. Three million other boys and girls will enter for the first time. Good health is important to the school progress of them all. So each child should have a health examination by his doctor and dentist before school opens, if school authorities do not provide such check-ups.

Medical and Dental Examinations. Recent studies show that many children have defects that may interfere with their school progress—such as eye and ear impairments and dental disorders. These and other conditions may exist for some time before being suspected by parents. Your doctor and dentist can usually detect them early and prescribe proper treatment. If defects are discovered, they should be corrected promptly.

Protection Against Disease. Since 1900 there has been a reduction of about 95 percent in mortality from the common childhood diseases, due largely to immunization. Even if your child has already been immunized, your doctor may recommend additional inoculations when the child enters school.

Good Health Habits. According to a recent survey, colds cause about one half of all school absences due to sickness. Doctors believe that children who are well nourished and who get plenty of sleep, rest, relaxation and exercise are less likely to be troubled by colds and their complications. These good health habits may also help make the child more resistant to other illnesses.

Good Safety Habits. Accidents outrank every other cause of death among school-age children. According to the National Safety Council, two out of five accidental deaths in the 5 to 14 year age group were the result of motor vehicle accidents. Many of these fatal accidents occurred on the way to or from school. So, safety authorities recommend that all children learn and observe these precautions:

1. Cross streets only at crossings
2. Obey traffic signals
3. Look both ways before stepping into the street
4. Face traffic when it is necessary to walk on a road

COPYRIGHT 1950—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Avenue,
New York 10, N. Y.

For more information, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 09J, "Common Childhood Diseases."

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

(Continued from Page 70)

"Sometimes," Anne admitted, "I'd get rid of a pack a week."

"It gets a grip on you all right," Ernestine agreed. "I believe I've got the habit from that first one. I'm dying for another right now."

"You might have got the chewing habit, but I don't see how you could have got the smoking habit. You're not supposed to suck them, you know."

"I do now," Ernestine nodded. "Are you going to tell Mother about your smoking?"

"Our smoking, you mean," said Anne. And then imitating Ern: "'I seem to have left my ciggies at home.' Please don't ever call them that again!"

"Well, are you going to tell her?"

"I suppose so," Anne admitted. "Eventually. I don't like to do anything behind her back."

She fished in the pocket of her beach coat, where there were a package of cigarettes Morton had given her and a package of Lifesavers she had bought at the bathhouse.

"Meanwhile," she said, offering the Lifesavers to Ern, "we'd better have a couple of these."

At Mother's suggestion, the two oldest girls had moved their belongings out to one of the lighthouses, so they could sleep later in the mornings. Mother thought they were entitled to some quiet and privacy, after being in charge while she was in Europe.

In the lighthouse, Anne kept her promise that very night and taught Ernestine how to smoke. Ernestine was not a particularly apt pupil, but had a strong thirst for knowledge. The girls used up more than half of the package of cigarettes before Anne deemed her sufficiently checked out to solo.

"And I want you to give me your word," Anne said, "that you won't smoke at least until you're in college."

"You mean not for a whole year?" Ernestine asked. "No, sir. I couldn't make any promise like that."

"Oh, one or two a week when you're out on a date or something might be all right," Anne told her. "But no more than that. And not where Martha and the boys can see you."

"One or two a week would be fine," Ernestine agreed. "Just enough to soothe the craving inside of me."

"We don't want to set a bad example. After all, look what happened when you saw me smoke one."

"I promise," Ernestine said solemnly.

The girls had kissed Mother good night before going to the lighthouse, which was within a few feet of The Shoe. Ordinarily, Mother went to bed at about nine o'clock, read sleepily for half an hour—her only free time of the day—and then fell asleep. She usually got up at five-thirty or six in the morning, to be with the younger children.

That night, for some reason, she had been restless. Reading hadn't made her sleepy. She was lonesome, and wanted company. All the younger children had gone to bed, but she saw from her window that a streak of light was coming from under the door of the lighthouse. Mother put on her bathrobe and slippers, and headed for the lighthouse to chat with the girls.

MOTHER thought that children were entitled to privacy, just as much as adults, and never went busting, or tiptoeing, either, into anyone's room. So while several feet away from the lighthouse, she stopped and called softly.

"Girls. Andie, Ern. Yoohoo. It's Mother. May I come in?"

There was no immediate response from the interior, where the girls were ducking out their cigarettes, hiding the ash tray under Anne's bed, filling their mouths with Lifesavers, and waving towels to try to get some of the smoke out the window.

"It's Mother," she called again. "May I come in?"

"Come on in, Mother," Anne called heartily, going to the door. "I thought I heard someone calling before, but I wasn't sure."

Mother started up the steps and into the lighthouse, which was blue with smoke.

"I wasn't sleepy," she explained, "and I saw your light on. I thought I'd just come out for a visit, if you two aren't too tired. I really haven't had a good chance to talk with ——"

THE full impact of the smoke hit her as she entered the door, and she coughed.

"Something's on fire," she shouted. "Don't you girls smell it?"

"No, it isn't," said Anne. "Something was on fire. It's out now."

"Whew," whistled Mother, sitting down on Ernestine's cot. "It scared me half to death. What happened?"

"Well," Anne blushed, "I may as well tell you now. I've been smoking. I was going to tell you about it. I was going to tell you tomorrow—or the next day, anyway."

"Smoking," said Mother. "So that's it." She choked and coughed. "Why, there's enough smoke in this room to nominate Harding."

"I've been smoking too," Ernestine said miserably. "I was going to tell you too."

"It's my fault, I guess," Anne said. "I taught her how."

It was obvious Mother didn't like it. Her first impulse may have been to weep, to protest, to implore, to scold. But she knew that what she said was going to be important in her future relationship with the girls. So she didn't weep, and she didn't say anything until she had taken time to think the matter through.

If a man is in love with you no one can take him away from you, and if he's not in love with you it's no good shutting him up so that he doesn't see any other woman.
—MARY LUYTENS: Perchance to Dream.

"In my day," she finally began, "nice girls didn't smoke. I know that's all changed. It's a mistake for me to look at it in terms of what was right in my day. I still don't approve, and it wouldn't be honest for me to make believe I did."

"You make me feel like a dog," said Anne, almost in tears. "If you want, I'll promise never to do it again."

"I don't approve of promises like that," Mother told her. "Most people smoke nowadays, and it's not right when parents make their children promise not to do things that most people do."

"Besides, she might break the promise," Ernestine put in. "Those ciggies get a terrible hold on you, Mother."

"When did you find that out, dear?" asked Mother, with some concern.

"Today," said Ernestine.

"That's not so bad, then." Mother smiled. "Maybe you can even break the hold—for a couple of years, anyway," she suggested.

"I could fight against it," Ernestine conceded.

"I've been trying to think up some good arguments against smoking," Mother said, "but when you analyze them, they don't seem too convincing."

She started to enumerate the arguments, counting them off on her fingers.

"If you smoke you'll have a bad reputation. I hate to let go of that one, but I'll have to admit it doesn't apply any more. It's a shame too!

"It's bad for your health. That's open to debate. Not so bad as overeating, or not getting enough sleep.

"It stunts your growth. I doubt it, and anyway you're both grown.

"It's a filthy habit. It's not, really. Not half so filthy as gossiping or collecting old matchboxes.

"It's expensive. There!" Mother beamed triumphantly. "There's a good argument. It is expensive, and can we afford it?"

"We don't buy them," Anne said. "Your dates always have them."

"There goes my last argument." Mother smiled, spreading her hands. "We'll just say that I don't like it, but that it's a prejudice.

Here's a pair of off-to-school shoes that score high with the young-timers. Mothers will mark them "A-plus", too—they're carefully made of fine, selected leathers to the highest standards of design and construction. Let them guard your child's foothealth this term. Edwards Back-to-School shoes, at reasonable prices, are at your dealers now.

TERRY
(with two strap or with tongue)

Ask your family doctor about Edwards shoes for children.

Edwards
SHOES FOR CHILDREN

Edwards, 314-22 N. 12th St., Phila. 7, Pa.

don't believe in prejudices, so go ahead and light up, if you want to."

Anne fished the cigarettes and ash tray from under the bed, and offered one to Ernestine.

"Not right now," said Ernestine, whose throat and stomach were beginning to feel uneasy. "I believe my craving has been satisfied for this year—probably until I go to college."

Anne helped herself to one, lighted it, and blew self-conscious smoke rings at the ceiling.

"Where are your manners?" Mother asked. "Aren't you going to pass them to everybody? It looks as if it might be fun."

"No, sir," Ernestine protested.

"Oh, no, you don't," said Anne, putting the cigarette package behind her back. "I've led one member of the family astray today. I'm not going to be responsible for anyone else's downfall." Reluctantly, Anne stubbed out her smoke. "That's my last—if you'll excuse the word—'ciggie' until I get back to college," she declared. "The first thing you know, Jane might be smoking cigars. I believe it'd be safer to smoke in a nitroglycerin factory than around this house."

With Morton at her disposal, Anne's social life was pretty well taken care of for the remainder of the summer. She still didn't like him very well, but nothing better came along, and he did have a Hupmobile and a motorboat.

Ernestine searched diligently, but didn't find a man until a week before the summer was over. Then she kept him a dark secret.

His name was Al Lynch, and he had a summer job at the grocery store, where Ern had met him when she did the shopping. He was big, hearty, loud-talking and collegiate—a little too collegiate. He wore a woolly crimson sweater which sported a green block S letter and a bejeweled fraternity pin as large as a fifty-cent piece. The S, it developed, was for Sagiwan Agricultural and Technical College.

All of us had seen Al, at one time or another, in the grocery, and he was not the sort of chap that one would easily overlook. Of all the sheiks on the island, his hair was the greasiest, his trousers cuffs the widest, his fraternity pin the biggest, his football letter the flashiest, and his sweater the loudest. He wasn't exactly handsome, but his features were perfect, and he was sure he had a way with women.

We knew Ernestine was dating somebody that last week, because she had deserted Anne's beach crowd and spent hours rolling up her hair after supper. But she didn't go out nights, and he never came to call. We didn't know until later that he worked nights checking stock, but had most of the mornings off.

Morton and four or five of Martha's ever-present and ever-neglected beaus were on the dock to see us off for Montclair. This time there was no funny business about half-fare tickets, with Mother in charge. Tom, Frank and the pets had left a couple of days before, so that Tom could get the house opened.

Anne allowed Morton to peck her on the cheek, which Mother pretended not to notice. Martha shook hands with her boys, and even condescended to clap them on the back.

Then we noticed Ernestine and Al. They were holding hands, both hands, and looking into each other's eyes. The green S was still sewed securely to Al's crimson sweater, but the fraternity pin was gone.

Ernestine finally tore herself loose from him. Agnes Ayres, taking leave of Rudolph Valentino to return to the old lecher she was being forced to marry because of his money, never played the scene any better.

"Wow," shouted Bill. "Look at that hot dog in the sweater."

"Isn't that the boy who works at the grocery store?" Mother asked Anne. "How long has she been going with him?"

Halfway up the gangplank, Ernestine turned around, ran to Al, and flung herself

(Continued on Page 81)

Come cold, come snow, what do pretty girls sleep in? Cozy Carter's, of course! In all of dreamland, there isn't a sweeter family of sleepy-heads.

Styles pictured—starting with bird watcher.
Brushed rayon cuddle gown. 4-16 yrs., $3.95
GAL-briggan gown. Elasticized waist, wrists. 4-16 yrs., $2.95
GAL-briggan twin pajama. Elasticized. 4-16 yrs., $2.95
Jiffon-Nevabind baby gown. Birth to 1 yr., $1.25-$1.65
Jiffon-Nevabind* sleeper with feet. 1-4 yrs., $2.25-$3.25

All come in Carter's bonbon box of colors.
At good stores. For store near you, write
The William Carter Co., Needham Heights, Mass.

*®

P. S. Carter's make GAL-briggans for grown gals, too!

Swift

YOURS FOR BRIGHTER BREAKFASTS

Makes your breakfast extra special!

Swift's Premium Bacon—America's favorite because it's so downright delectable. Sugar cured Swift's special way and oven-smoked over fragrant hardwood fires, it's the bacon with the wonderful Sweet Smoked Taste. Serve it crisp, brown and fragrant . . . you'll see why it's the best liked bacon of all. Yes, it's extra special. Take home a pound today to go with . . .

THE BACON WITH THE SWEET SMOKE TASTE

Swift's Brookfield Eggs—the eggs of saucer-test quality. The white stays firm—the rounded yolk stands high and stays that way. Delicious—and so delicate in flavor. Every one a perfect match for its neighbor. They're extra special, at your favorite store. Bacon 'n' Eggs—by Swift—for brighter breakfasts!

THE EGGS OF SAUCER-TEST QUALITY

(Continued from Page 79)

) his arms. Miss Ayres never played that ne any better either.

Even Mother was too surprised and cked to make believe she hadn't noticed '. Ernestine tore herself loose again, and ed radiantly up the gangplank.

I don't think that sort of thing ought to lone in public, dear," Mother admonished when she was safely aboard. Mother om took any of us to task before the er children, but it seemed time for an eption.

Or in private either," Anne agreed. "The —a girl your age."

I know it," Ernestine said, throwing k her head and looking at the clouds. "I n't intend to do it. I tried not to do it. But e was something like a powerful magnet ing me back to his heart."

So that's what that green thing shaped an S is," Anne scoffed. "A magnet. Does ght up?"

Jealousy," intoned Ernestine, still look- at the clouds, "ill becomes you, you un- tunate wench se troth is all but hted to a bean- ."

Becomes me ill is t. Me becomes ill—sick to my nach."

lother shooed the nger children y. "I'm sure he's rely boy," she told estine.

nne hooted. "You tell he thinks he's 's gift to women."

You just can't r to see your nger sister en- d before you are, you?" Ernestine oped, coming n from the clouds looking Anne rely in the eye. Engaged?" ther almost ited. "Do you n to tell me that and that —— I'm he's a lovely " she repeated kly.

nestine pulled her topcoat, and e was the frater- pin.

never saw such a big one," Anne ad- ed. "If you had another just like it, you dn't need to wear anything else above vaist. What's the fraternity?"

Tau Tau Tau," Ernestine said proudly. Never heard of it. And what high school e S for?"

You know perfectly well it's not for any school," Ernestine hollered. "Make her Mother."

Sometimes I think I can't make any of stop anything," Mother sighed.

Excuse me," Anne said. "What institu- of higher learning is the two-foot S for?"

T that it's any of your business, but Al enty-one, and a junior at Sagiwan Agri- ral and Technical College. I suppose you r heard of that either?"

Did you?" Anne asked.

Everyone knows about Sagiwan. Just se it's not full of snobs like Amherst Harvard and Princeton ——" Tau Tau Tau at Saggie Aggie," said , shaking her head. "Saggie Aggie. It's catchy sound—sort of Indian, and sort e a fat woman who needs a corset."

think," said Ernestine, bursting into . "that you're the most hateful person e world. I really do."

Gosh, can't you take a little kidding?" You and Martha both having the time of lives all summer," sobbed Ernestine. I finally . . . and finally ——"

'm sorry," Anne choked, putting her arm d Ernestine's waist. "After all, as you say, that Morton isn't any rose. He's sure a beanpole, isn't he? And Al is cute, all right, I've got to admit that."

"Do you really think so?" asked Ernestine, blowing her nose.

"Gosh, yes!" Anne fibbed.

"Where does he live, dear?" Mother asked.

"In upper New York State. Why does everything have to happen to me, Mother?" she sniffed. "Just as vacation is over, it has to happen to me. Now I won't see him again until the Christmas holidays."

"Christmas holidays?" Mother asked.

"I'm going to meet him in New York," Ernestine said. "He's coming down especially."

"Maybe he could come to visit us during the holidays," Mother suggested.

"Could he?" Ern shouted ecstatically, hugging Mother. "Do you think he could?"

"I don't see why not," Mother said. "After all, Ernestine, if you're going to marry him, I'd like a chance to meet him first."

"Oh, I guess we'll never get married," Ern said gaily. "Just engaged. Al says he's not the marrying kind."

"Why, where does he think ——" Anne began.

"It would be fine if he could come," Mother interrupted. "Much better than your meeting him in New York. He sounds—well, very interesting, dear."

"Gee, he sure is," Ernestine agreed. "Will you loan me your pen? I'm going to write him right now and invite him."

Ernestine went into the lounge, and Anne and Mother exchanged knowing glances.

"Do you know what I think?" Anne teased her. "I think you're a scheming woman. I can see right through you."

"I don't know what you're talking about," Mother grinned sheepishly.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Corner Candy Store

By Phyllis I. Rosenteur

A licorice whip or jelly bean
Transports me to a bygone scene,
Where once I stood with hungry eyes
And murmured little yearning sighs
For gingerbread and lemon drops
And chicken corn and lollipops;
And there I'd stand in mute despair . . .
An indecisive millionaire . . .
With fifty ways I could disburse
The two whole pennies in my purse;
So, teetering from toe to heel,
I'd engineer a special deal
For one of "those" and two of "this":
A jujube and a taffy kiss,
A sourball, a slice of gum,
A horehound drop, a sugar plum.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Every autumn Mother took the boys into New York on a shopping trip, to get them clothes for the coming year. This year, to save time, she decided to get the shopping out of the way as we passed through the city, en route from Nantucket to Montclair.

The trip to New York was accomplished relatively painlessly. Anne took the girls, including a moon-eyed Ernestine, who almost had to be led by the hand, on to Montclair. Then Mother and the boys headed for a department store that was featuring a back-to-school sale.

Mother believed that self-expression was essential to a child's development, and always gave us a free hand in picking our clothes. She might advise, but she never vetoed.

Before leaving Nantucket, Ernestine, as chairman of the purchasing committee, had inventoried the condition of the boys' clothes, and had given Mother a list of requirements. It was decided that each boy would get one new suit, and also would be handed down a suit from the brother immediately above him in the age scale. Frank, being the oldest and not in line for a hand-down, would get two new suits. New shirts, ties, socks, underwear and shoes—which seldom lasted long enough to be handed down—also were needed by all the boys.

Frank was in Montclair with Tom, so he wasn't included on the shopping trip. Mother thought that, being thirteen, he was old enough to get his own clothes, anyway.

THE GREATEST THING THAT EVER HAPPENED TO RICE

"Uncle Ben's" and "Converted" are trade-marks of Converted Rice, Inc., Houston, Texas

NEW UNCLE BEN'S RICE RECIPE

Pineapple Rice Pudding

1¼ cups cooked Uncle Ben's Rice
2 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
2 cups evaporated milk
1 cup crushed, drained pineapple

Beat eggs and add to cooked rice. Stir in salt and add sugar. Add milk, then pineapple, stirring to blend. Turn into a buttered quart baking dish and bake in a pan of hot water in a slow oven, 300° F., for one hour. Serve with crushed pineapple or cream. Serves 6.

More nourishing and far easier to cook!
No rinsing—no draining—no steaming!

Easiest-cooking rice you've ever tried! That's Uncle Ben's Converted Rice . . . finest long-grain rice processed to retain extra B vitamins usually lost in polishing. Tastes better, too!

NOW BEING INTRODUCED
RICE YOU DON'T HAVE TO COOK AT ALL!

Uncle Ben's Instant Rice comes ready-cooked in the can. Just dip it in boiling water for 30 seconds and serve. Use it anywhere you use rice . . . any time you want to save time. It's unbelievably easy—unbelievably fine. Uncle Ben's Instant Rice!

In the subway on the way uptown from Barclay Street, the boys agreed that any suit bought would have to please not only its immediate possessor, but the next younger brother who would be its ultimate owner.

It was still early when they arrived at the store, and the boys' department was nearly deserted. A middle-aged salesman, pleased at the prospect of starting the day with such a large group of potential customers, hurried up to Mother. He was precise, plump, and wore a hearing aid, which fitted over his head earphones-fashion.

"Hello there, fellows," he said heartily, in a tone designed to show that he was nothing but a great big boy himself. "Well, school's about to start, eh? I know you're all looking forward to it." He laughed and rumpled Bob's head, and Bob hid behind Mother. "What will it be this morning?" the salesman asked Mother hopefully. "Suits for all the boys?"

"Yes, please," said Mother, while the salesman, obviously figuring that this was his lucky day, beamed happily.

Mother reached into her brief-case-sized pocketbook, pulled out two blueprints, the first draft of a speech she was writing, a copy of the magazine Iron Age, a shawl she was crocheting for her mother, some socks she had darned on the boat, and finally her black notebook. There is never anything very efficient about Mother's pocketbook.

"Let's see," she said, reading from Ernestine's list, "five suits, fifteen neckties, twenty suits of underwear, twenty-five pairs of socks, twenty shirts and five pairs of shoes."

"Yes, madam," smiled the salesman. It was a big, sincere smile, which was fortunate, because it was his last until the boys departed, and possibly his last for a matter of weeks.

"Do they let him play that radio when he's supposed to be working?" Dan asked Mother.

"That's not a radio, dear," said Mother, who was embarrassed but believed in answering all questions from the floor. "It's a hearing aid. So of course it's not polite to talk about it."

"Oh, I'm sorry," said Dan, and then whispering, "What's a hearing aid?"

"He's a little deaf, dear," Mother whispered back. "So don't say anything more about it."

"What did she say?" Fred and Jack whispered to Dan.

"Deaf as a doornail," Dan whispered back. "Don't make him feel bad about it."

"If you fellows will step this way," said the salesman, "I think we can find something."

"We don't want to pay more than seventeen-fifty for the suits," said Bill, who had been coached by the girls. "And we want them with two pairs of knickers."

Fred nudged Bill and whispered, "Deaf."

"We don't want to pay more than seventeen-fifty for the suits," Bill shouted, as loud as he could.

"I know you don't, sonny," the salesman said patiently. "I heard you. You don't really have to shout."

"I'm sorry," said Bill, glaring at Fred.

"Look, fellows," the man said. "It's all right about the hearing aid. Lots of boys ask about it. I'll show you how it works."

He explained that he kept dry-cell batteries in his hip pocket, and showed the boys a volume-control rheostat that he kept in the side pocket of his coat.

"Now let's get down to business, fellows," he said, swinging out a rack of clothes. He turned to Mother. "We have a special sale on this group, madam."

"How much?" said Bill.

"These have been marked down from thirty dollars," the salesman continued, ignoring Bill, "and they're a real buy, madam."

"How much?" said Bill.

"They're nineteen-fifty," he admitted, glaring.

"I'm afraid that's too much, sir," Bill said. "We want something cheaper."

"I don't know, dear," Mother put in. "W might look at them, and see whether you l them."

"We don't like them," Bill shook his he "Ernestine might not object too much, b Martha would holler. She made us promis

"I guess you're right," Mother agreed.

"Ernestine?" asked the salesman. "M tha?"

"Ern's chairman of the purchasing co mittee, and Mart's in charge of the budge Bill told him.

"I see," said the salesman, who ob ously didn't, but thought it best not to p sue the subject any further.

He pulled out another rack. "These seventeen dollars," he said. "Marked do from twenty-five. What colors did you ha in mind, madam?"

"I think we'll just let the boys pick th out," Mother smiled. "If you don't mi would you be good enough to start w Bill—he's the biggest one the blond."

"What color did you have in mind, you man?"

"I don't think the color will matter," said.

"What kind of cloth, then?"

"I don't care about that, either. I w the kind that has buckles on the bottom the knickers that will keep your stocki up."

The salesman looked in mute appeal Mother, who had found a chair and working on her crocheting.

"That seems sensible, dear," she said wi out looking up. "The legs of your last p wouldn't stay up at would they?"

"The points on buckle bent out of sh the first week," Bill co plained. "Worst suit I e had."

Bill went through rack, tried on three or f suits that didn't pass buckle test, and at last found a gray, bel model that seemed just right.

"I like this one," he said, turning arou so Mother could see whether it fit.

"It fits him almost exactly," said the sa man, who was beginning to perspire a li from taking down suits and hanging th up.

Mother felt the material. "I think fine, dear. It should wear well, and it see well made. It's mighty handsome too."

The salesman was obviously reliev "Shall I have it wrapped?" he asked.

"Not just yet," Bill told him. "Is it right with you, Fred?"

Fred came over, looked at it, felt it, studied the buckles. "Okay with me," F agreed.

"Does everybody have to approve i asked the salesman, who was becoming a tle bewildered. "Are we going to have have a vote on each suit?" he appealed Mother.

"Oh, no," Mother assured him.

"Just this little fellow here?" the sa man asked, pointing to Fred. "Is he the who has to approve them all?"

"Not exactly," Mother said. "It's j that the boys agreed Fred would have to prove Bill's suit, Dan would have to appr Fred's, Jack would ——"

"Ye-e-e-es," the clerk interrupted, lo ing around him furtively. "Of course. I se

By the time the suits had been select the boys' department was beginning to t on the appearance of a firehouse dormito Coats, pants and vests, many of them positions just as the boys had wriggled ou them, were on chairs, tables, hooks and floor. The clothes racks were as culled a gaping as a turkey roost on Thanksgiv Day.

The clerk, now perspiring freely, led boys to the underwear counter, wh Mother found another chair.

"We can pay a dollar a pair," Bill told h

"What color?" asked the salesman, knew better now than to haggle about price.

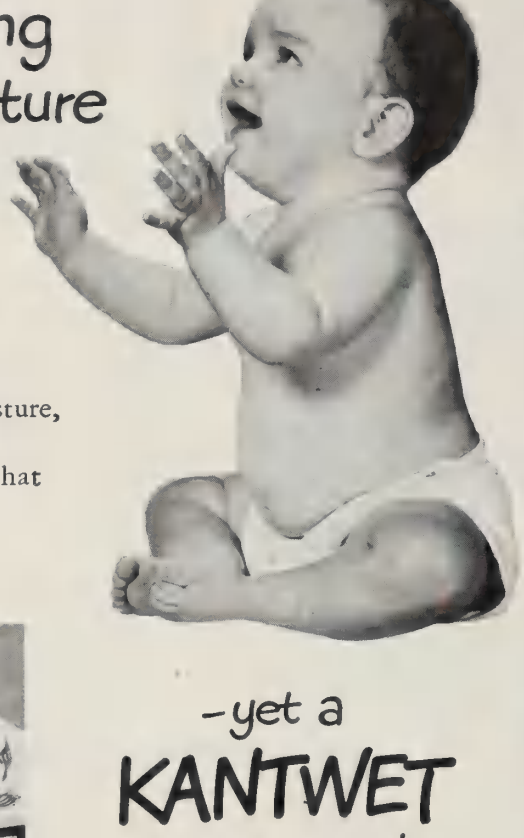
(Continued on Page 84)

One machine can do the work of fifty ordinary men. No machine can do the work of one extraordinary man.
—ELBERT HUBBARD.

Nothing easier Nothing nicer

Spoon out DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail into cool, sweet melons. What a bountiful dessert (or first course—or salad)!

That's the beauty of DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail. No matter how rushed, you have time to set out gay, colorful treats like this.



For DEL MONTE Fruit Cocktail is ready-cut, ready-mixed, always delicious. Mellow peaches, tender pears, tart-sweet pineapple and sparkling grapes and cherries—a wonderful fruit combination in perfect flavor balance.

Be sure you buy DEL MONTE Brand Fruit Cocktail —and always have it handy.

Del Monte FRUIT COCKTAIL
—the brand that puts flavor first

Priceless

in building better posture

Your baby's lifetime posture is developed in his crib. Considering that 50.6% of all school children have faulty posture, it's vitally important to choose the mattress that gives your baby a posture-perfect start.

20 hours in 24

In the first few months your baby spends 5/6 of his time sleeping, growing, in his crib. No wonder a firm, level mattress is so important for normal, healthy development.

Going on 1 year old

Baby is sitting up now, getting more active, giving the mattress more punishment. He's gaining weight; needs constant firm support.

At 2 years, a gymnasium!

Baby's bones are still pliable. For the sake of his posture, the mattress must stay firm and level, yet give comfort for good rest.

DORSAL PAD
An exclusive KANTWET posture feature. A straight, firm foundation for a straight strong back.

-yet a KANTWET posturized Crib Mattress costs only ½ cent more a day

There's no better investment than a KANTWET when baby's posture is at stake. It gives lasting firmness with all these important features for permanent straight line support.

- BUILT-IN DORSAL PAD A strong, straight foundation in the heart of the mattress.
- HEAVIER INNERSPRING Not an ordinary innerspring, but exclusive, patented FLEX-O-LOC construction.
- BALANCED FILLING with extra layers where baby's weight rests most heavily.
- SEALED BUTTON TUFTING anchors filling in place.

There's only one genuine KANTWET. Look for the KANTWET Posturized label before you buy.

ROSE-DERRY CO.
Newton, Mass.
Chicago • Los Angeles

(Continued from Page 82)

"You don't have to worry about that," Bill said. "The only thing we don't want is what Tom calls Indian drawers."

"Don't be Eskimo," Mother warned. "Eskimo" was Mother's word for anything that was deemed evil-minded. She seldom seemed to miss a reference.

"The kind that creeps up on you," the salesman nodded morosely. "I'm dying laughing." He pulled out some boxes. "Let's see, now. Less than a dollar, any color, no Indian drawers. This has been, if I may say so, a unique experience."

"If there's anything I hate it's drawers like that, don't you, Mother?" Dan asked. "You can hardly sit still in them."

"I think," smiled Mother, burying her head in her crocheting, "you'd better pay attention to what the gentleman's showing you."

The underwear finally selected was on special sale, and was produced for inspection only after all other brands had been rejected as having Indian characteristics.

"These are just what we want," Bill said, when the specially priced goods were brought out from under a counter. "We'll take twenty pairs of them, please. Mother has the sizes."

"Only three to a customer." The salesman shook his head. "We lose money on every one of these we sell at that price," he said.

"We certainly don't want to hurt your business," Bill agreed. "Since there are only six of us, I guess all we can take is eighteen pairs then."

The clerk, now beginning to walk as if in a trance, got the sizes from Mother and added the underwear to the growing pile of merchandise.

"To save time," he said, as we arrived at the shoe counter, "and to save me the trouble of showing you every shoe in the store, suppose you explain to me in detail, beforehand, just what it is you want in a shoe."

"The first one who says a foot," I warned the other boys, "is going to get trouble with me. I think we're taking up much of this man's time."

"I don't suppose"—the salesman ignor him—"that what you'd want is what eve body else gets for their boys—a high bla shoe that wears well."

"Yes," Bill nodded, "I think that's j what we do want."

"I thought maybe you didn't care ab the color or whether it was high or low, j so long as the eyelets didn't rust, and laces were genuine Western cowhide."

"Do you have any with laces like that Fred asked eagerly.

"No," the clerk yelled. "And I do know whether our eyelets rust or not."

Fred was subdued. "Funny store," whispered. "They try to sell you things th haven't got."

There was a good deal of bickering, the boys finally decided on the shoes, shi ties and socks.

"I guess it's been trying for you," Mot told the salesman sincerely as she paid bill. "But I think that buying is an imp tant part of every child's education, do you?"

"What's that?" he said, fumbling in side pocket for the hearing-aid switch. had it turned off. I can hear you now couldn't stand to listen any more."

"You mean," Mother asked, and the b thought there was a trace of envy in voice, "that all you have to do is tur switch, and you can't hear anything at al

He nodded.

"It's wonderful what science can d Mother said. There was no doubt about It was envy.

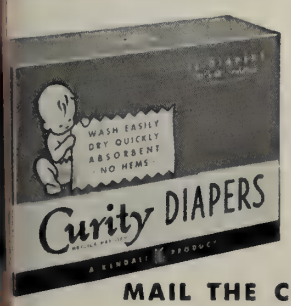
Eight of us, Ernestine down through J went back to school in Montclair. Anne r a day coach to Ann Arbor and enrolled a junior at the University of Michigan. joined a sorority within a few weeks was taken into Phi Beta Kappa that spr

Curity DIAPERS Launder Easier

Curity Diapers launder with ease . . . dry quick as you please! Mothers prefer Curity comfort for baby, too, and praise Curity Diapers because they . . .

Wash Easier — Their open weave permits quick, thorough cleansing in the suds of pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Dry Faster — Indoors or out, drying air acts faster on their open weave.



Resist Wrinkles — A special Curity process reduces after-laundering wrinkles . . . eliminates size distortion.

Absorb Fully — Their thirsty surgical weave permits greater absorption.

Feel Softer — They're as wonderfully soft as they feel.

Fold Easily — Curity's patented woven-in Foldlines show Mother how . . . adjust as baby grows.

Curity is the largest selling gauze diaper . . . used and endorsed by mothers, medical authorities, leading hospitals. Your favorite infants or department store has them . . . modern diaper laundries use them. For dress-up and gifts see the new Curity Diapers in pastel pink, maize or blue.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • FLUFFS • MASKS

PAT. NO. 2,145,137

MAIL THE COUPON

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J 90

Enclosed is 25c for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Mother, besides supervising everything at home, got down to the job of trying to support the family.

The financial outlook became, if anything, even worse than Mother had expected. The big firms declined to renew their motion-study contracts. Various reasons were offered. They boiled down to the belief that, though Mother might know the theory of motion study, no woman could handle the technical details of the job or command the respect and co-operation of shop foremen and workers.

The motion-study course, which Mother had planned while in Europe, seemed the only remaining chance. If industries thought she wasn't able to put timesaving theories into practice in their plants, perhaps they'd send their own engineers or other personnel to her to learn the theories, and then apply them themselves.

She mailed prospectuses to a dozen former clients and other firms that had shown an interest in motion study in the past. The course was to be held at our home in Montclair, where Dad and Mother had their offices and laboratory.

The tuition was stiff. Mother figured that if fewer than six firms sent representatives, she'd have to call off the whole idea. That meant we'd move to California, or accept some of the kind offers of family friends.

If there were as many as six, there still would be a chance that the family could stay together. If there were more than six, the family could stay together and there would be enough money for Ernestine to start college in the fall.

Mother wouldn't be budged on that business of sending all of us to college. When anyone tried to tell her it wasn't feasible, she jutted out her chin.

Some parents find the task of getting even one child ready for school in the mornings to be an exhausting one. Mother got eight ready, saw that the beds were made and the house cleaned, supervised Ernestine's menus and Martha's budget program, kept an eye on Bob and Jane, mended and sewed on buttons, wrote Anne every day, and still found time to read aloud to us at night, to help us with our homework, and to go with us to Sunday school. And she worked ten hours every day in the office and laboratory.

At night Mother was slow and fumbling, and there were circles under her eyes. But in the mornings her weariness was gone, and she was at her best.

Between six and seven o'clock in the mornings, she'd help the younger children make their beds and straighten up their rooms, while listening to poems, spelling words or multiplication tables they had been assigned to memorize for school.

At seven she waked the older ones, and then helped them with their beds and assignments. We left for school a few minutes after eight, and then Mother turned Bob and Jane over to Tom, and went into her office. The stenographic staff, which had been reduced to one, arrived at nine, and Mother wanted to be sure Miss Butler had enough to keep her busy.

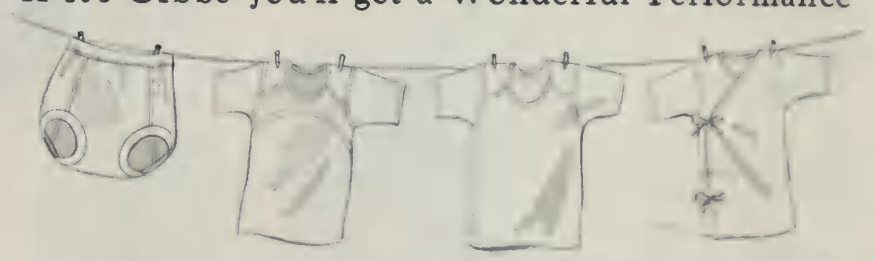
Once an hour, Mother would come out to check on Bob and Jane. Ernestine and Martha, both of whom had been taught to type by Dad, took turns coming home directly from school in the afternoons and helping out in the office.

Sometimes, in spite of rules about interrupting Mother, there were more children in the office than out of it. Miss Butler used to say that she should have studied at a nursery school instead of at a business college.

None of us was supposed to enter the office without knocking, and only then when the business was urgent. We knocked, all right, but our ideas of urgent business sometimes conflicted with Mother's.

"Do you think," Lillian would ask, after beating a loud tattoo on the door, "that I should wear the pink or the yellow dress to Boodle's birthday party?"

The worst of it was that such a question would capture Mother's interest, and she'd forget all about what she was doing.



(Continued on Page 87)

Just Look and Compare—

Gibbs Quality Gibbs Styling

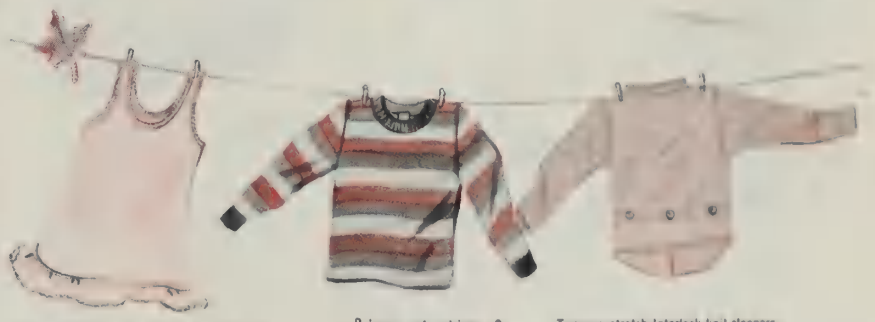
"If it's Gibbs you'll get a Wonderful Performance"



No. 121—Training Pant with two-way stretch double panel front and back. Elastic waist. Sizes 1 to 4—49c.

No. 220—Double breasted slip-over shirt, patented shoulder for snug fit. Sizes 1 to 6—59c.

No. 621/15—Short sleeve slipover shirt with patented shoulder. Side tabs, in sizes 1-2-3. Sizes 1 to 6X—59c.

No. 219—Short sleeve tie-side shirt with twistless tapes. Sizes 1 to 4—69c.

Runproof tricot rayon slip, Val lace trimmed, white, blue, maize, pink. Sizes 1 to 4—$1.00, 2 to 8—$1.59, 10 to 16—$1.69, 9 to 17 with adjustable shoulder straps—$2.25.

Pajama, polo stripes, 2 piece. Sizes 2 to 8—$2.49, 10 to 16—$3.49.

Two-way stretch interlock knit sleepers, gripper fasteners, blue, maize, peach and mint. Sizes 1 to 4—$2.00. Extra pant—$1.00. Sizes 4 to 8 one piece—$2.25

Runproof tricot rayon panty, Val lace, buttons and bows, elastic waist and leg, white, blue, maize, pink. Sizes 1 to 4—59c, 2 to 8—69c, 10 to 16—89c.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

"Ask for Gibbs in Infants', Children's & Teen Age Sizes"

COMPARE Gibbs VALUES

Gibbs Underwear Co. Mills: Philadelphia • New York: Empire State Bldg.

...and RED CROSS SHOES feel as beautiful as they look!*

The Carmen $10.95

Chateau II $10.95

The Dover $10.95

The Petal $10.95

because every lovely, new Red Cross Shoe style is actually "fit-fashioned" on living, walking feet . . . to make sure it looks and feels beautiful ON the foot. YOUR foot. And in Red Cross Shoes, of course, you have the world's largest variety of styles to choose from on the widest variety of individual lasts. See the new Autumn arrivals at your nearest Red Cross Shoe retailer's.

America's unchallenged shoe value $8.95 to $10.95
Slightly higher in Canada

This product has no connection whatever with The American National Red Cross

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as Gold Cross Shoes in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd.; in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd.; in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.), Ltd.; in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co., Ltd. Gold Cross Shoes are featured in Canada by leading retailers.

(Continued from Page 85)

"The yellow one is my favorite," Mother would say. "I think those pleats on the side are precious, don't you?"

"Do you think it's long enough?"

"It is getting a little short," Mother would agree. "I'll let the hem down after supper. How old is Boodle, anyway? It seems to me she had a birthday ——" Suddenly it would dawn on her that she was being interrupted. "We'll talk about it at supper, dear," she'd say firmly. "I know it's important, and I won't forget it. But I'm very busy right now." She'd make a note on her desk pad about Lillian's dress, and she wouldn't forget it.

Finally Mother devised an interruptions chart, which she hung on the wall behind her office desk. When one of us came into the office with a problem that wasn't vital, she'd tell the offender:

"I wonder if you'd mind making a check by your name on the interruptions chart? I'm trying to keep track of them, so we can see if we can cut them down."

The interrupter would shamefacedly make his mark, while Miss Butler grinned into her typewriter.

"Thank you, dear," Mother would say, without a trace of a smile. "How many is that for you so far this week?"

"Eight."

"Goodness, that's nothing like Tom's. He's up to thirty already."

Tom thought the interruptions chart was a fine idea, and that it was a shame the way we bothered Mother when she was trying to work.

"Keep out of that office," he'd bellow to any of us he saw approaching the door. "Ain't you got no consideration for your poor mother? If there's anything you want to know, come here and ask me, and I'll tell you."

"All I want to know," Ernestine said feamily, on one such occasion, waving a letter that had arrived from upper New York State, "is what you'd do if the best-looking man in the world were madly in love with you."

Tom thought that over. "I believe," he answered coyly, "that the first thing I'd do is ast him for his frat pin. And if you're looking for yours, you'll find it on the shelf down in the laundry."

"What's it doing down there?" Ern asked.

"It come down on your pajammers. If I hadn't of seen it, it would of ruint my finger."

Tom considered his own appearances in the office much too vital to be classified as interruptions.

"Would you step out in the kitchen a minute, Mrs. Gilbreth?" he'd ask, sticking his head through the office door. "I got something I want to show you."

"Is it important?" Mother would say, realistically putting aside her papers and starting to get up from her swivel chair.

"You know I wouldn't bother you if it wasn't important."

"Would you mind making a check on the interruptions chart?"

"Yes, ma'am. The chart seems to be working fine, Mrs. Gilbreth. The children ain't bothering you half as much."

"The children seem to be getting the idea." I wisht you'd make one for the kitchen. They interrupt me all the time. I wisht someone you'd put your desk out there and see what I put up with."

Mother, rolling her eyes skyward for the benefit of Miss Butler, would follow him to the kitchen, to be shown a picture that Bob had drawn, a mole that Mr. Chairman had found from the front lawn, or a new trick that Tom had taught the cat.

Meanwhile, we watched the mail anxiously for replies to Mother's prospectus. For almost two weeks, there was none. Then five arrived within two days: from the largest store in the world, in New York; from a drug manufacturer, a tool company, a dairy-products distributor, an electrical-appliances corporation.

There was a wait of another week, during which it seemed certain that the course would have to be canceled. And then acceptances arrived from abroad—from a Japanese engineer, a Belgian technologist and a representative of a British food concern.

THAT made eight, and when the tuition money was received, and deposited by Martha, the bank balance was enough to guarantee that the family could stay together for another year, that Anne could finish Michigan the next year, and that Ernestine could enroll at Smith.

Mother planned, if possible, to run the course for five years. By that time, Anne and Ernestine would have their diplomas, and Martha and Frank would be in college. That would mean only seven children to look out for at home, and Mother would be able to travel more, seeking consulting jobs. She hoped that in five years she'd be able to convince employers that she could work in a man's field.

On the night before the course opened, Mother told us she was going to need our cooperation.

"I know you'll all keep out of the office and the laboratory and not bother me," she said, "unless it's something very important. And I hope you'll welcome all eight pupils, and treat them like friends."

We said we didn't know about that "friends" business. We knew the school was necessary from a financial standpoint. Frankly, though, we weren't enthusiastic about a group of outsiders coming into the house and monopolizing Mother's time.

"They're probably old cranks who are going to complain they can't concentrate because of the noise," Frank said.

"No, they're not," Mother insisted. "I've met them, and they're all as nice as can be. I think you children will be fond of them."

"I know those old ones," Martha nodded. "Dandruff on their blue serge suits, and always trying to get you in a corner to tell you about your dimpled little knees."

"Old ones don't talk about dimpled knees," Ernestine said. "They still talk about your trim little ankles."

"They're not old," Mother smiled. "At least not very. One of them is a woman—Miss Lies. She's from Macy's."

"Probably with a silky black mustache and mannish tweeds," Ernestine hooted.

Tom, also, was not pleased about the outlook, especially when he found out that one of the group was an Englishman.

"As if I ain't got enough work already," he complained, and with a good deal of justification. "Just keep them out of my kitchen, that's all. Especially the limey—and that goes for the Jap too."

He fished in a drawer for a pencil and paper, and made a great show of inventorying his tools, so that he'd know if anything disappeared.

We hid on a landing halfway up the stairs, and watched Mother's pupils arrive. The first was Mr. Yoyogo, the Japanese engineer. Tom, dressed in a clean butcher's apron and his chef's cap, answered the bell and let him in.

"You must be Yoyo," Tom said sullenly, purposely dropping the "Mister," but inadvertently omitting the last syllable. "You can put your hat and coat in there"—

(Continued on Page 90)

One morning Professor John Berdan, of Yale, read to an English composition class a particularly inept theme and, as usual, called for comments. The students panned it unmercifully.

"Interesting," commented Berdan, "because I wrote the theme myself." As the critics began to blush, he continued: "You are quite right. I spent two hours of painstaking effort last night to make sure I had not omitted a single feature of poor writing, and I believe I succeeded." The professor paused for dramatic effect. "What astounds me," he resumed, "is how you men can dash these things off day after day in ten minutes!"

Everyone's talking about these new Lassie Jr. twins with their dual purpose sleeves. Wear them down or smartly pushed up to the elbow.
AND REMEMBER . . . THE LINING OF EVERY Lassie IS GUARANTEED FOR THE LIFE OF THE COAT!
Just one more reason why more and more girls are saying, "My coat must be a Lassie Jr."
In 100% Virgin Wool LEVMOOR. In grey or beige only.
Sizes 7-15. Full length, Style 2623, $45.00.
34" version, Style 2301, $39.95.
For name of store in your city, write: Lassie Jr. (Dept. L-1), 512 Seventh Ave., N. Y. 18.

L-1

Lassie Jr., 512 - 7th Ave., N.Y. 18
Please send me "Sparky" Pin shown. Enclosed find 25c in coin to cover postage and handling ☐
Please send me Free Full Color Foshion Booklet ☐
NAME .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... STATE .....

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE DIFFERENT BRECK SHAMPO
FOR THREE QUITE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDITIO

Whenever you buy a shampoo, keep in mind one thought – the condition of your h
There are three Breck Shampoos for three quite different hair conditions. Breck pH8 La Oil Shampoo is for dry hair, Breck Lacene Shampoo is for oily hair, and Breck Reg Shampoo is for more normal hair conditions. When you buy a Breck Shampoo men whether your hair is dry, oily or normal and you will be given the correct Breck Shampoo your hair condition. A Breck Shampoo will leave your hair clean, shining and fragr

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops and wherever cosmetics are sold. Look for the gold foi

JOHN H. BRECK INC. MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3, MASSACHUSE
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANA

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

BRECK HAIRDRESS AND A BRECK SHAMPOO ARE COMBINED IN AN INTRODUCTORY OFFER

Breck Hairdress, formerly known as Trucene, is a cream hairdressing that adds lustre, softness, and fragrance to your hair. Breck Hairdress is especially helpful after a permanent wave or whenever the ends of the hair have become dry. Because Breck Hairdress does not leave an oily appearance it can be used every day if desired. Another feature of this cream hairdressing is that it makes the hair more manageable and it also gives body to the hair. We believe that Breck Hairdress offers you the easiest, quickest and best way to give your hair daily care.

A 2½ ounce bottle of Breck Hairdress is now available with an 8 ounce bottle of any one of the Three Breck Shampoos. A $1.50 value for $1.00 plus 10¢ tax.

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA, CANADA

▼ This is the look that makes fine suits beloved by best-dressed women . . . sharp clean lines, superbly set shoulders, a confident air born of impeccable tailoring. This is the look of all "tailored by Handmacher" suits; arch-prototype, this urbane satin wool covert, or have it in fine wool gabardine or worsted. 60.00

Sizes 10 to 20, 9 to 15, 10½ to 20½

For fashion folder write dept. L5

HANDMACHER-VOGEL, INC. • 533 SEVENTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY 18

(Continued from Page 87)

he pointed to a closet—"and then go in the office, there." He pointed again, and started to return to the kitchen.

"You must be Tom," Mr. Yoyogo said. "Mrs. Gilbreth told us all about you. She says you do the cooking, laundry, help with the shopping, and do most of the heavy work in the yard. You must know motion study yourself."

Tom turned around. "Let me take your hat and coat," he said.

"I'm going to have to watch your motions," Mr. Yoyogo told him. "You must have what the Gilbreths call The One Best Way."

"I'll learn you what I can, sir," said Tom, holding open the office door for him.

The six other men arrived together in a cab, and again Tom answered the door. They were all in their late twenties or early thirties, and two of them were tall, husky and handsome.

"Good night, just look at that," Ernestine whispered delightedly, forgetting for the moment all about upper New York State. "I've already changed my mind about not wanting to be friends. Anne'll die when she hears what she's missing."

"They're not what I expected," Martha admitted. "They don't seem like the dandruff type."

The men were laughing at something, and acted noisy and boyish. They asked Tom how tricks were, and started to take off their coats. Tom took the wraps from the two tall ones, who he apparently had decided must be Americans, and hung them up. But he hesitated before accepting the coats and hats of the four others. When he saw he couldn't pick out the Englishman, he took the rest of the wraps. Tom always believed in knowing who his friends were, though, so before he departed again for the closet, he asked:

"Does any of you gentlemen want a cu of tea?"

Nobody did.

"How about a crumpet?"

Nobody wanted one of those either.

"If you're looking for the limey," one the two tall ones grinned, and it was appa ent that Mother had given all the group thorough briefing on what to expect, "I your man. If you bring my coat back, I hang it up myself."

"Never mind," Tom said grumpily, "th time."

There was one more pleasant surprise f us, and Tom seemed to find it pleasant to Miss Lies turned out to be young, blond, sl and stunning. The chef's hat toppled off Tom bowed her gallantly into the office.

We had to hurry off to school witho meeting Mother's pupils, and got no mo than a glimpse of them as they left the hou late that afternoon. But the next day Moth said she was going to serve them tea a apple cake, and that if we hurried hom from school we could join the party.

The boys arrived for the tea in th school clothes, but Ernestine and ev Martha, who was beginning to use lem peel on her freckles, put on their be things—dresses with low waists and ski above the knees, high heels, and rolled s stockings with clocks down the sides.

Mother introduced us. "This is Ernestin my next-to-oldest; and Martha; and Fran my oldest boy; and Bill ——"

She was interrupted by Tom. "If you' got time to come back to the kitchen, I'm g something important to show you, ma'am he told Mother.

"Can't it wait until after we've had tea Mother asked.

"Well," said Tom, looking crushed, guess it could. It ain't nothing much."

(Continued on Page 92)

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

LIBERATED WOMAN: Our great-grandfathers were buried among their wives, their great-granddaughters among their husbands.

Children can always find something to quarrel over—if it's only who gets to punch the color bead in the margarine bag.

She's so hospitable that if a new robin flies into the neighborhood she wants to make a nest for it.

A boy grows up to his nose the way a puppy does to his feet.

Divorced parents trying to enjoy one child are as pathetic as two youngsters sharing one pair of skates.

A child is the catalyst in family life: causes reactions without himself being affected.

My grandmother effectively used the third person in discipline: "You should have known Ursula's children; poor pasty-faced things, always running around with gooey cake before a meal." . . . "That unhappy child of Ernestine's! Not learning respect for anything, not even his dog." And who of us wanted to be an Ernestine's or an Ursula's child!

A modern man is one who goes through the country so fast he is able to read only the top line on the historic plaques.

Child: "Just think! Sammy's mother is forty-two and she's still alive."

It is hard for the new woman in a group to learn to associate the correct names with the correct faces because she hears the names more often than she sees the faces.

A husband is a man who uses a cap with ear muffs once in a winter and expects to find it in plain sight when he wants it next winter.

A child poorly financed by parents may resort to "taking" things just as a ca which never gets a taste of raw meat be comes a prowler.

A hostess is a woman who does her bes to entertain guests and then has to tele phone them next day to recover her nap kins.

Discovering unexpected virtues in you child is like having flowers blossom in th yard of a house you've just moved into.

Early to bed and early to rise
Varies with age, position and size.

They call our son The Long Ranger.

The kind of guest who baffles me is th one who keeps her purse hanging on he arm, even when she performs her ablution

The we-deal partnership makes an i-de marriage.

A boy doesn't care whether the doll bill from a relative crackles with newne or not, only that it talks one hundre pennies' worth.

Even though women have been wearin aprons for centuries, daughter is positi she won't spill anything on the skirt ju back from the cleaner's.

On matching lips and fingertips

COLOR makes the fabulous difference

REVLON makes the fabulous colors

Nothing like Revlon true nail enamel for longer wear!*
Nothing like Revlon lipstick for lastingly luscious lips!

(That's why independent surveys prove more women wear Revlon than any other nail enamel and lipstick in the world.)

On her lips and fingertips
Revlon's new "Stormy Pink"

Accepted by the Committee on Cosmetics of the American Medical Association*

Lovely Overtures to Fall

Queen Quality

ENDEARING STYLE · ENDURING BEAUTY

Truly a symphony of fashionable footwear.
There's drama in every lovely style, with a superb fit you'll encore again and again.

(a) La Tour (b) Edwina (c) Ramona $10.95 to $12.95
Queen Casuals $7.95

Write Dept. "P" for free style booklet.

QUEEN QUALITY SHOE CO. · DIV: INTERNATIONAL SHOE COMPANY · ST. LOUIS

(Continued from Page 90)

"It isn't anything Mr. Chairman has dug up, is it? You know I don't like to look at those things."

"No, ma'am. It ain't nothin' like that."

Tom departed, and Mother began to feel sorry for him. "It's probably the cat then," she said. "I guess I'd better go see it, or he'll never forgive me." She got up from the sofa. "If you'll excuse me ——"

"We'll go with you, if it's all right," Miss Lies said. "I've been dying to see what he comes into the office to get you for."

"I'm sure Tom wouldn't mind," Mother agreed.

Everybody filed out to the kitchen, and Tom was delighted with the size of his audience.

"You know how the children is always stepping on Fourteen's tail by mistake when she's eating?" Tom asked. "Well, I been putting her milk on top of the icebox and feeding her there."

"That makes sense," Mother agreed doubtfully.

"I lifted her up there twicet, and then look what I learned her."

Tom opened the icebox door and leaned in, as if to get a bottle of milk. The cat, which had been watching him from under a table, jumped onto his back and then to the top of the icebox.

"Bravo," shouted Mr. Yoyogo, who thus became a member of Tom's club for a thousand years and four days.

"Smartest cat I ever trained, bar none," Tom gloated, pouring Fourteen some milk and flicking her whiskers with his forefinger.

All of us thought it was a good trick, and told him so.

"Let's see will he do it for you, Mrs. Gilbreth," Tom said. He lifted down the cat. "Just lean in the icebox like you was getting some milk."

Mother shivered. "I can't stand to have anything ticklish on my back—you children know that," she explained. "Just the thought of it gives me the creeps."

Mother's back was her Achilles' heel. Sometimes, to tease her, we'd sneak up behind her and play creep-mouse with our fingers along her backbone. She'd squeal like a little girl, and shudder.

Finally Mr. Yoyogo agreed to volunteer for the experiment, and Fourteen performed as advertised.

"Bar none!" Tom repeated. "She's the smartest."

"From now on," Miss Lies told Tom, "whenever you tell Mrs. Gilbreth to come back here, we're all coming. I wouldn't miss anything like this."

Miss Lies was in the club for a thousand years and four days too.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Higher Education

By Martha Savage

I can be taught to curl my hair
And how to make myself most fair.
I can learn to type and sew,
Absorb the arts there are to know.
For only a matter of time and trouble
I could make my knowledge double.
But who will teach what I must know:
Where to tell my feet to go?
And why the path before them dies?
And what broods deep in my own love's eyes?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

After we had returned to the parlor, Mr. Bruce, the handsome American who represented the drug firm, said he wanted to get all of us straight.

"I know the two biggest girls are Ernestine and Martha," he said. "Which is Ernestine?"

"I'm Ernestine," she told him, sending her eyelashes into a flutter designed to cause boys to leave home.

"And I'm Martha," cooed Martha, with a slow, open-lipped smile, also designed to lure striplings from their domiciles.

"You can tell them apart," Frank said, "because Martha has the dimpled knees, and Ernestine has the trim little ankles."

Mother said that would be sufficient from Frank, and the men replied they had seen nothing deficient in the knees or ankles of either girl. Somehow, though, they seemed more interested in Mother's apple cake in the younger children than in the [illegible] school girls.

"I'll bet," Bill told Mr. Bruce, "that used to play football when you were a b

"I used to play some," Mr. Bruce ceded. "But that was quite a while ago fore the war. I don't believe I've touch football since."

It developed that all the men had pl football or rugby at one time or ano except Mr. Yoyogo, whose game was ball.

"You boys don't happen to have a ball, do you?" Mr. Bruce asked. "It m be fun, sometime, to get a little exerci passing it around."

"Sure we do," Bill said. "We can pa right now."

"Oh, not now," Mr. Bruce said ha "I just meant sometime. We're havin now."

"Go ahead if you want to," Mother him. "Miss Lies and the girls and I will We won't be going back to work for hour or so."

"The men don't want to play games you boys," said Ernestine. "Why don't stop bothe them?"

The men di seem to think it a bother. After a Mother if she sure she didn't m they followed boys out to the lawn, and picked for a game of t football. All the played except Yoyogo, who said have to watch he learned the r

Tom was cu the grass up f and walked ov join the Japanes the side lines. don't like exe Mr. Yoyo?" he a

"I like it," Yoyogo said. "I never played bef

"If you like cise," said Tom, going to learn some motion study about cutting gr

They walked over to the lawn mower Tom explained that his method was t one row up, and then one row back, and one row up again.

"Very ingenious," Mr. Yoyogo told with a straight face. "Now in Japan we thought of that. We cut one row up, carry the lawn mower on our shoulders to where we started, and cut anothe up."

"There's a lot of things I can learn Tom assured him. "Why don't you try way, and see how it works?"

The Japanese, who really did like exe started out with the lawn mower. To down on the grass, to give instructions i Yoyo should get mixed up and hois lawn mower up on his shoulders.

Mother, Miss Lies and the girls can and sat in the hammocks on the side where they could watch the football Mother held Jane on her lap, and d socks. Miss Lies showed Ernestine Martha a new way to roll up their hair

Mr. Bruce called his team back i huddle and explained that the next would be a long pass to Bill, in the end The Englishman, who was backing u line of the opposing team, slapped his s ting linemen on the part of the anatom was nearest him, and urged them to fiercely.

Tom was half asleep, dragging lently on a cigarette, in the front yard Yoyogo, having sheared the front gra perfection, guided the lawn mower lutely toward the back yard, where the was nearly six inches high.

(Continued on Page 95)

United States Testing Co. proves—

INVISIBLE PLAYTEX® LIVING GIRDLE Gives More Figure Control with Greater Freedom of Action than girdles costing more than three times as much!

Made of tree-grown liquid latex, PLAYTEX slims you naturally, without a single seam, stitch or bone. It fits invisibly under all clothes, and washes in seconds, dries with a towel.

"You can't buy a better girdle for three times the price!" say the makers of Playtex. As proof, they authorized the laboratories of famous United States Testing Co., Inc. to test the Playtex Living Girdle against girdles costing up to $15!

To maintain strict impartiality, six large New York department stores were asked by consumers to send a girdle, costing about $15, which, in the stores' opinions, offered "the most figure-control." Each store sent a different girdle—ranging in price from $14.09 to $15.00.

Playtex proved 40% lighter and demonstrated 60% more freedom of action than the average of all other girdles. Yet Playtex alone contained more power control material than the total power control material in all six other girdles combined! And Playtex was the only girdle you could wash in ten seconds, pat dry with a towel!

Try Playtex. You'll agree—it does more for you than any other girdle in the world!

In SLIM, silvery tubes,
PLAYTEX LIVING GIRDLES . . . . . $3.50 to $3.95

In SLIM, shimmering Pink Tubes,
PLAYTEX PINK-ICE GIRDLES . . . . $3.95 to $4.95

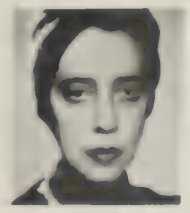
Sizes: extra-small, small, medium, large
Extra-large size slightly higher

o Wonder Leading rench and American esigners Acclaim PLAYTEX®!

ANTHONY BLOTTA, New York originator: "Playtex gives a lithe silhouette, fits invisibly under the slimmest clothes."



PIERRE BALMAIN, Paris designer: "Playtex is perfect, it gives one the line, the slimness and above all the freedom."

ADELE SIMPSON, of New York City: "Playtex allows freedom of action, gives you grace as well as slenderness."

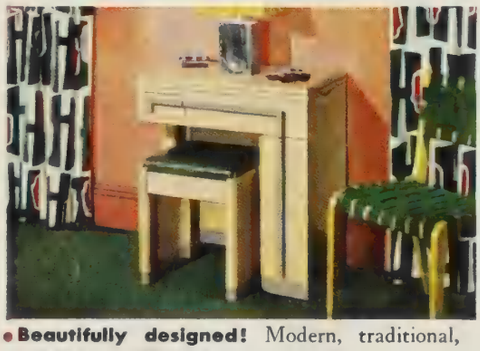
MME. SCHIAPARELLI. "This season the silhouette is slenderer than ever. You must be, too—and you can, with Playtex!"

PAULINE TRIGERE, winner of Fashion Critics Award: "Every woman can have this lithe, slender silhouette with a Playtex."

INTERNATIONAL LATEX CORPORATION

Playtex Park ©1950 Dover Del.

A back-to-school wardrobe at wonderful savings!



IT'S EASY WITH A NEW SINGER SEWING MACHINE

• You can make the prettiest clothes for less than half what they'd cost to buy! It's wonderfully easy with one of the new SINGER* Sewing Machines. Smoothest-running, finest-stitching ever.

• Prices start low! Only $89.50 for a budget portable. Above is medium-priced model. You can buy any new SINGER on easy terms and receive a liberal trade-in allowance on your old machine.

• Beautifully designed! Modern, traditional, portable—you'll find a style that's perfect for your home. Every one built with the dependability that's made SINGER the favorite for 99 years.

• Extra values! You get course in home dressmaking or decorating under personal instructors at your SINGER SEWING CENTER, plus basic set of timesaving attachments with your new machine.

The vest, skirt, and blouse shown a are made from Advance Pattern # available in sizes 4 to 12.

Only SINGER gives you all these advantages!

- Always-available service! No matter where you move—how many years from now—you can always get parts and service from any of a thousand and one SINGER SEWING CENTERS, coast to coast.
- Famous SINGER Course in home dressmaking or decorating is given with new machine. Personal instruction by expert SINGER teachers.
- Lifetime dependability! Many SINGERS are handed down to second, even third generations.
- Stitching perfection on any fabric, from organdy sheer to heavy corduroy.
- Sew at any speed! Latest models go forward and backward; sew over pins, save basting.
- Non-glare SINGERLIGHT to illuminate work.
- Easy dials to adjust tension and stitch length.
- Quiet SINGER* Motor, fully enclosed, A-C or D-C.
- World's most beautiful cabinets. Styles to fit any home. Matching stools available.
- Basic set of timesaving attachments comes with every machine. Others available to handle every tricky detail—buttonholing, invisible hemming, zigzagging, hemstitching.

• Conveniences! SINGER SEWING CENTERS will cover buttons, make belts. And they carry the best notions in town. Everything from pins to the new SINGER Sewing Book with 1000 illustrations.

* FOR YOUR PROTECTION SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade Mark and the "SINGER SEWING CENTER" emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers, or other outlets.

At right is SINGER SEWING CENTER at 420 E. Capitol St., Jackson, Miss. Hundreds more from coast to coast. For address nearest you, see classified phone directory under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

*A Trade-Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY Copyright, U. S. A., 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO. All rights reserved for all c

(Continued from Page 92)

Mother told us at supper, after her stu-ents had gone back to New York for the ght, that they had agreed a little exercise eriod every day would be beneficial.

"I want to tell you how much I appreciate our being so co-operative," she said. "I now it's not easy to have strangers running ound the house and yard."

"Aw, that's all right," Bill said.

"And I don't want you girls to think that ou have to change your clothes every after-oon, or you boys to think you have to play otball with them, if you don't want to."

"Will there be tea tomorrow?" Ernestine ked eagerly.

"A little after three o'clock," Mother dded.

"We should be able to start the game by ree-thirty, at the latest," Frank said.

Mother thought one way she might get otion-study contracts was to apply time-ving methods to the kitchen. Manufac-rers would listen to a woman, she believed, nen the subject was home appliances. If e only way to enter a man's field was rough the kitchen door, that's the way e'd enter.

Her students helped her build an electric od mixer, and draw up blueprints for new pes of electric ranges and refrigerators. other planned, on paper, an efficiency-pe kitchenette of the kind used today in a od many apartments. Under her arrange-ent, a person could mix a cake, put it in the en and do the dishes thout taking more than couple of dozen steps.

On the strength of her ueprints, she landed a ntract with a New York ctric concern. The fee as one Dad wouldn't ve considered. But it as the first job Mother d got on her own, and e was proud of it.

Someone in the electric company told the wspapers about the contract. A woman gineer with eleven children was considered od copy. And in 1924 the idea of a scientifi-ly planned kitchen was news.

The company arranged a press co fer-ce for Mother in New York. The resulting ories, besides telling of Mother's plans, naged to give the impression that our chen in Montclair also was a model of ciency.

Actually, the exact opposite was true. Our chen, the one Tom used, was a model of fficiency. Not that there was a hand pump r the sink or a spit to roast fowls on, but was almost that bad. Our house had been lt when the stress was on spaciousness, l the original owner had planned the chen to accommodate three or four vants.

When Tom baked a cake, or baked what said was a cake, he had to walk about f a mile.

The distance from the sink, which was at a kbreaking level, to the old-fashioned gas ge was a good twenty feet. The food was t in a pantry twenty feet from the stove l forty from the sink. And the dishes were butler's pantry, about the same distance ay but in the opposite direction.

E refrigerator was in an alcove by itself. get to it, you had to detour around a nd that held the bird cage, around a table t held Tom's tools, a plumber's friend, stern-story magazines, and back copies the Newark Star-Eagle; and usually nd Mr. Chairman, or Fourteen, or both.

n the strength of the write-ups about the tract, a newsreel man phoned Mother said he'd like to bring a crew to Mont-r to photograph her in her efficiency hen.

I'd love to have you," Mother told him, t you see we haven't set up the efficiency hen yet. All we have are the blueprints."

That's all right," the newsreel man said, 'll just shoot you in your kitchen there he house."

I don't believe that would be exactly able," Mother gulped.

"The public would never know the difference. They don't know one efficiency kitchen from another."

"They don't?" Mother stalled.

"No. And I'm sure that, being an efficiency expert, the kitchen in your home must be pretty much the latest word."

"But what we want," said Mother, "is the very latest word, isn't it? Not just pretty much."

"What we really want, Mrs. Gilbreth, is just some human-interest stuff. Nothing scientific. Just you in the kitchen with the children around."

"I SEE," Mother said brightly, groping desperately for a way out. "Human interest." She thought of Tom's kitchen. Now if what they wanted were only animal interest ——

"We can come out any day this week that's convenient."

"I'm afraid I'm all booked up this week. How about some other time?" Her tone of voice was meant to convey that "some other time like the year after next would be just right."

"We want to get this while the story's still news. It'll be fine publicity for your business. And it will only take a few minutes."

"All right," Mother surrendered. "Let's make it Saturday, then. Say three o'clock Saturday afternoon."

The course wasn't in session on Saturdays and, more important still, Tom would be off duty. Both Dad and Mother had tried in the past to modernize the kitchen, but Tom and his predecessor had been set in their ways. Mother decided that the least said to Tom about the matter, the better.

Women always have to lie about other women to men, or they are called spiteful or jealous. Men won't let women speak the truth.

—VIOLET TWEEDALE:
Mrs. Barrington's Atonement
(J. Long, Ltd.).

She drew up a diagram for our kitchen, and she arranged with a plumber and a gas man to come Saturday to raise the sink and move the range.

Tom usually left the house after lunch Saturdays, and returned early Sunday mornings. This time, Mother gave him the whole day off and he departed shortly after breakfast. He was in a gay, holiday mood. He intimated that a large segment of the female population of West Orange, a town bordering on Montclair where Tom spent most of his time off, was going to be in for a pleasant surprise when he made his appearance four hours ahead of schedule.

The plumber and gas man finished their work by noon. We carried Tom's tools and the reading material down into the cellar, and put the canaries in his room in the attic.

Then Mother made chalk marks on the floor, from her diagram, showing us where she wanted the refrigerator, the table, and a cabinet for food, pans and mixing bowls. We moved them into place, gave the room a scrubbing, and set up a sort of breakfast nook in the unoccupied half of the kitchen, where the stove used to be.

Mother went through the motions of making an apple cake, in a dry run to familiarize herself with the location of everything. She scarcely had to move her feet at all. She could reach each appliance from a spot in the center.

Apple cake, incidentally, was the only dish whose ingredients Mother thoroughly understood. She had grown up in a home where a Chinese chef ruled the kitchen. And she hadn't had time, since her marriage, to learn much about cooking. But apple cake had been one of Dad's favorite dishes, and Mother had memorized the recipe and just how it went together, so she could fix him midnight snacks when he worked late.

When the newsreel crew arrived, we were dressed in our best clothes—especially Ernestine and Martha, who weren't overlooking any bets in case Hollywood was hunting for new talent. While the crew was setting up lights in the parlor, the man in charge explained what he wanted.

The idea was that Mother would be playing the piano, and we'd be grouped around

(Continued on Page 97)

See it! Try it! The all-new SINGER CLEANER with Dual Suction

This wonderful, easy-to-use, new SINGER Vacuum Cleaner is first to bring you two fans...for the greatest dirt-getting action ever! Call your SINGER SEWING CENTER for a free, home demonstration.

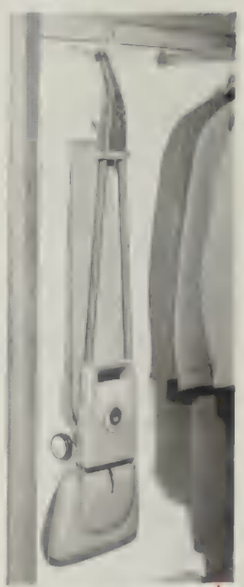
SO EASY TO OWN!
Only $7.95 down
BALANCE AS LOW AS $5.00 PER MONTH
LIBERAL ALLOWANCE ON YOUR PRESENT CLEANER

So Easy To Use—thanks to all these marvelous SINGER extras!

Magic Handle! A completely new vacuum cleaner design that puts all controls at finger-tip reach.

No unwinding of cord! Gives you extra cord as needed—gets it out of the way as you clean.

More cleaning power when you need it! Two-speed switch for heavy and light cleaning.



No more foot-pedal acrobatics! Touch the trigger—and adjust handle to any position.

Exclusive "floating" brush gently loosens deep imbedded dirt. Adjusts automatically to most any rug thickness.

Easy to carry with sideway hand-grip. Soft Vinylite bumper cannot mar furniture.

Gets under furniture—easily. Housing unit is only 5 inches high.

So easy to store! Hangs flat against wall. Ideal for small homes.

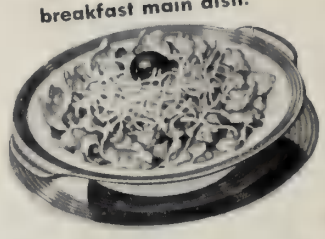
For your protection SINGER sells and services its Sewing Machines, Vacuum Cleaners, and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" Trade-mark and the SINGER SEWING CENTER emblem on the window, and never through department stores, dealers or other outlets.

SINGER* Vacuum Cleaners are sold only through your...

SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U.S.A., 1949 and 1950, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved for all countries.
*A Trade-mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY



SWEETHEART of a breakfast!

Extra nourishing! Extra good! And the freshest Corn Flakes of all!

Ready in 2 shakes

A delicious hearty breakfast main dish!

Shake in . . . Kellogg's Corn Flakes

Shake on . . . shredded coconut

Trimmings . . . maraschino cherry

or . . . dab of jelly or jam

P.S. Nothing to cook and mighty nourishing!

Save-you suggestion: A "breakfast supply shelf" in a handy location— keep cereals, jams, canned juices, coffee together. Saves time and trit-tr

• • •

Enjoys tour. Mrs. June Regnier of Salem, Mass. is a bacteriologist (and now the bride of a physician). After her trip through the Kellogg plant, she writes, "My, you people are perfect housekeepers . . a spotless factory!"

• • •

No breakfast is no-go for losing weigh says Reader's Digest reporting on tes with women university students. A the hidden hunger caused by skippi breakfast causes tired mind, body a nerves. You look better and feel bett on a nourishing breakfast!

• • •

Mother! On the breakfast table, set u a tray with sugar bowl, salt 'n' pepp silver, paper napkins. Spin-the-tray service helps everybody help himself!

• • •

Tops for topping. "For extra-crisp top, bake lots Kellogg's Corn Flakes Tuna-Mushroom Casser My 3 children love i suggests Mrs. Bernice Brecke of Minneapo Minn. P.S. Marvelous on macaroni-a cheese or any creamy-type baked di

• • •

No duds in Kellogg's VARIETY PA Your pick of 7 real favorites! An out of the 10 boxes are Kel-Bowl-Pa which kids love to eat out of!

• • •

"Signature" Silverware goes with her sterling! "Harmonizes so beautifully, I want more!" writes Mrs. Betty Seemann of Whittier, Calif.

Sing a song of breakfast,
Of corn and rice and wheat—
Crispy packs of nourishment,
And all so good to eat!

10-box choice of 7 cereal favorites

Kellogg's
Mother knows Best!

BEGIN THIS LOVELY SET—your initial on each piece!

Get 4 "Signature" teaspoons of heavy silverplate for only 75¢ and white-star end from Kellogg's VARIETY. Package-insert describes offer. With teaspoons you get a list of matching pieces and prices. Start your set now singing. Mother would turn and ask a question, and we'd lick our lips and rub our stomachs. The scene then would shift to the kitchen, where Mother would be making something with a minimum of motions. And the finale would be in the parlor again, where we'd be eating what she had cooked.

(Continued from Page 95)

"Is there something you can make that won't take too long?" he asked Mother.

"I think so," she said.

"How about chicken chop suey?" asked Bill.

"Or blueberry pie," said Frank.

"I don't believe there is a blueberry in the house," Mother smiled.

"There are apples, though," said Ernestine, coming to her rescue.

"Apples?" said Bill, as if he were reading a part in which he had been carefully coached. "That sounds simply capital."

"Bully," said Frank in the same tone of voice. "I have a suggestion to make, Mother. Why don't you make us an apple cake, for a change?"

"Cease and desist," Mother laughed. "The children are teasing me," she explained. "I'm really not much of a cook. Apple cake is about the extent of my repertoire."

The newsreel man said he was sure Mother was being too modest, and that apple cake would be splendid.

The scene in the parlor went fine. Of course the movies were silent, and everything was done in pantomime. Then we adjourned to the kitchen, and the men were impressed with the arrangement of the appliances.

"I don't see why you hesitated a minute about having pictures made of this," the man in charge said. "Women are going to go crazy when they see this setup."

"Of course the range isn't what it should be, and neither is the refrigerator," Mother explained. "I want a range that stands up high, so you don't have to bend over to see what's in the oven. And I want a refrigerator that you don't have to lean into."

The lights were adjusted, and Mother stood in the center of the working space. She lighted the oven. She pared and cored the apples with a gadget Mr. Yoyogo had made for her. She mixed and sifted the dry ingredients, and she greased the pan. So far, not more than four or five steps. The camera had wound away.

WHEN she opened the refrigerator door, reached in, and picked up two eggs with one hand, and a bottle of milk with the other. Just as she started to bring them out, Fourteen appeared from under a table, and jumped. She landed on the small of Mother's back. "Eyow!" Mother screamed. She threw her hands up over her head, and scattered dairy products from the breakfast nook to the butler's pantry.

"Cut," roared the head of the newsreel crew. "What goes on here?"

"Who did that?" Mother shouted accusingly to Frank and Bill. "It's all right to tease, but Mercy Maude!"

Fourteen strutted across the top of the refrigerator, obviously proud of herself. Mother looked at the cat as if trying to decide whether to wring her neck now, or wait until the company had gone.

"I'm sorry, boys," she said. "I should have known you wouldn't have done it, at a time like this."

We couldn't help giggling. And the cameramen, who had been trying not to laugh, exploded.

"Down, Fourteen," said Mother, still a little indignant and making an ineffectual swipe or two at the cat. "Down, I say, sir." Fourteen, who knew Mother well enough to be certain nothing would come from the swipes, continued strutting. Mother reached over the sink to the shelf where Tom kept his Quinine Remedy, and the cat jumped down and slunk out of the room.

Mother started chuckling herself, and then she had an awful thought. A few years before, a newsreel company had taken some pictures of us at the dinner table in Nantucket. When they were released they were preceded by a caption saying, "The family of Frank B. Gilbreth, timesaver, eats dinner." Then the action was projected at about ten times the normal speed, while the theater audiences howled.

"I WANT you to promise me," Mother said to the men in charge, "that you won't show the part with the cat."

"Good night, lady, I know you've got eleven mouths to feed," he protested. "I wouldn't do you like that." He kept his word too.

Ernestine and Martha mopped up the eggs and milk, and Mother started in again, at the point where she leaned into the refrigerator.

Tom picked that particular Saturday to return early from West Orange. It always made him nervous, anyway, to be away from the younger children for too long, since he was convinced no one else looked after them properly. He also was sure that, as soon as he left the house, we turned his room and kitchen upside down, looking for candy or for future surprises that he might have hidden from us. Having left home earlier than usual, he apparently had decided that he'd better get back earlier, too, and check up on us.

A pupil was having trouble with punctuation and was being called down by the teacher.

"Never mind, sonny," said a visiting school-board president, consolingly. "It's foolish to bother about commas. They don't amount to much, anyway."

"Elizabeth Ann," said the teacher quietly to a small girl in the class, "please write this sentence on the board: 'The president of the board says the teacher is misinformed.' Now," she continued, "put a comma after 'board' and another after 'teacher'!"

He came in the back door just as Mother was putting her cake in the oven. His first glance at the rearranged kitchen confirmed everything he had suspected. He stood there glowering until the final cut.

"Oh, good afternoon, Tom," Mother said guiltily as she stepped out of the work space.

"What's happened to my kitchen?" Tom demanded. "And who scared my cat so she won't come into the house?"

Mother wanted to get the cameramen out of there before Tom said any more about the kitchen being rearranged. "If you gentlemen will just step into the parlor," she told them, trying to push them through the door.

"And where are my birds at?" asked Tom. "You know I can't do no cooking without my birds."

"I'll tell you about it later, Tom," Mother said firmly. "This way, gentlemen, please."

The cameramen, who were picking up their lights and other equipment, were frankly intrigued.

"This is Tom, our cook," Mother finally introduced him. "We couldn't get along without Tom, could we, children?"

"You're going to have to get along without me," Tom sulked, "if someone don't help me move my stove and freeze box back across the room where they belong."

"All right, Tom," Mother gave in.

"I ain't going to work all hemmed up like that," Tom pouted, half apologetically. "I ain't no midget, you know."

Mother's course recessed for the Christmas holidays. Anne arrived home from college December nineteenth, and Al Lynch came to visit Ernestine the following day.

Ernestine had spent the preceding month instructing us how to behave in his presence. No one was to start eating at mealtimes until everyone was served. Frank was not to forget to help Mother into her chair. Martha was to refrain from discussing the cost of various items on the menu. Mother was to be sure Bob and Jane didn't go around the house with their rompers unhinged. All the

(Continued on Page 99)

Sue never worried about her floors—believed they'd stay bright and gleaming with occasional dusting! She didn't realize that floors take more punishment than any other part of the house.

Sue got a scare one day, watching her floors take a terrific beating from scuffing feet. Worn spots were beginning to show—the finish was wearing through because it was unprotected.

"It's not too late," her mother said. "Use genuine Johnson's Wax—Paste or Liquid. There's nothing like it to beautify your floors and give them lasting protection from ugly floor wear."

Now Sue knows that with a gleamin coat of Johnson's Wax on her floors, it' the wax that takes the wear! Floors ar far more lustrous and will never nee costly refinishing!

It took the threat of floor wear to teach Sue floor care!

It's so easy with a Johnson's Wax Beautiflor Electric Polisher! You can rent one almost everywhere—available in 50,000 stores. Or buy one for $44.50.

Floors stay like new when protected with a gleaming "carpet" of genuine wax!

When you use genuine wax—Johnson's Wax—it's the wax that takes the wear, protecting the floor underneath!

Scuffing feet can't mar the gleaming, genuine wax finish. Dirt and water don't penetrate the hard protective wax film. A dry mop whisks dust away. Wood floors never need costly refinishing. And linoleum lasts 6 to 10 times longer!

Nothing else gives floors such lasting beauty and protection as genuine Johnson's Wax. It takes a little more time to use than "short-cut" polishes and cleaners, but you need apply it far less often. If you are particular about your home, you just can't afford to use anything but genuine Johnson's Wax.

Johnson's Wax comes in two forms—Paste and Liquid. Paste is more economical, because highly concentrated. Liquid is easier to use and contains an efficient cleaning ingredient. Both protect and beautify your floors with a hard, lustrous film of genuine wax. Get some—see what genuine Johnson's Wax will do for your floors!

For lasting beauty and protection insist on genuine

Johnson's WAX

(Paste or Liquid)

For advice on any floor care problem, write to Consumer Service Dept., S. C. Johnson & Son, Inc., Racine, Wis.

© S. C. JOHNSON & SON, INC., Racine, Wis., 1950 "Johnson's" is a registered trademark oys were to give Al top priority in their athroom.

(Continued from Page 97)

"All I'm asking," Ern kept telling us, "is hat for four days you try to make believe hat we're reasonably civilized."

It seemed like a fair-enough request. Our rst impression of Al had not been favorble. But first impressions often are unrelible, and if Ernestine had her heart set on npressing him, we thought the least we uld do was co-operate.

"We're going to try to make everything go noothly," Mother promised her. "Now n't you worry, dear."

Frank and Bill moved out of their bedom, and doubled up with Fred and Dan. nne and Martha helped Ernestine change e sheets on one of the beds, clean the room, d stow away radio parts, arrowheads, ckey sticks, some things in glass jars coining formaldehyde, and other miscellanea. ne girls also cleaned the parlor, since Ern anned a buffet supper so that her Montclair ends could meet Al.

We knew Al was driving down from colge, and we expected he'd arrive in an old odel T, probably with writing on the body. e were sitting in the dining room, just fining lunch, when a new, 1925 Packard adster pulled into the driveway. There was writing on it, except for the initials A. L. six-inch letters on the doors. Behind the heel, wearing the most luxurious raccoon at we had even seen, was Al.

"That coat," Martha whistled, "cost six ndred dollars if it cost a nickel. And goodss knows what a Packard costs."

"Don't you ask him hat it cost, either!" Erstine warned.

"You can count on me act civilized," Frank d Ernestine. "If you can d him, none of us will er have to work."

"Get away from those ndows," begged Ernese, who herself was peeking from behind urtain. "Golly, look at that catsy car!"

"Everybody sit down," Mother ordered. Where are your manners?"

We came back to the table and heard Tom to answer the doorbell. A moment later he ened the door from the front hall into the ing room, and stuck in his head.

"It's for you, Princess," he announced. nd from the coat he's wearing, it's a good ng nobody ain't out hunting today in the al woods."

"That will do, Tom," Mother said sternly.

"Henc, henc," Tom wheezed. "I seen him ore at Nantucket."

Ernestine glared at him and put her foreger to her lips, but tried to laugh gaily.

"When he came in," said Tom, "I ast him six cans of peas. He jumped and said, s, sir, anything else?' Henc, henc."

"It's so amusing to have Tom around, n't you think?" Ernestine said loudly. Will you be good enough to excuse me for inute, Mother dear? I'll just run out and who it is."

"Bring him right in," Mother told her. erhaps he'd like some dessert."

ERNESTINE walked to the dining-room door. Why, it's Al!" she exclaimed. "How delitful!" She closed the door behind her, d we heard some running in the hall.

"I didn't know he came from a wealthy mily," Anne whispered.

"He wrote Ern about it," Martha exined. "His father sold his produce busis and bought some stocks."

Ern and Al appeared in the dining room h their arms around each other's waists. ad hung up his raccoon coat and pork-pie , and there was a ring around his patentther hair where the hatband had rested.

"We'll leave your suitcases and ukulele in hall," Ern told him. "I'll see that our n takes them up to the guest room." She nced apprehensively toward the butler's ntry, but Tom was fortunately in the then, out of earshot.

Just as at Nantucket, Al still seemed a lit too collegiate. Only now he also seemed a little too opulent. His clothes were new, extreme and expensive. His plus-eight knickers hung almost to his shoes, and a jeweled tie pin sparkled above the neck of his blue-and-white-checked sweater. Al was smiling, and very handsome. He considered himself well in command of the situation.

"Greetings and salutations, everybody," he said. "Just one great big happy family, eh?"

WE said greetings and we guessed he was right. All the boys stood up—Ernestine had instructed them carefully on that.

"I'd like you to meet my mother," Ernestine said formally. "Mother, may I present Mr. Lynch."

"How do you do, Mr. Lynch," said Mother. "We've all been looking forward to your visit."

"Measured to pleet you," Al chuckled, wringing her hand. "Measured to pleet you. My friends call me Al."

"That's nice," Mother said, favoring him with what was meant to be a cordial smile. But she looked as if she wondered what his enemies called him; and as if, provided they were searching for a word, she might be able to supply it.

"And this is Anne," Ernestine said. "She's just home from Michigan."

"Press the flesh," said Al, pressing it. He didn't exactly go into a clog dance when he put out his hand. But you had the feeling that he might. "Where have you been all my life, baby?"

We thought Anne was going to tell him she had been hiding from him, but instead she swallowed and asked him how things were at Sagiwan Agricultural and Technical.

"Fine and dandy," Al boomed. "Couldn't be better. I guess you read about how we massacred the football team from Wallace Teachers?"

"Isn't that," Anne guessed, "the traditional Turkey Day classic?"

"It sure is," Al agreed. "You read about it, eh?"

"It was splashed all over the front pages of the papers out in Michigan," Anne said innocently. "I wish I had thought to save you the clippings."

Ernestine introduced him to the rest of us, and we all pressed the flesh. He pulled a chair up backward to the table, and sat with his legs straddling the back.

"Did you pipe the chariot?" he asked Ern, pointing nonchalantly, hitchhiker fashion, with his thumb toward the window.

"Why, no," said Ern. "Where is it?" She went to the window. "Gosh, is that yours? Why, isn't that a Packard?"

"A little something the old man gave me for Christmas. Cost more than two thousand beans."

"Does that answer your question?" Anne asked Martha.

"Isn't that grand!" Ernestine exclaimed. But there seemed to be some doubt in her voice.

Al in Montclair, with the family, didn't seem quite so attractive as he had when they were alone in Nantucket.

While he was eating the tapioca Mother served him, Al told us about how he had scored two touchdowns against Wallace Teachers; about how the old man was building a little twenty-room place, that would cost seventy-five thousand beans, on the Niagara River; about how the Tau Tau Taus had stolen a small structure from a farmer's back yard and had put it on the front porch of the Tri-Alph house, just before the guests arrived for the big annual Home-coming swing-out.

We listened, even supplying the necessary polite laughter. But we knew now, if ever there had been any doubt, that he wasn't the man for Ernestine.

Al and Ern decided to go riding in the Packard after lunch. Al was buttoned up snugly in his fur coat, and Ern not so snugly in her wool one. It was below freezing, and

(Continued on Page 102)

In literature as in love, we are astonished at what is chosen by others.

—ANDRÉ MAUROIS:
The Art of Living (Harper & Brothers).

Happiness Ahead for Your Child

. . . if he or she learns to play the piano. The ability to play builds self confidence and poise . . . assures lifelong popularity.

The genuine Betsy Ross Spinet is the perfect instrument for your home because of its musical excellence, enduring craftsmanship and true decorative beauty.

Acclaimed for magnificent tone, responsive touch and rich volume . . . the 88 note Betsy Ross Spinet is America's outstanding piano value.

Dammp-Chaser equipped . . . the exclusive Lester feature that insures regulated moisture control.

Priced from $545.00; model pictured $595.00 f.o.b. Lester, Pa.

See the newest models now . . . your dealer will arrange convenient terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world famed Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price

The LESTER GRAND PIANO is the Official Piano of the Philadelphia Orchestra

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name

Address

City Zone No. State LHJ•5N

Foreign Sales Representatives H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

a beautiful piano with magnificent tone

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

At Last! Flaky, Tender Pie Crust Every Time...with Betty Crocker's Easy NEW

STIR·N·ROLL PASTRY RECIPE

ONCE YOU TRY THIS EXCITING NEW PASTRY RECIPE, YOU CAN FORGET ALL OTHER METHODS FOREVER!

★ No pie-making experience needed!

★ Guaranteed* better than pastry made any other way!

★ So much easier to roll and handle than other methods!

★ Stays fresh and crisp for days!

Something sensational has happened to pastry! The Betty Crocker Staff of General Mills has developed an amazing new recipe using this new combination of ingredients: Gold Medal Flour, salt, cold milk and Wesson Oil. That's all you need.

No tricky steps! "Even my 5-year-old child can make flaky, tender pastry with this new Betty Crocker recipe," says one of the scores of homemakers testing this recipe. You just stir all 4 ingredients together and roll out between waxed paper. That's all you do!

"Just 5 minutes to make!" adds another enthusiastic homemaker. Dough is ready to slip into pie pan . . . far easier than other methods!

See for yourself! Expert or beginner, you can make flaky, tender, golden-brown pastry . . . every single time! Pastry that stays crisp and fresh for days. "Even juicy fruit pies taste just as good the second day!" says another excited homemaker.

Be first to try Betty Crocker's new Stir-N-Roll recipe. Surprise your family tonight with their favorite fruit, berry or cream pie. Wonderful for meat pies, too. Once you try this exciting new recipe, you can forget any other way of making pastry.

GUARANTEE: Full Cost of Ingredients Refunded—If pastry made with Betty Crocker's new Stir-N-Roll recipe, Gold Medal Flour and Wesson Oil is not superior to pastry made with any other recipe, simply itemize cost of ingredients used and send with your letter to General Mills, Dept. 237, 623 Marquette Ave., Minneapolis 2, Minnesota.

"Betty Crocker" and "Kitchen-tested" are reg. trade marks of General Mills. Copyright 1950, General Mills, Inc.

Betty Crocker's STIR-N-ROLL PASTRY RECIPE

(DOUBLE CRUST)

Preheat oven to 425°.

1. Mix together . . . . . 2 cups sifted *Gold Medal Flour
*½ tsp. salt

Add all at once . . . . . ½ cup *Wesson Oil and . . . . . ¼ cup cold whole milk

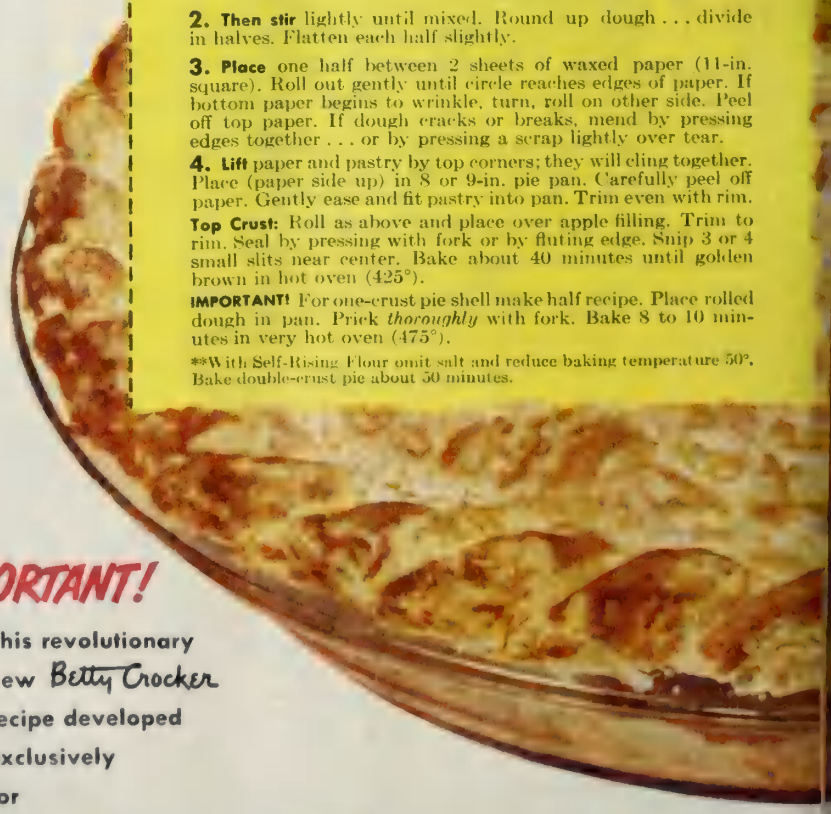
2. Then stir lightly until mixed. Round up dough . . . divide in halves. Flatten each half slightly.



3. Place one half between 2 sheets of waxed paper (11-in. square). Roll out gently until circle reaches edges of paper. If bottom paper begins to wrinkle, turn, roll on other side. Peel off top paper. If dough cracks or breaks, mend by pressing edges together . . . or by pressing a scrap lightly over tear.

4. Lift paper and pastry by top corners; they will cling together. Place (paper side up) in 8 or 9-in. pie pan. Carefully peel off paper. Gently ease and fit pastry into pan. Trim even with rim.

Top Crust: Roll as above and place over apple filling. Trim to rim. Seal by pressing with fork or by fluting edge. Snip 3 or 4 small slits near center. Bake about 40 minutes until golden brown in hot oven (425°).

IMPORTANT! For one-crust pie shell make half recipe. Place rolled dough in pan. Prick thoroughly with fork. Bake 8 to 10 minutes in very hot oven (475°).

With Self-Rising Flour omit salt and reduce baking temperature 50°. Bake double-crust pie about 50 minutes.

BETTY CROCKER PROMISES YOU PERFECT PASTRY ONLY WITH GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

Start with your flour! The Betty Crocker Staff developed this exciting new Stir-N-Roll pastry recipe to make full use of the superior, uniform baking qualities of Gold Medal Flour.

You can count on Gold Medal! Its superb baking qualities never vary. Each cupful always acts exactly the same . . . to help assure perfect Stir-N-Roll pastry every time!

IT MUST BE BETTER—

Women buy more sacks of Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour than the next 5 brands combined IMPORTANT!

This revolutionary new Betty Crocker recipe developed exclusively for

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR

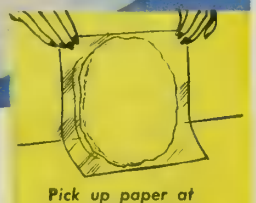
NO cutting in shortening! NO guessing at liquid!

Wesson Oil easier to measure than solid shortening!

evolutionary Recipe!

1 4 simple ingredients: Gold Medal Flour, salt, cold milk and Wesson Oil—all in one bowl. That's all you need!

NO sticky dough! NO risk of overhandling!



Divide pastry. Round halves and flatten slightly.

Nothing easier! Just stir lightly.

2 Dough looks moist, but isn't sticky. Pick up dough and round into ball. Dough is more pliable . . . easier to handle.

NO messy floured board to clean up!

Pick up paper at top corners; dough will stick to paper.

nazing! Roll out between waxed paper.

3 Place one half between two 11-in. squares. Roll out gently until circle reaches edges of paper. Peel off top paper only.

NO dampening! NO difficult sealing!

Mends easily without moistening! Press extra dough lightly over tear.

Pan-ready! Hold paper over pan.

4 Dough clings until you gently loosen into pan. Shape. Trim to rim. Add filling and top crust. Press gently with fork to seal.

AND WESSON OIL

BETTY CROCKER USES WESSON OIL FOR HER THRILLING STIR-N-ROLL PASTRY

You can see why:

- Wesson Oil is pure vegetable oil. Wesson is so light and mild, your pastry is assured delicacy of flavor every time.
- Digestibility is important, too, and when you use Wesson Oil as your shortening, it stands up under highest pie-baking heat. So your pastry's fresh and readily digestible.
- You know that Wesson Oil will always have the same high quality in every bottle.
- It's so easy for you to measure Wesson Oil accurately every time. And there's no "cutting in" when Wesson is your shortening. Just stirs in easily!
- Wesson Oil guarantees you perfect pastry success only when you use Gold Medal Flour and Wesson Oil and follow all directions in Betty Crocker's new STIR-N-ROLL recipe.

Now, make the flakiest pastry ever with Wesson Oil. Get your bottle today!

WOMEN BUY MORE WESSON OIL THAN ANY OTHER BRAND OF SALAD OIL—Famous for delicious salad dressings . . . Chiffon Cakes . . . digestible fried foods . . . and grand waffles, muffins, brownies.

"Wesson Oil" is a registered trade mark of Wesson Oil & Snowdrift Co., Inc.

FREE OFFER BELOW

it's young - it's tenda'

We catch tons and tons O'tuna···but we choose only the young, the tenda' tuna to pack under our renowned Breast-O'-Chicken label. Because O'this···Breast-O'-Chicken is consistently fine in flavor and quality···and so tenda', tin after tin.

See for yourself - reach for Breast-O'-Chicken everytime - get the best O'tuna everytime.

when you'd soona have tuna remember—

BREAST O' CHICKEN

brings you only the BEST O'TUNA

packed in California

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

for over 25 years

It's a picnic... anytime you serve Breast-O'-Chicken this way - Broil 6 wieners over an open fire. Heat 1 can of Mexican beans and 1 tin O' Breast-O'-Chicken tuna together and pour over wieners - Garnish to suit - ah-ah-ah! wait a minute!!!! - Let it cool a bit before you eat it - Get a tin or two O' Breast-O'-Chicken tomorrow···

FREE recipe booklet Write solid pack or chunk pack, and try it!

Westgate-Sun Harbor Co., 1995 Bay Front, Dept. J-5 San Diego 13, California

(Continued from Page 99)

Ern was a little worried about whether she'd be warm enough in the open car.

"It's all right, baby," Al assured her as they said good-by to us in the hall. "If you get cold I'll give you part of my coat—the sleeves."

He threw his arms around her, to demonstrate, and then turned her loose, roared, slapped his knee, and actually nudged Mother.

"I think, Ern," said Mother, wincing and looking as if she'd like to wrap Al's ukulele around his ears, "that you'd better run upstairs and get a blanket."

Ern went and got one, and then they were off to the tune of a horn that played the first bar of Jingle Bells.

"You can see for yourself she's made a terrible mistake," Martha told Mother indignantly. "You're going to have to tell her so."

"I don't think it's fair to judge the boy on such a short acquaintance," Mother said.

"We're trailing by one point," Frank mimicked, "and we're on the thirty-five-yard line——"

"Thirty-five-yard stripe," Martha corrected.

"Stripe," Frank agreed. "I call the signal for a drop kick, and the center ——"

"Pivot man," said Martha.

"And the pivot man looked back like he thought I was crazy. The stands are going wild."

"You stop that," said Mother. "He's Ernestine's friend and he's a guest, and that ought to be enough for all of us."

"It's certainly enough for me," Martha replied. "I'll bet two thousand beans on that!"

"Suppose he should become our brother," Fred said. "How would you like that, Dan?"

"A good question," Martha agreed. "Now go up and wash your mouth out with soap."

We thought Anne, as the oldest, should try to help us make Mother see the light. But Anne merely grinned knowingly at Mother, who tried to avoid her glance.

"We're not going to discuss the matter any more," Mother said. "I want you boys to take his suitcases upstairs, and I don't want anybody to do anything to hurt Ernestine's feelings."

Frank and Bill each took a sticker-spangled suitcase, and Fred followed with the ukulele.

"If Dad were here," Bill said as he deposited the bags at the foot of his bed, "he'd run that sheik out of the house and all the way over the state line."

"When he pulled that stuff about keeping her warm with his sleeves," Frank agreed, "that's when Dad would have swung at him. Mother doesn't understand what things like that can lead to, the way Dad did."

THE boys decided that as the men of the house it was up to them to get rid of Al. Since it was futile to work on Ernestine, the best approach was to do a job on Al.

All the boys took baths that afternoon, and toward the end the hot water gave out. Frank got a screw driver and took the bolt off the boys' bathroom door. Bill opened the bathroom window.

In spite of their coats and the blanket, Ern and Al were blue when they returned home, about half an hour before the supper guests were to arrive. Both hurried upstairs to bathe and dress.

The boys were in Fred and Dan's room, and they heard Al walking around as he unpacked and undressed. Finally they heard him enter the bathroom, experiment the door to see why it wouldn't lock, then slam down the window. The w started to run into the tub.

"We'll wait about three minutes," F chuckled. "Can't you just see him now, s ering, leaning over and running his finge der the faucet, waiting for the water to hot?"

A chilled, unhappy baritone started emerge from the boys' bathroom. Somet about how undergraduates at Sagiwan willing to give their all to the institution, about how other seats of learning w find their lines riddled and their ends flanked. Mr. Lynch apparently was one subscribed to the theory that if you coul lock it, the next best thing was to make a racket that everybody would know it occupied.

THE water in the tub finally stopped ning. The baritone became more chilled unhappy, was choked off entirely in a s dering gasp, and then was breathlessly sumed.

"He's under water," Frank said. ahead, Bill."

Bill walked down the hall to the bath and went in. Al, sitting miserably in a an inch of water, grabbed for a wash when he heard door open, and sp it over himself as he could.

"Br-r-r," shiv Bill. "Why have got the room so c

"Good heav hissed Al. "I tho maybe you were of the girls. For sake, close that d

"Oh, don't about that," said closing it. "No thinks anyth about things like in a large family

"They don't asked dubiously

"Nobody'll any attention to if they walk in, said. "They even notice you the tub."

"You mean may come in?"

Bill shrugged his shoulders. "What you got it so cold for? Is that part training rules?"

"I haven't got it cold on purpose, yo bet your sweet life on that," Al yelped. window was open, and there wasn't a d hot water."

"I believe I'd leave the door open, suggested. "At least until the room up."

"Just leave the door closed. I don't from a large family."

"Suit yourself, then. I'll ask Mot heat some water on the stove and b up."

"Never mind," said Al, who wasn whether Bill meant that he or Mother deliver the water. "I won't be in her long."

Bill helped himself to a glass of wat departed, forgetting to close the door.

"Close that door," Al hollered afte "How many times do I have to tell y

"Okay," said Bill, returning. "Of c if you like it cold in there." He slamm door.

The older boys sent Fred and D gether into the bathroom to wash hands. Neither of them paid any atten Al, who sat muttering in the tub, tr finish his bath and get out.

Then it was Frank's turn. Frank h on one of Martha's dresses, silk sto high-heel shoes and a cloche hat.

"If he knows it's me," Frank said, cold feet, "he may get out of there a me a licking."

"He hasn't been here long enough any of us apart," Bill assured him.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A Dream Within a Dream

By Nancy Byrd Turner

On the old bridge a loitering girl
Has leaned to watch her image gleam
Mysterious, alien, mother-of-pearl,
A dream within a dream.

The long day slowly yields to night,
The sunset and the shadows drown,
And window light by window light
The river takes the town.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BARBECUED RIBS at their best!

Use zesty Lea & Perrins Sauce! That's the seasoning that has been building reputations for "barbecuers" for years! Meat with sauce highly flavored . . . fully enriched with Lea & Perrins Sauce—there's a treat nobody should miss!

LEA & PERRINS Sauce

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

A favorite for over 100 years

REE! Recipe Book. Write Lea & Perrins, Inc. 241 West St. New York 13, Dept. L-9.

SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS

SUPERB SATIN VELOUR ■ METALLIC

Show rich New Cards never before offered .. Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with Name 50 for $1 up. 80 Assortments. Personalized Book Matches and Stationery. Gift Items. Samples ■■ approval. IMPRINTS FREE. Write now!

50 FOR $1 With Name FREE Samples

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 013-L, St. Louis 3, Mo.

RITZ CLOTHS

won't Stretch or Sour

RITZ

Since 1692

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose at your local department or hardware store

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 72 Franklin St., N. Y. 13

y to earn extra money. All you need is pare time and samples of PHILLIPS as Cards and Gift Items to show nds! Beautiful designs, w ideas, big values orders AVE $50.00 FOR YOU!

Just sell 100 gorgeous 21-Card $1 Assortments. Make up to 50c per box on quick sales! Also show Gift Wraps, Everyday Cards, Name-rinted Christmas Cards as low as 50 for $1. New 's Books, Address Book, and over 70 fast selling cluding many gift items for all members of the fam- xperience needed. Extra Profit Bonus Plan! FREE shows you how! Coupon brings you ng you need to start you at once. Send y.

MAIL COUPON!

LIPS CARD CO. unt St., Newton, Mass. Rush FREE Booklet and Imprint Samples, and Assortments on approval.

.....

ss.....

.....Zone.....State.....

we hear you holler, we'll all come running. We can handle him."

"Just to be safe," Frank insisted, "get the hockey sticks."

Frank entered the bathroom. As he heard the door open, Al made another precautionary grab for the washcloth. "Yipe," he screamed, when he saw the female garb. He tried to submerge all of himself under the surface of the water, but the one-inch level in the tub offered slight protection.

"Oh, hello there, big boy," said Frank, waving effeminately. "Did you have a nice ride? I'll only be a jiffy." He hurried to the sink and got a glass of water, drank it, and started out.

"Hey, wait a minute," Al growled. "I know you. You think you're pretty smart, don't you?" He made a grab, but Frank got by the tub and out into the hall. Al didn't follow him.

Ernestine knew about there not being any hot water, because she had taken a bath herself. She was furious, but her guests started arriving and she had no opportunity to take the boys to task.

Ernestine answered the door and showed her friends into the parlor. There were about twenty of them. We knew them all, and liked them. We pulled back the rugs and started the phonograph.

Al was a little late coming downstairs. It may have been that he was hunched over a radiator, or it may have been that his wardrobe took a good while to adjust, or that he had to change his hair oil.

Ernestine's girl friends kept telling her they were dying to meet Al, and her boy friends said they wanted to meet the out-of-town sheik who had cut them out. None of them had failed to notice the Packard, parked out in front, and they were impressed.

Al finally made his entrance. All the other boys had on suits, but Al apparently preferred sweaters and plus eights. He had his ukulele with him, and his life-of-the-party smile. He walked over and turned off the phonograph. Everybody stopped dancing, and he had the center of the stage.

"Greetings and salutations, guys and gals," he said, without waiting to be introduced. And this time he actually did do a clog step, ending up on one knee, like Al Jolson. "A little number," said Ernestine's Al, "entitled I Used to Shower My Sweetie With Presents, But it Ain't Gonna Rain No More." He threw back his head and started to strum the uke and to sing, "Dew ackker dew ackker dew, vo doe dee oh doe."

THERE was no doubt he could play the ukulele, all right. And his baritone was much better than in the icy bathtub. But you just couldn't start out a party that way, even in the Jazz Age. Maybe after midnight, after everybody had got to know him better, it might have gone over.

Ern's guests stood there woodenly, looking first at her and then at Mother, who was sitting near the fireplace with some knitting. No matter what Mother may have felt, she showed no disapproval.

Ernestine tried to help her beau. She started to Charleston alongside of him, and shouted, "Come on, everybody." She even licked first her right thumb and then her left, in a series of windmill gyrations known as pickin' cherries.

But it still didn't go over. And the worst of it was that everyone except Al realized exactly what Ern was doing and why she was doing it. They were pulling for her. Some of her girl friends started to Charleston alongside her. And some of the boys began to sing along with Al.

"A little number," said Al, "entitled When Bathing Girls Take up Aviation, I Want to be There at the Takeoff." He laughed and strummed. You had to admit he was handsome. "Dew ackker dew ackker dew."

Ernestine was flushed and out of breath. She knew she couldn't stand another number, no matter how little. "First, Al," she begged, "please get up off your knees and let me introduce you."

"I already introduced myself, baby," Al protested. He got up, nevertheless.

National Cherry Pie Champion Wins with Armour Star Lard!

Indiana High School Girl Reveals Secret Of Her Success

When Jacqueline Hanneman, 17, of Indianapolis won the National Cherry Pie Baking Contest in Chicago this year, it was proof again that Armour Star Lard is the Magic Ingredient of pie champions everywhere.
Here is the prize-winning recipe for

JACKY'S CHERRY PIE CRUST:

1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
½ cup Armour lard ¾ teaspoon salt
¼ cup cold milk

Sift flour and salt. Cut in half the lard to consistency of cornmeal. Cut in remaining half to size of peas. Work in milk with a fork. Roll half at ■ time to make two crusts.

FILLING:

3 cups frozen cherries
1 cup granulated sugar
5 tablespoons pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt ¼ teaspoon almond extract
1 teaspoon butter

Thaw cherries almost completely. Drain. If thawed completely, use ¼ cup cherry juice. Mix sugar, flour and salt. Add to cherries. Add extract. Pour into pastry-lined pan. Dot with butter. Cover with top crust, slit. Bake 45 to 50 minutes at 400° F.

Miss Hanneman, who has won several other contests and first prize at last year's Indiana State Fair, uses Armour Star Lard regularly. She says: "It takes lard to make a pie crust really tender and flaky and it's the crust that makes the pie!"

Yes, lard is the Magic Ingredient of the champions. And the champion of all lards is Armour—America's leading lard—America's perfect pie lard. This finer lard blends faster and easier than any other—and works wonders with hot breads and fried foods, as well as pies.

Furthermore, every ingredient in Armour Lard is U. S. Government Inspected. So take a tip from the experts, and make your pies, hot breads, and fried foods doubly delicious with Armour Lard. Look for Armour Pure Lard, in the self-measuring green-and-white carton, in your grocer's shortening section today!

For a free booklet of MARIE GIFFORD'S choice baking recipes using lard, write Dept. 444, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

ARMOUR Star Lard

. . . the pure lard that stays fresh without refrigeration

MARIE GIFFORD'S famous 5-minute pie-crust RECIPE ON THE PACKAGE

The sweetest song we've ever sung: The 1950 Pack of Green Giant Brand Peas is In! Tender, thin-skinned darlin's with special flavor farmed right into 'em. Snatched from the pod at their one fleeting moment of perfect flavor. Brought to you with the dewy, vine-fresh flavor still clinging to them. Grab yourself a basketful today!

Green Giant Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota. Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. "Green Giant" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. © G.G.Co.

"This is Mr. Lynch," Ern said, beginning to make the rounds. "He's visiting us for a few days, and we're having a peachy time."

"Meased to pleet you," grinned Al. He pressed the flesh.

Ern relieved him of his ukulele and put it on the back of the piano, where she hoped he wouldn't find it. Al drifted from group to group, listening to conversations about New York band leaders, Princeton and Dartmouth, new musical comedies, and happenings in Montclair. At first he tried to hold his own in the small talk, but no one seemed interested in hearing about the annual classic involving Wallace Teachers.

Even before supper was served, Al decided he had had enough of the party. "Listen," he said, getting Ern into a corner, "get me out of here. Let's go for a ride or something."

"You know I can't leave now."

"What's the matter with your friends, anyway? Why don't they wake up?"

"Nothing's the matter with them," Ernestine said hotly. "It's you. You're acting like a fish out of water."

"I am, eh? Well, even a fish wouldn't dare go in the water around this house. In the first place, he'd freeze to death."

"I'm sorry about the hot water. But that's no excuse for you to act like you've been doing."

"And in the second place, a lot of wise guys would run him crazy parading around his goldfish bowl."

"What," said Ernestine, putting her hands belligerently on her hips, "do you mean by that crack?"

"I suppose you don't know your brothers keep parading in and out of the bathroom?"

"How would I know about that?" Ernestine asked. "And why didn't you lock the door?"

"And one of your brothers," said Al, ignoring the questions, "dressed up like a girl."

"No," moaned Ernestine. "Oh, no!" Then she started to giggle. "That must have been Frank or Bill. They're wise guys, all right."

"Just wait till I get my hands on them."

"It must have been kind of funny at that," Ernestine laughed, putting her hand on his arm. "Poor Al. What did you do?"

"It may seem like a joke to you," said Al, tilting up his nose, "but I found it typical of everything around here, including your friends."

"And how have you found everything around here?" Ernestine demanded.

"In bad taste. Extremely bad taste."

Considering the source, Ernestine thought that was one of the nicest compliments she had ever heard. She took off the Tau Tau Tau fraternity pin and handed it to him, and Al went up to get his bags. While he was upstairs, she took his ukulele from the back of the piano, and put it with his raccoon coat. Then she went into the darkened dining room, closed the door, and watched through a curtain as he got in his car and drove off to the tune of Jingle Bells.

There wasn't much satisfaction, she thought, in the knowledge that time heals all wounds. If she could just be sure that time wounded all heels. . . .

After Al left, the party was a big success. One of Ern's friends from Dartmouth monopolized most of her evening. Everyone seemed to understand about Al. No one asked where he'd disappeared to.

We didn't have much money to spend for Christmas, but it always was the most important day of the year in our house, and Mother intended to make it so again this year.

"I'd much rather have something you made especially for me, like a calendar or a desk blotter, than anything expensive from the store," she told us. "The best present of all is something given with love and affection."

We had been saving our allowances ever since summer, so there wasn't any real danger that we were going to have to rely exclusively on blotters and calendars. Ernestine and Martha now had lun jobs as cashiers in the high-school caf and Frank and Bill had been doing work for neighbors.

A good many tree decorations from ous years were stored in the attic Mother knew there was happiness in pation of something pleasant, so she e aged us to make fathom after fathom per chains from colored advertisemen illustrations that she'd clip out of mag

It was customary for each member family to give individual presents other members. But as fights and argu occurred, the gift list of each of us see become considerably shortened.

From the point of view of morals, life seems to be divided into two periods. In the first, we indulge; in the second, we preach.
—WILL DURANT.

Almost every argument between T giving Day and Christmas ended wi announcement that the two partic were irrevocably severing Yuletide rel and cutting each other off without sc as a blotter.

"Just for that," one participant shout, "you're off my Christmas li ever. I'm taking the present I had f right back to the store."

"I wasn't going to give you any anyway," the other participant wou low. "Besides, that's the fourth tin week you've taken me off your list."

Of course all was forgotten and fo by Christmas. But if one had kept t would have appeared that only Moth certain of getting presents from any o

In a good many families, the paren the tree on Christmas Eve, and surpr children the next morning. Mother ar thought this was things in reverse the parents had bo fun of trimming watching the loo pleased surprise. house, the chi trimmed the tree, a parents were surpri

Mother was b from the parlor day before Christmas. She wasn't e lowed to witness the arrival of th which was brought home on Fred's wagon and smuggled in through the b door.

We trimmed the tree that night, Mother worked alone in her office. W carols as we weaved on the tinsel and paper chain from the mantel to the c lier.

Mother's office was separated fr parlor by a large sliding door, and som we'd hear her soprano joining in. We thought of Mother as being loneson more. But perhaps she was loneson Christmas Eve.

In a big family, the Santa Claus often leaks pretty far down the line. N anybody deliberately gives it away, cause too many lay it on too heavily remain plausible. In our family, on and Jane were believers, and even th confused by all the conflicting infor heaped upon them.

Nevertheless, all of us hung up our ings. After Bob and Jane went Mother filled our stockings and w hers. We carried our stockings to h then brought them back again whe were filled, since she wasn't allowed parlor.

With the bulging stockings hanging fireplace, we surveyed our night's w found it good.

"The whole room," Jack sighed h "looks just like Woolworth's, only ev ter."

We usually had trouble going t Christmas Eve. But once we droppe customarily slept soundly until ab o'clock, when Mother and the young would rout the rest of us out of bed.

That Christmas Eve, Martha was and couldn't go to sleep at all. Abo o'clock, she heard some tiptoeing stairs and a light click on. Martha w few minutes, and then put on a bathr

(Continued on Page 106)

Beatrice Cooke's Mealtime Adventures

FOR SEPTEMBER: How to make cottage cheese potato salad . . . brown gravy . . . steak with garlic bread.

Let's have a Picnic!

his is the best of all seasons to take to the woods! ot only to escape Labor Day's heat, but, later, to enjoy ıe gold-and-scarlet mystery of dreamy Indian Summer! hope you have many grand outings this Fall. And ere's a little gift from me to put in your picnic basket:

Meadow Gold Cottage Cheese Potato Salad cups cooked, diced potatoes cup diced celery

tbsp. chopped green pepper
tbsp. chopped pimiento
tbsp. chopped onion
tbsp. chopped pickle
1 cup Meadow Gold Salad Dressing
1 tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
1 tsp. dry mustard
1 tbsp. lemon juice
1 cup Meadow Gold Cottage Cheese

ombine potatoes, celery, green pepper, pimiento, onion and ckle. Blend salad dressing, seasonings, and lemon juice. ur over potato mixture. Add cottage cheese and toss lightly. ill. Garnish with hard-cooked egg slices and paprika. akes 6 to ■ servings.

r this recipe, I'm fortunate enough to be able to get EADOW GOLD COTTAGE CHEESE and SALAD DRESSING— d I hope you are, too! For MEADOW GOLD COTTAGE IEESE is creamed—which gives it a marvelously soft, t firm, texture. And it has an especially fresh, delicate flavor I know you'll find delightful. Discover MEADOW GOLD SALAD DRESSING, too. Just one taste and you'll know it has the quality fine salads deserve!

TAILORING TELLS

Certainly a smart suit distinguishes a smart woman. And just so, every now and then, a distinctive package may identify a truly outstanding product. I'm thinking now of MEADOW GOLD ICE CREAM AND SHERBETS and their gay new picture packages. When you see big, golden oranges on a MEADOW GOLD ORANGE SHERBET package, they tell you that here's a sherbet made with natural orange. And when MEADOW GOLD fresh fruit ice creams are in season, you can tell them by the tempting fruit pictures. Look for the picture packages, do. They tell at a glance that the product inside is MEADOW GOLD—and your money's worth in quality!

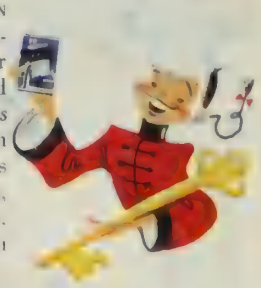
Who is

Kahoka Janet Xenia?

Two hints: 1) She was born near Bicknell, Indiana and 2) her greatest contribution has been in the field of child nutrition. Give up? Well, K. J. Xenia is a beautiful, sweet-natured Grand Champion Jersey Cow! And she's important to you and me because she is typical of the fine, healthy cows which produce the good MEADOW GOLD MILK we drink. You'd find many others like her among the herds which supply Meadow Gold dairies (Betty DeKol Changeling Burke, Meadow-Lodge Blossom Time, and Collins Farm India Concentrator to name just three).

To me it's always reassuring to know that the rich delicious MEADOW GOLD HOMOGENIZED MILK I buy comes from some of the best-bred, best-kept dairy herds in the country. Try this fine milk, do! It's grand just "as is"—or, for variety, some time try serving it this way



New Orleans "Lasses" Malted

1 fully ripe banana
1 cup cold Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk
Salt
1 tbsp. molasses
Few drops vanilla

Mash banana with fork until smooth. Add Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk, salt, molasses, and vanilla. Shake well. Makes one large glass.

Want My Secret for Rich Brown Gravy?

I've found the key—in a little jar of LACHOY BROWN GRAVY SAUCE! Gives a wonderfully rich color and flavor to gravy, hash or stew. And because it's a bead molasses product rather than an animal product, it works wonders with baked beans, dark breads, and cookies, too! Do try it; it'll bring you both pleasure and praise!

FREE—Chinese Recipes!

Book of 24 recipes (Chop Suey, salads, etc.) Free. Write today to Dept. J-15, LaChoy Food Products Division, Beatrice Foods Co., Archbold, Ohio.

You'll be surprised how much better this grand meal tastes when prepared with Meadow Gold Butter!

Good Bread, Good Meat...

When you want to do a rather special dinner—and the guest of honor is a man—here's a menu that's impressive as can be. Like many a masterpiece it's simple but inspired. And any male who enjoys this meal will recall it with pleasure for months to come!

Dinner for a Discriminating Male

Steak, tenderloin or club (broiled to his specifications) and served with a rich, golden pat of Meadow Gold Butter.

Broccoli, with chopped peanuts in browned Meadow Gold Butter.

French bread with garlic butter. Get a loaf of good French or Vienna bread. Slice, but don't cut clear through. Mince a sliver of garlic and blend with a quarter-pound of Meadow Gold Butter, softened. Without breaking the loaf, butter the bread slices generously. Crisp loaf in the oven while steak is broiling.

Tossed green salad with Meadow Gold French Dressing.

For dessert, serve a refreshing Meadow Gold Lime Sherbet with coffee and Meadow Gold Cream.

This meal calls for superior butter. And that's MEADOW GOLD, the finest I have ever used. Deliciously delicate and, in most localities, specially wrapped in flavor-saving aluminum foil. Try MEADOW GOLD today. You won't go back to ordinary butter, I assure you!

© 1950, Beatrice Foods Co.

The Way I Figure, It Pays To Plan Ahead

How true that is. The future happiness and security of all of us depends on the plans we make today. Fortunately there's an easy way for you to make not ONE but ALL your plans for family security in one arrangement. That's the B.M.A. "All-Ways" Plan — a method of combining personal savings and protection needs into one convenient package including:

- RETIREMENT INCOME — $20.00 to as much as $500.00 a month, beginning at whatever age you select.
- ★ FAMILY PROTECTION — $500.00 in cash immediately plus a guaranteed monthly income for your family if you don't live to receive your Retirement Income.
- A COLLEGE EDUCATION FOR EACH CHILD — Annual tuition fee at beginning of each college year and monthly expenses for four years.
- ★ MORTGAGE CANCELLATION PLAN
- ★ HOSPITAL AND SURGERY BENEFITS FOR YOUR ENTIRE FAMILY
- ★ MONTHLY INCOME FOR ACCIDENT OR SICKNESS
- ★ POLIO PROTECTION

OTHER SPECIAL B.M.A. SERVICES

Partnership and Key-Man Protection

Group Insurance including Life, Accident, Health, Hospitalization, Surgery

Life, Accident and Health Reinsurance

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSURANCE CO.

B.M.A. Bldg., Union Station Plaza
Kansas City 10, Mo.

Without obligation on my part please tell me how you can combine all my insurance needs into one convenient "All-Ways" plan.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Date of Birth _____ Occupation _____

(Continued from Page 104)

some slippers, and suspiciously tiptoed down too.

The parlor door was open and the light was on. Sitting on the floor by the tree, with her back to the door, was Mother.

Martha saw her reach through the presents we had piled under the tree, select one, and then feel it, pinch it, rattle it and smell it. Something must have told Mother she was being watched, because she finally looked stealthily over her shoulder and saw Martha.

Martha stood disapprovingly with hands on hips, and tapped her right foot on the floor. She didn't say anything.

"What are you doing up at this time of night?" Mother asked sternly, apparently deciding that a good offense was the best defense.

Martha shook her head and clicked her tongue.

"You should have been asleep hours ago," said Mother. "You'll be exhausted by dinnertime."

"I'm going to tell on you," Martha informed her. "You're worse than Bob and Jane, aren't you?"

"I'd like to know what you mean by that," Mother protested. "Do you think that's any way to talk to your mother?"

"You can't be trusted a minute, can you? Just as soon as you think everyone's asleep, what do you do?"

"I investigate," said Mother, "to make sure everything is shipshape."

"What you mean is that you peek."

"A person with a naturally suspicious nature might put it that way," Mother admitted.

"You know you're not allowed in the parlor until we let you in. That's tradition."

"I know it," Mother giggled. "But your father and I always came down for a preview."

"You mean all those 'ohs' and 'ahs,' and the time Dad fell down in a dead faint, dazzled by all the brilliance, was just an act?"

"If you tell the others," Mother warned, "you may find ashes in your stocking."

"I always thought there was something funny about that fainting act."

"Up to the brim with ashes," Mother repeated.

"So all you want for Christmas," Martha teased her, "is a little love and affection. Well, you can't shake, pinch and smell those!"

"Sit down and have a pinch," Mother grinned. "I won't tell on you, if you don't tell on me."

"I'll be doggoned," said Martha, squatting next to her on the floor. "Do you see any for me?"

"Here's one to you from Anne," Mother replied, feeling, rattling, listening, smelling and using every other sense known to man—and some known only to women. "I think it's a pocketbook."

"You think," Martha scoffed. "You're as sure as if you had taken the package to the hospital and had it X-rayed."

WE went down and got our stockings Christmas morning, and Mother got her first official look at the parlor. She didn't forget to "oh" and "ah," and to tell us that the tree never looked lovelier. We took the stockings upstairs to Mother's room, and opened them there. Then we cleaned up the wrappings, had breakfast, and walked to church. The air was bracing, and all of us felt happy and good.

Tom had a fire for us in the parlor when we returned. Mother sat down at the piano, and we went up to the second-story hall and formed a line by ages. Then Mother started to play Adeste fideles. We sang and marched single file down the stairs and into the parlor. Anne led the way, as she always had done. In the past, Dad had brought up the rear, either carrying the baby or letting the baby stand on his shoes, while Dad took big steps and sometimes long jumps. This year Jane brought up the rear by herself. We wound up the song standing around the piano, pushing as close to Mother as we could. Frank did his best to sing bass, but all of us knew something was missing from the harmony.

Underneath the tree, besides the presents we had wrapped, were twenty or more cartons from relatives and friends. Mother slipped into the office to get a stenographer's pad and pencil, to make notes for the thank-you letters.

FRANK started passing out the presents. The custom was that only one gift was opened at a time, so that everyone could watch and so that Christmas would last longer.

That year Dan had insisted that he was old enough to do his own Christmas shopping, and Mother had agreed. He had gone downtown by himself, pulling the express wagon after him, and had come home with the wagon piled high. No amount of pumping, even on the part of Fred, from whom he had few secrets, could elicit the slightest information about the nature of the gifts.

It was obvious, though, from just a casual glance under the tree, that Dan's purchases were identical and that he had wrapped them without assistance.

There were eleven of them. He had placed them in a row, a little away from the general pile. Each was as large as a basketball, although irregular in shape. Each gift, whatever it was, was enmeshed—trapped rather than wrapped—in green tissue paper held in place with scores of stickers. Some of these wished you a joyous Yuletide; others voiced dire threats about what would happen if you opened it before Christmas.

All of us had wondered about Dan's presents, ever since he had brought them down from his bedroom the night before. Even Mother and Martha hadn't managed to pinch out a single clue.

In Christmases past, Dan had been primarily interested in presents for himself. Sometimes he had been impatient at the delay involved in distributing the gifts one at a time, and had asked Dad to dig through the pile and find all the presents for him.

But this Christmas, Dan was quiet. Even when he opened a present for himself, he seemed detached and the usual enthusiasm was lacking. He kept his eyes on the eleven packages he had wrapped.

Mother sensed the situation and whispered something to Frank. Frank walked over to the row of misshaped green bundles and picked up one.

"To Mother with love from Dan," Frank read the scrawl on the tag. "Here you are, Mother."

Dan now was squirming with eagerness and embarrassment. "You probably won't like it," he mumbled. "It isn't much."

"I wonder what in the world it can be," said Mother.

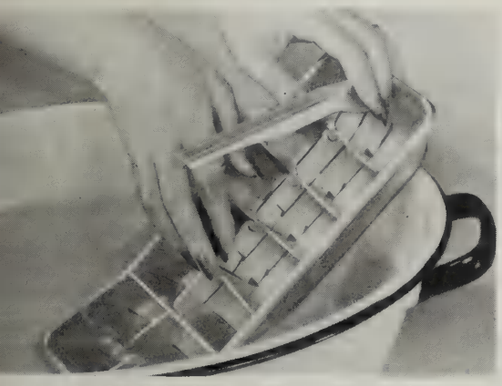
"It's nice," Martha told her, dropping her voice, "that you have at least one surprise left."

"I can't imagine what it is, Dan," Mother said.

"Aw, I'll bet you've already guessed what it is," Dan replied. "It isn't much." His cheeks were flushed and he was staring at the floor. He knew all eyes were on him, and he didn't want to meet them.

Mother pulled off the last of the paper and the thing stood naked and revealed.

To begin with, let us say it was a very big china ash tray, large enough to accommodate a whole family of chain smokers, which our family certainly was not. Besides being large, it was hideous. It was, in fact, possibly one of the most hideous ash trays ever to



(Continued on Page 109)

When Theodore Roosevelt was President, the proud father of triplets wrote him a letter conveying the big news. An ardent advocate of large families, Roosevelt in a moment of generosity sent the new parent a loving cup.

He received a grateful acknowledgment in a letter which ended: "Is this cup mine outright or do I have to win it three times?"

LS . . . SPOTS . . . ODORS go in a jiffy. Just sprinkle ng soda on damp cloth . . . wipe off inner surfaces once! No second cleaning in clear water is necessary here are no suds or grit to rinse away.

TRAYS, CRISPER TRAYS, MEAT TRAYS washed in a ng soda solution are kept safe for unwrapped meats vegetables, for ice tray desserts. Use three tablespoons ng soda to a quart of warm water.

BAKING SODA EMULSIFIES the greasy film that mold and germs cling to. You simply wipe it away.

Your Refrigerator—now Cleaner, Sweeter in half the time

No Rubbing nor Scrubbing . . . You don't even have to rinse!

Baking soda! The same baking soda you have right in your kitchen —women are now finding will give them a cleaner, sweeter refrigerator with less work and in less time than ever before!

Baking soda cleans without scouring . . . sweetens as it cleans . . . and you wipe only once! There is nothing to rinse away . . . no suds—no grit. It couldn't possibly hurt fine enamel. And you couldn't use a safer cleanser for it is the same baking soda you use for your cakes and biscuits.

Baking soda gives you this quick safe protection—for less than ½¢ a week!

1. Baking soda quickly emulsifies the greasy film that mold and germs cling to. Without any rubbing or scrubbing, film disappears. You simply wipe it away.

2. With baking soda you clean without rinsing. Just sprinkle baking soda on a damp cloth—wipe off shelves and inner surfaces. Pure, safe baking soda cleans clean. And there are no suds or grit to rinse away, no soapy odor to cling to food.

3. Baking soda kills "icebox odor." Baking soda removes musty sour food odors that actually adhere to enamel. And baking soda has no odor of its own . . . leaves no "cleanser odor."

4. Baking soda protects delicate enamel. Smooth and gentle, it never mars or leaves scratches. Baking soda cleans so gently, it is the cleanser recommended by leading refrigerator manufacturers.

Start today to give your refrigerator gentle, effective baking soda care. With Arm & Hammer or Cow Brand Baking Soda, your refrigerator will be kept immaculate, sweet and sparkling—with half the time and effort.

Recommended by 22 leading refrigerator manufacturers

In your kitchen • Baking Soda cleans and sweetens

FILMY COFFEE OILS that impair flavor are quickly removed with baking soda. Once a week soak in solution (3 tbls. to qt. water) for few minutes. Baking soda keeps beverage CRYSTAL sparkling, too.

TO LOOSEN MILK RING in baby bottles, put one-half teaspoon baking soda in bottle, fill with water. To sweeten THERMOS BOTTLES, partly fill with water, add two tablespoons baking soda, shake well and rinse.

ARM & HAMMER BRAND and COW BRAND BAKING SODA are pure Bicarbonate of Soda of uniform fineness, untouched by human hands in manufacture. Meet all requirements of U. S. Pharmacopeia. At all grocers.

Hotpoint Electric Range

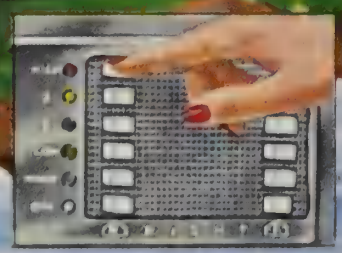
Gives You Fast C-O-O-L Automatic "PUSHBUTTON Cooking!"

Hotpoint's Hi-Speed Calrod® Cookin Units And Complete Oven Insulatio Put Heat Into The Food—Keep Out Of The Kitchen—Make Electr Cooking Cooler Than Ever!

NOW a new, popularly priced Hotpoi Range with "Pushbutton Cooking" a indicator panel enables you to keep far cool in your kitchen—while you cook faster, easi and better than ever!

● The pan-hugging construction of Ho point Hi-Speed Calrod Units directs heat in the food instead of the kitchen. Also Ho point's six-side oven insulation keeps he sealed inside the oven!

● Visit your nearest Hotpoint dealer a see the eight beautiful new 1950 Hotpoi ranges. First in style, convenience and pe formance, they're priced from $159.95. Ho point Inc. (A General Electric Affiliate), 56 West Taylor Street, Chicago 44, Illinois.



SATISFACTORY OR A RETURN OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
AS NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

● Hotpoint Hi-Speed Calrod Units have longer, smaller-diameter coils—give faster response and have far longer life!

● Hotpoint Oven-Timing Clock turns oven on and off at pre-set times—controls cooking speed and duration while you're away!

● Hotpoint Pushbutton Controls opposite colored indicators help you in quickly selecting the exact cooking heat you want.

Everybody's Pointing To Hotpoint
Quality Appliances

RANGES • REFRIGERATORS • DISHWASHERS • DISPOSALLS
WATER HEATERS • FOOD FREEZERS • AUTOMATIC WASHERS CLOTHES DRYERS • ROTARY IRONERS • CABINETS

LOOK TO HOTPOINT FOR THE FINEST—FIRST!

(Continued from Page 106)

out of the twentieth century, which in e centuries may become best known for oduction of the atomic bomb and hid-ish trays.
e main bowl was of white porcelain and l as if it had no business being in the
. It was decorated with green and gilt s, nude except for floating pink ribbon would have interested Isaac Newton.
d its perimeter were four holes, from four unused cigarettes protruded. If ould forget the cupids, which one
't, the whole would have resembled siness portion of a cow, inverted and to milk.
ook of pained incredulity, that any nonstrosity could be devised by a feluman being, passed briefly across r's face. For a moment she couldn't ything.
uess you don't like it," said Dan, now
g straight at her. "It doesn't look like once you get it home from the store."
her tried to talk, but at first nothing Frank almost laughed, but Anne
him.
hought it was wrapped real nice, any-
Dan said desperately, fighting off
'And the cupies are pretty, even if no-mokes."
ny, Danny, dear," Mother whispered, lly recovered, "it's just what I've alanted. And just what we need around specially when there's company. Do an to tell me you picked this out all urself?" She went over to him and him.
," said Dan, his eyes aglow now, "it's much. Do you really like it?"

k at it, children," Mother told us.
it simply lovely? Such perfect taste.
practical."
only cost fifteen cents, too," Dan nk of that, children," Mother said.

fifteen cents."
e price is right," Martha conceded.
ally beautiful, Dan."
ne people have all the luck," Anne ing the ten similar packages. "I sure meone would give me something like you, honest?" asked Dan. "Hon-h, yes," said Anne.

, me too," said Frank.
ne here," said Ernestine. "Lucky
!"
k went over to the row of presents ked up another one. "To Fred with m Dan," he read.
, give it here," said Fred, who knew a n he heard one. "I wonder what in ld it can be?"

Fred started to shred off the green paper. Dan relaxed and sighed. It was a sigh of ecstasy.

SOMEHOW Mother found time to take part in Sunday-school and parent-teacher affairs, to serve on the Montclair Library Board, and to make motion-study speeches throughout the country.

Her platform manner was as natural as if she were talking to us in the parlor. Often she'd crochet or knit until she was introduced. She had a knack of popularizing a technical subject, by illustrating her points with everyday experiences. Her talks always went over well, and colleges and labor and management groups extended an increasing number of invitations for her to address them.

The money from the speeches didn't go toward running the house. Mother used it to set up special funds, so she could give us things that we wanted, but which the budget couldn't otherwise afford.

"The speech in Chicago will go for Martha's new overcoat," she'd say as she ran over her itinerary with us, "and the one in Detroit will be for Ernestine's college wardrobe."

All of us wanted a small sailboat for Nantucket. Mother had Martha open a separate savings account at the bank—the Gilbreth Boat Fund. Certain speeches were earmarked for that account, and within two years it reached its quota.

Mother traveled by bus or upper berth, to keep her expenses down to a minimum. Most of the speeches were on week ends, so they didn't interfere with the course.

None of us liked her to be away from home. But we could see she was doing it for us, and it was easy to co-operate.

No fees, of course, were connected with the talks Mother made at our schools, and we thought that these were speeches she could well forgo. In fact, we would very much have preferred it, because they were a source of constant embarrassment. But we didn't want to hurt her feelings, so we didn't say anything about them at first.

Mother believed that every resident of a community had civic obligations and responsibilities. No matter how busy she was, she'd drop everything for a PTA meeting.

Her biggest school chore was the annual "Be Your Child" session. This was sponsored by the PTA, and the mothers were supposed to sit at their children's desks, meet their teachers, look over their textbooks and review their papers.

The program was geared for mothers of average-sized families, and failed to take into account the unlikely possibility that someone might have eight children simultaneously in the school system.

(Continued on Page 112)

"That's funny—our mom sent us to play in your house!"

MOR SANDWICH SPECIALS

- MOR Pork with cranberry conserve, marmalade, or jelly and lettuce.
- MOR (Beef or Pork) with crumbled fried bacon.
- MOR Pork with lettuce and cheese.
- MOR (Beef or Pork) and fried egg.

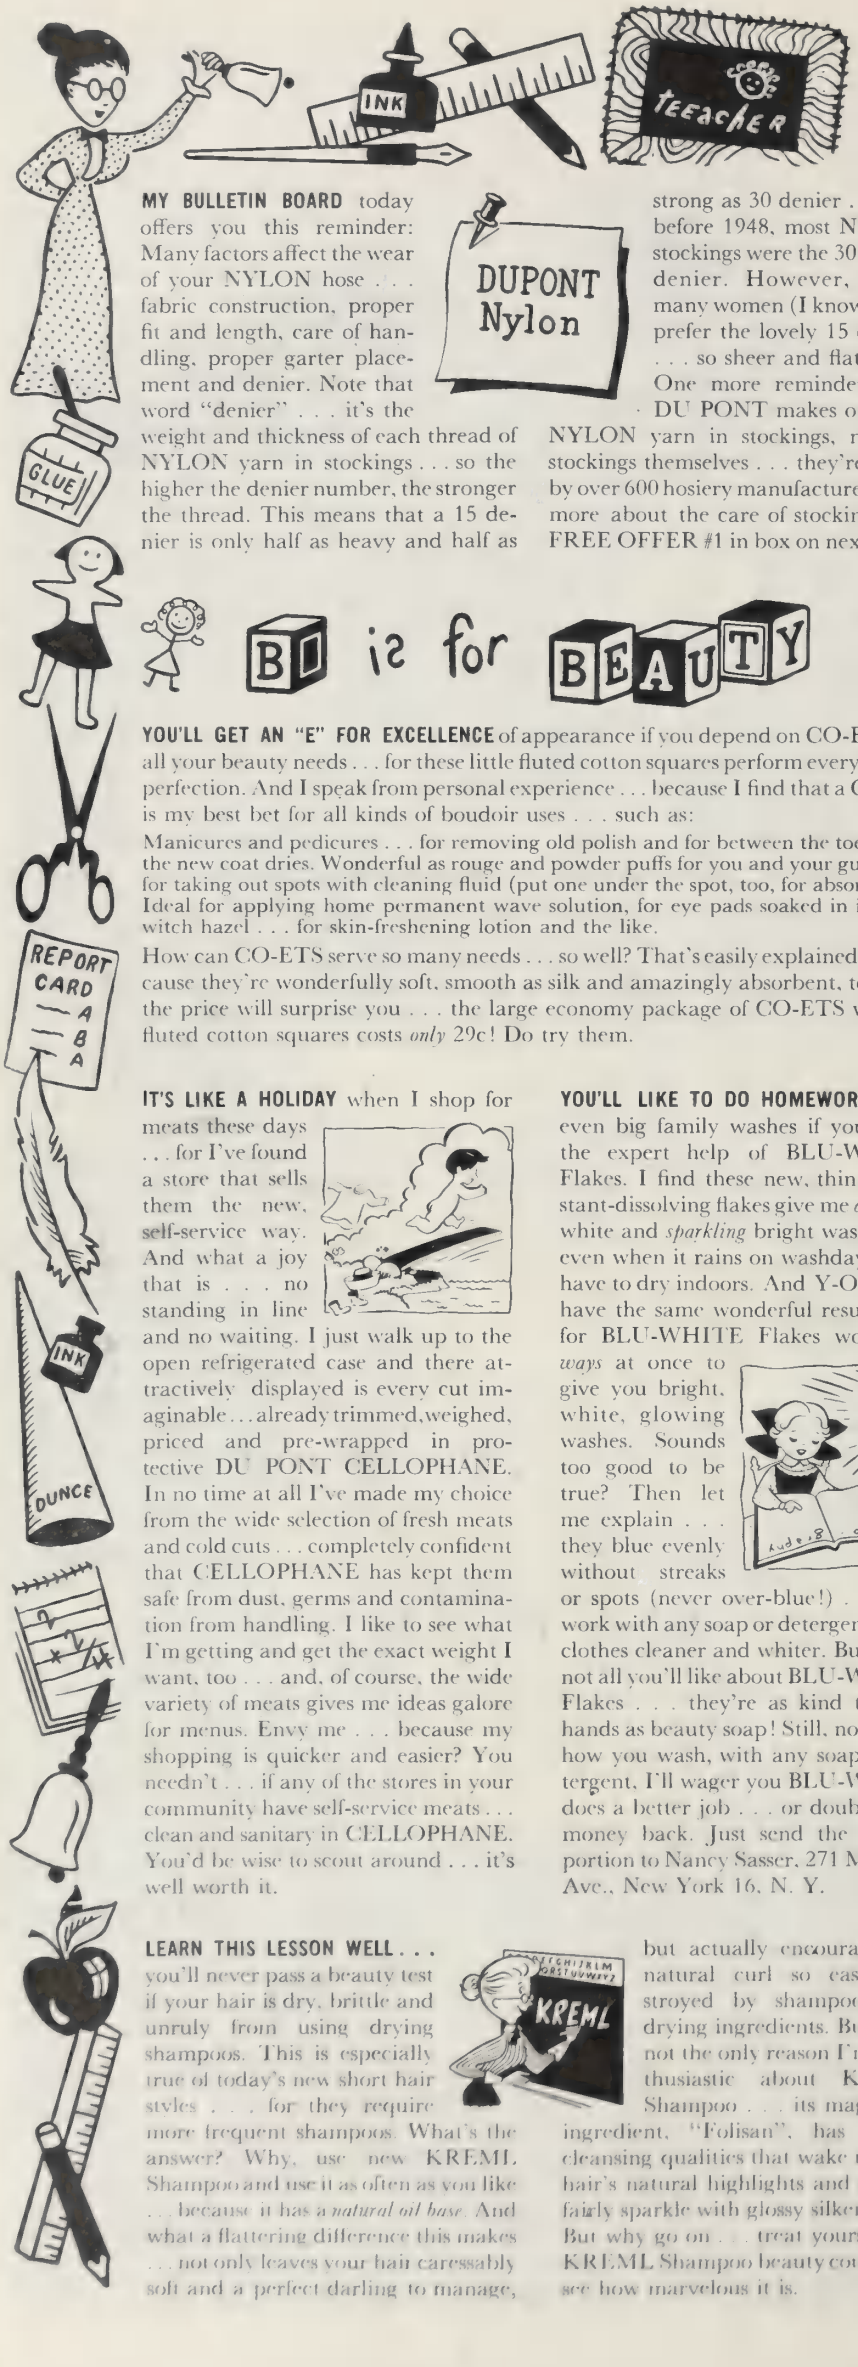
MOR RANCHBURGERS

- MOR Beef, tomato and piccalilli on buttered rolls.
- MOR Beef and Swiss cheese on hamburger rolls.
- MOR Beef and Bermuda onion with bacon.
- Hot Barbecued MOR (Beef or Pork) on buns.

MOR "CLUB" SPECIALS

- MOR Beef and MOR Pork on plain or toasted bread.
- MOR Beef or MOR Pork and cheese with pickle.
- MOR Pork or Beef, with bacon, sliced tomato and lettuce.
- MOR Pork or Beef with chive or onion and cottage cheese.

MOR STYLE "WIENERS"



- Cut the MOR meat into 8 "wienie" sticks. Use hot or cold with mustard or relish.
- Cheese-stuffed MOR sticks, bacon-wrapped and broiled.
- MOR "wieners" with green onions and piccalilli.

Everybody loves Wilson's MOR—in sandwiches and in many other appetizing ways. MOR is such a wholesome meat. Comes in one solid piece. So easy to carry to picnics. So convenient at home. Just slice to make hearty sandwiches. Or quickly bake, or broil, or fry. Only MOR tastes like MOR. Buy Wilson's MOR at your favorite store.

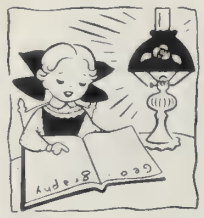
A tasteful meat so good to eat

The Wilson label protects your table

MY BULLETIN BOARD today offers you this reminder: Many factors affect the wear of your NYLON hose . . . fabric construction, proper fit and length, care of handling, proper garter placement and denier. Note that word "denier" . . . it's the weight and thickness of each thread of NYLON yarn in stockings . . . so the higher the denier number, the stronger the thread. This means that a 15 denier is only half as heavy and half as strong as 30 denier . . . and before 1948, most NYLON stockings were the 30 and 40 denier. However, today many women (I know I do!) prefer the lovely 15 deniers . . . so sheer and flattering. One more reminder . . . DU PONT makes only the NYLON yarn in stockings, not the stockings themselves . . . they're made by over 600 hosiery manufacturers. For more about the care of stockings, see FREE OFFER #1 in box on next page.

DUPONT Nylon

B is for BEAUTY



YOU'LL GET AN "E" FOR EXCELLENCE of appearance if you depend on CO-ETS for all your beauty needs . . . for these little fluted cotton squares perform every task to perfection. And I speak from personal experience . . . because I find that a CO-ET is my best bet for all kinds of boudoir uses . . . such as:

Manicures and pedicures . . . for removing old polish and for between the toes while the new coat dries. Wonderful as rouge and powder puffs for you and your guests . . . for taking out spots with cleaning fluid (put one under the spot, too, for absorption). Ideal for applying home permanent wave solution, for eye pads soaked in ice-cold witch hazel . . . for skin-freshening lotion and the like.

How can CO-ETS serve so many needs . . . so well? That's easily explained . . . because they're wonderfully soft, smooth as silk and amazingly absorbent, too. But the price will surprise you . . . the large economy package of CO-ETS with 80 fluted cotton squares costs only 29c! Do try them.

IT'S LIKE A HOLIDAY when I shop for meats these days . . . for I've found a store that sells them the new, self-service way. And what a joy that is . . . no standing in line and no waiting. I just walk up to the open refrigerated case and there attractively displayed is every cut imaginable . . . already trimmed, weighed, priced and pre-wrapped in protective DU PONT CELLOPHANE. In no time at all I've made my choice from the wide selection of fresh meats and cold cuts . . . completely confident that CELLOPHANE has kept them safe from dust, germs and contamination from handling. I like to see what I'm getting and get the exact weight I want, too . . . and, of course, the wide variety of meats gives me ideas galore for menus. Envy me . . . because my shopping is quicker and easier? You needn't . . . if any of the stores in your community have self-service meats . . . clean and sanitary in CELLOPHANE. You'd be wise to scout around . . . it's well worth it.

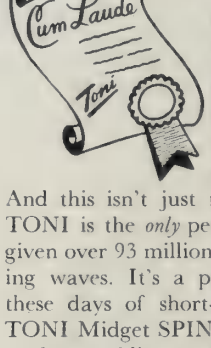
YOU'LL LIKE TO DO HOMEWORK . . . even big family washes if you enlist the expert help of BLU-WHITE Flakes. I find these new, thinner, instant-dissolving flakes give me dazzling white and sparkling bright washes . . . even when it rains on washday and I have to dry indoors. And Y-O-U can have the same wonderful results . . . for BLU-WHITE Flakes work two ways at once to give you bright, white, glowing washes. Sounds too good to be true? Then let me explain . . . they blue evenly without streaks or spots (never over-blue!) . . . and work with any soap or detergent to get clothes cleaner and whiter. But that's not all you'll like about BLU-WHITE Flakes . . . they're as kind to your hands as beauty soap! Still, no matter how you wash, with any soap or detergent, I'll wager you BLU-WHITE does a better job . . . or double your money back. Just send the unused portion to Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

LEARN THIS LESSON WELL . . . you'll never pass a beauty test if your hair is dry, brittle and unruly from using drying shampoos. This is especially true of today's new short hair styles . . . for they require more frequent shampoos. What's the answer? Why, use new KREML Shampoo and use it as often as you like . . . because it has a natural oil base. And what a flattering difference this makes . . . not only leaves your hair caressably soft and a perfect darling to manage, but actually encourages the natural curl so easily destroyed by shampoos with drying ingredients. But that's not the only reason I'm so enthusiastic about KREML Shampoo . . . its magic new ingredient, "Folisan", has special cleansing qualities that wake up your hair's natural highlights and make it fairly sparkle with glossy silken sheen. But why go on . . . treat yourself to a KREML Shampoo beauty course and see how marvelous it is.

BUY-LINE

HAPPY NEW YEAR! No, I haven't the wrong . . . it's just that September, the first m of Fall, always seems like the beginning of a Year to me. Everything takes on an exc "hustle 'n' bustle" air . . . school starts, clu tivities get into swing, smart dark cl "blossom" out and Fall decorating transf

WANT TO MAKE A GOOD "GRADE" on your personality? Then use LYKETTE Liquid Cream Deodorant and be liked . . . for it's the quick, new way to stay sweet all day. It has the handiest, gentlest self-applicator ever invented . . . always ready to apply direct with a simple "tip and touch" of the golden sponge-top bottle. Your hands never touch the liquid. What an improvement over the ordinary spray and hand applied type deodorants! LYKETTE is not only the safest, most effective way I've ever found to check unpleasant perspiration, but with this revolutionary applicator that out-modes all other methods there's no mess, no waste and no dribble. I can assure you that LYKETTE is safer for clothing, more economical (since there's no waste!) and that you'll like it. Get LYKETTE Liquid Cream Deodorant at your Drug or Toiletry Counter and be liked.



YOU'LL GET A DEMERIT as a hostess . . . unless you keep your household furnishings clean. So remember . . . the very same ENERGINE CLEANING FLUID that's so wonderful for removing grease spots from your clothes is just as useful in endless ways around the house. Take your upholstered chairs, for example . . . with hands constantly touching the arms and heads resting on the backs, they're bound to be soiled by grease and soon look old and shabby. But ENERGINE makes these ugly grease spots right before your eyes. It's ideal for cleaning bathtubs and porcelain . . . as well covers, drapes and rugs. Yo use it on the most delicate fa too (even lace curtains!) ENERGINE is one cleaning that contains no acids or ca Naturally, when you keep clean they stay new and looking longer. Get ENER at your Drug, Grocery or V Store and use regularly.

YOU CAN'T PLAY HOOKY from a painful corn . . . it goes with you wherever you go. The only thing to do is get rid of this "tormentor" . . . and it's no sooner said than done when you turn the removal "job" over to BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters. They work so quickly, too . . . you simply wrap one of these soft felt pads around your sore toe the minute a corn appears. Almost instantly it ends agonizing shoe pressure . . . then Nupercaine, a BLUE-JAY "exclusive", soothes away surface pain while gentle medication loosens the corn and in just a few days you simply lift it out. If the corn is on your little toe, call on BLUE-JAY Little Toe Corn Plasters . . . they contain all the regular BLUE-JAY features but are especially designed to fit your little toe. Don't suffer the painful hurt of a corn. Get both kinds of BLUE-JAY Corn Plasters at your Drug Counter.

THE GIRL MOST LIKELY TO SUCCEED one with lovely, curly hair . . . th you can have if you give your TONI Home Permanent. "judges" will decide that your T feels as soft as naturally curly looks as beautiful and lasts as lon $20 permanent . . . but a TONI only $1. The "credit" goes to i clusive gent tion formul especially c to give you a free curl (ev first day!) feels, looks "acts" like rally curly And this isn't just my opinion TONI is the only permanent th given over 93 million lovely, lon ing waves. It's a particular bl these days of short-hair-dos TONI Midget SPIN Curlers giv perfect neckline curls far easie faster. There are 6 of them in th Combination TONI Refill Kit—a value for $1.33.

IT'S SIMPLE ARITHMETIC—add th qualities you want most in a cig mildness plus flavor, and you'll get the same answer . . . CAVAL Your enjoyment of this distinctiv cigarette will be multiplied, too they're the long, king-size length. me to prove this answer? It's as e 2 and 2 equal 4 . . . and here's why:

CAVALIERS are a special, modern blend of fine, light tobaccos of the original Colonial type which are naturally mild and delightful. AND . . . men and women alike enjoy the longer, more leisurely sm afforded by their king-size length.

Truly, CAVALIERS combine cool mildness with smooth, r flavor to such perfection, they priceless treat in anybody's "l yet priced no higher than other p brands. I'm so sure you'll prefe that I suggest you buy them by th ton! Then you'll have plenty of white packs for both family and g

by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

omes into new. I know your s are full with today's busy ule and endless plans for to- ow . . . hence these "buy- to help save you time and as well as give you new ideas acious living.

Write Nancy Sasser, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for these special offers:
#1 ☐ NYLON Booklet—Free
#2 ☐ Q-T Cowboy Cake Favors—15¢ and boxtop

NI AN AWARD from any good . . the beautiful new GENERAL TRIC Triple-whip Mixer for It has everything you could pos- vant in a mixer . . . and here's ee powerful Beaters that give you more thorough mixing . . . beating tely from center to side of bowl.

They're ABC-easy to clean, too . . . for there are no center shafts to get in your way and no hard-to-reach corners. 2. The best Juicer ever . . . it strains automatically . . . lets you up to a dozen oranges with no g. 3. A Built-In Light . . . shines down into the bowl to let you see what you're mixing. 4. A new Selector . . . out in front where it's read and set with 12 speeds to from and lots of power in each! win cheers for your own cooking a GENERAL ELECTRIC whip Mixer to help you . . . so ur G-E Dealer and get one soon.

LITTLE QUEENS IN CALICO and little bashful barefoot beaux back-me-up on this . . . OREO Creme Sandwiches make any lunch box perfect. They're a can't-miss favorite with grown-ups, too . . . for nobody bakes cookies like NABISCO, National Biscuit Company. I've never tasted anything as delicious

. . . but, then, never before was such heavenly creamy-filling put between two such luscious chocolate cookies. They literally melt-in-your-mouth . . . crisp, round, chocolate-rich cookies "packed" with wonderful, vanilla filling. But take this tip . . . to be sure you get the one and only OREO Creme Sandwiches, look for the red NABISCO Seal before you buy! And always get several packages at a time . . . because they're not only a very special treat in lunch boxes, but with an extra box on your shelf, you're set to serve dessert or quick refreshments any time!

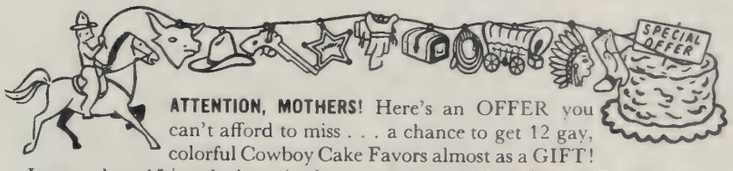
HOOL BELL RINGS . . . all good wives and 's to stock up on MONTE Pineapple It's the handiest, most e juice you can buy . . . 'boasts" a distinctive, eet flavor that's always taste- . Why? Because DEL MONTE s the luscious pineapple flavor its tropical best . . . at the very t when natural tartness and ss are in perfect flavor balance then "hustle" it into the can.

That's why it's not too tart, not too sweet . . . the perfect juice for all-round use. So serve it at: Breakfast . . . Bedtime . . . Between Meals . . . any time of day . . . as an economical and refreshing drink. There's lots of "lift" in every golden, tingling sip. Children . . . a better drink for them since it's rich in energy-giving natural sugars and an excellent source of Vitamin C.

So don't delay . . . get several cans of DEL MONTE Pineapple Juice today.

E REWARDED with more than a hearty beverage when you drink POSTUM . . . in fact, if you're a caffein-susceptible, you'll be helped a richer treasure of health and ss! To illustrate: Mrs. L. Bronx, New York, writes: "Since g to Postum, I have found that p has improved. I can drink ount I choose to without dis- e." Of course, many people nk coffee and tea without ill- . . but others suffer "coffee e, indigestion and sleepless So play safe . . . switch to M, it's 100% caffein-free. Drink days . . . you'll like its grain- or and see if you don't reap a l reward of better health, bet- and better looks. And just how easy it is to fix:

slightly rounded teaspoon NT POSTUM in cup. Add boil- r and stir well. Serve with sugar m.



DON'T BE LATE or you'll miss this BIG BARGAIN . . . a brand new FRIGIDAIRE MM-74 Refrigerator with full-width freezer at the sensational low price of $249.75 in most localities. Just imagine . . . a genuine FRIGIDAIRE with food-keeping features galore, plus a full-width, 31-pound capacity Super-Freezer Chest, that costs no more than an ordinary refrigerator. There's brilliant Raymond Loewy styling, lustrous Ice-Blue trim, with golden highlights, new, finger-tip action Target Door Latch, full 7⅘₀ cubic feet of food storage space, twin, extra-deep "stack-up" Hydrators finished in acid-resisting porcelain, Quickube Ice Trays, white plastic Chill Drawer, rust-proof aluminum shelves . . . and FRIGIDAIRE's economical Meter-Miser, simplest cold-making mechanism ever built. All at a BARGAIN price. Visit your FRIGIDAIRE Dealer. See why you can't match a FRIGIDAIRE.

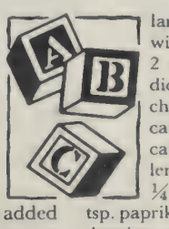
WORTH CHEERING ABOUT . . . all the time, work, and money you save with every bottle of REALEMON RECONSTITUTED LEMON JUICE! And how you'll especially welcome REALEMON when the family is in a lemonade mood . . . which will be often these hot, lazy days! REALEMON, 5 parts water, sugar, and ice . . . that means lemonade in 15 seconds! It's that quick and simple . . . no cutting or squeezing, no fuss, mess, or muss . . . you just open the bottle and pour. Economical? Very . . . for there's no waste or spoilage ever. REALEMON is lemon juice squeezed for you from fine, ripe lemons and bottled under scientific control for uniformity of strength and flavor. Keep REALEMON handy on your pantry shelf (needs no refrigeration!) at all times. You'll find dozens of uses for it. REALEMON WITH SUGAR ADDED makes lemonade in 5 seconds! Add 5 parts water, and ice! Try both unsweetened REALEMON and REALEMON WITH SUGAR ADDED.

ATTENTION, MOTHERS! Here's an OFFER you can't afford to miss . . . a chance to get 12 gay, colorful Cowboy Cake Favors almost as a GIFT! Just send me 15¢ and a box top from a package of Q-T Instant Frosting . . . see OFFER #2 in box above. They're the cleverest decorations I've ever seen . . . just picture your youngsters' delight when you surprise them with a cake "topped" with a cowboy astride his horse in the center, surrounded by a "border" of ten Western favors . . . including a lariat, steer head, cowboy hat, six shooter, covered wagon and 5 other red, white, green and yellow plastic Cowboy favors. Why such a wonderful OFFER? To introduce you to Q-T Instant Frosting . . . for it requires no cooking and is "miss-proof". You just add water and stir . . . in less than 2 minutes you've a delicious, creamy-smooth frosting to add luscious flavor and colorful beauty to your favorite cake. So HURRY . . . get Q-T and send for the Cowboy Favors today.

MAKE IT A GOLDEN RULE to serve your family a dish of prunes every morning for breakfast . . . because 6 or 7 prunes a day are good for you in every way. But when you buy those prunes, be sure you get the best . . . SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes. Why are they the best? For the best of reasons . . . they're fully tree-ripened under California's golden sun. This makes these little health "treasures" extra plump, tender and delicious . . . with a rich, sunny sweetness and fresh "fruity" flavor you don't find in any other prunes grown any other place. It's a wonderful life when you feel good . . . with pep in your step and zing in your swing. So ask your Grocer for SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes today and serve them daily . . . see if you don't sing your way through every day. P.S. Because they're so tender and sweet, you don't even have to cook them . . . they're a treat to your taste and a "toast" to your health just as they come from the package.



EVEN KINDERGARTEN COOKS can make luscious jams 'n' jellies with CERTO. America's favorite liquid pectin product. It's the easy way—the one-minute boil way, which saves precious juice, fresh fruit flavor, and lovely, natural fruit color. It's fun to do, and you get an average of 50% more glasses, too. Try this Plum Jelly and prove it!

Crush 4 lbs. Italian prune plums (do not peel or pit). Add 2 cups water; bring to boil, simmer, covered, 15 mins. Separate juice from pulp by placing fruit in colander or sieve; stir, but do not press. Remove pits. (Use pulp to make Plum Jam . . . see recipe in booklet under CERTO bottle label.) Measure 3½ cups plum juice, ½ cup lemon juice, 7½ cups sugar into saucepan and mix. Place over high heat, bring to boil, stirring constantly. At once stir in ½ bottle CERTO. Bring to full rolling boil, boil hard 1 min., stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 10 six-oz. glasses.

One taste and you'll agree . . . there's magic in the word "homemade".

KNOW YOUR A-B-C's when it comes to giving a meal extra appetite appeal? The answer is easy when you have DEMING'S SAM-O-LETS on hand . . . for this light meat salmon is wonderfully different . . . the most delicately flavored salmon you've ever eaten. And here's an added "plus" . . . the skin and backbone are removed, too! So serve SAM-O-LETS often "as is" . . . or like this in SAM-O-LETS Salad Southern Style:

Drain liquid from one can SAM-O-LETS into fruit jar. Break SAM-O-LETS into large pieces in salad bowl. Mix with 2 chopped hard-boiled eggs, 2 cups chopped lettuce, 1 cup diced celery, 2 tbsp. finely chopped onion. To liquid from can of SAM-O-LETS add ¼ cup catsup, 2 tbsp. salad oil, 3 tbsp. lemon juice, ¼ tsp. dry mustard, ¼ tsp. salt, dash pepper and ½ tsp. paprika. When ready to serve shake dressing and pour over chilled salad ingredients. Toss lightly. Serve at once. Sounds good? It's simply scrumptious!

You'll find DEMING'S SAM-O-LETS grand for sandwiches, too . . . better keep several cans handy.

The S. O. S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A., S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

(Continued from Page 109)

Mother would hire a cab for the evening and race from home to the elementary school, where she'd sit at four different desks; from the elementary to the junior high, where she'd sit at two; and from the junior high to the high school, where she'd sit at two more. With the help of a memorandum book, she managed to keep straight the compliments and complaints she received concerning each of us.

"I never thought I'd have to give an F to one of your children," Frank's Latin teacher told her at one "Be Your Child" session. "I've had Anne, Ernestine and Martha. But Frank is simply impossible."

"I know too much about what a fine teacher you are to believe you think any child is impossible," Mother replied with her sweetest smile. "Some pupils are just more of a challenge to teachers than others, isn't that right?"

"I guess so," the teacher said doubtfully. "Put it this way, then—he's the biggest challenge I've run into in fifteen years."

Mother made a memorandum to help Frank with his Latin, and to ask Ernestine to help him too.

"I'll see that he's tutored at home, and I'm confident that meanwhile you'll work everything out," Mother challenged the Latin teacher, heading for the door and her waiting taxicab.

At the high school, Ernestine's English teacher was indignant. She had discovered that Ern had turned in a book report based upon—in fact, lifted from—the blurb on the jacket, and hadn't bothered to read the book itself.

"I can't tell you how shocked I was, Mrs. Gilbreth. It's not at all the sort of thing Anne would have done. And I certainly didn't expect it from Ernestine. I always had considered her the soul of honor."

"I don't think there's really much reason to change your opinion," Mother replied a little hotly.

"I consider it plagiarism, plain and simple."

"Maybe it is," Mother said, "but thinking back, I suppose I've done the same thing. Sometimes when I'm with a group of people who are talking about a new book, I guess I've given the impression that I've read the book, instead of reviews about it in the newspapers."

"Why, I've done that, too, I suppose, but ——"

"It's really the same thing, isn't it?" Mother smiled.

"No, I don't consider it at all ——"

"Don't reproach yourself for it," Mother interrupted. "After all, if a person tried to read everything that comes out, he wouldn't have time for anything else, would he?"

"I suppose not," said Ern's teacher, throwing in the sponge.

"There's no reason for you to feel bad about it. It's really laziness more than plagiarism. And all of us, whether we like to admit it or not, are a little lazy sometimes, aren't we?"

MOTHER headed for the door. But the fact she had dismissed the matter with such glib talk at school didn't mean she wasn't going to have a heart-to-heart talk with Ernestine.

Some of the teachers thought it simply impossible that Mother could earn a living and supervise us properly at home.

Jack's kindergarten teacher, who was new to the school system, tried to pump him about it one day.

"What does your mother do, John?" she asked.

"Lots of things," said Jack. "She's busy."

"Like what, dear?"

"She mends my stockings when t holes in them, and serves the plate table, and gets me up in the morni tells me stories, and plays the pian can sing."

"But she can't do all that, Joh teacher said.

"Why can't she?" Jack asked ciously.

"Doesn't she have a career, John

"I don't think so."

"Why, you know perfectly well sh the teacher said accusingly.

"Well, if she does," Jack shoute never showed it to me."

WHEN Mother started speaking to ent-teacher groups, she explained ab she and Dad had tried to adapt study methods to bringing up a large This involved telling a number o about us, and we'd hear about them day from the children whose pare been present.

That was bad enough. But when was drafted for school assemblies a mencement exercises, it soon became to plow.

Her first appearance was at Nishu elementary school, where she told dren about h had made studies of hin he could sleep the morning used to lather with two brushes, so as time, and coul to a tub of wa himself, rinse out again in a or less.

"It's a goo to learn the way to soap y Mother said cause then eve oversleep you be late for scho

At recess la morning, a bo sixth grade go of soap from t tory, brought it out on the playgrou handed it to Fred.

"Here," the sixth-grader said crowd quickly collected. "Show us h father soaped himself."

Fred knew how, even though h half-hour soaker himself. But he ha tention of sitting down on the cinc demonstrating, especially before audience.

"Come on inside," he mumbled, show you there."

"No, right here," the big boy "Here, take it and show everybody won't be late to school." He cack gave Fred a push.

Fred was in the third grade, a than a head shorter than the other seemed hopeless to fight. If only Bil graduated up to junior high that yea he was a sixth-grader, Bill could han one in Nishuane, and frequently did ciently provoked. Fred took the soa right hand, and put it on his left s

"You start at this shoulder," he whispered, looking at his feet, "a bring the soap down your left side."

A girl tittered, and Fred faltered.

"You bring the soap down your le Fred stopped, looked up from his f drove soap and fist into the belly of mentor. "See if you're big enough me do it," Fred hollered. Then, tr best to imitate Tom's fighting sta fierce grimaces, "I don't take noth nobody, understand? Nothing fr body."

It felt good to be a man inste mouse, even if it meant a licking, a grinned and walloped him again.

The sixth-grader knocked him do sat on him. Fred was informed he ci

(Continued on Page 114)

OBSERVATION POST

Art is the stored honey of the human soul, gathered on wings of misery and travail. —THEODORE DREISER.

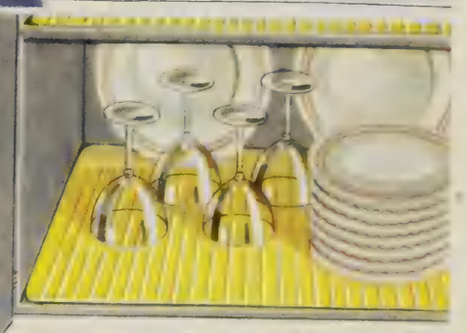
In Russia, a man is counted. In America, he counts. —ERIC JOHNSTON.

An antique is any object which no one would be seen with if there were more of them, but which everyone wants when no one has any.

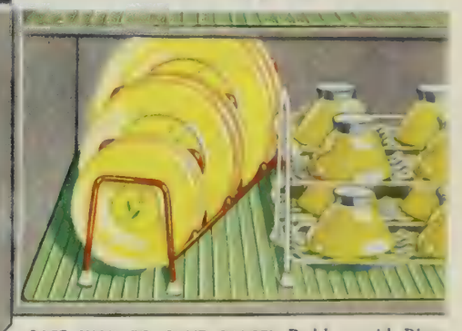
The greatest undeveloped territory in the world lies under your hat.

Middle age is when a man stops wondering how he can dodge temptations and starts wondering if he's missing any.

to lighten & brighten your housework



... famous Rubbermaid HOUSEWARE



...eze through your housework in jig-time with won-...ful, work-saving Rubbermaid. And almost before ...u know it, you're ready for an afternoon out . . . ...ling perky as a pup on the first Fall day. It's a cinch ...h these Rubbermaid housekeeping helps.

CUT DOWN ON CUPBOARD CARE! Smart new Rubbermaid Shelf-Kushions bring permanent new beauty and cushioned protection to your cupboards, don't have to be changed or discarded. Ribbing keeps glassware from fogging . . . plate rail in rear holds stand-up plates.

SAFE WAY TO SAVE SPACE! Rubbermaid Plate Racks store your plates safely, prevent chipping and breaking. Rubbermaid Cup Racks hold your cups in cushioned protection . . . do away with dangerous, old-fashioned stacking.

DISH-DRYING DUO! Your dishes dry themselves in a Rubbermaid Deluxe Dish-drying Combination. Stack them in large size Drainer with stand-up silverware holder . . . and let the slanted Draining Tray carry off the water. It's easy to have sparkling-clean dishes the Rubbermaid way.

...N SINK SETUP! Your Rubbermaid Sink ...turns one bowl into a safe, silent dish ... In the other bowl, your Rubbermaid ... Drainer provides a handy self-dryer. ...your Rubbermaid Draining Tray with ...-in slope doubles as an all-purpose ...board protector.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

NEW . . . ONE DOES THE WORK OF TWO! Two-faced Rubbermaid Handimat—Cutting Board . . . a stove-protector mat on one side, a better-than-ever rubber cutting board on the other. Top has table of kitchen measures.

LONG-STANDING COMFORT! Standing on this soft cushiony Rubbermaid Tredeasy Floor Mat makes ironing, cooking, washing dishes, or doing the laundry seem easier and faster. Thick sponge rubber insert on underside . . . top is solid rubber with tapered edges to prevent tripping.

You can see the complete Rubbermaid line wherever housewares are sold in the United States and Canada. Write for free booklet showing other Rubbermaid work-savers.

Rubbermaid HOUSEWARE

... THE QUALITY, HOME-ENGINEERED BRAND THAT ASSURES LONG-LIFE RESISTANCE TO HEAT, SOAP, GREASE AND WEAR.

THE WOOSTER RUBBER COMPANY, Dept. L-3 Wooster, Ohio.

How to put glowing

COLOR MAGIC

in your kitchen

In minutes, for pennies—you can make your kitchen glow with magical reds, blues, yellows—simply by placing color-bright Royledge on all shelves. Only a penny a foot, new "Plasti-Chrome" Royledge is so simple and quick to use—simply place on shelf and fold down beautiful edge. See glorious new patterns now at 5 & 10's, Supermarkets, Housefurnishing, Naborhood, Dept. Stores.

Plasti-Chrome Royledge

Shelving Paper & Edging all-in-one 9-ft. pkgs.

Trade Mark "Royledge" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Imperial "Twist"

Beauty With a New Twist . . .

Delicate twists and brilliant swirls, as Imperial Twist brings new dining pleasure to your table. A pattern in crystal with delicate contour and translucent beauty, reflecting the flawless artistry of American hand-craftsmen. Open stock. If not available in your locality, write us for the name of your nearest Twist dealer.

THE IMPERIAL GLASS CORPORATION, BELLAIRE, OHIO

(Continued from Page 112)

going to eat the soap or go through the motions of lathering himself. About half the bar of soap had been forced down his mouth before Lill discovered what was going on and summoned Dan and Jack.

Lill went into action holding a roller skate by the strap and swinging it around her head. It wasn't exactly Marquis of Queensberry, but extraordinary action seemed called for. Dan used his fists and Jack kicked and bit. A single blow of the skate took all of the fight out of Fred's antagonist, who quietly consumed the other half of the soap while Lill sat on his forehead, Dan his feet, and Jack his stomach. Fred held his arms and did the feeding.

Lill and the boys wanted to tell Mother about it, so she'd stop making references to family incidents in any future speeches at their school. But the older ones talked them out of it.

"You'd only hurt Mother's feelings," Ernestine said. "What do they have, savages at your school?"

"They sure do," Fred agreed.

"The only reason Mother made the talk," Ernestine told them, "was because she thought she was helping you. And if you complain about it, she'll think you didn't appreciate it."

"If you want to know the truth," said Lill, "we didn't appreciate it very much. Everybody looks at you while she's speaking, and afterwards they giggle."

"And they feed you soap," Fred nodded. "The dark gray kind that's meant to take grease off your hands."

"The talk went over well, didn't it?" Ernestine asked. "You ought to be proud of Mother."

"It went over fine," Lill admitted. "We're proud of her. But I hope next time she gets asked to talk at your school."

Mother's next invitation was to address the junior high, where Frank and Bill were pupils. Frank told her at the dinner table, as tactfully as he could, that it would be a good idea to steer clear of family matters.

"Why, of course I will, if that's what you boys want," Mother promised, but her feelings were a little hurt. "I won't make the talk at all, if you don't want me to."

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," Ernestine told Frank. "Don't pay any attention to him, Mother."

"Oh, we want you to make the speech, don't we, Bill?" Frank said with all the heartiness he could muster. "We're looking forward to it."

"Sure," Bill agreed, "especially if it isn't about the family."

MOTHER tried, in her speech at junior high, to explain the importance of standardizing nuts, bolts and machine parts, to eliminate waste. She saw she had aimed over the children's heads, so she sought to illustrate.

"Here's what I mean," she said. "Take boys' shirts. Almost every shirt has a different type button. When one comes off and gets lost, you know how much trouble your mothers have to find one just like it."

The children seemed to understand that, so Mother continued.

"Think how much time would be saved if all shirts had exactly the same kind of buttons. Do you know what I do? When one of the buttons comes off a shirt, I cut off the button at the collar, and move it down to replace the missing button. Then I just put any old button at the collar, because the tie hides it and it doesn't show."

Frank and Bill exchanged glances across the assembly hall; they knew that that had done it.

Three boys cornered Bill after school and demanded that he loosen his tie, so they could examine the button. Bill wouldn't have objected to showing them, if they had asked nicely. Bill was good-natured enough, but it usually was a good idea to ask him nicely.

In junior high school there were accepted rules about fair fights, so Bill could take on his opponents one at a time, and Frank's assistance wasn't needed. When it was over, Bill's tie was tattered and blood-spangled, but still proudly waved. Ernestine and

ANGLO CORNED BEEF

COLD CUTS FOR A LUNCHEON PLATE

Chill Anglo Corned Beef and slice. Serve with Tomato Salad (tomatoes stuffed with macaroni salad). Serves 4 to 6.

Anglo Corned Beef is solid, lean meat with no waste. Slices evenly.

Try Anglo Roast Beef, too, for stews ragouts, hash and goulash. Unsurpassed quality.

BUY SEVERAL TINS TODAY!

ON SALE AT ALL GOOD GROCERS

Amazing Offer—$40 Is Yours for selling only 50 boxes of Christmas Cards. And this can be done in a single day. Free samples. Other leading boxes on approval. Many surprise items. Write today. It costs nothing to try.

FREE SAMPLES PERSONALIZED CHRISTMAS CARDS STATIONERY NAPKINS

CHEERFUL CARD CO., Dept. G-35, White Plains, N.

WANT CASH QUICK

Sell only 100 Ass'ts — make up to $50! Complete line Xmas Everyday Cards. New "Spang-l-ettes" and Famous "Prize" Ass'ts; Name Imprinted Xmas Cards, 40 for $1 up; Stationery; Wraps; Notes; etc. Up to 100% profit. No risk... Money back guarantee. Request "Prize" and Metallic Boxes on approval.

30 FREE SAMPLES

HERTELART, 305 W. Adams St. Dept. T-9, Chicago 6,

For EXTRA-RICH BROWN DELICIOUS GRAVY

Use KITCHEN Bouquet

It's easy to make your gravy extra-rich, extra-brown, extra-delicious every time. Just stir in Kitchen Bouquet! Ah! What rich, brown color and how it brings out that true meat taste! Adds no artificial flavor. Good cooks have used Kitchen Bouquet for over 70 years.

COSTS SO LITTLE.

tha once again persuaded the younger not to tell Mother what had precipitated ight.

nd then an invitation came through from school, and the girls were panic-stricken. We're ruined," Martha groaned.

Thinking it over," Ernestine said to Bill Fred, "giving the matter mature delib- on, I believe you two boys had better Mother what happened after she spoke ur schools."

Tell her nothing," Bill grinned. "I en- d it. Anyway, we don't want to hurt her gs."

don't see what you're scared of," Fred "They don't make you eat soap in high l, do they?"

f you tell her now, after making us keep ," Bill threatened, "I'll give her some s to put in her speech. Like about the something fell off and tripped you when valked into the movies, because you had motion study by fastening it with a y pin."

Good night!" Ernestine blanched. "You think she'd tell that one, do you?"

ust don't go hurting her feelings," Bill ed.

ther spoke at high school about proc- harts for industry. And she illustrated process charts were by explaining the ones we had in our bathrooms.

w speakers ever got tter reception at igh-school assem- But Ernestine and ha wished she'd up bridge, like mothers, or con- er speeches to au- es west of the Mis- i.

ou've got to be careful," Martha ed to Mother that

's gone too far," tine agreed. "We'll live it down."

r goodness' sakes, s the trouble?" r asked. The girls n addressed her way, and she was y concerned.

was bad enough Fred had to eat dark-gray soap," a said. "And it ad enough when Bill had to fight to is necktie."

t do you know what I've been getting ?" Ernestine asked. "'My, you look s a daisy, baby. I'll bet you made a nark on the bath chart before you o school this morning.'" her had had her usual full day. After ech, she had come home and taught urse. There had been the customary ptions by Tom. Dan was in bed with throat, and she had spent half an hour g to him, and another half hour play- rcheesi. The mending seemed to gain , no matter how much time she de- to it. All in all, she was thoroughly nd discouraged.

ess I put my foot in it," she agreed. nly reason I made the talks was be- I thought you children wanted me ell, gee, we did," said Martha, ——" ry," said Mother, and there was no cs in it, just a statement of fact, "to best I can."

know you do," Ernestine told her. houldn't have said anything about y did Fred have to eat soap?" Mother

e story about taking a bath by motion Martha said.

Bill?"

ttons," said Ernestine.

her started out of the room. She was d her shoulders were sagging. Her r had begun to show traces of gray in the last few months. She looked defeated, and almost old.

"The talk went over swell, though," Martha said, running after her. "It was just that one little story."

"I never heard so much applause after a speech at assembly," Ernestine said, running too.

"You didn't?" asked Mother.

"You brought down the house," Martha told her. "We sure were proud of you."

"I'm glad you were, dear," Mother said, squaring her shoulders. "To tell you the truth, I thought it went over pretty well too."

"You had them eating out of your hand," Ernestine nodded.

"I tell you what," Mother said. "I promise I won't accept any more invitations from the Montclair schools."

"Oh, we like for you to speak," Ernestine said. "It impresses the teachers, and the kids too."

"But no more stories about the family, is that it?" Mother smiled. "All right, I promise that, then."

"Just try to be careful," Martha begged, "not to say anything we wouldn't say."

Mother left the house in a taxi one night that spring to speak at an engineering meeting in Jersey City. An hour and a half later, the chairman of the meeting telephoned us to see if Mother had been detained. The audience had been waiting twenty minutes, and she still hadn't appeared.

Our house was only eleven or twelve miles from Jersey City, and Mother as usual had allowed more than ample time for the trip. It wasn't like her to be late for anything. Perhaps the cab had broken down.

About ten o'clock that night, the telephone rang again, Ernestine answered it, and heard Mother's voice.

"For goodness' sakes, where are you?" Ern asked her. "We've been worried to death. They called from Jersey City."

"I just telephoned them," Mother said, and her voice sounded muffled. "It's all right. There's nothing to worry about."

"Where are you now?"

"I had a little trouble, dear," Mother said. "And what do you think? I'm going to have a new nose."

The strain, Ernestine thought, has been too great for her. Something like this was bound to come. No woman could possibly raise a family of eleven, run a business, and make two or three speeches a week, without an eventual mental crack-up.

"Of course you are," Ernestine humored her. "And you've worked hard for it too. You certainly deserve it."

"The new nose is going to look much better," Mother said.

"Oh, much," Ernestine agreed. "I'm sure of that."

"You know how thin the old one was—I never did like it. My father used to tease me about it, because it was just like his. His was thin, too, remember?"

"I'll see that no one teases you about it any more," Ern promised. "What you need is a nice, long rest."

"That's what the doctor says," Mother agreed brightly.

"Now you just tell me where you are, and I'll come and get you."

"I thought I told you. I'm right here in Montclair. They brought me to Mountainside Hospital."

Ernestine was sure then that the worst had happened. "You stay right there," she

(Continued on Page 118)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

When Glory Has Passed

By Hannah Kahn

Whatever a woman
Has learned with her heart
Is never forgotten . . .
Is always a part
Of that which she knows.

Just as the rose,
If red from the start,
However it grows,
Is red at the last,
When glory has passed.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For top value always!

Arvin

ELECTRIC HOUSEWARES

America's most versatile cooking appliance! Grills, fries, bakes, toasts! Best for waffles, pancakes, hamburgers, bacon and eggs, toasted sandwiches. Cooking area equals 3 ten-inch skillets. Waffle grids clip on easily. Fully automatic. Heat control; signal light; expanding hinge. Listed by Underwriters'.

$24.95 (Including Waffle Grids)

Now — enjoy the convenience and luxury of a second oven at amazingly low cost! Bakes rolls, cakes and pies. Roasts fowl and meat. Serves as warming oven while you cook on the open "door." Chrome finish inside and out. Heat indicator. Table Oven with Lectric Cook, less waffle grids . . .

$29.90 (Oven only, $8.95)

America's most beautiful automatic toaster! Controlled heat makes every slice uniform—as light or dark as you wish; hinged crumb tray; cushioned pop-up; inspection knob. Insulated walls and handles. Exclusive Sta-Warm Shelf keeps extra toast warm. Operates on AC only. Underwriters' listed.

$21.50

Arvin Automatic Irons . . . Guaranteed 5 Years!

$9.95 The truly modern iron at a money-saving price! Weighs only 3 lbs., saves arduous lifting. Fast heat, fast step-down, saves ironing time. Automatic heat control for all fabrics. Ever-cool comfort-grip handle. GUARANTEED FIVE YEARS! Underwriters' listed. At your dealer's.

Arvin Dual Control Iron, Guaranteed 5 years—$11.95

ARVIN INDUSTRIES, Inc., Columbus, Indiana

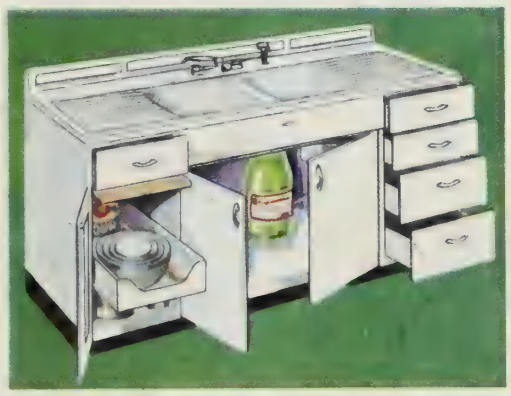
(Formerly Noblitt-Sparks Industries, Inc.)

NEW! Greatest Helper

These are never-before kitchens and best-ever values! They're Youngstown Kitchens, crammed with more work savers, time savers than ever! Featuring Youngstown Kitchens Automatic Dishwasher with wonderfully simple, all-new principle—the greatest helper a housewife ever had!

THESE new kitchen values shout, "ACT NOW!"

NOW—because in these new, exciting Youngstown Kitchens, years of constant advances in utility and beauty will brighten your kitchen as never before!



NOW—because Youngstown Cabinet Sinks and cabinets, in matching Hi-Bake enamel finishes and graceful contours of lifetime, die-made steel, offer you a wider range of sizes and styles than ever before.

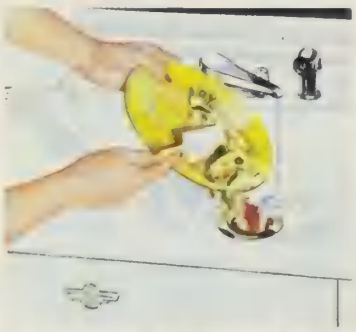
They shout, "ACT NOW"—for here, at last, is really modern dishwashing: either the straight-line way with twin-bowl sinks; or the automatic way in the Electric Sink or Dishwasher, with the exclusive JET-TOWER that modernizes your dishwashing as completely as Youngstown Kitchens modernize your home!

Select the right Youngstown Cabinet Sink or Electric Sink, cabinets, and accessories NOW—plan a dream kitchen to fit your space perfectly, your budget easily!

Let your factory-trained Youngstown dealer show you your dream kitchen in perfect miniature. Let him show you how to save on installation, and how easy it is to finance. If building, specify Youngstown—you'll save!

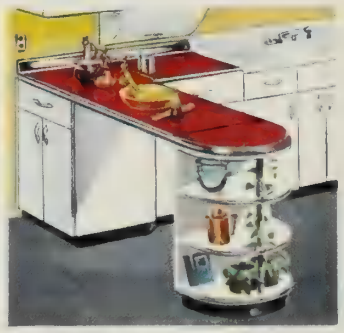
MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Beautiful 66" DeLuxe Twin-bowl Youngstown Kitchens Cabinet Sink. One of 13 models. Designed by kitchen experts for straight-line dishwashing, the most convenient, easiest non-mechanical way to do dishes. Twin drainboards, like all Youngstown Cabinet Sink tops, of one-piece, acid-resisting porcelain-enameled steel. Spacious twin bowls. Swinging mixing-faucet; handy, flexible rinse spray.



Greatest helper a housewife ever had! New Youngstown Kitchens Automatic Dishwasher. Exclusive Jet-Tower Hydro-Brush Action completely modernizes dishwashing! Does dishes for 6 in just 9¾ minutes (normal water pressure). Washes, rinses, stops, opens the cover—automatically, electrically. Does a better, faster job than you can do by hand. Width: 27 inches.

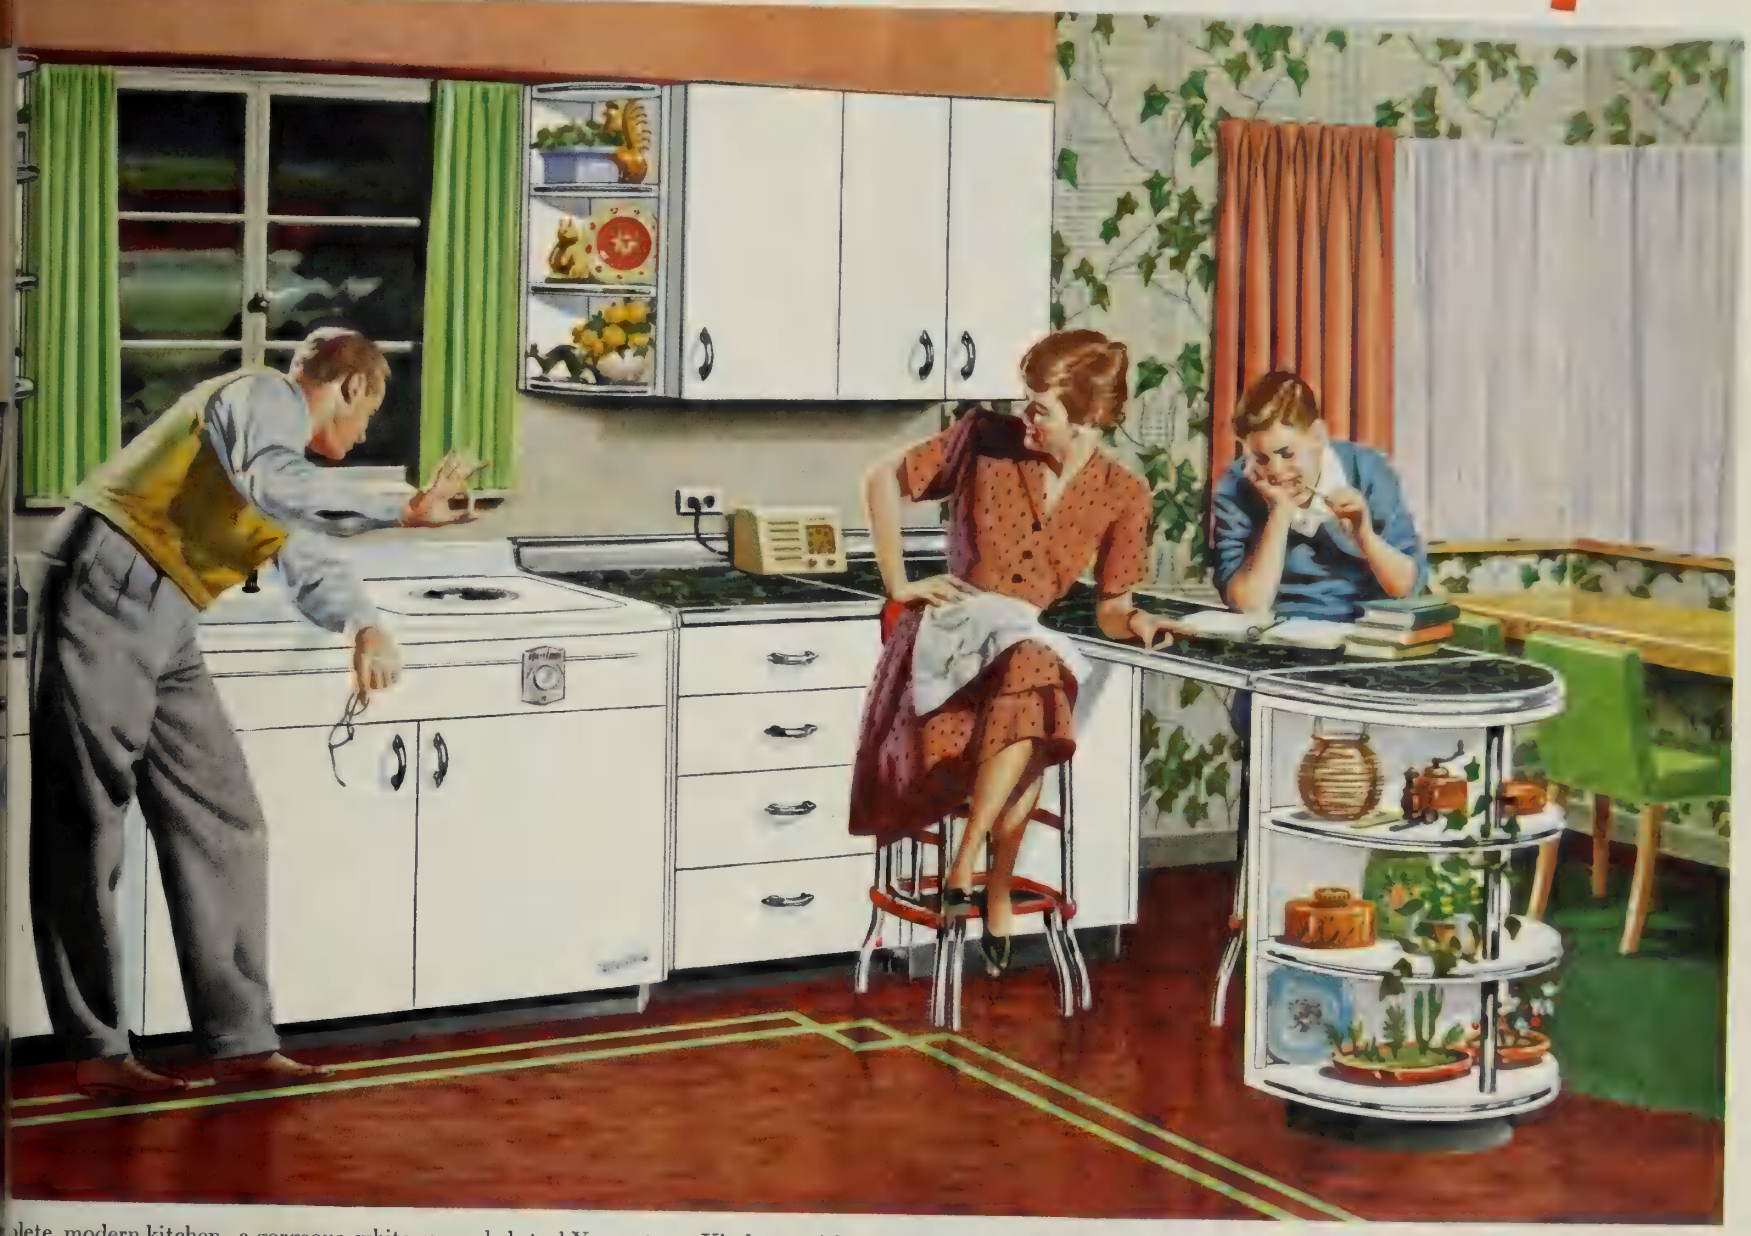
Youngstown Kitchens Electric Sink combines all the timesaving, work-saving features of Youngstown Kitchens Cabinet Sinks and the Youngstown Dishwasher in one unit. Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer available as optional equipment at extra cost. When building or buying, insist on a Youngstown Electric Sink. Width: 48 inches.



Youngstown Kitchens Food Waste Disposer keeps your kitchen clean as you go. Shreds food waste down the drain. Permits continuous feed! Self-cleaning with self-reversing motor. Easily installed.

Remarkable Cusheen, exclusive new cabinet top material. Has amazing resistance to abrasion, heat, sunlight, food acids, alkalies, alcohols, solvents, hot greases and oils. Ten glamorous, basic colors for any kitchen color scheme.

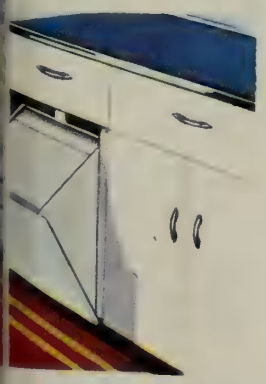
Beautiful Breakfast Bar with Half-Round Base What-Not. Adds glamour to the kitchen. What-Not is just the thing for often-used small appliances and for displaying decorative pieces.



New Rotary Corner Base Cabinet with rotating shelves that bring anything up front. Lips on shelves and rear shield prevent articles from falling off. Puts otherwise-wasted corner space to work.

Swinging mixing- gleaming chrome. Mi at desired tempe Rinse spray with fle for easier food clea rinsing. On DeLux

Youngstown Kitchens®



n Kitchen History !

lete, modern kitchen—a gorgeous, white-enameled steel Youngstown Kitchen—with new Youngstown Kitchens Electric Sink, featuring Automatic Dishwasher!

Rolling-Door Cabinets. Fit under wall cabinets. Gleaming, white plastic doors slide up out of way. Keep spices, seasonings separate, out of sight, yet handy, in convenient shelves. Available in two widths: 18" and 24".

Flour Bin Base Cabinet. Increased efficiency for the home baker! Keeps 50 pounds of flour dry and fresh in fully enclosed bin. Eliminates need for old-fashioned flour can. Bin tips out, closes easily. Cabinet matches other cabinets, is 15 inches wide.

Quarter-Round Base What-Not provides wonderful decorative touch to the kitchen when used at cabinet ends. Adds beauty, holds figurines, flowers, china, small accessories. Handsome chrome trim matches Wall What-Nots.

Maple Cutting Board Cabinet Top. Hard, thick maple, laminated side to side with edge-grain surface. Tough as a butcher's block. Provides handy, durable cutting surface. Comes in 24" width, may be cut to smaller widths. Has back-splash.

Call Western Union, Operator 25, and without charge get the name of a nearby dealer, or send coupon today.

NEWEST IDEAS IN KITCHEN PLANNING AND AUTOMATIC DISHWASHING

Get these latest kitchen-planning ideas. Complete information on Youngstown Kitchens, including illustrated, full-color booklet on new Automatic Dishwasher and Electric Sink. Send ten cents in cash to cover cost of mailing; no stamps, please.

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-950, Warren, Ohio

I plan to build ☐ I plan to remodel ☐

NAME _____
(Please Print)

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE ____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____

© 1956 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

KitchenAid

PROVES

you get what you pay for!

In the KitchenAid Food Preparer you're buying far more than just a mixer. It does so much more . . . performs so many more useful tasks that make light work of your food preparation.

Unlike the ordinary food mixer, KitchenAid has the built-in power to handle the long list of practical KitchenAid time and labor-saving attachments. No expensive "power booster" is required. Meat grinder, colander and sieve, vegetable slicer and all the other attachments are conveniently operated by the power-packed KitchenAid motor.

With KitchenAid, you're buying the most complete, thorough mixing, beating, whipping and kneading action . . . exclusive Hobart Planetary Action. Rotating beater travels around a stationary bowl . . . the natural, most effective way. No need to manually turn or retard the bowl or assist mixing with knife or spoon. You get superior results always.

Try KitchenAid and you'll see why it's worth the higher initial price . . . why you get even more than you pay for in greater usefulness . . . in more years of satisfaction.

KitchenAid

The Finest Made

KitchenAid Division • THE HOBART MFG. CO. TROY, OHIO

World's Largest Manufacturer of Food and Kitchen Machines

(Continued from Page 115)

choked. "They give you the nicest noses there of any place I know."

"I'm looking through a magazine now to find just the kind I want."

"That makes sense," said Ernestine.

"They won't let anyone see me until tomorrow. I had a terrible time even getting them to let me use the phone. I'll have my new nose by tomorrow."

Then Mother explained from the beginning. Another car had run into the taxi and turned it over. Something had happened to her nose and right knee. A bone surgeon was coming out from New York in a few hours to set the nose. They had injected something into her arm at the hospital that had stopped the pain and made her feel wonderful.

"There isn't much left of the old nose, I'm afraid," Mother added, "so it's just as easy for them to give me a handsome one as the one I used to have. Goodness knows nobody would deliberately choose a nose like my old one."

Mother hung up, and Ernestine explained about the accident to those of us who were still awake. Then she called the hospital desk for additional details. Mrs. Gilbreth's condition was satisfactory, but painful. Visiting hours started at ten o'clock in the morning. Children under twelve weren't allowed to visit.

All of us stayed out of school the next morning. We were sure that, regardless of age rules, Mother would want to see everybody. In fact, we were convinced that if she were deprived of that privilege, her recovery would be seriously retarded.

When your child says "nuts to you" (as we hope he does not) he is employing a term which dates back to the Middle Ages. In those days a suitor invited himself to dinner at the home of the young lady he wished to wed. At the conclusion of the meal, if he was served by her with a dish of nuts, he thus received the information that his attentions were not met with approval.

Ernestine suggested that it might also cheer up Mother if we took her some flowers from the yard. Lilacs, lilies of the valley and daffodils were abundant, and the boys went out to pick them. They wanted to cheer up Mother as much as possible, so they systematically stripped the yard. When they were through, the porch stairs were heaped with blooms and the lilac bushes were reduced to squat shrubs.

Everyone's arms were full as we walked to the hospital, and we had to stop and rest on several occasions. There was more than the usual trouble filing across street intersections, because it was hard to see through our bulging bouquets. Ernestine, in addition to her bouquet, carried a suitcase containing clothes, books, the morning mail and some office work for Mother.

When we arrived at Mountainside, Ernestine, Martha and Frank went in and got Mother's room number from the desk. Then Frank came out and brought the younger children in the back way, through an emergency door used by the ambulance patients. Mr. Chairman came, too, although he knew he wasn't supposed to, stealthily bringing up the rear of the line on his stomach. Dan discovered him in time, and everyone waited while Dan chased him out the door.

Single file, then, they tiptoed up the back stairs and along Mother's corridor, peering anxiously around corners to avoid doctors and the floor superintendent. Ernestine and Martha, who had gone up by the elevator, were standing outside Mother's room and gave the signal that the coast was clear.

Ernestine entered the room. The rest of us stayed in the hall. The bottom part of Mother's face was covered with bandages, and there was a cast on her knee. But she was sitting up in bed, knitting and reading a magazine. She was in a semiprivate room, with two other patients. As it turned out, the man who collided with the taxi was required to pay the hospital expenses. But Mother wasn't taking any chances, in case we had to foot the bill.

"There you are," Mother sighed. "It seemed as if visiting hours would never begin. How is everything at home?"

"Oh, Mother"—Ern ran to her b "does it hurt much? Are you all right

"Of course I am, and I'm getting a rest. Sit down and let me look at you."

Mother introduced Ern to the other patients, and Ern pulled up a chair. Mo kept glancing at the door.

"I don't suppose," she said, "that Ma or Frank came with you, did they? N course not. I forgot. Everybody'd b school, wouldn't they? I know they rules about the younger ones, but do guess the others will come this afterno

The rest of us came in then and piled flowers around Mother's bed. Bob and started to cry when they saw the band They climbed on her bed and snuggle against her.

"What's that for?" Mother said, ki her hand through her bandages and pla it on each of their cheeks. "What are crying for? Don't tell me you're jealous cause I'm going to have the best-loo nose in Montclair."

Bob said he had liked the old nose, ju it was.

"That skinny old thing?" Mother scornfully. "Huh!"

"Does it hurt?" we asked. "You can't us. Does it hurt much, Mother?"

"You can't get a handsome nose like new one without having it hurt a lit Mother admitted. "But it will be wort You just wait for the unveiling."

She said that seeing us for a while and smelling flowers had made feel better, but tha was afraid the hos officials wouldn't it if they found that we had broke rule about children der twelve.

"I'd like to k how babies get here then," Lill "They're un twelve."

"And another thing," Mother told "you mustn't miss any more school on account. I want you to promise me that We promised. Ernestine said we'd all g school that morning, just as soon as we the hospital.

"We'll need written excuses for b late," Ernestine added. "I wrote them morning. They're in the suitcase. All y have to do is sign them."

Ernestine dug in the suitcase and duced a typewritten original and s onionskin carbons. Mother glanced t over and signed them.

"Thank you, dear," she told Ern g fully. "You write the nicest excuses in family."

A nurse came in then, but she see more concerned about the flowers than breaking the rule about children u twelve.

"I don't believe we have vases enoug all of them," she said, "and they can't there. Your Mother looks like she's lying bier."

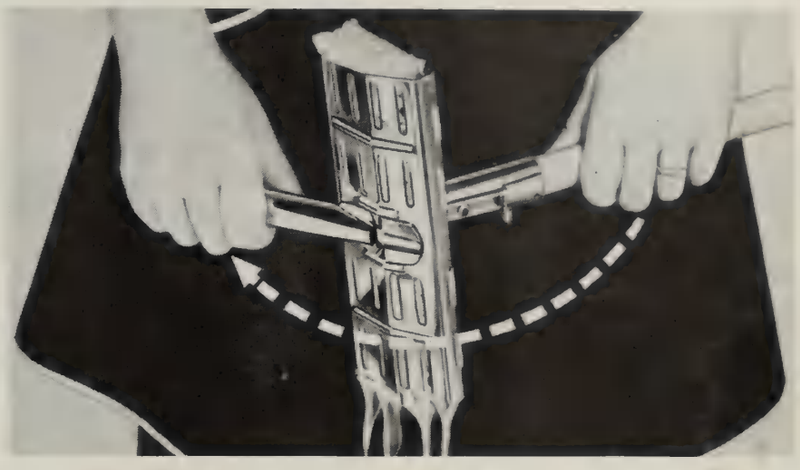
We hadn't realized it before, but t exactly how it did look. The lilacs, lili the valley and daffodils were piled on sides of the bed, as high as Mother he The nurse cleared a passage to the bed, lifted off Bob and Jane.

"You mustn't get on the bed," she wa them. "You jiggle it, and your Mother considerable pain."

"Not any more, I'm not," Mother sa

"They say at the desk," the nurse tol "that you children can stay only five utes more, and for you to go out the way, the same way you came in. They want people in the reception rooms to k that the rules have been broken."

"Everybody in the hospital has be nice," Mother said.



"And use the back door again," the continued, "when you come tomorr after school."

(To be Concluded)

New wet mop keeps hands dry!

No more wringing! You just press the O-Cedar Sponge Mop dry with its built-in squeezer!

Your hands stay clean and dry with the new O-Cedar Sponge Mop because you don't have to wring it. You press the water out with the handy built-in squeezer.

No clumsy attachments needed on your scrub bucket! Truly, the O-Cedar Sponge Mop is the most revolutionary household help since the vacuum cleaner.

You get floors cleaner faster, with O-Cedar's exclusive "wonder working angle." The sponge head grips the surface, floods the floor, scrubs out stubborn dirt. Your floor is dry enough to wax only minutes after mopping.

Your hands stay smoother. The hottest water, the strongest soaps cannot harm your hands because your hands stay dry! (Won't harm the tough, durable cellulose sponge head, either. It's easily sterilized by boiling.)

O-Cedar Sponge Mop $3.95 complete

Interchangeable sponge refills—$1.49
At leading housewares dealers everywhere

If your dealer cannot supply you, use this handy order form.

O-Cedar Corp'n, 2246 W. 49th Street, Chicago 9, Illinois

I buy my cleaning supplies at _____ (NAME OF STORE)

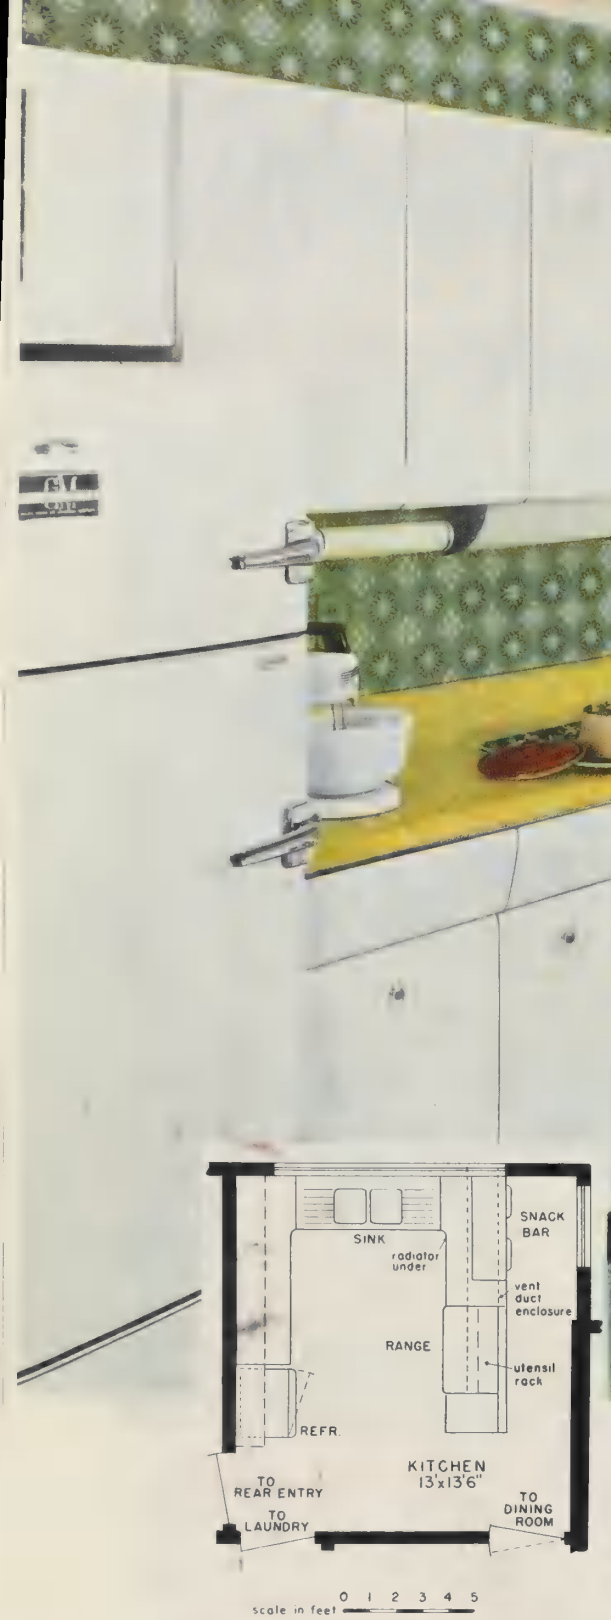
Address of store _____

Please arrange to have my dealer supply me with one complete O-Cedar Sponge Mop.

My name is _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____



O cedar

WRITTEN 5 YEAR GUARANTEE with every O-Cedar Sponge Mop. See your favorite housewares dealer for complete details. Get your new O-Cedar Sponge Mop now. It's a lasting investment in easier housecleaning and lovelier looking hands.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

O-Cedar Corp'n
Chicago, Illinois

O-Cedar of Canada, Ltd.
Toronto, Canada

The bright new kitchen has a generous food-preparation center between the refrigerator and sink—and a woodsy view!

This is what we started with—an out-of-date kitchen with an ungainly sink, an awkwardly placed radiator, and a wooden dresser with top section so low it hindered working at the counter. The refrigerator still stood in the back entry.

Easy to Live wit

ONE of those comfortable houses built in Our Towns early in the tury, out on the Philadelphia Main Line, is my favorite Philade Story. The house has a warm, friendly look. The minute you step the hall you feel it was built to be a home.

A fire was burning on the wide hearth that cool September day w was last there. Book-lined shelves and comfortable sofas made the room quite perfect. Also, I felt a pang of homesickness, for there serenity and home-feeling about the houses I have known in Vi which this house in the frosty North preserved.

But the kitchen had been a difficult problem, for in the houses o period the kitchens were modern once, but now are definitely outm

The range peninsula ties the kitchen units together. The two-way drawer in the narrow counter is handy from both snack counter and the sink side. The ceiling beam effect houses recessed light and ventilator duct, supports utensil rack.

The casual counter for informal eating is dropped to table height so comfortable chairs are used. Serves, too, for making menus and market lists. Washable cotton curtains hang from a track under narrow shelf displaying rainbow-hued old glass.

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

by Gladys Taber

ard to live with. So the JOURNAL decided to solve this typical kitchen em, making the kitchen live up to the house as it had when it was uilt.

e room was about 13 by 14 feet, too big to make a workable plan if ppliances were simply lined up along the walls. You had to walk to get a meal together, and more miles to put things away.

e basic remodeling of this kitchen consisted in creating a U-shaped ng unit inside the big room, and leaving a secondary area for casual . The range was placed in a peninsula extending into the room—in- of being isolated on one wall, across the room from the sink—and he range a false beam was built to accommodate a long panel of light and a flue to the ventilator. This also gave space for a wonderful rack to hold casseroles and kitchen utensils at the range.

A cabinet was installed at the right of the range and an open counter connected sink and range. Before, the range was isolated on one wall with a single wooden cabinet around the corner from it. The change added to the storage space and provided a place to dish up hot foods and to cool cookies, cakes and the like. The connections for the range were brought up through the floor, then the backs of the range and cabinet were finished with a low wall.

An extra dividend for this plan was that the radiator and a towel-drying rack were tucked out of the way under the counter. (Continued on Page 122)

Today...

compare the sparkle this grit-free cleanser gives to your Sink and your Bathtub

Tomorrow— you'll join the millions of women who refuse to use anything else!

IT'S TOUGH ON ALL DIRT

GENTLE ON ALL SURFACES

KIND TO YOUR HANDS

QUICK- POLISHES AS IT CLEANS

You'll clean your best with

BON AMI "hasn't scratched yet!"

The old sink was replaced by a modern version, with two bowls, two drainboards and extra cupboard storage. Standing at the sink, the homemaker can watch the sunlight latticing the trees on the lovely slope.

The refrigerator has the new advantage of a freezer compartment which holds frozen foods, and a moist-cold storage compartment for fresh fruits and vegetables. It was placed near the rear door—instead of at the back entry where the old icebox had been—with cabinets between it and the sink. This provides a fine place for meal preparation, with storage above and below and room for the mixer and food supplies at easy reach.

The family has a habit of hospitality, which was one reason for choosing a range with six burners and a separate oven and broiler. Meals for a dozen are easy with this much cooking space.

Fluorescent lights, like the one in the beam effect, are recessed in the ceiling above the sink and in the middle of the kitchen work center. An additional light under the wall cabinets at the main preparation center brightens the long counter there.

Yet with all this modern efficiency, the kitchen keeps the charm and traditional feeling of the rest of the house. The floor covered with a soft green plastic cover and the walls papered in a stencil design green with white, as lovely as an old-fa ioned garden. A daffodil yellow for the co ter tops, accented with green and white. curtains are cotton with old-fashio touches of green and yellow rickrack, an shelf across the windows holds lovely glass to catch the sunlight.

The tray rack over the refrigerator built with an open center to frame one of charming stenciled trays when not in This storage unit opens from the side, s is not necessary to stretch over the fr of the refrigerator to reach a tray.

The chairs for the casual corner are ca seated Hitchcock style and were pain brick red. An electric wall clock, traditio in design, was brought from the dining ro and painted to match.

When finished, it was completely mod and efficient and yet just right for South fried chicken and beaten biscuits and sp dark Virginia ham and crusty corn sti made with water-ground corn meal kitchen as happy and hospitable as the of the house.

ESCAPE FROM THE PAST

(Continued from Page 56)

and his need of her, because he knew they were greater than hers for him.

"Did you have a good day?" she asked him.

"Fine," he said. "Everything went very well."

She followed him back to the bathroom and stood leaning against the doorjamb while he washed. She had the body, the graceful movements of a dancer, and her coloring was striking—the extraordinary combination of dark skin and light hair and eyes. Merriam knew she was not, by conventional standards, beautiful. Her nose was irregular and her mouth was too large, but she was one of those women whose fascination for men far surpasses and outlasts mere beauty.

"I don't know why I ask you about your day," she said now, with a little smile. "It's always fine—everything always goes well."

He looked over his shoulder at her, smiling too, and said, "I must be a happy man," and then looked back at his reflection in the mirror, wondering with part of his mind whether he needed a second shave, since they were going out to dinner. With another part of his mind he thought that he had really become a master of dissimulation if Iris believed that everything always went well with him—if he really had been successful in never letting her see his moments of torment and fear—she who loved him and lived with him, his wife ——

But she was not, of course, his wife. She was the wife of David Merriam, the man he had become—a man to whom the daily problems of business were of small importance compared with the major problem of his life, so that if all went well there he felt that everything was fine. The fact that an account had progressed satisfactorily during the day was as nothing beside the fact that he no longer anxiously searched faces for one that might recognize him.

"I'd better shave," he decided. "The Wallachs go in for culture, don't they?"

She laughed. "What has culture to do with shaving?" she inquired. "On the contrary, I've always thought of a beard as a sign of culture. You know, one of those distinguished little Vandykes that make people ask each other who you are—an artist or a writer or a statesman or somebody."

He began lathering his face. He quoted:

"I'm nobody! Who are you?
Are you nobody too?"

Iris chimed in at the end:

"How dreary to be somebody!
How public, like a frog,
To tell your name the livelong day
To an admiring bog."

"David," she said, leaning toward h "it's absurd for you to know Emily Dick son—it's not in character at all. Where did you learn that?"

He grinned. "There was a girl, in my s timental youth. She used to read it to me picnics."

"No, David," she said decisively. "Y never had a sentimental youth. I don't lieve it."

"You'd be surprised."

She looked at him with an expression could not read. "I wish I had met you th when you were listening to poetry on Oregon hillside," she said.

Oregon, he thought. Far from New Yo On the outskirts of Portland—a big enou city so that it would be reasonable for any from there not to know him.

"You wouldn't have liked me," he t her. "They didn't come any more cal and credulous and dumb."

"There's been a gr change," she said sof

"The beneficence time." But it wasn't mer time, he thought, nor a sort of beneficence t had made the gentle, tru ful boy into the ha shelled, cautious man.

Hospitality consists in a little fire, a little food and an immense quiet.

—EMERSON.

"I'll just put on the finishing touch Iris said, moving away from the door. be ready when you are."

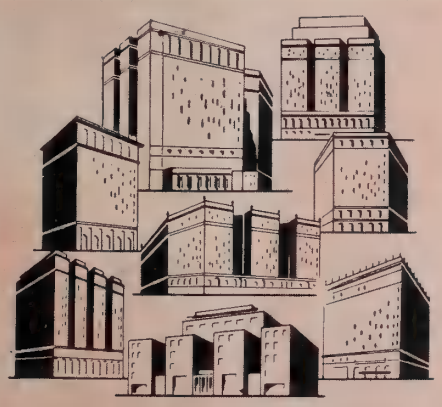
Iris, he thought, caressing the name w his mind. She was the one good thing t had come out of all this. If circumstances not sent him to New York he would ne have met her and married her. It was the good thing for him. How it was for her—I it would be in the end—he could not kn He was still often tormented by the thou that he should not have let her in for all possibilities.

It was young Roberts, one of the lay men, who had introduced them. He had co up to Merriam at the office and asked whether he liked the ballet. "I have an tra ticket for tonight," he said. "I thou you might like to go along with me."

"Why me?" Merriam had asked h "Why not a girl? I should think ——"

"No, you see ——" Roberts had laug and blushed. "Well, the fact is, it's a g go to see in the ballet. She's ——" He sh his head, unable to find words, and t smiled again at Merriam "You'll co won't you?"

Their seats were in the third row, c enough so that Merriam could see the ti



(Continued on Page 124)

"They call my suppers...

'Dinner at the Statler'*

since we got our new easy-to-use

Magic Chef
GAS RANGE

*In famous-for-food Statler Hotel Kitchens

Magic Chef ranges are used to prepare the gourmet delights served in such renowned Statler dining places as the Cafe Rouge and Terrace Rooms!

You get compliments like that when you cook on a Magic Chef! For you're turning out meals that rival America's expert chefs—many of whom use nothing but Magic Chef. It's the range, you know, with ALL the important features—yet so simple to operate that even Dad can turn chef and make good! All Magic Chef ranges work on city, "Pyrofax" or other bottled and tank gases . . . and they're priced to fit ANYBODY'S kitchen.

MAGIC CHEF models in all price brackets, starting in most areas at $119.50

AMERICAN STOVE CO., ST. LOUIS 10, MISSOURI • WORLD'S LARGEST GAS RANGE MANUFACTURERS

THE NEW Magic Chef HEATER . . .
AMERICA'S MOST BEAUTIFUL!

Heat your house for less with this new heater. Burns fuel oil or city, bottled or tank gas. Priced from only $59.95.

WANT THE Magic Chef CAP'N APRON?

Swell for barbecuers! Regulation chef's outfit, $4.00 value. Get it from Magic Chef retailers for $1.98 and this coupon!

No wonder—"more ~~women~~ families cook on Magic Chef than on any other range"

IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE

..but it's true!

KEM-GLO

looks and washes like baked enamel

YOU CAN SPATTER IT WITH GREASE

YOU CAN SPILL BOILING WATER ON IT

YOU CAN MARK IT WITH CRAYON

YOU CAN SMUDGE IT AND SCUFF IT

YOU CAN WASH IT HUNDREDS OF TIMES

The Miracle Lustre Finish for Walls and Woodwork in Kitchens and Bathrooms . . . . for Woodwork Everywhere

Wherever you want beautiful walls and woodwork that clean as easily as your refrigerator, KEM-GLO is your answer. Dirt, grime, grease do not penetrate KEM-GLO'S plastic-smooth surface. Yes, even ink, fruit juices, beverages and fingerprints are all easily removed from a KEM-GLO surface with soap and water. KEM-GLO comes in 10 lovely colors and a white that really stays white! Ready to use—just stir and apply. One coat covers most surfaces, saving time and money. Try this new miracle finish. You'll agree you've never seen its equal.

PINT $1.39 QUART $2.39
ECONOMY SIZE $7.98 GALLON

KEM-GLO goes on twice as easy, twice as fast on walls and ceilings with the new Super-Cushion ROLLER-KOATER

THE MAKERS OF KEM-GLO, KEM-TONE AND SUPER KEM-TONE LEAD THE WORLD IN PAINT RESEARCH

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit
W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh
The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton
John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia
The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago
Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit
The Sherwin-Williams Co., Cleveland

INSIST ON GENUINE KEM-GLO . . . SOLD AT LEADING PAINT, HARDWARE, LUMBER AND DEPARTMENT STORES EVERYWHERE

(Continued from Page 122)

artificially smiling face of the prima ballerina. Her dancing seemed joyless and mechanical and he began to be bored by it.

Then Roberts took his arm and whispered, "Here she is, coming on now, the second one."

Merriam looked indifferently, but in a moment he was sitting forward in his seat watching Iris dance across the stage, not taking his eyes off her from that moment. He thought he had never seen anyone so graceful, so vital, so intensely happy to be dancing.

"What do you think of her?" Roberts asked him when the act was over. "Isn't she wonderful?"

Merriam had to return from another world. "She's very fine," he said then. "I'm no judge, of course, but she seems so much better than the star. Why do you suppose ——"

Roberts laughed. "I thought the same thing, but she says she isn't really terribly good—it isn't an obsession with her the way it has to be if you're going to be a great ballerina." He spoke eagerly. "Would you like to meet her?"

They went backstage, and she came out, dressed for the next act. Merriam saw that she was older than Roberts, and for some reason that he could not then name, this pleased him.

"Hello, Jack," she said to Roberts. "It's very nice to see you." She spoke warmly, yet she made it perfectly plain that he was just a boy she liked. Only a woman with a sure knowledge of men, Merriam thought, could establish an entire relationship with a few commonplace words.

"This is David Merriam," Roberts said.

She looked at him for a moment and then gave him her hand, and he had the gratifying feeling that this was a privilege she did not extend to everyone.

He found himself asking her impulsively to have supper with them—he who had done nothing impulsively for so long that he had thought the habit of caution ingrained. She accepted, and that was the beginning. Roberts dropped out of the picture before long. One by one the others dropped out too.

"I try not to monopolize you," he said to her. "I make up my mind not to. Then I do it anyway."

In her apartment after the show, he was able to forget a little the thing he had thought he could never forget.

"If I don't object to your monopolizing me," she said to him quietly, "why should it trouble you?"

He sat still, acutely aware of her, of her smooth, fair hair and her faint perfume.

"You are admired by so many men," he told her. "It is impertinent of me to attempt to replace them."

"That's simply saying the same thing in a different way," she said. She smiled a little. "I've known you for several months, David. You're not an easy man to understand—but this I do know: you'd never have any qualms about replacing any other men, or any doubts about being able to do it, either."

He knew he ought to get out of her life. He fought it for a year, and he lost—or won, depending on how you looked at it.

He spent one night pacing the floor, telling himself that he was David Merriam, that the other man was dead. But what if someday someone who knows comes along and brings the whole myth of David Merriam crashing around my head and hers? It was a chance, of course. Have I any right to take the chance for Iris? He couldn't answer that. The fact was that he didn't see how he could let her go.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Egotistical Male

By G. M. White

Look, I'll tell you why I'm something—
I'm dashing, what? I'm king!
I rule the space from earth to sky—
The people stare when I walk by.
My back is straight, my head is high—
The birds ask me if they can fly,
The sun asks me if it can shine
Because I hold your hand in mine.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For a while, that night, he considered tel ing her, but in the end he did not tell her. H thought it possible that she might marry hi anyway, and he could not deliberately burde her with the fear and the wariness and th uncertainty with which he had learned live.

He said this much to her. He said, "M life's not an open book, Iris. Someday son of the pages may fall out and spoil the stor You're taking a chance."

She gave him her little smile. "We're n children, David," she said, with that faculi she had of implying so much in a few word

THEY were married without any sort fanfare. He did not have to suggest this— was the way she wanted it. For a few mont she continued dancing with the ballet, b when the season was over she told him s was not going back.

"This isn't the right sort of life for us she said. "I want to make a home for y and have some sort of social life, enterta friends, other married couples."

He had liked it the way it was, just the tw of them—no new faces, no new challenges meet—but he supposed it was dull for h She loved him, he knew, but he could n hope for the all-encompassing love that had for her. He knew that there were tim when she could not make him out at all. Ho could anyone make out a man who had be born at the age of twenty-seven—a ma called David Mc riam, who had nev existed until six yea ago?

"Black tie for t Wallachs'?" he call in to her now. "Or this one of their infc mal dinners?"

"Informal," sh said. "I think it going to be arty- Myra mentioned violinist and a write She said I'd adore because I used to be dancer or somethin didn't I?"

They went ou laughing. Afterwa Merriam remembere thinking that he ha felt really ligh hearted, for the fir time in almost twelve years.

It happened just before they went in dinner. They were standing together, he ar Iris, when Myra Wallach came bustling t with somebody. She was a big, dark, abru woman who gave innumerable parties. "Th is Charles Granger," she said, and murmur something about Granger's being a new paperman, and then left them together.

Granger stared at Iris. Merriam had se men look at her that way before, with th almost unbelieving pleasure, but since the marriage no one had been quite so open abo it. Merriam was a little amused and o faintly annoyed.

"Did Myra say a newspaperman?" inquired.

Granger turned around. He was sand haired, brown, hard-muscled, with a lea clever face. "Mr. Merriam," he said. stared at David now, and drew his bro together. "Haven't we met?"

"No," David said. "No, I don't think s

It meant nothing, nothing at all. Peo were always saying that to each other, cato ing some familiar something that remind them of someone they knew. He had nev seen this man before in his life. Char Granger? He had never heard the name.

"That's funny," Granger said. "I co swear I've seen you before. The name does mean anything to me, but the face ——"

David could see Iris watching him, waiti to hear him speak. "It's certainly possibl he said pleasantly. "I've been a lot of place

"Oh, well," Granger said, "it's just one those annoying things."

But he did not really pass it off. All dur dinner David caught him looking at h from across the table.

there's something new in Sani-Flush

▪ We couldn't improve the action of this tried and true household friend which cleans and disinfects toilet bowls for you in a jiffy. So we added a pleasant fragrance. Released as it works—it then disappears leaving bathroom atmosphere refreshed! Quick, easy, sanitary. Safe in all toilet systems. Follow directions on can. Same price; at your grocer's. The Hygienic Products Company, Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

in the familiar yellow can

NOW FRESHLY FRAGRANT

Buying a MATTRESS?
Be Sure It's REINFORCED with LONGER-LASTING★

PERM-A-LATOR Wire INSULATORS™

LOOK FOR THIS TAG!

prove wire insulators last more than twice ong as other insulators. Insist on PERM-A-ORS and get greater comfort . . . longer-ng mattresses and upholstered furniture.

Write for Free Booklet!

EX-O-LATORS, Inc. Carthage, Mo.
ies in Carthage, Mo. and New Castle, Pa.

DANGER!

lp Guard Your Children From nful Swelling, Dread Infection

rs, neglect of minor injuries, cuts, burns, , scalds may lead to painful, terrible infec- lp protect your children, family with gentle, Oil-O-Sol. Helps control infection, ease pain, aling. Get wonderful germ-arresting antiseptic, Mosso's Oil-O-Sol, 50¢ today, all drug stores.

L GALS SEND FOR FREE SHOE BOOKLET

BUY DIRECT! MAIL PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR OUR NEW FREE 24 PAGE BOOKLET LL

Stage, Screen Stars, Society buy Shoecraft Tall Gals 5th Ave. Shoes! Famous for Fashion and Fit in sizes to 12; AAAAA to C. Money back guaranteed if returned unworn in 10 days.

SHOECRAFT 603 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK 17

It didn't mean a thing. A man thought he recognized you and it bothered him, but after a while he would forget about it. He did not really know David. If he did, David would know him, and he had never seen Granger before in his life . . . or had he?

He took another good look at Granger. The newspaperman was talking animatedly to Iris, who sat on his right, his profile turned to David. All at once, as David stared at the long, thin nose, the jutting chin, he became convinced that it was familiar.

The evening passed somehow. Granger seemed to have lost interest in David in favor of Iris, whose side he never left, and David was able to look at him for a long time.

The longer he looked, the more pronounced the sense of familiarity grew. He could not throw off the certainty that Granger was right. They had seen each other in some other place, at some other time. There were so many places where they might have met for a brief moment, and somehow both remembered—in a train, a restaurant, a theater, or one of those New York parties where people were never even introduced to one another. So many places.

Yet David did not believe it had been anything like that. By the end of the evening he was convinced that Granger's face had been one of the faces in the courtroom. He even thought he could see the sharp blue eyes watching him, the narrow lips curved a little contemptuously. How many faces he had scanned, trying to find one that was not contemptuous or horrified or disgusted! But there was not one, nobody at all who believed in him.

Not that he blamed them. He had never really blamed them. The evidence had been so overwhelming. It was he who had signed all the checks, all the papers—not Caleb Ferguson. It was he, not Ferguson, who was obviously in need of money, because his father's estate had just turned out to be deeply in debt. But who, in any case, would have believed that Ferguson would use a trusting young fellow, make him treasurer of the company, in order to cheat his stockholders? Caleb Ferguson, most respected, admired man in town, philanthropist, trustee of the church!

David, whose name had not been David then, had found it difficult to believe it himself. He had thought at first that Ferguson could not have known, any more than he knew himself, the significance of the things he sent to his young treasurer to sign, that someone else was behind it, duping Ferguson. He soon learned what a fool he was. Nobody could dupe Ferguson. The only dupe was David.

"But Mr. Ferguson sent the papers and checks to my desk for signature," he cried on the witness stand. "I didn't know what they were. He said to sign them and so I did."

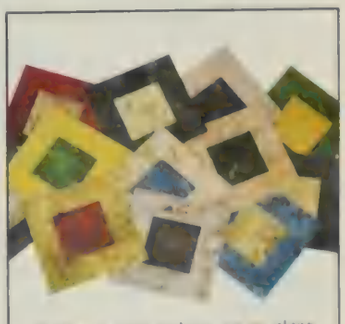
"Is it true, Mr. Ferguson?" the great man was asked, when his turn came.

Caleb Ferguson shrugged his heavy shoulders. "Of course not. What do you expect the poor boy to say?"

David served five years and eleven months of his sentence. In the beginning he cried every night, muffling his face in the coarse sheet—he was only twenty-one. He was disgraced for life, a convict, and he didn't know where to go, what to do when he got out of there. The town where he was born was the only place he really knew. But he couldn't go back there—he could never go back. His name wasn't a good, clean name any more. It was dirtied now, the name of a cheat, an embezzler, a convict. Well, he would discard the name. He was all right—still the same decent, honest fellow he had always been. Without the blemished name and the record that went with it, he wouldn't be a crook or a convict to anyone. He stopped crying and began making plans.

By behaving himself in prison, he got out in the shortest possible time. He was a man now, twenty-seven, and he had had a lot of time to think and learn. There wasn't any credulousness left in him, any trusting innocence, but there wasn't much bitterness either. He had been used by an unscrupulous

From this idea... came a new and amazing Linoleum Tile ...BIRD DUOTONE!



Bird Duotone Tiles shown are Patterns #D-0214 and #D-0225

Now you can design your own floors! Your floors can have a luxurious custom-made appearance — yet new Duotone Linoleum Tile, exclusively Bird's, gives you a floor that costs no more than ordinary linoleum tile!

Bird Duotone is an exclusive, patented linoleum tile of excellent quality . . . it's resilient and tough, smooth and fine-textured . . . made by Bird & Son, makers of fine floor coverings for many years, and other quality products since 1795!

Your Bird dealer can show you Bird Duotone Linoleum Tile . . . he also has Bird Linoleum, Bird Linoleum Tile, and Armorlite Rugs and Floor Coverings . . . ask to see these superb floor coverings, too!

Rich glowing colors, crisp clear marbleization, famous Bird quality . . . Bird Duotone Linoleum Tile enables you to choose your own floor from an almost endless variety of designs and color combinations!

BIRD Rugs and Floor Coverings

Dept. CDJ-2, EAST WALPOLE · MASS

ARMORLITE · LINOLEUM
LINOLEUM TILE · RUBBERLIKE
RUG BORDER

Also Manufacturers of Bird Master-Bilt Shingles and Insulating Sidings a real cowboy needs real

Snap-along Toggery

Any bronco-buster knows that real Western duds have snap fasteners. They're good-looking, more convenient, practically a rule of the range. And snap fasteners are a big time-saver for you, put an end to tedious button-sewing, make wash-day easier. If your young cowboy wants them genuine to the last detail, make sure the togs you buy have Dot Snappers.

SMART SEW-AT-HOMES!

Put Dot Snappers on the clothes you make, with the Dot Snappers Kit. Complete with professional attaching tool, at notion counters. $1 a box.

DOT SNAPPERS

®

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBRIDGE 42, MASS.

man, but there was no more time to waste brooding about it—six years of his life were wasted, gone, as it was. He had to look ahead now, and make what he could out of what was left.

The first thing was the new name. He was eager to shed the old name, the blot that went with it, like dead skin, and slip into the fresh, unused, unsullied one. Long ago he had selected Merriam. Not too common, not too unusual. David Merriam. He had always liked the name "David." It seemed to him to be associated with strength and dignity. He could not imagine an embezzler named David.

He went to New York the way he had planned, feeling excitement, a sense of adventure, and the power of a new, self-confident, knowledgeable personality. The personality of David Merriam, from Oregon.

He got a night job as a porter so that he could eat, and he spent his days looking for a place where he could get ahead fast, make up for the six years.

Sanborn, Carr and Whitmore was a young, growing advertising agency, and they had a spot for a young, live salesman to whom advancement meant more than initial income. They were impressed by David. They took him on, and he made good far beyond their hopes or his own. Within four years David was one of the most successful account executives in the agency.

He loved New York, he liked his work and the people he knew, and he was pretty well satisfied with David Merriam. And the more contented he became with this new life of his, this new man he had become, the more it terrified him to think of losing them.

That was when he began to worry about being found out. David Merriam was a respected, well-liked, successful man, but in five minutes David Merriam could disappear, leaving an embezzler, an ex-convict, a man without a job or friends.

He started avoiding, wherever possible, gatherings of people that might include someone who had known him. When he had to join such gatherings for business purposes, he formed the habit of looking over every face as soon as he entered, hoping that he could slip away unnoticed if it became necessary.

Then he met Iris, and in his happiness with her he came close to forgetting the threat that hung over him. He allowed himself to be led back into a normal life, a life filled with friends and social activity. He enjoyed it all. He had been too long shut away from society not to enjoy it. Only at times did the old specter rise again. At times, especially at night when he could not sleep, it seemed certain to him that he would be found out someday, somehow, and lose everything.

IRIS would want to stay with him, he thought, looking across the room to where she sat with her head tilted a little toward Charles Granger, listening to whatever it was he was saying. She would want to stand by him. That was the way she was. But even if he let her remain the wife of a social outcast, which of course he would not do, he would have lost her. She would try to believe him, but the doubt would always be between them.

All at once, as he watched her listening to Granger, the thought struck him that Granger might be telling her now, at this very moment. It was a long time since he had looked at David with that curious, puzzled look, trying to remember. Perhaps he had remembered now—perhaps it had all come back to him, and he was telling Iris.

David could scarcely wait to rush across the room to them, to find out. Iris smiled up at him and put her hand on his arm.

"Here you are," she said. "Mr. Granger has been telling me the most fascinating things about the Orient."

During George Bancroft's term as Secretary of the Navy, he frequently consulted Rufus Choate on legal matters. On one such occasion, the business settled, the conversation drifted to the subject of happiness. Bancroft having declared that he was happier than he had ever hoped to be, Choate demanded:

"Do you mean to tell me that you're happier than you ever thought you'd be when you were a boy?"

"Yes, indeed!" declared the historian.

"Then permit me, Mr. Bancroft," said Choate with a sweeping bow, "the privilege and pleasure of meeting Mrs. Bancroft!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

What a fool he was, to imagine that Granger had been pouring the story into Iris' ear! Even if he knew it. Suddenly the whole thing seemed fantastic. He and Charles Granger had never seen each other before in their lives.

Granger held Iris' hand and said, his eyes on hers, "You have a very fascinating wife, Merriam." Then he looked at David and smiled. "You're going to haunt me, Merriam. But I'm sure it will come to me sooner or later where I've seen you."

DAVID made some inquiries about Granger, but they were not very revealing. A reporter, a free-lance writer of articles, he had been almost everywhere. He was much sought after as an eligible bachelor, for he had money and he was considered very attractive and charming, but although he liked women and had great success with them, there never seemed to be any one woman for any length of time. All of which added up to nothing for David, except that it did not rule out the possibility of Granger's having been in his home town. He told himself it was all absurd anyway. He would probably never see the man again.

But when David got home for dinner a few nights later, Granger was there. David saw him sitting in the living room, and he thought He knows. He's waiting to tell me.

Iris got up from the sofa beside the visitor. "Hello, darling," she said. "You remember Mr. Granger, don't you?"

Oh, yes, he remembered Mr. Granger.

"I'm staying for dinner," Granger said. "I dropped in to see if I could persuade you and wife to go somewhere, but she insisted on keeping me here and making me a friend of the family." He grimaced. "You're all right, Merriam, but I'm afraid you're going to cramp my style."

David was so relieved that he expanded as he had not done in some time. The other man was good company—he had been all over the world, and he knew how to tell a story. They had a pleasant evening. Granger did not once mention the familiarity of David's face, and David thought perhaps he had given it up.

"I liked you tonight," Iris said when they were getting ready for bed. "You . . . radiated."

David grinned. "Granger's an entertaining fellow," he said.

"Yes—he's very attractive."

They had had a pleasant evening, and it would have been all right if it had ended there, but that was only the beginning. Granger became a regular visitor at their home. And he had not forgotten his idea that he had seen David somewhere before. Often he would stare at David and then smile and shake his head, making a joke of it.

It was no joke to David. It was nerve-racking. His work suffered, and he became irritable for the first time in his life. He was no longer pleasant to Granger. He wanted to make the other man stay away from him, discourage the great friendship he had evidently formed for the Merriams. Yet he could not be too obvious.

"What's the matter with you, dear?" Iris asked him one night after Granger had left. "You haven't been yourself for weeks. I don't know you at all."

David stood turned away from her, trying to control himself. He wanted to shout that he was sick of Granger, sick of having him hang around, but such violence would sound strange, uncalled for. He was not a violent man.

"It's nothing," he said, more shortly than he had intended. "I suppose I've been working too hard."

"Why don't you go away for the week end, David? Why don't you go on that fishing

(Continued on Page 129)

General Electric proudly presents its

30 MILLIONTH IRON!

This month, in General Electric's Ontario California plant, the 30 millionth General Electric Iron was produced.

This is a magnificent vote of confidence from the women of America. It means that for generation after generation . . . in household after household . . . the iron bearing the famous General Electric name is America's favorite.

Into this handsome General Electric Iron has been built every de luxe feature and convenience that you want in a truly efficient iron. Women everywhere say it helps them iron one-third faster!

A bow to you . . . and a pledge

To every woman who has purchased a dependable General Electric Iron—or given her wholehearted recommendation to another—we sincerely say, "Thank you!" And, at this opportune time, we renew this pledge:

We will continue to manufacture America's finest irons, and to offer them at prices that make them the world's finest dollar-for-dollar value.

General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

Iron ⅓ faster as so many women do!

See this new, handsome General Electric Iron at your G-E dealer's. We think you will agree that it is the iron for you. A recent check shows that many women find this General Electric beauty helps them iron ⅓ faster than with older types of irons! Only $11.95.

*Price subject to change without notice.

You can put your confidence in—

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Specially developed—this new type chicken grows as big in 12 weeks as the ordinary chicken in four months. This fellow comes from parents of selected meat-bearing strains, starts with the natural tendency to grow big.

Specially prepared for market by skilled workers using the very latest processes. After thorough cleaning, washing, and inspection of each bird, the finest only are branded tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken.

Specially fast-chilled immediately following inspection at temperatures just above freezing. Each chicken is quickly chilled between layers of chipped ice . . . to retain its delicate "spring-time" flavor for your dining table.

Specially protected on the way to m ket. The entire interior of the tru carrying these chickens is spra with icy snow . . . to maintain t peratures that guarantee their ar at the peak of goodness and fla

The dream chicken that came true!

It's tender-grown Swift's Premium

HERE is chicken at its finest and chicken value at its greatest. Specially fed for quality meat . . . specially raised for flavor . . . specially produced to grow big and plump while still young and tender.

Planned just for eating, this chicken is a sensational example of the research and development going on in the poultry industry today.

Look for fresh tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken with the tag on the wing or quick-frozen in the blue and white picture package.

"A tisket, a tasket," serve

CHICKEN-IN-A-BASKET

- 1 tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken, cut for frying
- 1 cup flour
- 2 teaspoons salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- ½ cup Swift's Brookfield Butter
- Shortening

Put flour and seasonings in paper sack. Shake 3 or 4 pieces of chicken in sack at a time to coat. Heat butter and enough shortening in a heavy skillet to make ½ inch layer. Brown chicken on both sides in hot fat. Cover tightly. Reduce heat and cook 30 to 40 minutes. Serve hot or cold in napkin-lined dinner basket.

(Continued from Page 126)

you've always talked about? It would be onderful rest and change for you."

e had not been fishing in years. As a boy, oung man, it had been his favorite sport. streams around his home town were full out. Somewhere in the apartment he had out rod that he had bought one day, in a algic mood, and never used. The idea of g it now excited him.

You know, that's a good idea," he said. hink I will."

e considered asking her to go with him, discarded the notion. She would think it sh for a man to want his wife along on a ng trip.

e left long before daybreak on Saturday ning and got home late Sunday night. fishing was good. He had not lost his skill, it was wonderful to be out in a stream n with a rod in his hand. It made him feel ng again, carefree, as though the bad s had dropped out of his life. Granger, everything that Granger made him re- nber and fear, seemed very far away.

ut when he got back, Granger was there, ng on the sofa opposite Iris, very much at e. David didn't want him there. He ted to be alone with Iris, who sat so tly, watching him with her intent scru- , looking particularly lovely to him after days away from her. But he could not e an issue of it.

How was the fishing?" Granger asked Fine."

f I'd known you were going, I'd have along. I'm something of a fisherman my- I've fished just about all over the world, ss, and gone miles out of my way to find d stream I've heard about."

avid had never noticed before how rasp- Granger's voice was. He kept talking t fishing. David looked at Iris, but her were on Granger now, and she appeared ested.

bout the best trout fishing I've found," ger was saying, "was in a little town in Midwest. I was on my way to the t on an assignment, and a fellow I met e train told me about this place." He d at David, and an odd little smile d his mouth. "It must have been at least ears ago, but I remember it because I got to the town everybody was all ex- about a trial that was going on, and I into the courtroom to see what it was all t. A newspaperman never misses the ility of a good story."

s spoke for the first time. "What was murder trial?"

anger shrugged. "No, nothing that in- ing. Just a young fellow who had been doing a little embezzling." He yawned. "Guess I'll run along."

David sat rigidly in his chair. It took all the self-control he had practiced for so many years to keep his face expressionless. He must show nothing, give nothing away, until he knew what Granger was going to do.

"Say, Merriam," Granger said at the door, as though it had just occurred to him, "would you come downstairs with me a minute? One of my tires seemed to be developing a slow leak, and if it's gone flat I'd appreciate a hand with it." In the street, Granger pretended to look at the tire. "Seems all right. Sit in the car a minute, anyway, and have a smoke."

"Look here, Granger," David said. "What did you get me down here for? Let's have it."

Granger leaned against a mudguard and looked at him with his thin-lipped smile. "It was a great relief to remember, I can tell you. It kept haunting me. It was the fishing that brought it back. The minute Iris said you'd gone trout fishing, the whole thing clicked into place. I was amazed to discover that no one knows, not even Iris. You've been very clever, Merriam."

David put his hands in his pockets and clenched them there. "What do you want, Granger?" he asked quietly.

"You're not a fool, at any rate. You're not going to waste time pretending you don't know what I'm talking about. That's good. And I have no doubt you've thought of what would happen if this thing came out. You must have thought of it many times."

He seemed to wait for David to speak, but when David said nothing he went on.

"Of course it needn't come out. If I say nothing, the chances are nobody will ever turn up again who knows about it. You'd probably be safe for the rest of your life, unless I talked."

David looked at him levelly. "And do you intend to talk?"

"That depends on you."

"Are you blackmailing me?" David asked him contemptuously.

Granger smiled. "That's an ugly word, 'blackmail.' It's not money I want."

"No? What then?"

Granger lit a cigarette. David saw that his hands were not quite steady. He was not so cool as he pretended. "I want your wife, Merriam," he said.

David stared at him, too amazed to feel any other emotion. "What?" he asked stupidly.

"You're surprised, aren't you? You've be too afraid I'd remember who you were, to notice what was going on. Why did you think I kept coming around, Merriam?"

David could not speak. A dozen incidents stabbed through his mind now: The way

"Another party invitation—oh, dear, that means another new dress."

Such nice things happen when you take TAPPAN

Nice Looking! Beautiful, modern exterior with pleasingly balanced design, graceful cove top, gleaming chrome oven interior. Easy-to-work-at, easy-to-clean, roomy divided top.

Nice Cooking! Exclusive Tel-U-Set brings automatic cooking to your finger tips . . . assures you perfect results every time. Wonderful for modern low-temperature cooking methods.

And such a nice buy! Whatever price you intend to pay for a range, Tappan brings you top value for your money. Models for city gas, Philgas or other LP Gas. For helpful hints on range buying, write for free folder to The Tappan Stove Company, Department 1, Mansfield, Ohio. In Canada, John Inglis Company, Limited, Toronto.

TEL-U-SET

TEL-U-SET starts, times, stops cooking. Includes: automatic clock . . . "Oven-On" signal . . . timed appliance outlet . . . Visiguide time and temperature chart . . . Visiminder (signals when cooking is done).

CRISP-CHEST

Crisp-Chest keeps cereals, crackers, potato chips, condiments, salt, sugar absolutely dry and fresh. The Crisp-Chest is ideal for the storage of all foods that require protection from moisture.

You'll say too . . . I'll take

TAPPAN

Gas Ranges

Your guide to the best in modern automatic cookery automatic lighting of all burners — automatic oven heat control — automatic oven time control automatic oven illumination — automatic interval timer — automatic "burner on" signal

ALL THESE HELPS TO GLOWING HEALTH
in handy cans of Florida
Orange-Grapefruit Juice!

1. Helps maintain ALKALINE reserve
2. Supplies LIQUID—hostile to colds
3. A gold mine of VITAMIN C
4. Other VITAMINS and MINERALS
5. ENERGY from fruit sugars
6. Arouses sulky APPETITES
7. Stimulates DIGESTIVE juices
8. MILDLY LAXATIVE

FLORIDA BLENDED
ORANGE-GRAPEFRUIT JUICE!

Here's the luscious drink that combines ALL the goodness—ALL the health benefits—of Florida's finest oranges and grapefruit. It has such a wonderful way of helping you feel good all over.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION
LAKELAND, FLORIDA

FLORIDA
ORANGE-GRAPEFRUIT JUICE

Granger looked at Iris—"You have a very fascinating wife, Merriam." . . . The way he had been there, time after time, when David came in—so completely at home. . . . "Yes—he's very attractive." It seemed inconceivable to him that he could have been so blind. He was not thinking, now, of any threats of exposure. He was thinking only of Iris, and that he might lose her.

"Iris," he said hoarsely. "Does she ——"

Something like compassion flashed for a moment in Granger's sharp eyes. "She's been faithful to you, Merriam," he said. "That's the way she is—you must know that." All the hardness was gone from his voice now. "But I think she loves me, and God knows I love her. She's the first woman I ever wanted to marry, and I'll do anything to get her."

David made a short, stiff gesture with his hand. "If she loves you," he said, forcing the words past the ache in his throat, "I won't stand in her way."

"It isn't that simple, Merriam. She'll never leave you for me, no matter how she feels, as long as she thinks you love her."

"What do you expect me to do?" The words were almost a shout. "Tell her I don't love her, and so perhaps drive her into your arms? What kind of a fool do you think I am?"

Granger said quietly, "I think you've forgotten something. If you don't give me the chance I want with Iris I'll explode the whole myth of David Merriam." He had his hand on David's arm, holding him. David flung it off.

"What do you think I am, Granger? You're out of your mind if you think I'll trade my wife for your silence. Good night."

Granger took hold of his arm again, his fingers like a vise. "You're not thinking straight," Granger said in a low voice. "If this comes out, Iris will suffer, too, you know—she'll be the wife of an ex-convict. You'd probably lose her in the bargain, but if you didn't, it would be pretty tough on her, having to start all over again with you somewhere else."

David stood still. A long sigh shook him, and he felt Granger relax his hold. "Go on," David said. This could not be real, he thought. It was fantastic, like a nightmare—the two of them standing here on the sidewalk while oblivious passers-by went about their business, bargaining with David's life.

"You have nothing to lose, really," Granger said, "because if she loves me you wouldn't want to hold her anyway—you said so. And if she doesn't, I'll step out of the picture without saying a word, and you'll never hear from me again."

"How do you propose to find out?" David asked.

Granger lit another cigarette and puffed at it jerkily. "Tell her you've done some thinking about your marriage while you were away, and you're in such a confused state of mind that you want to go to a hotel for a week and be alone until you can come to some decision. Be as vague as you like, as long as you give her the impression that you may be thinking about leaving her." He smiled a little. "If you give her that impression, and I have a week alone with her, I think I'll make out."

"What makes you believe I'll do David asked him. "You can't be sure I w tell her how much I love her and need and give her some other excuse for g away."

Granger shook his head. "You won't that. If you did, you'd never know whe you weren't standing in the way of her piness. It would be on your conscience you used her loyalty to keep her from man she loved—a man who has no past might rear up any day and destroy he curity."

David stood looking at him for a mom "You have a lot of confidence," he finally, "in the conscience of an embezz Granger smiled. "I'll know if you do cross me," he said. "If Iris tells me she w listen to me because you love her and her, I'll have some telling to do myself.

"I see," David said.

David scarcely left his hotel room work the entire week. Once he went in movie, but the girl in the picture remi him of Iris, an left before it over.

It was almos conceivable tha had convinced Ir easily, when all time he was tal about wantin give their mar some thought, he aching with love her. He would thought it must shown in his w in his eyes, gi everything away but it had not sh he had had so m years of practic concealment.

Iris had said "Very well, Dav and turned a without giving any indicatio whether she was turbed or indiffe or relieved.

He had alw thought she lo him, but had come to love G ger now, inste Granger loved but whether loved him, Da had no way of k ing. He would to wait—and waiting was i minable.

Often during that week alone in his in the hotel he thought that she wou better off if she did love Granger and ma him. He was, as he had said, a man whom her security, her peace of mind, not be threatened.

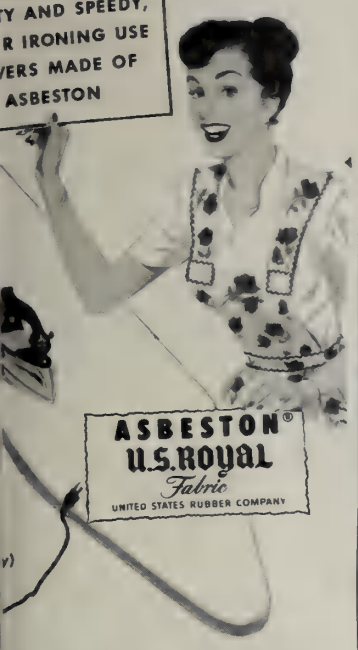
As the days wore on, he became convi that she would accept Granger. Davi not like him, but everyone else thoug was charming, clever and cosmopolit much more Iris' type, really, than L was. And if this thing he was doing now unscrupulous, it was only his love fo that had made him do it. She would be b off with him.

David tried to plan what he would d had started a new life once before, but h not see how he could do it again, wit Iris. And yet it was not in his nature t up.

On the fifth night he fell asleep face on his bed, in all his clothes, with a lights on.

When he awoke he thought for a m that he was back in prison, and tha had fallen asleep crying, the way he done so often there. But then he knew he had not been crying. He was too o that now. He lay there a moment bef became aware that someone was knockl the door. He got up, smoothing back hi

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★



Summer Has Faded

By JESSE STUART

Summer has faded from all living eyes.
It is a written book that we have read
With sentences of green beneath blue skies.
Each word is now a leaf of dying red.
We stand to watch birds gather for the south,
We watch them rise in this bright autumn weather;
And with joy in the heart, song in the mouth,
They are off through boundless skies together.
Above the thistle furze that floats on wind,
Above the leaves of scarlet red and gold,
Above treetops the autumn winds have thinned
They rise to sing before their blood grows cold.
We stand below to listen and to look
And wait the season of another book.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

GREATER HOME
TY AND SPEEDY,
R IRONING USE
VERS MADE OF ASBESTON

sbeston fabric is used by leadnanufacturers to make the
's best ironing board covers.
n with rock asbestos fiber, Asis non-burning. It holds flat—wrinkles, so your iron glides along. The Asbeston label s for the best in Safe, Smooth, lasting ironing board covers.
ores everywhere.

ok for the Asbeston label
. . . and safety

ade by the Textile Division
STATES RUBBER COMPANY

SELL DRESSES FROM NEW YORK
Specially Priced $5.95 to $19.95
5th Ave., N. Y. firm desires women to sell Dresses, Suits, Lingerie, Hosiery. As seen in "Vogue", "Mademoiselle". Featuring the look. Good commissions. Write for sample Book. INNER, 260 Fifth Ave., Dept. L-9, New York

NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE
HRISTMAS CARDS 50 WITH NAME IMPRINTED
-'n-Brush STUDIOS
XTRA $$$ EASY PLAN up to and 100% PROFIT
$50 & MORE. Yours for selling only 100 startling new boxes. Other AMAZING profits with surprise items. You take NO RISK. Send postal card today for samples on approval. You also get free samples easy-to-sell personal Christmas cards, stationery, napkins. It costs nothing to try. Write TO-DAY.
RUSH, Dept. L-9, 139 Duane St., N. Y. 13, N. Y.

lew Way
TO MAKE MEATY SOUPS with B-V ONION SOUP
ly brown 3 medium-sized
* in 2 tbsp. butter. Add 1 to
sp. B-V mixed in 4 cups hot  Season. Top with toast and l cheese. A delicious soup that rishing. Ample for four.
½ cup dehydrated onions.
lehydrated
's cook 20
ites.

t can't Wilson
Meat.
SON & CO. INC
Wilson label protects your table mechanically with his hand, and opened the door.

"Hello," Iris said. He stood staring at her, and she smiled. "Aren't you going to let me in?"

Of all the things that came into his mind, what he said was, "How did you know where I was?"

She came in and shut the door. "I made Charles tell me where you were," she said.

"Granger?"

"David." She clasped her hands together tightly and looked up at him. "David, we might have lost each other."

At the tone of her voice he came and stood before her, his heart hammering, waiting.

"You've always been so strange, so reserved," she said. "I was never sure how much you really loved me. And when Charles came along and perfectly obviously and boldly made a play for me, and you didn't appear to notice or care ——" She smiled faintly. "After all, I'm a woman, David. You were indifferent, and he flattered me. And he's a very charming man."

"Iris, do you ——"

"No, wait," she broke in. "When you said what you did about thinking over our marriage, that seemed to confirm what I'd been fearing, and I was ready to listen to Charles, ready to think things over myself. Tonight, though, when he insisted on an answer, I told him that I'd have to see you first, talk to you again, before I could make up my mind."

His heart slowed its pounding, and he turned away from her. He knew what he had to do. It had been only a wild hope, a selfish dream that he could do otherwise.

"Go back to him, Iris," he said. "You and I were never meant for each other. I'm sorry—but that's the way it is."

He stood waiting for the door to close. Instead he heard her chuckle softly, and he turned around in bewilderment.

"I wish Charles could know what a mistake he made," she said. "If he had kept quiet and just let me come, and you had said what you said just now, things might have been different. But he wasn't man enough himself to understand what a man you are. He was afraid if he let me come to you, that would be the end for him. And so he tried to stop me by telling me."

"Telling you . . . what?"

She took his hands. "Darling, you know what he told me—about your conviction, everything. Now I understand so many things I could never understand before. I thought you were cold and self-sufficient, but it was only because you had this weight on your heart, this thing you had to keep to yourself for fear of burdening me. Now I know you need me." She looked up at him with such tenderness in her eyes as he had never seen before. "Half of love is being needed, David."

He took her wordlessly into his arms, not kissing her, just holding her. "You're a foolish woman, Iris, my darling," he said finally, softly. "I didn't do the thing I was punished for, but if it ever comes out no one will believe me. The fear of discovery hangs over you now, too, and I never wanted that."

"I have no such fear," she said. "No one who knows you, no one you work for or do business with, could believe that you have ever done a dishonest thing in your life."

"They believed it in the town where I was born, where I grew up. They all believed it there."

She shook her head. "I'm sure that isn't so, David. I'm sure there were people who would have stood by you if you had given them a chance. You were probably so hurt and confused that you thought everybody was your enemy."

He could not speak. All at once he knew she was right. In spite of Caleb Ferguson and Charles Granger, he was here with the woman he loved in his arms. What did he have to fear?

"Let's go home, David," Iris said.

"David isn't really my name, you know," he told her.

"All right," she said softly. "Let's go home, my love."

THE END

Conversation Piece

Designed for outdoor dining—not a picnic menu, but a very special meal.

by Ruth Mills Teague

For dessert, peach tarts with a swirl of creamy, precooked meringue delicately browned. Serve the tarts very cold.

WHEN it comes to food—and when doesn't it?—I think broiled steak would win a popularity contest anywhere. But if the steak has been broiled in a thick crust of salt so that all the juices stay right where they belong, there's no describing its perfection. So I'll plan a terrace dinner around this masterpiece.

The appetizer will be a ribbon sandwich loaf cut into strips. The various fillings are made of different-colored foods and they look as nice as they taste.

The steak can be cooked over a grill or outside fireplace or in your range, and after it's broiled the crust of salt can be knocked off. It comes off easily. The steak can then be carved in thin slices, dipped in melted butter (Continued on Page 134)

PHOTOS BY STUART

Everybody loves steak—and broiled in a thick crust of salt to seal in the juices, it's a masterpiece of good eating. Try it carved in thin slices, dipped in melted, garlic-seasoned butter and eaten—immediately; it should be piping hot—on strips of bread or slice it thicker and serve on plates. A hot casserole of green noodles with Parmesan cheese is a perfect accompanist. And for flavor contrast, a well-chilled salad of crisp, marinated vegetables with tangy sour-cream dressing.

Beautiful eating—Sunnyvale Salad!"

Here's the bowl that sends salad fanciers into ecstasies—turns "picky" salad eaters into downright enthusiasts! It's so luscious with the "five sunshine fruits" from Libby's famous Fruit Cocktail Kitchens in Sunnyvale, California.

LINE THE BOWL with whatever crispy greens are in season. Have a well-seasoned French dressing ready to serve at the table. Open and drain a chilled can of Libby's Fruit Cocktail. (For a big buffet supper bowl you'll want to use two No. 2½ cans.)

ARRANGE those sparkling jewel-like fruits in the bowl. And as you do that, note how glorious they are—real little "jewels" cut from whole, hand-picked fruits! For in sunny Sunnyvale—right in the heart of the California fruit country—Libby selects for this fruit cocktail the same fine quality fruits that are packed individually under the world-famous Libby label. That's why Libby's is the de luxe fruit cocktail—extra luscious no matter how you serve it!

Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

FRANCO-AMERICAN MEAL HINTS

A left-over Meal even Dad will Love!

ROAST BEEF AND POTATO ROLL-UPS

ROAST BEEF AND POTATO ROLL-UPS
1 cup mashed potatoes
10 slices roast beef
1 can Franco-American Beef Gravy

Heat oven to 350° F. (moderate). Place a generous spoonful of potatoes on each slice of beef; roll up and fasten with a toothpick. Place in a greased 12x7½x2-inch baking dish; pour on Franco-American Beef Gravy. Bake 20 minutes at 350° F. Makes 5 generous servings.

Tonite's Menu Complete
Tomato Soup
Roast Beef and Potato Roll-ups
(Recipe above)
Buttered New Beets
Tossed Green Salad
Peach Turnovers
Milk and Coffee
Anne Marshall
Director Home Economics

Franco-American Beef Gravy makes the meal!

Made from the juices of selected beef... with that genuine roasting pan flavor! Delicious served with any meat-and-potato dinner. On sandwiches. In stews. Or add it to make your own gravy s-t-r-e-t-c-h.

Franco-American
BEEF GRAVY
READY TO SERVE

(Continued from Page 132)

and eaten on strips of bread. Terrific! Or it can be carved in thicker slices and served on plates.

For another hot dish we'll have a casserole of green noodles or thin spaghetti mixed with butter or margarine, a little cream and Parmesan cheese. This delicately flavored dish is wonderful with steak, and we'll have plenty of it because plenty is what everyone will want.

The salad will be raw vegetables marinated in French dressing, with a delicious sour-cream dressing served in a separate bowl. We'll want a big variety of vegetables: carrots, scallions, tomatoes, cucumbers, green peppers, broccoli, radishes and kohlrabi or white turnips. The vegetables will be crisp and cold and cut fine enough to be easy to eat.

For dessert, peach tarts. They are individual pastry shells filled to the brim with juicy sliced peaches and covered with a precooked meringue, very much like a seven-minute frosting. The meringue seeps down into the sliced peaches and completely covers the tops except for the rims of the pastry shells. The tarts are put under the broiler for two or three minutes to brown and are served very cold.

These recipes will serve six or eight people.

RIBBON SANDWICH LOAF

This will be a five-layer loaf. That is, five layers of bread and four of fillings. Cut off crust from about ⅔ loaf of sandwich bread and slice the long way into five even slices. I will suggest four fillings, but if you have some pet recipe of your own, or if you have left-overs that would make a good filling, go to it. Just be sure you get a variety of color.

Ham Filling: To 1 cup finely ground cooked smoked ham or tongue add 4 tablespoons chili sauce, 1 tablespoon horse-radish, 1 tablespoon finely chopped onion, enough mayonnaise to bring it to a good spreading consistency, pepper to taste, and salt if needed.

Egg Filling: Hard-cook 6 eggs. Mash yolks and put them through a sieve or potato ricer. Add the whites of 3 eggs minced fine, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1½ teaspoons sugar, ⅛ teaspoon turmeric, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, salt and pepper to taste and enough mayonnaise to moisten. If color isn't a bright enough yellow, there's no harm in adding a few drops of vegetable coloring.

Tuna-Fish Filling: Mash contents of 1 seven-ounce can white tuna fish; add ½ cup finely chopped celery, the other 3 hard-cooked egg whites, finely chopped, 2 canned pimientos, chopped, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, enough mayonnaise to moisten and salt and pepper to taste.

Water-Cress Filling: Chop 1 bunch water cress very fine; add 3 tablespoons chopped chives, 3 ounces cream cheese, 1 tablespoon lemon juice or vinegar and enough cream to moisten.

Spread one slice of bread with softened butter or margarine and a thick layer of one of the spreads. Cover with a slice of bread that has first been spread with butter or margarine, and press down firmly, buttered side down. Spread top of this slice with butter or margarine and then with another of the sandwich spreads. Continue until all have been used.

Wrap the loaf in wax paper or aluminum foil and then in heavy locker paper or a damp towel and store in refrigerator. The loaf should be made early in the day of the party or the day before, because the butter or margarine must harden in order to hold the layers together.

To serve, cut sandwich loaf the long way into thirds, and then cut across at the same distances so as to form tall sandwiches with all the bread layers square. If you like, you can garnish sandwich tray with stuffed celery, radish roses or pickles.

Best liked

MAKE EXTRA MONEY NOW TILL CHRIST
WE SUPPLY EVERYTHING To help you get started at FREE • Package of Colorful Christmas Gift Cards.
• Samples of 50 for $1. Christmas cards with n
• 32-page CATALOG of over 100 "sell on si
Just send your name • Christmas Cards and Gift i and address for our 1950 deluxe assortment on appro
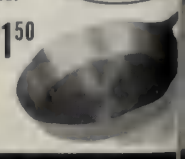
SPECIAL FUND RAISING PLAN FOR ORGANIZATIONS
FANMOUR Corp. Dept. L-9 200 FIFTH AVE. N.Y.10

food won't stick... won't burn in Wagner



• Browns food beautifully. Gives flavor and taste that can't be beat in a other utensil. The favorite fry pan in m homes for 59 years. It's modern cast ir ready to use on all ranges, including el tric. Get at least ONE Wagner Skillet prove its value. 5 popular sizes, from 75c up, at 21,000 hardware—chain and department stores.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Family Size skillet $1.50

If you can't find this 10½" family size skillet near you send $1.50 ($1.85 west of Rockies) to —

Wagner Manufacturing C
Dept. N, Sidney, Ohio

TEAK BROILED IN SALT CRUST

a good idea to have a consultation with r butcher in advance. There aren't too y perfect steaks in a side of beef, and for occasion you want the best. I think the bone sirloin cuts to best advantage and deliciously tender. Ask him to cut the k a good 2½ inches thick.

you are broiling the steak over an out- grill or fireplace, let the charcoal burn n until you have a very hot bed of coals. e ready a big bowl of coarse salt—not salt—mixed to a paste with water. The se salt can be bought in grocery or feed es. One cup water to five cups salt is it right. When you are ready to broil, rub k well with freshly ground black pepper pat a thick layer of the salt paste all over top side. The layer should be ¼ inch k and it should be pressed and patted un- is quite solid. Cover with a paper nap- or piece of paper towel to hold salt in e and invert steak on a hand grill with handles. Now cover top side of steak salt and napkin, and close grill. For rare k that is not pur- ut good and rare, sixteen and a minutes on each Increase broil- time if you want less rare. When ed, remove salt, ch will have ed a crust that have blackened urned, but don't hat bother you: ll crack off in a arge pieces.

w I'll tell you to do this job in range in case her doesn't per- outdoor cooking u prefer to do it ors. Turn on er and put a y skillet with a l handle under get very hot. e this goes on, top of steak with k layer of salt, e a piece of alu- m foil and put ver salt, greased own. Turn steak and apply salt is side but do over with foil. skillet is piping remove, brush m with salad oil and put steak into it, num-foil side down. Put it back under r. The top of steak should be about inches from heat—the second notches broiler make it just right. Broil sev- n minutes on this side. Have a heavy sheet ready. Remove skillet, put sheet over top and invert skillet so teak is now resting on cooky sheet. Lift uminum foil, put steak back under r and broil this side sixteen minutes. ifference in timing is because the heat skillet starts to cook the aluminum- le of steak as soon as it is put in. Re- steak and crack off salt.

m here on the story is the same whether ooking has been done outdoors or in. teak on a hot plank, platter or board prinkle with chopped parsley. Because salt, the surface of the steak will not be and the parsley makes it look pretty. lown into thin slices—about ⅛ inch Have ready a bowl of melted butter to 2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce clove garlic, finely minced, have been . Dip pieces of steak into the butter ut them on slices of Italian bread or on ices of French or ordinary bread. Serve hot.

se small open steak sandwiches can en with the fingers, and to me they better that way, but of course the can be cut into thicker slices and served on plates. But be sure that every slice has been wallowed around in the melted butter. A long ti n ago I dealt with a butcher who would say, when I was buying a piece of meat, "I'll tell you, Mrs. Teague, this will eat good!" And now I'm telling you.

GREEN NOODLES OR SPAGHETTI PARMESAN

Get plenty of green noodles or thin spaghetti and boil in salted water until barely tender. Don't overcook, because they'll spend some time in the oven before they are eaten. Drain in a colander and pour boiling water over them. Put them into a large bowl, add grated Parmesan cheese, melted butter or margarine and some heavy cream. There should be enough cheese to give a delicate cheese flavor and enough cream and butter to keep the noodles from sticking together. They should not be at all soupy, but they should be moist. Add salt to taste, and if you like, a little grated garlic. Toss with two forks, transfer to a greased casserole, cover and keep hot in a low oven or in a pan of boiling water on top of stove. The noodles or spaghetti can be prepared in advance and reheated before serving.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Contented

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

Too many years I've known of ecstasy
In this poor mortal flesh of mine, this worn
And shabby garment of mortality
Which experts on celestial fashions scorn,
To hail its putting off, its laying by,
With anything but sorrow and regret,
However true that I may gain thereby
Lovelier clothing than I've hoped for yet.
For though its style is nothing new, its fit
But commonplace, such joy in taste and smell,
Sight, sound and touch I've had while wearing it,
So much of beauty and of love as well,
I'd not exchange it, had I my desire,
For all of heaven's very best attire!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

RAW-VEGETABLE SALAD

You needn't have as wide a variety of vegetables as I have suggested, but I think the more the merrier. Break or cut cauliflower into tiny little flowerets about as big as the end of your finger. Slice carrots and red radishes into very thin rounds. Cut white turnips or kohlrabi into tiny cubes. Cut broccoli into small flowerets, using only the top of one good-sized stalk. Cut cucumber and pepper into small chunks. All these can be cut the day before and stored in ice water in the refrigerator. The scallions should be cut into thin rounds and the tomatoes into small chunks not too long before they are used. About an hour before serving, drain vegetables, dry on towels and marinate them in French dressing. You can mix them all together or keep the different vegetables in separate bowls. They look very pretty arranged in groups on the salad platter, but once the salad plates are served they are mixed together as if they had been tossed in a bowl, so suit yourself.

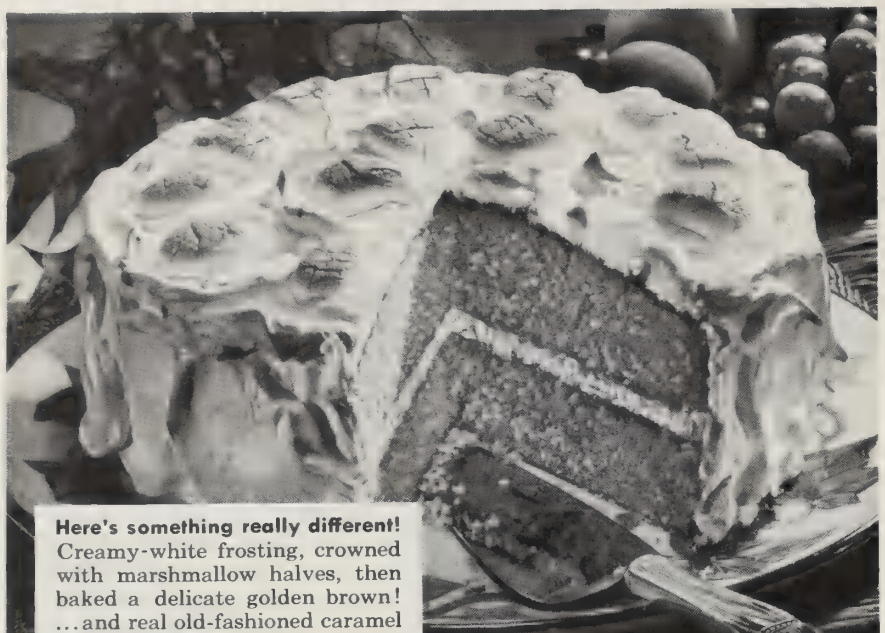
SOUR-CREAM DRESSING

Mix together 1 pint sour cream, ½ cup chili sauce, 1 heaping tablespoon horse-radish and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Serve dressing in separate bowl beside salad.

PEACH TARTS

Make individual pastry shells with a nice high rim. Bake in preheated hot—450° F.—oven for twelve to fifteen minutes until light golden brown.

Make precooked meringue by mixing together in top of double boiler 1½ cups sugar, ¼ cup water, ½ teaspoon cream of tartar, 1 pinch salt and 2 unbeaten egg whites. Stir ingredients well and beat a little with rotary beater. Have water boiling briskly in bottom of double boiler. Set top in and beat steadily with rotary beater until meringue will hold a peak when you lift beater—6 to 8 minutes. Remove from heat and beat 3 minutes.



Fill pastry shells as full as you can with peeled and sliced fresh peaches—the more tart the peaches are, the better. Spoon in meringue until peaches are entirely covered

It's Sunshine for finer flavor!

Crisper, crunchier Sunshine HI HO . . . the round cracker with the 4-WAY WRAP for extra freshness in the pound package! Enjoy the safely guarded "fresh-toasted" flavor of HI HO crackers . . . today!

From The Thousand Window Bakeries of

Here's something really different! Creamy-white frosting, crowned with marshmallow halves, then baked a delicate golden brown! ...and real old-fashioned caramel cake with that velvety-smooth CALUMET goodness! You must try it!

NEW, WONDERFUL RECIPE FOR

Baked Frosting CARAMALLOW CAKE

Selected from 63,000 recipes to be the CALUMET Cake-of-the-Month

Baked Frosting Caramallow Cake

Preparations—Line bottoms of pans with paper; grease. Use two round 9-inch layer pans. 1½ inches deep. Start oven for moderate heat (375°F.). Sift flour once before measuring.

Ingredients:

- 3 tablespoons caramelized sugar syrup
- 3 cups sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
- 3½ teaspoons CALUMET Baking Powder
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¾ cup vegetable shortening
- 1¼ cups sugar
- 3 eggs, unbeaten
- 1¼ cups milk
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 8 marshmallows, cut in halves

Note—For best results, remember that the "priceless ingredient" in this cake recipe is the baking powder. And Double Acting CALUMET is Doubly Dependable—first, in the mixing bowl—then in the oven—to give you the most perfect cakes, biscuits, waffles, pancakes, muffins you ever tasted! That's why . . . for real Home Made goodness, more women use CALUMET than any other brand!

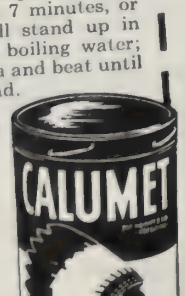
METHOD: To make caramelized sugar syrup, heat ¼ cup firmly packed brown sugar in a small, heavy skillet over low heat. Stir constantly until sugar melts. When syrup starts to darken, remove at once from heat. Add very slowly 3 tablespoons hot water and stir until dissolved. Cool.

1. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift together three times.

2. Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating thoroughly after each. Then add 3 tablespoons of the caramelized sugar syrup and blend. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla; blend.

Baking—Turn batter into pans. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 30 minutes, or until done. Cool.

Frosting—Place cooled cake on baking sheet. Spread Seven Minute Frosting between layers and on top and sides of cake. Press marshmallow halves into frosting on top of cake. Then place cake in hot oven (400°F.) 6 to 8 minutes, or until marshmallows are puffed and delicately browned.



Seven Minute Frosting

Combine 2 egg whites, unbeaten, 1½ cups sugar, dash of salt, 5 tablespoons water, and 1½ teaspoons light corn syrup in top of double boiler, mixing thoroughly. Place over rapidly boiling water, beat constantly with rotary egg beater (or at high speed of electric mixer), and cook 7 minutes, or until the frosting will stand up in peaks. Remove from boiling water; add 1 teaspoon vanilla and beat until thick enough to spread.

In Baking Your Best Bet is—

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

DOUBLE ACTING

A Product of General Foods

and meringue is piled high. Swirl the spoon around on top to make a circular pattern. Put the tarts on a cooky sheet under broiler until delicately browned—this takes only two to three minutes, so watch it. Store in a cool place and chill in refrigerator before serving. The meringue will draw out some of the juice of the peaches and the meringue itself will have a creamy consistency.

Vary this recipe by filling the pastry shells with strawberries instead of peaches sometimes. Very good indeed!

Service. Whether the steak is cooked in or out of doors, the service will be about the same. This isn't a picnic menu—it's a r meal, and a pretty special one at that. table or tables should be set up on the t race, lawn or wherever, and this super tively good food should be eaten in r comfort.

But be sure the steak is sliced, dunked butter, put on bread and eaten immediately before it has time to cool. The noodles a spaghetti can be served on plates the c ventional way, and eaten between times, b the steak should go straight from carvi knife to palate, and how everybody—es cially the men—will love it.

ON A SATURDAY NIGHT

(Continued from Page 64)

Not the last word. And don't think there aren't a dozen ways, maybe more, to bake beans. There are. Some put the mustard in the bottom of the pot. Some like the pork all fat, some would walk a mile to get a hunk of streaked lean and fat. Some parboil the pork before it's put in the bean pot, and other cooks scorn such effete and sissy methods and rely on native goodness and long baking to bring out that pork's better nature. Let's call the receipt I'm going to set down a middle-of-the-road receipt. If you're a bean baker, you'll do as you always have. If you aren't, why, here's a start for you. And bless you, one and all.

Now to a Saturday night. I mustn't get ahead of my story as I frequently do. Get my mind all set running along and hitting on all cylinders—and the first thing I know I've run right off the track and find myself at some junction I shouldn't have come to for a long time. So this time I'll start at the beginning and work right through in an orderly way. Watch how I do it. It's quite a trick—for me.

The first item you'll find on the agenda is no less than our old friend and never-failing stand-by—tomato juice. This receipt is all yours for free, in case you are drawn to a kettle when ripe tomatoes appear by the bushel as a needle is drawn to a magnet. If, seeing those two in juxtaposition, you go into action and roll up your sleeves and start getting out the works, why, then this receipt is for you and you will know it as such.

Personally, tomato juice in cans and bottles is good enough for me. But then, I'm reading a serial mystery story and that may partly explain my apathetic attitude toward standing around fussing with tomato juice when it's so cool and pretty in the garden. But not in the tomato patch. However, I will agree that there's some point in having your tomato juice seasoned to your taste, particularly if the tomatoes came from your own patch.

TOMATO JUICE

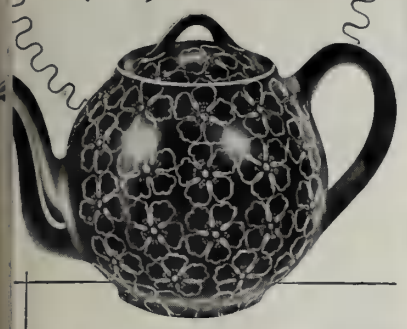
Wash ½ bushel (25–30 pounds) of well-ripened tomatoes. Cut out core and any decayed spots. Cut tomatoes into quarters. Do not peel. Put them into a deep pan in which they can be cooked. Crush them slightly with the potato masher to set free enough juice to start them cooking. Add 5 large onions cut into pieces, a handful of parsley, 4 carrots, sliced, 4 large stalks celery with leaves, ½ green pepper. Cover the kettle and simmer gently until the tomatoes are well cooked. Force the pulp through a sieve or colander fine enough to remove the seeds. Add ¼ cup sugar, 1 teaspoon mono sodium glutamate and 3 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon salt. Bring strained juice to the boiling point. Pour the boiling-hot juice into hot sterilized jars. Seal. Makes 17 pints.

Well, think on what I said. Work is for the worker. And this is an old and tried receipt—except for the MSG, which is a new wrinkle indeed.

A different story. This is the story of the beans—that comes next and, as I said, it's only one way, but it works and you'll have a pot of beans worthy of the Back Bay if y follow through. And once you get the Sat day-night bean habit, you've no idea h easy it is and how sort of comfortable. I baked beans are pretty swell eating, w catchup or chili sauce or without. I like ex molasses in my beans, and whether they baked in my kitchen or got from the groc I always put in a little more. But don't and do it without trying it out first. Th you can tell. The receipt here is very mod as to sweetening.

BAKED BEANS

Soak 1 pound navy beans in cold water ov night. Drain. Cover with fresh water a cook slowly until the skins break. To te take a few beans on the tip of a spoon a blow on them gently. If the skins break a curl back, they are sufficiently cooked. Tu the beans into a bean pot. (You have a be pot, I trust, unless you used it for petuni and didn't I advise against it?) Pour bo ing water over ½ pound fat salt pork; scra the rind until white. Cut into half-inch str not quite all the way to the rind—don't c clear through the rind, as you want the s pork to act like a fan. Put a good piece of pork halfway down in the middle of the p Keep the rest for the top. Mix ½ teaspo salt, 3 tablespoons brown sugar, ⅓ c molasses, ¾ teaspoon dry mustard and teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Add 1 c water and pour over the beans. Add enou more water to cover and bake in a sl oven—250°–300° F.—6 to 8 hours, add additional water to keep the beans cover Uncover the pot the last half hour to bro the pork—and be sure it's brown. At l sprinkle a little sugar on the beans and them stay to glaze. You may not care this glazing business. I don't, myself, l some folks love it.



Comes the brown bread. As is right a proper, here comes the brown bread. Lots good plump raisins in it and, like a cake, tender and delicious as ever you could thi One thing: brown bread should be served and I mean hot. And it may be resteam you know, and come out just as good. It ne plenty of good butter or margarine to b tize it with as you consume slice after sl And don't have the slices wafer thin, eith Those are all right for a lady's tea tab but with baked beans you may forget that and have the slices thicker.

Now for your receipt. But, before I forg you know you can buy delicious brown bre in nice round cans. All you do is steam a steam it. A great convenience—at least i in my house. I sometimes want baked bea and brown bread in a hurry and then th both may come from cans.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD

Pour boiling water over 1 cup seedless raisi Let them stand 5 minutes. Drain them w Mix together 1 cup flour (save out 1 tab spoon flour to dredge the raisins with lat 1 cup whole-wheat flour, 1 cup yellow c meal, 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon bak soda and ¼ cup sugar. Stir 1½ cups s milk or buttermilk, mixed with ¾ cup d molasses and 3 tablespoons melted short ng, into the dry ingredients. Lastly, stir

PREFERRED for Perfect Tea

This lovely French shape is decorated with gleaming gold that glistens on a colorful glaze that will never craze. Like all genuine Hall Teapots, it is made of secret process china that will not stain or absorb. Use it . . . for perfect tea, graciously served. That's why Hall Teapots are preferred!

The Hall China Company
World's Largest Manufacturer of Decorated Teapots and Cooking China

Hall Teapots
OF SUPERIOR QUALITY CHINA
Sold by All Leading Dealers

ORE BREEZE
ESS BUZZ WITH 3-IN-ONE

DON'T SEE HOW A'BODY CAN LIVE WITHOUT IT

3-IN-ONE Oil
Fill cracks and holes in wood or plaster with PLASTIC WOOD

A Pot O' Gold For You
Selling Christmas Cards
You'll find extra money in your spare time with our easy proven plan. Show 50 exclusive Christmas Cards WITH NAME for only $1! You pocket up to 50c cash on each 21-Card $1 Assortment. Profits mount up fast on Plastic Gifts, Gift Wraps, Stationery, 164 thrilling money-makers, FREE SAMPLES of Personal Christmas Cards! Assortments on approval. Organizations, ask for fund raising plan. Write today!
WETMORE & SUGDEN, INC.
NROE AVENUE, DEPT. 21-H, ROCHESTER 2, N.Y.

Size Towels For 1000 Household Uses EXCELLO undry Fresh ITCHEN
OWELS
LOOK FOR THIS LABEL
EXCELLO Guaranteed Fresh KITCHEN TOWELS

FOUND! OVER 100 WAYS TO MAKE EXTRA MONEY and FRIENDS
SAYS C. L. EVANS
SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
FREE 36-PAGE SELLING GUIDE
Newest Metallic, Comics On Parade Assortments, Gift Wrappings, Children's "Action" Books, Gifts, Novelties. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Special offers. Write for Feature samples on approval, free samples 50 for $1 up Name Imprinted Christmas Cards, 100 for $1 Stationery, Napkins and free Catalog.
MAIL THIS COUPON TO C. L. EVANS
NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 308, Mass.
ss
State
YOU TAKE NO RISK

I cup floured raisins. Pour into 2 well-greased and floured 1-pound cans (baking-powder cans are perfect for this, tight covers and all), filling them ⅔ full. Cover tops tightly with aluminum foil or covers that fit, and place on a rack in a steamer or deep kettle over boiling water. Cover the kettle or steamer, and steam 1¾ hours. All the covering up is because it's steam you want. And steam has a way of being very unreliable if it isn't shut in where it belongs.

Bringing home the bacon! I guess in those old New England days I was telling of they didn't have ham and bacon with their beans. Somehow I think they kept to their good salt pork and, having sliced it paper thin and slashed it to keep it flat—well, pretty flat—they fried it crisp and brown, sometimes putting on a thin blanket of batter, more often as was. And that it was delicious I can testify, for, although a little younger than Abigail Adams, I've eaten salt pork in about every way known to man—or woman—and I know what I'm talking about. But Canadian-style bacon makes a very fine meal indeed of this baked-bean business.

GLAZED CANADIAN BACON

Buy a 2-pound piece of ready-to-eat Canadian bacon. Place in a shallow roasting pan in its transparent wrapper. Bake in a slow oven—325° F.—for 30 minutes. Remove wrapper and stud the bacon with whole cloves. Mix ½ cup brown sugar with ⅓ cup of any canned-fruit sirup and pour over the top. Bake an additional 30 minutes, basting frequently. Slice very thin, as you do ham—when it's sliced right.

I had rather live with the woman I love in a world full of trouble, than to live in heaven with nobody but men. —ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Was it originally "cold"? I have often pondered over the naming of coleslaw; could it be that it was named for an old chap by the name of Cole, or was it meant to be cold and somehow turned out the way it did? Who knows? Research does nothing for me. I'm at a dead end. Cole or cold, it's all the same to me. Incidentally, the dill makes a big difference. It's really excellent—if you like slaw. And there are two more receipts for relishes coming along, so don't say you didn't have a choice. Maybe, if it's a crowd you're having on a Saturday night, you'll make all three. Anyway, good luck, good relish.

COLESLAW WITH DILL DRESSING

Make a boiled dressing by mixing 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 2 teaspoons sugar, 2 tablespoons flour, a little pepper and ¾ teaspoon salt in the top of a double boiler. Make this into a smooth paste with 3 slightly beaten egg yolks and ¼ cup milk. Cook over boiling water, adding 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, and, while stirring constantly, add ½ cup milk and ¼ cup vinegar alternately, a little at a time. Cook until thick. Pour into a bowl and chill. When ready to serve, whip ½ cup heavy cream and fold into the boiled dressing. Season with 1½ tablespoons vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon sugar and 1½ teaspoons fresh chopped dill or dried dill or ½ teaspoon dill seeds, crushed. Toss lightly with 2 quarts finely shredded cabbage. Arrange in a bowl lined with the outer leaves of cabbage.

You can always get dill at the herb houses, and maybe it's in your garden or your neighbor's. The fresh is better, but the dried is very good and dill seeds are fun.

Promise made good. And now for the two relishes I promised. Here they are—either is good with ham, bacon or beans—and it won't come as a complete surprise, I'm sure, when I tell you that one deals with prunes. In a very nice way, if I do say so myself. And the other has an apple doing a polka with young Horse-radish, the rascal. And if she doesn't know what a temper he has, and a mean dis-

(Continued on Page 139)

$50 EASY! Sell America's Leading 21 Card Christmas Assortments. Samples on approval. New, Sensational, Money making Gift Items. Don't delay. Write today.
LORAIN ART STUDIOS
Dept. 19, Vermilion, Ohio.

FREE SAMPLES
50 for 25 for $1.00
Name Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS and STATIONERY

MAKE SYRUP... ONLY 9¢ A PINT
MAPLEINE

WRIGHT'S SILVER CREAM
WRIGHT'S
AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING SILVER CLEANER
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

KNITTING YARNS
Spun in our own mill
Write for FREE SAMPLE CARD
for over 40 years
CLIVEDEN YARNS
713 Arch St. Phila. 6, Pa.

KILLS ALL MOTH LIFE!
Protects against future damage
APEX
MOTH CAKES Two Sizes 23c 33c
MOTH CRYSTALS AND NUGGETS
MOTH VAPORIZER for large closets 79c
A CLEAN HOME PRODUCT
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

DRY IT ... ANYTIME ... ON Dryette
IT'S PORTABLE TAKE IT WITH YOU

ONLY $3.95
- SNAG PROOF
- RUST PROOF
- UNICHROME PLATED METAL
- LASTS A LIFETIME
- STURDY — WON'T TIP
- WEIGHS ONLY 30 OZ.

When Open, Provides 9' of Hanging Space
Folds to Umbrella Size for Easy Storage
AVAILABLE IN 2 SIZES
MASTER DRYETTE TWICE AS BIG — 12 ARMS 24' DRYING SPACE 39" HIGH
Load a big basket full of laundry. Remove the clothes when dry, stand DRYETTE in a corner or tuck away in a drawer. Standard DRYETTE is 32" high—6-18" arms give 9' dry space. A fine gift.
MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
SEE YOUR DEALER OR ORDER DIRECT
PHILLIPS MFG. CO.
201 NORTH WACO
WICHITA, KANSAS
Send Check or Money Order for Prepaid Delivery. C.O.D.'s Accepted — You Pay Charges.
Please send me Standard DRYETTES at $3.95 ea.
Please send me Master DRYETTES at $6.95 ea.
Please send me more information and pictures
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE

Beautiful Plastic SANDRA (TRADE MARK)

. . . stays new and beautifu

Pattern No. 1

NEW LUXURY LOOK . . . NEW EASE OF CLEANING . . . NEW LONG WEA

It's lovely, long wearing and low in cost. It's sensational plastic Sandran, the floor covering that stays bright and beautiful without constant care.

A new process gives you colors and designs never before possible, locked for life in tough vinyl plastic . . . a rubbery surface so tough even lye can't hurt it . . . so long wearing it outlasts costlier floor coverings.

Rich rubber tile effects, and carpet designs with the luxurious look of deep pile broadloom. Use Sandran in every room in the house!

NEEDS NO SCRUBBING—Dirt can't penetrate Sandran's non-porous vinyl plastic surface. Grease and grime wipe right off—even without waxing!

LASTINGLY LOVELY FOR YEARS OF WE —Rugged, vinyl plastic surface res abrasion. Strong soaps, detergents and h household cleaners can't harm Sandran.

CUTS DECORATING COSTS—Economical— only $1.79 per sq. yd. in most areas. Give your rooms a million dollar look—for pennies! Outwears costlier floor coverings.

EASY TO INSTALL—Tough, flexible, n handle. You can install it yourself easil flat without fastening, or may be cemen you prefer. In rolls 6 and 9 feet wide.

At Last! ALL PLASTIC Room Beauty

Sandran floors—plus beautiful Sandura-Wall, the permanent plastic wall covering. Hang it yourself, like wallpaper. Tile designs and plain colors. Won't streak, fade or yellow. Wipes clean with a damp cloth. Write for Free Folder!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FREE!

Write now for literature on revolutionary new Sandran — the plastic floor covering for every room in the house.

Sandura Company, Inc., 1409 Architects Bldg., Phila. 3, Pa.

For over 25 years manufacturers of Sandura Enamel Surface Floor Covering

Buy Sandran Where You See This Authorized Dea

SANDRA (TRADE MARK)

The Floor Covering of Irresistible Bea

(Continued from Page 137)

ition, too, she'll find out. But once in a le he behaves, and this is one of those es.

PICKLED PRUNES

sh 1 pound tenderized prunes (about 3 s) and stick 2 whole cloves into each ne. Add 3 cups water and soak the prunes 2 hours. Add 1 cup dark brown sugar, 1 cider vinegar and 4 three-inch sticks namon. Bring to a boil. Simmer 30 min-. Chill overnight in the sirup. Makes 1 rt.

APPLE HORSE-RADISH

son ½ pint thick sour cream with ⅛ tea-on salt and 2 tablespoons prepared se-radish. Grate 1 large red-skinned un-led apple on the coarse side of the grater add 1 cupful of the grated apple to the r cream. Mix well. Add a little sugar and a e extra salt to taste, or leave the sugar . It all depends on the tartness of the le.

ving-off place. There has to be an end—n to a Saturday night. So here I am turn-you over to the delicate operation known naking an apricot cake—with trimmings. ow you'll find it easy, and easier still to e part: Cream ½ cup shortening and 1 sugar together. Add 2 well-beaten eggs beat until light. Flavor with 1 teaspoon illa. Sift together 1¾ cups cake flour, teaspoon salt and 2½ teaspoons baking der. Add alternately to creamed mixture ½ cup milk. Beat after each addition. in and end with the dry ingredients. 't hesitate to beat. If you've got a mixer, you're in luck. Pour the batter into two 8-inch layer-cake pans greased and lined with wax paper and greased again. Or use the cake-pan liners that don't need greasing. You'll find them at most places where they sell cooking things. They're as handy as a pocket in a shirt. Bake 25–30 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 375° F. Let stand 5 minutes. Turn out and cool on racks.

APRICOT CAKE

Apricot filling and meringue: Wash 2 cups dried apricots. Add 2 cups water to the apricots in a saucepan. Cover and simmer until tender—takes about 30 minutes. Put through a sieve or colander and add 1 cup sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind. Cook slowly until thick, stirring every minute.

Split your cake layers crosswise. Save ⅔ cup of apricot mixture for the meringue and spread the rest between the cake layers. Beat 2 egg whites until foamy. Gradually add 2 tablespoons sugar and beat well. Fold in remaining ⅔ cup of the apricot purée and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Frost top and sides of the cake with the apricot meringue, making it stylish with whirls and swirls.

Are the birds leaving? Somehow it seems strangely quiet in the shrubs and in the trees. Can't be that the birds, having schooled their progeny as to the way to get on in the world, are packing up to fly South once more? Why they don't invite the blue jays along I don't know. But I don't blame them. The blue jays have manners which are trying, but they are as beautiful as an army with banners.

Soon St. Martin's summer will be here. We call it the Indian summer. As lovely and as fleeting as a face seen in a dream. And I will say good-by for now. And attend to my own Saturday night. Dear old Saturday night. Remember?

CAN A NATION AFFORD HEALTH FOR ALL ITS PEOPLE?

(Continued from Page 37)

which took it for granted that there ld be the closest co-operation between nedical profession and the state and that nifying force should be the Ministry of th. When the Labour Government came ower after the war and turned down the ne and put forward its own, there cer-y followed a bonny fight between the ister of Health, Mr. Aneurin Bevan, and British Medical Association. But it was provoked by the question of whether should or should not be a National th Service, but by argument as to how n money the doctors were going to be how much liberty going to be left to to choose the con-is in which they were ork, and how far, if by the state, they to retain the inti-relationship, pre-d from all interfer-by any third party, has till now existed between doctor patient. They fought, in fact, on how were to come into a National Health ce, which presumes consent to its nce.

s true that the Fellowship of Freedom edicine, of which the founder was the physician Lord Horder, fights the Serv-the theory that the doctor must keep lf free from anything but the bare mini-of entanglement with the state; but bout 3000 doctors belong to the Fellow-On the other hand, over 18,000 are ng within the Service.

s the fact that the vast mass of the h people, Tory and Labour, doctors ymen, accept the principle of the Na- Health Service. They are sometimes certed by the way that that principle out in practice, grumble noisily—and y should, or wrongs would never get d. But I think that few of them would er it possible to abandon the principle in view of those frightening results. For it is really true that the National Health Service was called into being because it was what was generally felt to be the only means of fulfilling a useful purpose; or, to be exact, certain useful purposes.

I can best show you what those purposes are by telling you how various people have been affected since July 5, 1948, when the Service was inaugurated by the Minister of Health, in pursuance of a duty laid on him two years earlier by an Act of Parliament.

Ever since then all of us except children and the old have paid certain contributions to the state under an Insurance Act. (When I give figures I will pay no attention to the devaluation of the pound.) On an employed man's insurance card the employer sticks a stamp for which he pays just under $1 and for which the employee pays $1—a total contribution of almost $2. On an employed woman's card the employer sticks a stamp for which the employer pays 65 cents and the employee 75 cents. Boys under eighteen have to have stamps on their cards amounting to rather more than half the value of those on men's cards, and the girls have to account for rather more than half the value of the stamps on a woman's card; and their employers have to pay their share. A self-employed man has to pay $1.25, a self-employed woman has to pay $1. A man who does not follow any employment has to pay just under $1; such a woman has to pay 75 cents.

I sneak in without paying, under the provision that the wife of a self-employed man can participate in certain benefits, of which the National Health Service is one, on his card.

Of these contributions an average of 10 to 15 cents is allocated to the National Health Service. The rest goes to provide such bene-

The great secret of successful marriage is to treat all disasters as incidents and none of the incidents as disasters.
—HAROLD NICOLSON.

Here are the most "sat-on" seats in my house and every one's a COSCO

For real comfort and convenience, get COSCO Stools and Chairs . . . all-steel . . . rounded edges . . . support 1,000 pounds! 19 models, five gay colors, from $2.95 (*slightly higher in Florida and Western states). Write for valuable, new booklet for homemakers. Send 10c to cover mailing cost to: COSCO, Dept. LH9, Columbus, Indiana.

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • COLUMBUS, INDIANA
For the best in quality, look for the Cosco trademark. Accept no substitutes.

COSCO Household Stools, Chairs and Utility Tables
Sold also in Canada and South America fits as old-age pensions and maternity benefits. But the sum of the contributions thus provided for the National Health Service defrayed, at the beginning, only one fifth of its cost. The proportion must be much lower now that the cost has mounted. The deficit, which was originally four fifths and must now be more, is provided from income tax and from indirect taxation, such as the duty on tea, spirits, tobacco, and so on.

The state goes off with this insurance and taxation money in its hand and enters into a contract with the doctors and surgeons and nurses and druggists and hospitals of the land, by which it agrees to pay them certain fees if they give the population free service. So now we all can consult a doctor without paying him, get all medicines prescribed by the doctor without paying the druggist, and go into a hospital without paying for the use of the bed or the operating theater or the radiological or any other department.

Let us first see how it works at the receiving end: on the patients.

II

You are not being at all realistic if you imagine that the National Health Service is the product of an idealism which will no longer suffer it that people shall be sick and uncared for just because they are poor.

The National Health Service does not make any earth-shaking change in the position of the sick poor. If anybody tells you about little English children in garrets who are now borne away in ambulances to be operated on by world-famous specialists and be nursed back to health by nice starched nurses in hospital wards, and suggests that these children would have been left to die in those garrets until July 5, 1948, put him down as a political propagandist and an unreliable reporter.

It is unfortunate, considering that enthusiasm moves the world, that so few enthusiasts can be trusted to speak the truth. —A. J. BALFOUR.

The lot of the sick poor has been improved in many secondary ways; but the primary situation of the patient struck down by acute illness when not possessed of means to pay doctors or nurses or hospital authorities has not been dramatically altered.

This is not a criticism of the Service. It simply means that the medical and surgical treatment and hospitalization of people with yearly incomes below $1700 was so well looked after in most parts of England that, though we would all like to make it better still, it would hardly be possible to do so in our present economic circumstances.

So it happens that when I see our herdsman standing in the courtyard of our house, and I go down and ask him, "What difference has the National Health Service made to you?" he answers, "Why, none."

He is a highly intelligent man, who went a good way up high school, and left only because he comes of a long line of farmers and wanted to get out onto the land as soon as possible. He reads well and widely, and can always understand what the veterinary surgeon says to him, which in these days is something of a test. He votes Labour, and is not looking for a chance to belittle the party's record. But he answers, "Why, none."

He goes on to explain that it could make no difference, because so far as he knew he had always been able to get all the medical attention for his family that he needed, free.

"I got my doctoring free under the old insurance system. As for my family, you remember when my little Tony fell off the tractor five years ago and it passed over his leg? I'd always contributed to the hospital scheme, he got straight into Aylesbury Hospital, and they treated him as if he were a millionaire's son, and I didn't have to pay a penny. I don't think the whole business cost me more than the fee I paid the doctor who came and sent him into hospital.

"And my wife, she had the babies with the district nurse looking after her, and we didn't subscribe more than a few shillings in the year for that, and we got maternity benefit that more than covered that subscription. And there's the baby-welfare center, that costs almost nothing too. So far as I am cerned, they needn't have worried a bringing in this National Health Serv

"But you get medicines for nothing n I said.

"All the medicines that it's wholesom us to take I can pay for," he said, thereby gave proof of his education. It i uneducated section of the public which l to dose itself. He would never think of ta medicine, or letting his family take it, u the doctor told him it was necessary.

But as I walked away he called after

"There's one way the National He Service took away a worry I had," he "When I heard about it beforehand I tho it might sweep away everything that ex already, and my wife and I were ter afraid that we might lose Nurse Vinso was the best news I ever had when I k that she was kept on with the Service."

Nurse Vinson is the district nurse an beyond all doubt, the Great Lady of village. Not one of us but would own she is head and shoulders above us, not because of the work she does, but becau her character and distinction. When herdsman spoke of her, it was with an an tion that no other aspect of our talk ev from him. In fact, all that really moved when he spoke of the National Health Se was relief that it had not swept away the viously existing means of meeting the n cal needs of himself and his family and neighbors.

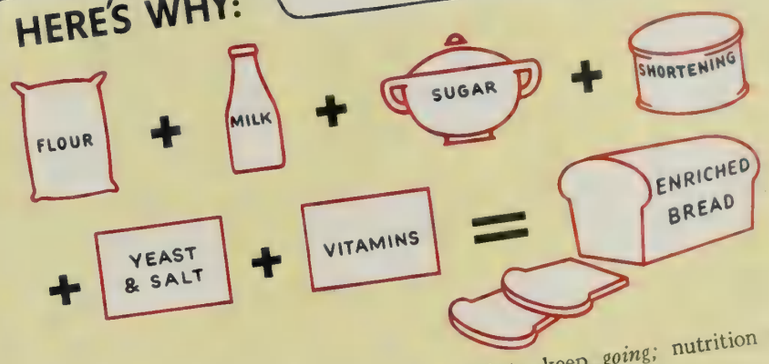
Now this is an extreme view of the s tion, based on a limited and lucky experie But it is correct in essentials.

The British had no son to be ashamed o medical provision made for their lo income groups. Firs all, they had a useful surance system. It introduced by our g statesman, David L George, in 1911, with intention of taking of employed persons who made just eno money to meet their current expenses, could not be expected to put by the sav which would enable them to cover the of sickness. He put the ceiling of this se at $650 annual income. That ceiling has to be raised twice since; now it is $1

This system gave the insured person right to register with the doctor and go o panel, as his list of patients was called, get his medical attention free. The weak of the system was that it made no prov for the dependents of the insured person their wives, not their children, not thei folk. But this was less of a hardship might appear. Many doctors organized by which insured persons on their p could get medical attention for their fam by paying something like a quarter a Many other doctors never sent in a b services rendered to the families of insured patients, and calculated the work as part of the duty they had to to get their insurance fees.

There was also the district-nursing sy to which Nurse Vinson, of whom my h man spoke, belongs, which sent out t nurses to visit people with low incon their homes and give them whatever ment was prescribed by their doctors, up to midwifery service. This was a re able success, attracting a very fine ty nurse. There were also various units fo ing care of special classes among the de ents, such as maternity and child we school medical inspection, and school services. But there is no doubt that dependents got left out of any scheme ticularly among women past the chil ing age, and old people. They have ben enormously from the National Health ice, under which they have the same rig anyone else. But they are not a very class; that is perhaps why my herdsm not mention that effect of the Service

Beyond this insurance system, ar units which took care of the depender had, over the greater part of Britain,



(Continued on Page 142)

B-R-E-A-D...

That's the five letter word for Grow-Up-Strong!

HERE'S WHY:

So, when you fix those school lunches, Mother—be sure there's plenty of wholesome, nourishing bread!

All those good foods in it—foods that are rich in protein, calcium, iron and other elements essential to a balanced diet—give children energy they need to keep going; nutrition they need to keep growing.

Don't forget! Penny for penny, enriched bread (the kind a baker bakes) provides more of the things the body needs—more generously—than any other food you eat at every meal.

© 1950, American Bakers Association, Chicago

at more BREAD... your best food buy

(Continued from Page 140)

hospital system. There were patches where indifferent local authorities had scrimped on hospital expenditure and where a sparse population could raise no effective hospital committees; and in Britain, as in the United States and everywhere else, it is extremely hard to keep the small isolated rural hospital up to scratch. But we can honestly say that our hospitals gave good service to the public, even though they often looked horrible to American eyes. They do that, I may mention, for a reason which is really all to our credit. We were the first country to meet the medical need of the expanding urban populations created by the industrial revolution, and the hospitals we put up then inevitably seem out of date compared with the hospitals put up by countries which realized their responsibilities much later. And with two wars, we have not been able to rebuild them. Too many of them look dreary, dingy, antiquated. But people get well in them.

For proof, take the figures for maternal mortality in the London County Council hospitals. In 1938—and you know there was no penicillin then—they handled over 20,000 births with a maternal mortality rate of 2.8 a thousand; and many of these deaths were among women who were sent into hospitals because of conditions that could not be coped with elsewhere. In 1947, when penicillin was being used, they got the rate down to one death in 22,974.

This efficiency is not a new thing. Long ago the hospitals were good enough—and I do not mean good enough for the poor, I mean good enough for me.

When my father died he left my mother and my two sisters and myself in dire poverty, and if any of us fell seriously ill, we had to go into a ward in a public hospital. I look back on an attack of scarlet fever that I had as a chlid and I recognize that in the free fever hospital to which I was sent I was given as good nursing and medical treatment and food as I have ever had in any of the expensive hospitals which have in my adult life dug mines in my bank account.

This hospital was theoretically not free, and the patients were supposed to be charged what they could afford to pay. This assessment was usually merciful. The London County Council hospitals recovered only an average of $3 a head a week from their patients. But there are some hospitals which were considered, by members of the medical profession who were in a position to know, greedy enough in their assessments to defeat the purpose for which hospitals primarily exist. But there was an answer to that, too, for during the last thirty-odd years the Regional Contributory scheme spread all over Britain. It enabled everybody who had under $1600 annual income to pay 4 cents a week and get free hospital treatment, and pay 2 cents a week and get free ambulance service. I cannot think of a household in this village which did not pay up under this scheme.

CERTAINLY people had to pay for their own medicines and surgical appliances. But this was not such an absolute deprivation as it seems. If a person really needed a medicine—say he was a diabetic and needed insulin—or if he really needed a surgical appliance—say he was ruptured and needed a truss—and he was without means, he could go to the relieving officer, who would put his case before a committee which would, if they were convinced of his need and his insolvency, give him the money to buy the insulin or the truss. I sat on such a committee for some years, and it was not ungenerous. But it could not have sanctioned a demand for vitamin B tablets to build up a debilitated person, or any such long-term medicament; and in the increased use of these building-up drugs lies the chief and very real merit of the provision of free medicine under the National Health Service. This, again, is not a spectacular reform; it will never make a dramatic impression on the public.

But where the National Health Service makes a dramatic appearance is in another field: in the middle classes. For them it is as if the sun had come out from behind the clouds, and their relief is a promise to the state of a happier future.

Take Charles and Joan as an example of the intensity of this relief, and its social purpose. They do not live in our village. Charles is an officer in the regular army, and therefore they have a house near an army post where Charles is a lecturer, not far out of London. I pass it every time I have to make the journey by automobile, and I stop there as often as possible, because they are entertaining people, good-looking, intelligent, well-mannered, of good stock.

The other day Charles said, "We have good news for you," and Joan explained, "We're going to have a third baby. On the Health Service, bless it, so I don't mind a bit."

No political philosopher could possibly want a higher testimonial to a piece of social legislation.

Charles's army pay is between $4000 and $5000 a year, out of which they have to pay $1000 in income tax. In order to be near the army post, they have to pay a large rent for the only house which was vacant in the district.

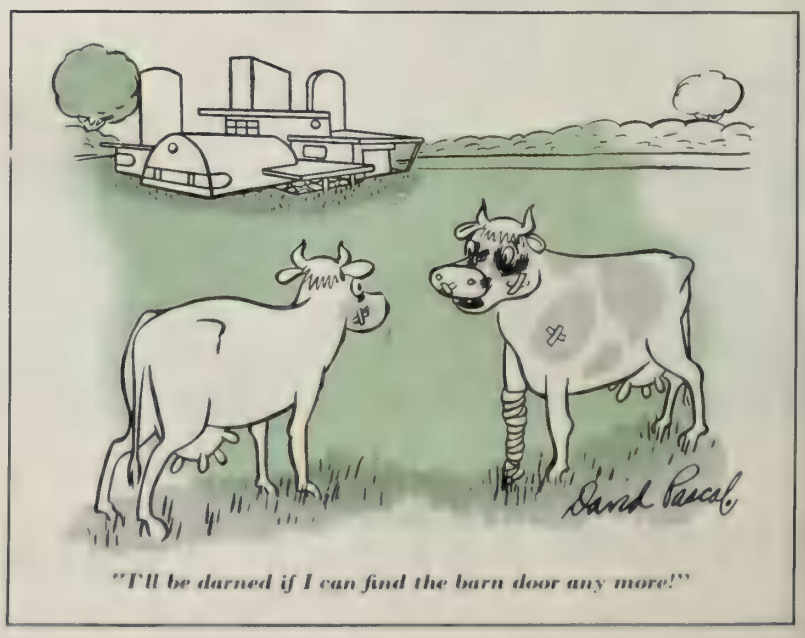
They had their first child a year after the war ended; and it cost them, with doctor and nursing home and a nurse who had to stay two months because Joan was seriously ill after her confinement, over $500. Charles was getting less pay then and this amounted to one fifth of the spendable income left after he had settled his income tax. Fortunately, he had his war gratuity and that met the bills. Their second child was born in the autumn of 1948, and this time there was no gratuity to fall back upon.

"We don't know what we would have done," says Charles, "if the National Health Service hadn't been set up in the meantime. We can't save off what I get. I suppose we would have had to borrow money and be slaves for the rest of our lives. As it was, we hadn't a headache. We just sat back and were glad the baby was coming."

Joan says, "That is why we are able to have a third. Our local doctor is attending me for nothing. The district nurse will come every day for a fortnight for nothing. I get a grant of eight pounds (that's not the Health Service, though, but the insurance) with which I can pay a home help, a domestic worker who will be found for me by the Health Service, someone who has got a diploma for efficiency. I've paid nothing all through my pregnancy for my minor ailments. I have a condition that causes nausea for a longer period than most women have to endure, and for that I swallowed sixty pills that cost three dollars a dozen. I couldn't possibly have afforded them. I get my mineral oil free. I get my dentist free—and I have bad teeth and always need a lot of attention while I'm having a baby; I ran up a bill of sixty dollars in my first pregnancy, and I would have run up bigger bills with the second baby and with this one if there were bills any more. And why shouldn't I tell the unromantic truth? I'm one of those women who suffer from piles every time they are pregnant. They need a lot of treatment and suppositories, and I would have been worried by them as well as tortured by them if I'd had to pay for all that."

Middle-class and upper-class people really do talk about the National Health Service with the glossy ecstasy of women giving testimonials in advertisements.

Charles went on, "It's not only this baby business which is so wonderful; it's having the burden of small day-to-day ailments lifted from us. I get all my medical attention free because I am in the army, but if I had had to pay for all the small ailments that our babies have developed it would have been very tough. The local doctor used to charge us two dollars a visit and a dollar if we took the baby to his office, and at that rate a bronchial cold could let us in for twenty dollars in a winter, for just one of them. Also, we consume about fifty dollars' worth of medicine in the year, one way or another. I tell you, we couldn't have done it."



There you see the National Health Service working at its most spectacular. I could match it with a dozen stories.

WE have, like you Americans, the alarming spectacle of costs rising steadily through the years, not only the cost of living, but the cost of being sick, of being dying. Physicians and surgeons met their own financial problems by charging fees which posed their paying patients financial problems which they could not meet, since they were usually on a fixed salary. We, too, have suffered from the theory that a tenth of a patient's annual income is not too much to ask for a major operation, and we know all about expensive hospitalization. But there is a difference between conditions in Great Britain and the United States which made us less able to cope with the mounting price of medical attention.

In Britain a married man with one child who has an earned income of $5000 has to pay nearly $1200 out to the tax collector. He has $3800 left. Now, if he is a professional man, it is not possible, with prices as they are with us today, for him to save a cent after he has paid for his home, his fuel, his light, his family's clothes, their holidays, their private (as differentiated from their state) insurance. To pay $500 for an operation would mean anything from a headache to disaster for him; $1000 would certainly mean disaster. I would not like to say what income a British citizen would now have to have in order to spend $500 or $1000 with a completely light heart. Remember that at present he has to make $20,000 before he has a spendable income of $10,000.

Well, what about the people who have less than $5000 but more than $1700, which is the ceiling above which nobody was allowed to be insured under the old Lloyd George system? There were something like 2,000,000 of them. What was to happen to them when they were sick?

(Continued on Page 144)

"I'll be darned if I can find the barn door any more!"

Lunchbox Special...

with that French's flavor!

5 ways to add taste-thrill to lunch box meals with FRENCH'S—the smoother, creamier mustard men prefer!

ye-filling! Hearty! Delicious! Combine cup grated Swiss cheese, ½ cup ground oked ham, 1 tablespoon horseradish, 1 blespoon French's Mustard; 1 tablesoon mayonnaise, salt to taste. Spread rye bread. Add lettuce, if desired.

lix together ½ can (7 oz.) tuna fish, cup chopped celery, 1 teaspoon lnon juice, 1 teaspoon French's Mus-t·d, 3 tablespoons salad dressing.

3 Mix together ½ cup chopped cooked chicken giblets; 2 slices bacon, cooked and chopped; 4 tablespoons mayonnaise; 2 tablespoons French's Mustard; salt.

4 Blend 2 tablespoons French's into 4 tablespoons butter or cream cheese. Add minced chives or chopped olives.

5 Mix ½ cup chopped hard-boiled egg with 1 tablespoon diced stuffed olives and 2 tablespoons French's Mustard.

FREE!
Hot Dan's new recipe book
"DINING DELIGHTS"

Send name, address to
The R. T. French Company,
1622 Mustard Street,
Rochester 9, N. Y.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

EST SELLING PREPARED MUSTARD IN THE U. S. A.... (Also made in Canada)

"We bring the contented customer home with every Koylon Sofa!"

The most comfortable moments of your life will be those you spend relaxing on furniture with Koylon Foam Cushioning. It's "lifetime" luxury! Koylon smooths itself back into shape when you get up—never needs fluffing.

U.S. Koylon® FOAM Cushioning

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK

"It Pays to Be Choosey about CURTAIN FINISHES"

CHOOSE Wat-a-set®

And Be Certain of Curtain WASHABILITY!

Whatever the brand name of the curtains you buy, for the maximum in quick and easy WASHABILITY make sure they're Wat-a-set finished. Washday dividends will spell the difference!

Wat-a-set — the original lasting finish for rayon, nylon and cotton marquisettes, ninons and casements—brings you these outstanding features:

1. Reduces shrinkage. Makes starching unnecessary.
2. Keeps curtains cleaner longer. You get longer wear through less frequent washings.
3. Helps tailored curtains hang straight. Protects even the most delicate open weaves.
4. Resists moisture and repels rayon-eating silverfish bugs.

At curtain counters everywhere you'll find the Wat-a-set label tucked in the folds of many different brands — in a variety of styles and prices. Be certain of curtain WASHABILITY — choose Wat-a-set finished curtains. Mount Hope Finishing Co., North Dighton, Mass.

Wat-a-set® Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
The ORIGINAL Lasting Curtain Finish

(Continued from Page 142)

The National Health Service answered that question. And do not say that the question should never have been put, that it is Britain's own fault if she is faced with the bankruptcy of a broad stratum of her population, because she need not have imposed on herself this high taxation. There are two good reasons why we have to tax ourselves heavily. First, we spent a great deal of money fighting Hitler, and though Marshall Aid helped us most generously, your help has not (and why should it?) covered the cost. Second, in our depleted and compact country we had a special need to smooth out the inequalities of the old-fashioned economic system, because we saw the possibility of troubles ahead and knew they would disorganize our civilization completely if we did not build up a commonwealth on the foundation of the social services.

We are riding a storm, and the benefit the National Health Service has conferred on the middle classes has certainly trimmed the ship.

III

THE main trouble which afflicts the people who use the National Health Service arises, strangely enough, out of its very success. It arises out of the time factor.

In May, 1949, when I was traveling in Western Germany with Dorothy Thompson and my husband, I picked up a throat infection which never cleared up, all the summer through. In September I said casually to my dentist, "It's a queer thing, but I've had a sore throat for over four months now, and every now and then I wake up choking, and I can't swallow as well as I used to do. I can't get a pill down without water, which used to be one of my few accomplishments."

My dentist answered, "I think you should go and see your doctor about that."

I said, "Oh, no, I won't bother; my throat's not bad; it's just a slight thing, I'll get on all right."

"No," insisted my dentist, "that isn't the sensible way to behave. Go to your doctor as soon as you can. And I'd get him to send you to see Sir X.Y., if I were you."

No words have ever given me a queerer feeling than those last sixteen. For I had come back on the Queen Mary two years before with a cancer team which had been touring the States, and Sir X.Y. was one of them. The only thing to do was to make the examinations that must follow as interesting as possible, so I said, "I'll go through this thing as a routine National Health Service patient."

But when I said this to my family doctor he looked doubtful. To begin with, it would mean that I could not consult Sir X.Y. He was attached to a London hospital, and the only specialists to which my doctor had the right to send me worked in hospitals in two towns in my district. This was not a real hardship at all. Those specialists were more than capable of giving me the examination. That was not what worried my family doctor. He said flatly, "You won't have time." And that was the real objection. Patients suspected of cancer have a high priority, but even so I would have had to go to one of these hospitals in my district and wait anything from an hour to three hours on two separate days, to see the specialist and the X-ray operator. Each of these towns is about an hour's drive away. This meant that two whole days would be consumed, not only for me, but for my husband, who wanted to go with me. Moreover, I would have had to use up a tidy piece of our gas ration—gas is no longer rationed, of course. (This I would not have had to think of had I been a helpless patient, for the National Health Service would have sent a free ambulance for me. They have an ambulance service which is almost too good, for it is being used so much that it is feared that it is being abused.)

When I came to think it over I found that I had not two spare days. I was working, on a piece which involved much research, Yes, man has one advantage. He can get married if he wants to.

—COL. W. C. HUNTER: Brass Tacks, (Reilly & Lee).

I was doing a job for a refugee comm
I had promised to speak at two meet
And my husband, with his work in government and on our dairy farm, had unbreakable engagements than I had. S husband and I went up to London one da for ten minutes in Sir X.Y.'s waiting r and were with him for half an hour i consulting room. And the next night I called up by Sir X.Y., who told me the suspicion of cancer was without dation. I had lost only half a day, if tha hours; and I had not got tired, I had g with my other work, and I had not h break a single engagement.

If a person's time has more than a cer value it does not pay him or her to us National Health Service. So many pe are resorting to the doctors' offices to the hospitals that the queues seem less. Here is one instance in which the are actually getting less satisfactory ical attention than they had before th stitution of the Service, for in many patient departments the time of waiti doubled or trebled. And it is no joke si in a hospital waiting room when you feeling ill.

Superficially this may seem a sligh jection. It would seem to mean that a ce number of persons who can afford t private patients are forced to stop ava themselves of the public services and go to being private patients, thus remo themselves from the queues. I can affo pay the $100 that these examinations me, and because of the time element I h do it—what's wrong with that? But it not work out quite like that. People's often has a value wh not fully coincidental its cash value and ma entirely detached fro

Here is a typical e ple of someone whose is too valuable on a term assessment for to spend a couple of h waiting in a doc office every time he needs medical a tion, but who does not at the pr moment get paid at a rate which ables him to look down his nose at relief given by the National Health ice. Near me there lives a man in middle age who is setting on its feet a tracting business which he has inhe from his father and which was knocke pieces by the war. He and his wife an four young children are all registered u the National Health Service, and the and children have derived great benefit it; but he works far too hard to go and in an office. He tells me that he has several times to see his doctor, but has yet sat it out. The only consultations h ever had have been over the telep which is more like mind reading proper medical practice, and when ar ment which should have been recogniz the doctor's office became so acute he had to go to bed and the doctor vi him at home. This man is really being out of the benefits for which he has both as an insured person and as a taxpa

BUT he does get his medicines for not I have come across a still harsher case, w the insured persons did not get even benefit. An unfortunate Polish refugee, w sole means were a grant she received fr charitable committee, what she made o two paying guests, and what her sons daughters, who were all students workin university degrees, made by coaching p in foreign languages, had to confess t committee that she owed nearly $4 medicines which she had bought at a store near her house. She should, of co have sent the various members of her fa who needed these medicines to their d and got a separate National Health pres tion for each medicine, which then w have been handed over the counter nothing. But the poor lady pleaded, perfect truth, that she was too busy the housework and cooking for her chil and the paying guests, and her children

(Continued on Page 147)

Now! A Wonderful New Frigidaire Automatic Washer with Time-Saving Select-O-Dial!

The only automatic washer with all-porcelain rust-proof finish inside and out.

SET IT ONCE! Sensational new electrical control lets you pre-select right washing times, even for woolens, rayons, Nylons—no hand-controlling! Automatically fills washer—controls rinsing, drying—even cleans and shuts off washer!

You can't match the brand new Frigidaire Automatic Washer for really easy, completely automatic washing—even of special fabrics which require hand-controlling in most automatic washers. You simply dial the recommended washing time—it's marked right on the Select-O-Dial—and the washer does the rest in as little as 24 minutes! No waiting for the tub to fill before adding soap—no need to return till your washing's done. What could be easier!

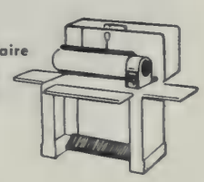
Watch Frigidaire's Live-Water washing—see why there's nothing like it for getting clothes clean. Watch the surging, penetrating currents of hot, sudsy water that produce all the washing motion—with no pulling or yanking. See how your things are always completely submerged in water—not half in, half out. Note that clean water is used for each wash and both deep-water rinses! You use as little as 12 gallons of hot water—and none is wasted!

See the smart styling by Raymond Loewy! Look at the new back panel that fits flush against the wall—puts controls in easy reach, away from water. Notice the new neon signal light. And remember—this is the only automatic washer that's all-porcelain inside and out!

New quietness, new smoothness. Thanks to Frigidaire's new direct-drive Unimatic Mechanism and new Free-Floating Tub, this washer is so vibration-free you can stand a coin on edge on the washer while the washer is running. No bolting down!

See a Proof-of-Value Demonstration at your Frigidaire Dealer's—look for his name in Classified Phone Directory. Also find out about the new Frigidaire Automatic Dryer and Electric Ironer! Or write Frigidaire Division of General Motors, Dayton 1, Ohio.

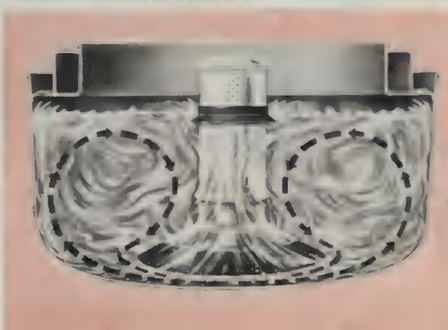
This emblem on a Frigidaire Automatic Washer assures you of the same measure of convenience, economy, dependability and beauty that made the Frigidaire Refrigerator America's No. 1 Refrigerator.



You can't match the New FRIGIDAIRE Automatic Washer

Automatic Washer • Refrigerators • Electric Ranges • Electric Ironer
Automatic Clothes Dryer • Food Freezers • Electric Dehumidifier • Air Conditioners
Electric Water Heaters • Kitchen Cabinets and Sinks

New Frigidaire Automatic Clothes Dryer!



New Frigidaire Electric Ironer!

Rapidry-Spinning is DIFFERENT. This washer spins far faster than most automatic washers, really gets the water out of clothes. Result—many of your things are dry enough to iron immediately and everything's lighter, easier to handle.

Live-Water washing is DIFFERENT—and the secret is the Frigidaire Pulsator. Its short, fast, up-and-down strokes send tides of hot suds surging through and through your clothes—get things really clean, white, bright. Nothing else like it!

New Underwater Suds Distributor is DIFFERENT! Automatically makes good soap or detergent even more effective—turns it all into bubbly, hard-working suds before it ever touches your clothes! Never leaves a spot or stain!

Elsie's Coffee-Course Buffet

Wonderful new, easy way to entertain!

Ask them in for coffee and dessert.

FREE! New revised 26-page booklet of 70 Magic Recipes

Easy desserts for entertaining and every day! Tested by Borden's and Good Housekeeping Kitchens. Write Elsie, Dept. J-90, P. O. Box 175, New York 46, N. Y., for illustrated copy of "Eagle Brand Magic Recipes." Here's one you'll like . . .

Magic Fruit Sauce

1 cup Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk (use rest of can for Truffles below)
4 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon finely grated lemon rind Cold Water

Mix Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, lemon juice and rind, stirring until thick. Add water by tablespoons until of desired consistency. Serve over mixed fresh fruits in season (oranges, pineapples, sliced bananas, strawberries, raspberries, grapes).

Magic Truffles

Creamy chocolate candy!
Mixed in minutes with

Borden's Eagle Brand

1 package (6 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces
⅓ cup plus 1 tbsp. Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
Pinch of salt
¼ teaspoon vanilla or imitation rum extract
3 tablespoons ground nut meats (optional)

Melt chocolate, without stirring, in top of double boiler over rapidly boiling water. Take from heat. Add Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, salt, flavoring and nut meats. Stir only till blended.

Turn into container lined with waxed paper and press into block 1 inch high. Chill in refrigerator until firm (about 2 hours). Turn out of container, remove waxed paper and cut into serving pieces. Store in airtight container. Makes more than ½ pound.

Old fashioned good coffee ...without cooking

Borden's Coffee

You'll get compliments on your coffee when you serve Borden's. It gives you all the rich, hearty flavor of old fashioned coffee. Borden's Instant Coffee tastes so good because it's 100% pure percolated coffee . . . concentrated in powder form.

So don't be fooled by the size of the jar. You actually get as many cups from the regular size jar of Borden's as you do from a pound of ground coffee . . . yet Borden's saves you up to 20¢! Get Borden's Instant Coffee today.

P.S. If you prefer evaporated milk with coffee, try creamy-rich Borden's Evaporated Milk!

© THE BORDEN COMPANY

IF IT'S BORDEN'S—IT'S GOT TO BE GOOD!

(Continued from Page 144)

usy doing their own studying and coach-heir pupils, to spend hours waiting in doctor's office. Here some people so that even the payment of their insur-dues meant a sacrifice were being done
f what was their right.

is is at present a real defect in the sys-and it would be dishonest not to admit avity. But time will cure it.

r one thing, these new queues of patients st partly of people who are seeking cal attention because they do not have y for it. Now some of these people really ed medical attention, and could not pay
; and they may be expected to recur in ueues. But there are others who do not medical attention, and come simply se they like getting something for rently) nothing. Of these some will
. It is not really very amusing, consultoctors and going to hospitals. If you t that there have always been paying nts who found it amusing to consult rs and go to clinics, and never seemed ary of it, you are forgetting that now doctors and clinics are no longer paid by patients, they will probably throw out.

tain districts can be named by the cal Practices Committee, which con-of seven doctors and two laymen, as ed areas," and the committee may re-ny practitioner permission to set up h an area if they think that it already ins too many doctors competing for f the sick. When this system has been ng for some years the existing num-doctors will be fairly distributed all Great Britain, and there will be no for any doctor to have more patients s panel than he can treat without nable delay.

the transitional stage is uncomfortand how it could have been avoided I t see.

IV

doctors made a great fuss about g into the National Health Service, at was largely because the Minister of h, Mr. Aneurin Bevan, made a dog-of the negotiations with the British al Association over the terms on which ere to come in; and the secretary of the h Medical Association, Doctor Hill, is of a bulldog himself. But there are ng on doctors exactly the same forces reconciled their middle-class patients Service.

ow very well how it used to be in the al profession, because my sister is a
. With the help of the scholarships
Andrew Carnegie, of Pittsburgh, gave native Scotland and the self-sacrifice of other, she went through Edinburgh sity with hardly a penny at the back
So, though she was the top of her year ery, there was no question of her beg a surgeon, which is a much more n activity among women in Great h than it is in the United States. She body to finance her through the long of working without reward which was cessary preliminary to a surgeon's
She could not even raise the money a practice. Some of the women in her ad parents rich enough to start them eons; nearly all of them, after a few had practices bought for them. And usly parents have less money to spend r daughters than on their sons.

times are changed. So the National Service looks very pleasant to a doctor who wants to be a general ioner. He takes his degree, holds some l posts, goes into practice in some at is not "closed," and can have as National Health Service patients as he up to the number of 4000 at an annual ion fee of $3.50, and a payment for pan outlying districts based on the mile-has to cover to get to them, and fees from $25 to $35 for obstetric cases.
also take private patients if he can find
e. He cannot cultivate these better-cases at the expense of his National Service patients, because he is strictly supervised and his National Health Service patients can file complaints against him before a stern and impartial tribunal. No doctor is engaged by the National Health Service on terms that make him a full-time servant of the state, for that is held to be dangerous. He might become a slave of the state.

Some practitioners have refused to come in under these terms and are carrying on just as they did before; but it is doubtful if many young doctors will choose to start in practice of this kind. They would be at odds with the majority of their profession if they did and they would have very little to gain by it, as they would not have made names which attract private patients. Better to accept the National Health Service's offer of employment under terms which might, if exploited to the full, yield the young doctor something like $15,000 a year.

The snag is that $15,000 is very hard to make. The 4000 patients it represents are far too many for one man to handle. The Ministry of Health never liked putting such a high limit to a practitioner's list, and would not have done so had there been a more equitable distribution of doctors; but they had to allow the figure in order to get the whole of the population in touch with medical attendants in areas where there were too few doctors.

The figure seems even more fantastic today, because the proportion of the 4000 who not only register but turn up at the doctor's office is much greater than was expected. A medical statistician estimates that during the first twelve months after the National Health Service came into being 5 per cent more people over sixteen complained of illness than in the previous twelve months, and the number of actual illnesses recorded by doctors increased by 8 per cent. The number of times that the average person consulted his doctor went up, in 4000 cases which were investigated, by 13 per cent. But the doctor's ability to treat his patients cannot go up by 13 per cent.

So there are two courses open to him, if he has the full panel he is allowed. Either he treats them conscientiously and overworks himself to the danger point, or he gives them perfunctory treatment. But these are extreme cases. Many doctors have fewer patients on their lists and have a satisfactory schedule; and it must be remembered that the "closed area" system will in time reduce the number of practitioners who have the full list. But doctors with fewer patients do not make $15,000 a year; and it seems probable that to guarantee them a satisfactory livelihood the capitation fee will have to be raised. Certainly we will have to revise the system by which the country doctors in our hilly districts and marshlands who cannot take more than 1000 of the scattered population on their lists are guaranteed a basic fee; for at present it is only $1500 a year, which is far too low.

Crepuscule Twilight

By Lucille Watson

My love, light not the lamp—
Let the sweet dusk invade:
Thro' open casements high
The trees approach, the sky
Flows in. You seem to fade,
To float. Give me your hand.
Could we but drift away
To melt in soft cascade
O'er this enchanted land,
Could we but drift away,
And thus, perhaps, evade
Inevitable day.
You seem to float, to fade.
Give me your pale, cool hand,
Let the deep dusk pervade.

On the whole, however, the general practitioner is not displeased by his financial position under the Act. He has security. But how does it affect his work?

Well, this business of overcrowding, of overwork, though it is temporary, is feared by some doctors to be doing permanent harm to medicine. They say that the doctor who finds himself faced with a mob of patients tends to send all of them who have anything but the simplest maladies off to hospital, and so tends to become a diagnostician on a very low level of diagnosis. It is partly, they say, the doctor who yields to this temptation who is responsible for the hospital outpatient queues.

He is also making barren a most fertile field of medicine. For the general practitioner, and only the general practitioner, can get thorough views of illnesses in relation to the whole life of the individual who is suffering from them. He alone can look at a patient and say, "He's not developed as he should have, considering what he was as a boy of fifteen, but I think it may not be going as hard with him as it looks; I remember how bad he seemed to be three years ago with that attack of pneumonia, but he got over it quickly enough. I wonder if he has the curious constitution of his father and his strong old grandfather, or if he takes after his mother's folk. They're weakly stuff." That valuable fund of knowledge can never be accumulated by any other type of doctor, and some of them doubt if it is being accumulated by that type today.

"But," says the general practitioner who lives down the road, "he won't be able to accumulate it in the present conditions, because of the one weakness of the National Health Service which seems to me insuperable. As you know, I was passionately against the scheme before it was introduced. On most points I think I was crying out before I was hurt. But I do feel that on one point I was right. The necessary relationship between the doctor and the patient has been destroyed. In the past a man has come to me and said, 'Doctor, I'm ill,' and I've looked at him and thought of nothing but how to make him well, and he knew I was thinking of nothing but that, and he could believe me. I had an undivided loyalty to him. But now I am an employee of the state, and I owe loyalty to the state as well as to my patient, and the state can dictate what I am to do to my patients, and I don't like it.

"Here is an example. You know my assistant, Doctor M. He is really trying to make the scheme work, and he is a conscientious human being. He does his best for the patient, but it would not occur to him to be extravagant, because he knows quite well that England today isn't running with milk and honey. An old girl moved into the district the other day and sent for him because she was suddenly tied up in knots with arthritis. She was ill otherwise; it was really a sad case. It turned out that she had a mouthful of rotten teeth, and though we don't hang arthritis on bad teeth as confidently as we did, there was no question that she couldn't be allowed to go on with a mouth like that. We sent her along to a dentist who recommended drastic extractions, and together we worked out that the extractions should be divided into four, with fourteen days in between. First we were going to extract two teeth; then, if the reaction was O.K. we were going to extract five teeth; and then, if she could take it, we were going to extract seven the next time; and at the last extraction the remaining six teeth would go. For these four extractions the dentist was going to charge the National Health Service twelve dollars fifty and the anesthetist was going to charge seventeen dollars. So he notified the Dental Estimates Board to that effect and waited. I'm damned if he didn't get a letter back from them reducing his fees to six dollars and the anesthetist's fees to ten dollars with the warning, 'If you do not agree to amend the fees as above, the Estimate Form should be returned, with your observations, before treatment is commenced.'

"Well, we put the old girl into cold storage, and the dentist protested that the doctors—myself and M.—who had seen the case

Most make-ups shout: "Made-up!"— Magic Touch whispers: "Natural beauty"

Replace that heavy "made-up" look with natural-looking loveliness by using Magic Touch. No puff, no sponge.

39c and 1.00 everywhere
6 magic shades

Magic Touch is NEW . . . a tinted cream make-up so sheer your skin glows through! . . . yet it hides each tiny blemish while it smooths and softens and adds glorious color . . . Apply with fingertips (with or without powder)—so quick, so easy, so naturally lovely!

EASY EXTRA MONEY $

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS
to friends, clubs, neighbors, and fellow workers.
It's Easy! The country's outstanding line. 6 FREE SAMPLES of name-on cards (low as 50 for $1.00), stationery, napkins. Box samples on approval. Prompt service.
LIBERTY BELL STUDIOS — Dept. B-4, 1013 Filbert St., Phila. 7, Pa.

NEW METALLIC Christmas Cards YOU MAKE $37.50 CASH

You make 75c on every box of Metal Foil name-imprinted Christmas Cards you sell friends and others. They buy this on sight . . . Over 50 other Christmas and Everyday assortments. Name-imprinted Christmas cards, 50 for $1, up. FREE Personal Samples. Assortments on approval. Write now.
CHAS. C. SCHWER CO., Dept. 16-M, Westfield, Mass.

On Only 50 Boxes

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

World Famous for their Anatomical Fit

If your feet hurt—or are "hard" to fit—Dr. Scholl Shoes will give you glorious walking ease—free of painful friction and pressure points on your feet and toes. Their style distinction give no outward hint of their inward scientific design.

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all sizes for all types of feet—women's, 2½ to 13, AAAA to EEE; men's, 5½ to 16, AAA to EEE. Expertly fitted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops and Shoe and Dept. Stores in principal cities. If not obtainable in your city, write for catalog.

Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Ill.

SELL EXCLUSIVE SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS

EARN EXTRA MONEY IN YOUR SPARE TIME!
Showing Smartly Exclusive Sunshine line to Friends, Neighbors. QUICK SALES! SEND FOR SAMPLES ON APPROVAL & DETAILS OF $1,000.00 SALES CONTEST.
SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, Dept. LE-9, 115 Fulton St., New York 8, N.Y.

AMAZING CREAM REMOVES UNSIGHTLY HAIR QUICKLY, SAFELY

Acts Below "Razor Line" Without Cutting or Scraping Legs

The modern way to remove ugly hair from your legs is with Neet® Cream Hair Remover. It works deeper than a razor, below the surface of the skin. Safer too from razor cuts and scratches. Neet leaves tender skin soft and smooth, free from razor stubble. Just apply Neet like any cream, then rinse off and hair disappears like magic.

WHAT A BREAK FOR Wee Gals SIZE 7&9 ONLY AT HOUSE OF NINE 'LAST!

SMART FASHIONABLE DRESSES·SUITS
COATS·SPORTSWEAR
Largest Selection in America of Size 7's & 9's
Modestly Priced
Send for Free Catalog Today!
FREE CATALOG
HOUSE OF NINE
3719 Wilshire Blvd.
Dept. J-9
Los Angeles 5, Calif.

had said that the teeth must come out by progressive extraction in view of her desperate state of health, and that the reduced fees were not suitable for several sessions for either him or the anesthetist. After nearly three weeks, during which the poor old girl's teeth were vigorously discharging pus into her system, the Dental Estimates Board replied to this protest with the calm remark that it was no good, they were only going to pay for one simultaneous extraction.

"The dentist wrote again and protested, and the board answered: 'The method and number of teeth to be extracted at each visit is a matter for the professional discretion of the dentist, and part of the normal care which should be given to this patient in her best interest. This does not attract any special fee. The regulations make provision for an appeal against the decision of the board, if you so desire.' Well, it was by now the third of November, and the extraction had been recommended by the dentist and M. and me at the beginning of September. Of course the dentist and the anesthetist went ahead and did the job at a loss.

"Now do you see what I mean? I hung about because I had got entangled with the state, when my duty to my patient was to go straight ahead. Of course I'm unhappy when my paymaster is the state, which I find is capable of coming between me and my patient and insisting that I give her a different treatment from that which the professional knowledge of myself and my partner has prescribed, though they haven't sent a soul near the place even to have a look at her. I feel I am a hypocrite for staying inside the scheme.

"But," he added after a minute or two, "I must admit that we have suffered from very few cases of interference. But I don't think there should be any at all."

"Why do you think the Dental Estimates Board did this obviously silly thing?" I asked.

"Lay interference, I suppose," he answered gloomily. "I expect the Dental Estimates Board is loaded up with civil servants and other laymen who never saw a stethoscope."

"Are you sure of that?" I asked.

"No," he said, "and there's something that makes me uneasy. There is so much paper work in connection with the Service that I've never had the time to study the whole Act, though in the past I've always known by heart every piece of legislation which affected my work."

"Let's look it up," I said; and we found that it was and it wasn't a piece of lay interference.

THE Dental Estimates Board consists of a dental chairman with six dental members and two lay members, all appointed by the Minister of Health after consultation with representative dental organizations. But it was true that nearly all treatment except emergency treatment, plaster fillings, scalings and repairs to dentures had to be s tioned by the board, and that this sanc ing is done by lay clerks who have no kn edge of dentistry or, of course, the pat This was bound to happen. The propo of dentists in general practice is only a 1 to 5000, so none could be spared to do paper work. But the general policy of t lay clerks is of course decided by the dominantly professional board, and whe talked it over we realized why that b was imposing on its subordinates a ch paring policy. Without doubt it was fe dizzy because it had in front of it the fi for the first year's working of the Ser and was trying wildly to cut down exp wherever it was possible, and even whe was not.

We had come up against the real ch against the National Health Servic costs too much.

V

THERE are those who say, "Health ca cost too much." But it can. A famous pe ric surgeon, who gives the children i care more than all the money in the w could ever buy, because his tenderness great as his brilliance, said to me, "I am that it will be a disaster to the health o nation if health is given too high a pric If too much of our national wealth go medicine at the expense of food and ho and clothing and general civilization, sickness will increase." A physician o same high type said to me a few hours "What is the good of the state giving a free treatment for a duodenal ulcer if h got the ulcer through worrying about taxes he has to pay to enable the state to him that free treatment?"

You cannot dismiss such remarks as propaganda—though, politics being they are, I am willing to concede that t remarks would have been made about Labour Government-sponsored Service if they had not been true. When the Act introduced in 1946 it was estimated th would cost $508,000,000. By the time Service was inaugurated, two years l the estimates had risen to $832,500,00 1949 the estimates rose still further. this year we are landed with an estim for 1951 of $1,600,000,000.

Now it is possible to be too badly fr ened by these figures. A great proporti these sums represents money that w have been spent anyway on medicine, wh the Service had been introduced or Individuals would have spent it by d payments to doctors, nurses and hosp now they first pay it to the tax collector, pays it to the doctors nurses and hosp on their behalf. The worry is how m money is wasted on administration cos this indirect method and whether wastage is counterbalanced by the quit saving effected by bulk buying of m care.

(Continued on Page 150)

"I don't like my attitude!"

His baby comfort depends on your protective care

Your Baby's Skin is thinner than yours hoose his little toys carefully—making hat they're soft with rounded edges. His kin is so tender, a sharp plaything might "hurt" it. His skin is thinner than a up's—skin studies show that it would jured" quicker. He depends on you to is thinner skin from harm.

You should be sure when choosing his bathroom tissue to check for 3 "tender skin" qualities. "Old linen" softness that doesn't chafe. Instant absorbency for quick, thorough cleansing. And exactly the right strength to resist tearing or shredding.

More mothers every day are finding this ideal combination of "tender skin" qualities in ScotTissue. ScotTissue's touch is soft as old linen on baby's thinner skin. Up to 6 months try lining his diaper with 20 or more sheets of fluffed up ScotTissue. Just flush away the soiled tissue. Easier for you—and for baby too.

"ScotTissue," "Soft as Old Linen," [illegible] U.S. [illegible] Off.

SCOTTISSUE IS SOFT AS OLD LINEN

"Soaping" dulls hair— Halo glorifies it!

Not a soap, not a cream— Halo cannot leave dulling, dirt-catching soap film!

Gives fragrant "soft-water" lather —needs no special rinse!

Removes embarrassing dandruff from both hair and scalp!

Halo leaves hair soft, manageable— shining with colorful natural highlights!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or oily cream shampoos leaves dulling, dirt-catching film. Halo, made with a new patented ingredient, contains no soap, no sticky oils. Thus Halo glorifies your hair the very first time you use it. Ask for Halo—America's favorite shampoo—at any drug or cosmetic counter!

Halo reveals the hidden beauty of your hair!

(Continued from Page 148)

But it is only sane to feel some fright, and indeed considerable fright, at these figures.

They mean that Great Britain is paying out $32 a head for medical care. Now, you cannot pay out what you do not earn. If you consider that out of our population of 50,000,000, 10,355,000 are under nineteen, and that another 5,250,000 are over sixty-five, you will see what a load this bill is on the producing adults between these ages.

You can gather what our plight is by comparing your expenditure with ours. Our national income a year ago was about $42,480,000,000; yours was about $221,500,000,000. You have more than five times as great a national income as we, which means considerably more margin. But 40 per cent of our income and only 24 per cent of yours goes in taxation. I again beg you, please do not put down that difference just as thriftlessness. We have had two world wars; we really are trying to work out an economy in which all citizens can be guaranteed full employment, which is not a contemptible aim. But it makes life difficult. The mere fact that 16,000,000 of our population—that is, 32 per cent of it—are too old or too young to be in full production explains why it is very difficult for us to have only 60 per cent of our national income at our own disposal as private persons.

The part of the taxation which goes to the National Health Service takes 5½ per cent of our national income.

It is misleading to consider it as an isolated payment. To get its full unpleasantness, consider it in conjunction with another tax—our defense tax. You lay out 3.5 per cent of your national income on that; we lay out 7 per cent of ours. That and the National Health Service account for 12½ per cent of our national income. And that percentage is increasing.

Now, why does the Service cost so much? Partly, of course, because some silly people are rushing to take advantage of a service which appears to give them something for nothing, and are seeing doctors and buying medicines which they do not really need. But that will wear out in time, though we have, as you have, some patent-medicine addicts for whom the National Health Service has turned the whole of time into a wonderful lost week end. You can write off altogether the suggestion that it is due to the freakish peculiarities of the Service which are being so much publicized. It isn't because the National Health Service is throwing the taxpayer's money out the windows by giving free wigs to all the bald. The approximate cost of the wigs provided in the first year of the Health Service amounted to $146,000, and as each wig costs about $48, this does not account for more than the number of people whom you would expect to need wigs because they are suffering from varying degrees of baldness which might prevent them from obtaining employment and leading normal lives, due to such causes as burns, accidents, head operations and other misfortunes.

But there is one item which, alone and inevitably, even if every person connected with the giving and receiving end of the National Health Service had behaved like angels, would have made it enormously costly. The Service had to take over the hospitals. They were in such a desperate condition that the National Health Service would have had to be created to get them on their feet, if for no other reason.

Any hospital, in any country, is a frightening economic portent today. Ours were especially frightening because of what happened to them during the war. A hospital is a very delicate and complicated organism and it would have to be a very hardy specimen to survive what was done to nearly all of them between 1939 and 1945. First, during the "phony war" they passed under government direction and were either cleared of their ordinary patients and kept empty for air-raid casualties who never turned up for a year, or they were evacuated into the country, in both cases to the utter confusion of their organization and their accountancy. The nation footed the loss, but all the same it was hard to keep the books going in a way that made sense. Then, when the phony ended and air raids began, all the hospit our great cities suffered appalling dar The London County Council had bet 60 and 70 hospitals within the London and these were hit on 492 occasions. I d mean that they were hit by 492 bom mean that they were the subject o separate attacks, ranging in intensity the dropping of a single bomb to bom ment by masses of high explosive and i diaries or by rockets and land mines. S teen of those attacks were so severe tha hospitals affected had to close down en and evacuate every patient within walls. The sum of this was that in Lo alone over 5000 beds (including 600 in m hospitals) were totally destroyed.

Every hospital that was not obvi immune from attack had to take drean expensive precautions, such as the build blast walls to protect the ground-floo dows and the provision of alternative and electricity supplies. This capital ex iture was sometimes worse than a loss in peacetime; the blast walls cost a as much to pull down as to build.

Again it can be said that all this wa for by the nation. But ask yourself, were a hospital authority, if you would relished the task of putting your part institution on its feet again in these ci stances. There were not only all the pro that sprang from the positive inconven of the war; there were the negative pro also, such as those which faced the L County Council when it had to fac prospect of making up arrears in buildin maintenance work, the extent of whic be guessed from the fact that its capit penditure in the single year 1939 was $4 000, and had had to cheesepare th 1940 and 1941, and thereafter coul spend a single penny on this essential

Moreover, the war posed new ho problems quite apart from finance housing shortage meant that the hos were flooded with chronic sick. Peo longer had the accommodation for th valids and their old people; and so them who had room for them had lost, the war, their sense of obligation towar families. Civilization is not stamped deep into us yet, it must be remembere housing shortage also meant difficulty i viding nursing staffs. There are not e nurses to go round, anyway, but man pitals cannot engage even those rea come to them because they have no modation for them.

Imagine the state of mind of a ho authority that knew it had to overco these difficulties before it could get b the status quo of 1939; and knew, too insolvency was a part of that status qu would have to be reckoned with when back there. For all the voluntary ho were well and truly in the red, living on drafts; and the hospitals which belon the municipal and rural authorities w the uncomfortable political equival being in the red, which means that any which got into power and raised the enough to cover hospital expenses have red faces next time it went to the

Nobody connected with medicin deny that at the end of the war most tals wanted very much to come in out rain, and that the universities felt the ing hospitals to be in such a poor wa the future training of doctors was in jeo unless they were reorganized. And th not a temporary misfortune; it had coming nearer and nearer to us for de

A modern hospital is not really so m an institution as it seems. It nourishe the grateful patient, in its bosom; insists most greedily that it should be ished in the community's bosom on that bosoms can hardly run to now There was published in the British M Journal, just before the National Service came into being, a most rema article by Dr. Frangcon Roberts, the cian in charge of the X-ray clinic a great hospital, Addenbrook's, in Camb In 1897, he tells us, the hospital consi ds, served by four physicians, four ns and two residents. In 1932, the staff en to sixteen, and in 1947 it had risen r seventy; and the nursing staff had upplemented by an army of radiol- dietitians, speech therapists, labora- echnicians, occupational therapists, tists, hospital physicists, masseuses, therapists, child-guidance workers, photographers, record officers, health s and social workers. The number of ogical examinations rose in that time few to 20,000 a year, the number of counts had multiplied by fifty. There X-ray department to speak of till then it occupied two small rooms, occupies floor space twelve times e.

hospital has grown out of all propor- the size of the town; and it has not shed the tide of disease so much as uld have hoped, for the great killers sablers, cancer and rheumatism, for e, have not been diminished by the e in medicine which has tidied up minor ailments.

the cost per inpatient has risen in that eriod from under $8 a week to just $35, and in the same period the cost tpatient has risen from just over a to just over a dollar a visit.

east three factors go to cause this cost, which are nobody's fault. One is in the cost of commodities. The price which is such an important item in a l budget, has increased 900 per cent lifetime. The second is the rise in the labor. The nurses mestic staff of hos- used to be paid skinflint, degrading es which we would amed, and rightly, to anybody today. rd is the advance of ne, which makes for y of auxiliary forces octor Roberts de- And, make no mis- ou cannot diminish it by resolving not to pamper the pa- or it is not the patient but the doctor I demand that extra radiological test. ourse these new hospitals cannot be ed by the same means as the old. egional Contributory scheme grew up to the Second World War and all it. More and more insurance schemes eated to enable middle-class people to private wards of hospitals and draw in-aid for any operation or serious ill- y might have. People still subscribed itals and left them legacies in their ut no piecemeal insurance schemes, ate benevolence, could satisfy the e of this medical Moloch. It was as if who were used to paying taxes suf- o finance a bow-and-arrow army were y asked to find the money for a ized army complete with tanks and It looked as if not only would the who needed hospital care be forced to out it, but as if all sick people of ind and degree in Britain might have ithout it in future, for it is, after all, itals that men learn to be doctors. If to solve this grave problem, it was ry for the state to take over the ls.

ouble was that some deluded people d that when the state had done this olved the problem, and the hospitals ahead without worrying about their y. I have even heard a hospital ac- nt, who of all people ought to have better, answer an inquiry as to where ey was to come from for certain ward ns with the roguish retort, "That's asury's headache."

advantage, and the sole advantage, t in state acquisition of the hospitals t enables the state to take a survey of mmunity's need for doctoring and the profession's power to doctor it, and this against the community's power he medical profession for the required of its power to treat it. Obviously it should profit by being able to apply to the dissociated units which it now takes over the principles of rationalization which we see the great industries using to increase production and avoid waste. But time was needed to get the facts. Even a great deal of time, considering the complexity of what was to be investigated: a complex of over 2000 hospital authorities, of different sizes and character, which had all had their accountancy systems strained to the limit by the confusions of war. But time was exactly what the Labour Government did not give to this problem. It gave energy and good will and intellectual ability and administrative ability, but not time. Because politicians must get their results quickly, before their party goes out of office. And if they act so quickly that their results are mistakes, then they must defend them, for their party's credit.

So one often hears from the best-informed doctors the criticism: "I am for the National Health Service, but I think it ought to have begun with the hospitals, and got that mess straight. But they would have had to do that slowly, and this is a harum-scarum business rushed through for political purposes."

VI

It is altogether deplorable, the way the briers and weeds of partisanship grow over the National Health Service and prevent us from seeing it clearly.

In telling the story of the Service I have deliberately omitted to describe much of the emotional effect which it has had on Britain, because such emotion has been completely irrelevant to the functions, ideal or actual, of the Service, and has been the result of ephemeral political shenanigans. I could have filled these columns with the most entertaining accounts of the battles between the Minister of Health, Mr. Aneurin Bevan, and the doctors, in which tempers on both sides blazed like lightning.

Reformatory measures are hailed as cure-alls by people who have a happy confidence in the perfectibility of human nature and no discouraging acquaintance with history to dim it.
—AGNES REPPLIER

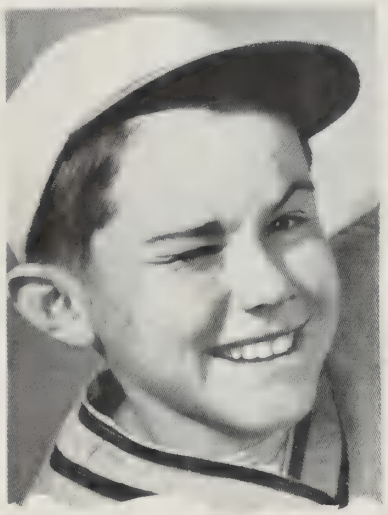
Mr. Bevan is a valuable human being. He is handsome with the handsomeness that is a sign of warmth. He has an eye that shines at the sight of the world, his gestures respond and invite, and there is nothing false about his good will—he has the weight of sincerity behind him. He is a Welshman, and he recalls that other Welsh orator, Lloyd George, because in each case there is cool ability behind the burning oratory.

He has a largeness, and he has leadership. But the trouble is that the Labour Party was too long in opposition. The result is that he is engaged in a permanent flirtation with the idea of becoming a rabble rouser. There is a group of malcontents among the supporters of the Labour Party who joined it in the belief that there were a lot of rich people and a lot of poor people, and the party was going to relieve the poverty of the poor people by taking away the wealth of the rich people by a short and, they rather hoped, painful process.

Mr. Bevan has fallen to the temptation of exploiting the malcontents. He is not of the clay of which rabble rousers are made. The counsels he gives in private in his capacity of a Cabinet Minister are sober and balanced, and he is an able and conscientious administrator. But his public utterances and behavior are often far inferior to himself. For the sake of attracting those who love violence, he pretends to be a violent man acting violently. Obviously he has from the beginning visualized the National Health Service in realistic terms, as an attempt on the part of the community to buy itself as good and as fairly distributed medical care as it can afford on its restricted means. For the sake of appealing to the malcontents, he has represented it as a benefit to the poor which he is wresting from the hands of the reluctant rich. To that end he conducted the negotiations with the doctors as if they were moneygrubbers trying to fleece the impoverished sick, and constantly addressed them in terms which pleased the coarse-minded who like a good brawl.

DISCRIMINATING PEOPLE PREFER

HERBERT TAREYTON



MR. PETER PERKINS, international 8-goal polo player. Discriminating in his choice of cigarettes, Mr. Perkins says: "I smoke HerbertTareyton because it costs no more to enjoy this better cigarette."

Discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because they pay no more for this better cigarette. They appreciate the kind of smoking that only a genuine cork tip can give . . . the cork tip doesn't stick to the lips, it's clean and firm. And discriminating people prefer Herbert Tareyton because their modern size not only means a longer, cooler smoke, but that extra measure of fine tobacco makes Herbert Tareyton today's most unusual cigarette value.

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT THEM YOU'LL LIKE

Copr., The American Tobacco Company

Why It Pays To Ask For BAYER ASPIRIN Children's Size Tablets

It pays because each tablet contains half the amount of regular size Bayer Aspirin. Therefore each tablet is full dosage—the "half an aspirin" your doctor often prescribes for children.

It pays because each tablet is uncolored and unflavored. Therefore your child cannot mistake it for candy.

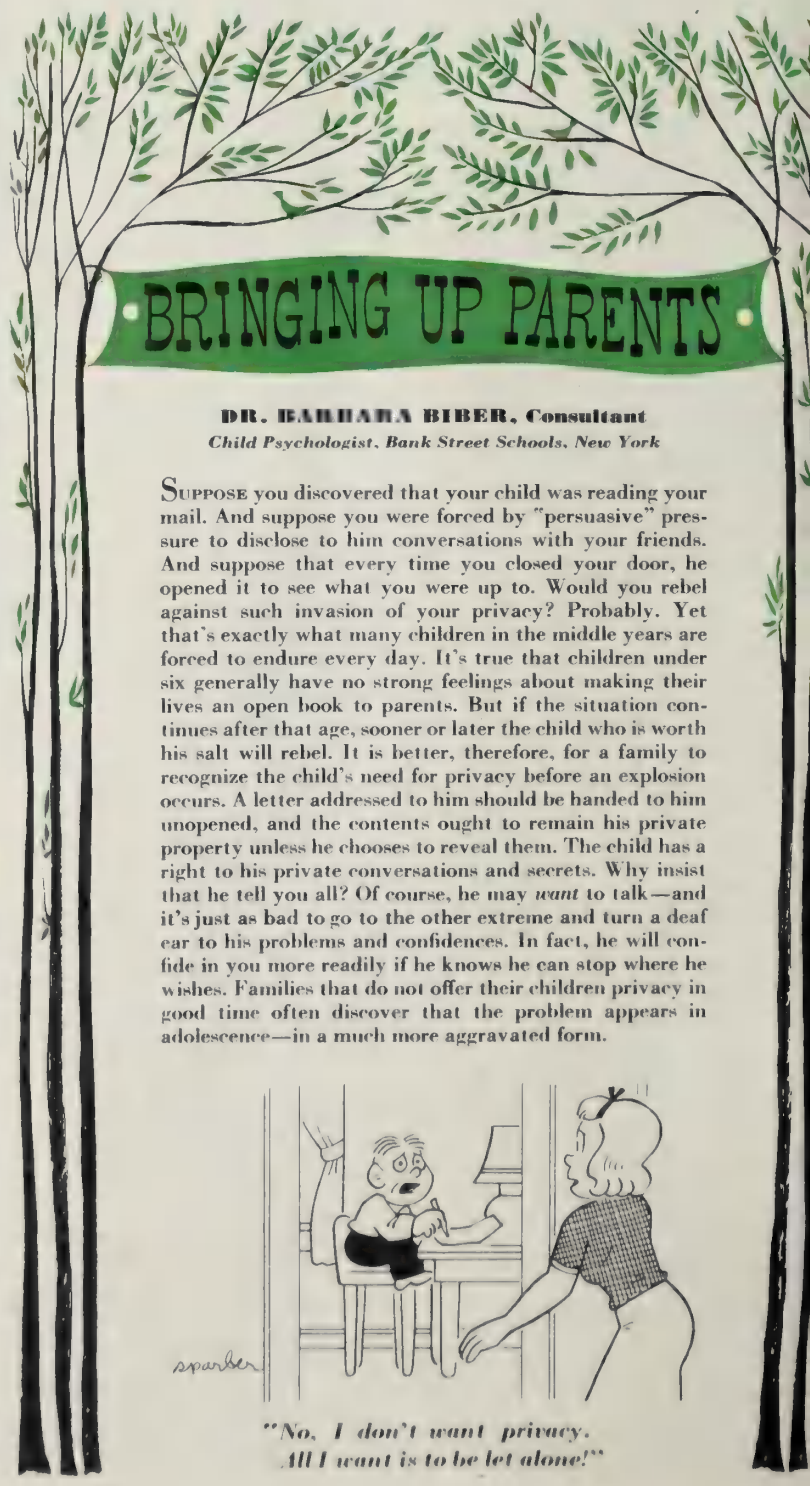
It pays because each tablet is genuine Bayer Aspirin—contains the single active ingredient that's so gentle to the system doctors prescribe it even for the smallest children. Therefore you can use it with confidence.
30 tablets, only 25¢.



CHILDREN'S SIZE BAYER ASPIRIN

I would not put the case against him too strongly. He has issued some very wise warnings to those who believe that the provision of the social services is simply a matter of dipping into an inexhaustible kitty. Only recently he reminded the House of Commons, in a debate that dealt with the heavy expenditure of his ministry on the National Health Service and the housing program, that one of the consequences of the Labour Party program was that "if we want to have more of a particular thing we can have it only at the expense of some other thing," and he has appealed to the public to use the National Health Service temperately and with regard to the needs of others.

If he is peppery, it is because he has had to put up with much criticism which is unjust. I have told you that all well-informed opinion was in favor of the hospitals' being taken over by the state; but the first results of that transfer necessarily looked unsatisfactory from certain angles. Not only did the patients have to wait longer, because the overworked general practitioners were referring more of their cases to the specialists, and because many middle-class people who would previously have gone to private hospitals are now using the free hospitals; the hospitals themselves are in certain instances deteriorating. It is the business of the new (and often inexperienced) regional boards that administer the hospitals for the state to try to raise all the institutions in their to the same level. This is not such a egalitarian measure as might appear, fo pitals which are satisfied with their finance and efficiency and operated en on their own, unentangled with any authority, or with any university, ca permission from the ministry to remain side the Service, and many get it. Thes chiefly hospitals run by religious bodies societies for their own members. The Masonic Hospital, for example, is outsi scheme. But the regional boards, since are working out a national scheme, hav force to spread out the means at thei posal over all the hospitals in their raising the backward areas at the expe the advanced ones, and telling the more perous hospitals that they must get on what they have already had while the ones now have a chance. This means th patients living in the advanced areas customed to report to the more prosp hospitals sometimes do not get as good ice as they did prior to the introduct the Service. I fail to see how this could been avoided by any Minister of Health had been Aesculapius himself, and it irk the fiery temperament of Mr. Bevan held responsible for it.

It must be said that the worst po effect of the National Health Servic been freely and frankly admitted b

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

Suppose you discovered that your child was reading your mail. And suppose you were forced by "persuasive" pressure to disclose to him conversations with your friends. And suppose that every time you closed your door, he opened it to see what you were up to. Would you rebel against such invasion of your privacy? Probably. Yet that's exactly what many children in the middle years are forced to endure every day. It's true that children under six generally have no strong feelings about making their lives an open book to parents. But if the situation continues after that age, sooner or later the child who is worth his salt will rebel. It is better, therefore, for a family to recognize the child's need for privacy before an explosion occurs. A letter addressed to him should be handed to him unopened, and the contents ought to remain his private property unless he chooses to reveal them. The child has a right to his private conversations and secrets. Why insist that he tell you all? Of course, he may want to talk—and it's just as bad to go to the other extreme and turn a deaf ear to his problems and confidences. In fact, he will confide in you more readily if he knows he can stop where he wishes. Families that do not offer their children privacy in good time often discover that the problem appears in adolescence—in a much more aggravated form.

"No, I don't want privacy. All I want is to be let alone!"

Chips Asome

Sizes 4 to 12

Unequalled in the features a Mother wants in young clothes for active youngsters. Fancy all wool fabric, plus a famous label, fine tailoring details and an exceptional price. About $16.95.

WRITE FOR NEAREST DEALER

WM. SCHWARTZ & CO., INC., 1107 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Springfoot Sox

FOR BOYS FROM SIX TO SIXTY

FOR FAMILY FOOT COMFORT & PROTECTION

ALTHSOX"—Premium-grade combed cotton. 55c a pair.

EATSOX"— 50% spun nylon & 50% virgin wool. $1.00 a pair.

Natural-color yarns . . . no dyes or irritants. Absorb perspiration; help guard against infection. Recommended for sufferers of "athlete's foot" and for persons allergic to dyes. True-rib leg; flat-knit foot; nylon reinforced heels and toes.

SIZES 8 to 13

PRE-SHRUNK & SANITIZED

IS ACCEPTED IN THE ADVERTISING OF today's health PUBLISHED BY THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Other popular styles of SPRINGFOOT SOX — sizes 6 to 13 — at 39c to $1.00 a pair.

For the name of your nearest dealer write

WILMINGTON HOSIERY MILLS, INC.

WILMINGTON 17, DELAWARE

Bevan. This relates to the teeth of the nation. It happened that a gross error was made in fixing the rate of remuneration of the dentists. It was just one of those blunders which spring from the fact that though men always tell women, and rightly, that women are no good at figures, men are no good at them either. Human beings do not find it as easy to count as to read and write. The actuaries missed the mark very badly and an extraordinary situation arose.

A flood of people dashed themselves against the doors of the dentists' offices, consisting partly of the tireless breed who never weary of getting something for nothing, but much more of people who really had been too poor to get dentures or thorough care of the mouth, and were naturally delighted at the thought that they were going to have those vacant gums properly furnished and that perpetual neuralgia stilled. The reaction of the dentists depended on their characters. Many dentists were honestly appalled by the horrible mouths that were now brought to them, and did their best to cope with the demand by working all day and far into the night. Others worked as long because they saw their practices doubling and trebling and quadrupling and even more. Both these classes found that at the scale of fees fixed by the ministry they made fortunes. Instead of earning from $3000 to $10,000 or $15,000 a year, they found themselves in a Klondike rush that gave them $20,000 to $60,000 a year, and even, in one glorious case, $96,000. The only person who got left out was the sensible chap who knows that a dentist, of all craftsmen, cannot hurry and cannot be overworked, and took only a few extra patients onto his panel. Some idea of the gold rush is given by the fact that the estimates for the Dental Services in England and Wales rose from $76,000,000 in 1949 to $112,816,000 in 1950. (This, I think, is one of the catastrophes which could have been avoided if greater time had been given to the preparation of the scheme.

Now, you cannot throw a scale of pay overboard in a hurry when you have recruited a service. Mr. Bevan has once cut the pay of dentists by halving everything any dentist made over $20,000, and he has twice cut the fees, by 20 per cent and 10 per cent. But not unnaturally this fantastic scale of reward tempted dentists who were working in other services where the fees were lower. It unfortunately happened that the dentists working in the maternity and children and the school services were paid at a very mediocre rate, which would have attracted few practitioners if they had not also offered permanent employment and pensions. But the National Health Service offered both permanent employment and pensions and these huge rewards, which, though they have shrunk, are still larger than any salaries the local authorities paid the dentists in these services. There was such a wholesale exodus out of these services and into the National Health Service that there are now areas where only one school dentist is left to take care of the teeth of 30,000 children.

At this point, I own, I watched Mr. Bevan with some suspicion. It is true that it is relatively unimportant what happens to the teeth of the adults in the population if you attend to the teeth of the children; half an hour in the dentist's chair under ten saves many hours in adult life. But children have no votes, and mothers are not an important political group, and the mixed adult population which benefits from the National Health Service provides the bulk of the voters. However, Mr. Bevan pointed out this mistake with emphasis in his annual report, and is said behind the scenes to have most energetically represented that the position must be rectified, and that while he must economize on the National Health Service dental services, the local authorities must spend more on their maternity and child-welfare and school services.

But here is a case where Mr. Bevan did not, and could not, keep his hands quite clean when the political handling of the National Health Service was muddy. He was quite a distance from the mud. It was thrown by the extremists of his party, but he never

(Continued on Page 155)

DENTONS

NOW IN

L O O P

Gay as a Frolic

DENTON SOFT-KNIT SLEEPERS — famous since 1895 — are now available in beautiful PASTEL COLORS in addition to the traditional natural gray wool-mix garment.

● PINK, BLUE and MAIZE DENTONS are made of 100% long staple, premium cotton. LIGHT GRAY DENTONS are made of 97% unbleached cotton and 3% fine wool.

● DENTON SLEEPERS are designed to provide the best in Appearance, Comfort, Wear and Health Protection.

Fully Approved Distinctive Denton Features:

Soft-spun yarn for warmth and comfort.
Generously sized—do not shrink out of fit.
Nine-Thread Seams are smooth and strong.
Full cut Seat with elastic closure.
Adjustable, snug fitting double ribbed Cuffs.
Gripper Fasteners eliminate button troubles.
Exclusive extra heavy Single Thickness Feet are ankle height for maximum wear.

● Insist on genuine Dentons. Each garment carries our famous Denton Trade Mark—symbol of superior quality and expert workmanship.

Sold by leading department stores and baby shops . . . coast to coast.

DENTON SLEEPING GARMENT MILLS, INC. Centreville, Mich.

(Dentons made and sold in Canada by Mercury Mills, Ltd., Hamilton, Ont.)

They look beautiful . . .
They feel wonderful . . .

these new fall

Vitality shoes

Dancette . . . Definitely dressy, all fashion and flattery.

Bonview . . . Popular platform sandal, so delicately designed.

Dracie . . . Graceful, delightful . . . a gorgeous eyeful.

Priscilla . . . Charming combination of comfort and smartness.

Radford (Permaflex). Smartly tailored for fashion on-the-go.

Gracine . . . Sleek simplicity . . . a foot-flattering pump.

Lusanne . . . Styled for anywhere, everywhere walking comfort.

Lasting Quality

in every seen and unseen detail

You're in love . . . you're in love with a wonderful buy—yes, more-for-your-money Vitality Shoes. You'll revel in the heavenly comfort . . . marvel at the flattering design, the fine materials. Down to the minutest detail, Vitalitys are every inch quality. Choose now from the wide selection of glorious new Fall styles. For your Vitality dealer's name, write us . . . today!

Vitality Shoes and Vitality Permaflex Shoes $10.95 $11.95 $12.95

Vitality Wanderlust Shoes $7.95 and $8.95

Complete Range of Sizes and Widths

Vitality Shoe Company, Division of International Shoe Company, St. Louis 3, Missouri

(Continued from Page 153)

ped the fight by a clear statement as he nt have done.

ne public is being greedy over medicine.
resented at the drugstores something 200,000,000 prescriptions in twelve ths, and the estimate for the cost of icaments had to be raised recently 128,000,000. This service is an espey severe trial to the conscience, for prescription often costs so little. Con-ce says, "Oh, I can't be expected to hurt elf over that seventy-five cents," and es to multiply seventy-five cents by the ber of National Health Service patients.
e should have been a system from the by which every patient had to pay a ortion of the cost of a prescription, pt in certain cases of destitution; and thing of the sort is being worked out but with great difficulty, as there is ble about getting the drugstores to rtake to collect this fee and be respon-for the accountancy.

hen the heavy cost of free medicines me apparent, the extreme left-wingers vered that it was not the population were to blame, but the wicked capitalist manufacturers who were making ous profits on the goods they sold to the suffering Labour Government. Later, Bevan himself took the same line, but it be remarked that he did it with great aint, and had some reason on his side.
requested doctors not to prescribe the nsive proprietary medicines that were on the market by the drug manufac-s, but to order their local druggist to e an equivalent for the preparation from aw materials, which, as he quite rightly were often much cheaper. He named arations which the drug manufacturers for 75 cents a bottle when the local drugcould make the same quantity out of the ingredients at a cost of 20 cents. "I ," said Mr. Bevan in the House, "to get co-operation of the medical profession of the whole House and of all parts of country to cut out those proprietary cines which are unnecessarily expen-
" and there he left the subject.
at was a dangerous thing to do, for in he high cost of proprietary medicines is neans by which the drug manufacturers ce the research which is necessary be-he drug which has been discovered in niversity laboratory can be turned out antity in the factory, sold in the drug-
, and prescribed by doctors for their nts. There are firms which are part of lacred structure of medicine, and are d commercial but nevertheless count
g the healers.
fact, Mr. Bevan, when he talked of per-ng doctors not to prescribe expensive ietary medicines, should have added, true that thereby we will break up the xisting system by which the discoveries ademic research are transformed into therapeutic agents, and we have at t not the slightest prospect of setting alternative system."
the blame for this suppression of an ial fact about the medical supplies of untry lies not with Mr. Bevan. Could onestly expect any Cabinet Minister ging to a party which for many years racticed the wholesale denunciation of lism to stand up and explain that they not carry out a socialist measure were for the public services rendered by a er of capitalist firms? Of course you not.
e fault arises because the National n Service should be built on firmer
d and in a less stormy atmosphere re found in the political world.

VII

TIMES it looks as if we had started wrong foot and would never get into But listen to what a famous surgeon
e when I went to see him in a univer-aching hospital. He is just sixty this ut looks older. Quite a lot older than I pected; I had not seen him for many
I got the explanation of his look of age he said:

"The National Health Service has had very little effect on my work except financially, and there it has come down on me like a ton of bricks.

"You know that when I was in Harley Street in London I spent almost three quarters of my time in hospital practice, for which I was unpaid. But in spite of this, and although I never looted my patients of the high fees some of my colleagues did, I was able to make about fifty thousand dollars a year. This gave me plenty to run my home and give my wife and my three young sons all they needed, to take out insurance to feel comfortable about the future, and to invest a reasonable amount in good securities. Even when all this was done I found my balance at the bank steadily increasing.

"Then the war came, and I was put in charge of the —— Board at the Ministry of ——, and I was turned into a civil servant and paid at the rate of seven thousand dollars a year. But I could do private practice, and I was able to carry on, just, with the help of that bank balance, which of course melted."

(It has to be noted that it is very hard to discuss the effects of the National Health Service with any of the individuals it affects without being referred sooner or later back to some confusion created by the war. The Service did not start with a clean sheet.)

The Grandmothers

By Elizabeth McFarland

Little cheeks like toys,
Little pointy chin,
Little fluttering joys
When rosebud love smiled in;
Small shoes with button closing,
Black eyes like beady snaps;
A tendency toward dozing,
A cleverness at naps ——
Once I'd a lovely grandmother;
The days stretched long, unblinking.
Now an old gray pussy
Sits home and does my thinking.

"Then, at the end of the war, I was offered this superb job—a professorship here, with my own unit and all the equipment I have ever thought of in my wildest dreams. Of course I took it. But the pay was only ten thousand dollars a year. And even that was not such a sacrifice, for I sold my big house in London and lived much more modestly down here, and started up in private practice again. Things were not what they had been, but they were better.

"But when the National Health Service came in, I found myself sliding down again. The work that was done by voluntary hospital organizations and by local authorities and by exchanges between individuals is all done now by committees which a man of my experience cannot dodge. So now I have neither the time nor the inclination to do more than an odd case of private practice at very infrequent intervals. The surplus of vitality that I have over and above what I need for my hospital work is drained away by committee and administrative work. And my salary has not gone up under the new system. It has been hard for them to calculate exactly what a hybrid animal like me—half teacher and half surgeon—ought to get, and they underestimate the reward we ought to get for the hospital work I do in the course of my teaching. You can't blame them. When it comes to settling the rewards that ought to be given to people working in an industry which has never had its finances clear anyway, and each of them has slight differences of qualification and experience and function, it's no wonder that they slip up sometimes.

"Well, I get eleven thousand dollars a year, and my suspicion that I ought to get more is confirmed by the fact that my deputy, who is paid by the state just for his hospital work, gets more than I do. It's true that I might have ten thousand dollars in addition to my salary under the system by which 'distinction rewards' are given to specialists of outstanding merit. Four per cent of all specialists can be awarded that sum, ten per cent can be awarded six thousand dollars a year, twenty per cent can be awarded two thousand dollars a year. It means that about a third of us get over ten thousand dollars a year, counting our varying basic salaries; and of course the youngsters start with salaries we never got for years. But about these awards, you know how slow the state is in moving; two years it is since the National Health Service came in, and I don't think any of those awards have yet been given. They shouldn't have started the thing in such a hurry, you know.

"Well, in the meantime the red four figures in my banking account—four, mark you—get steadily bigger. For the first time for many years I am deeply concerned about money matters, and it is likely that before long I shall have to sell out some of my securities to wipe out my overdraft. Of course, against all this, I suppose I come in for a pension under the superannuation scheme, but this will be very small indeed, for one coming into the Service as late in life as I did. Well, well, it does me good sometimes to remember the house in Bryanston Square and the pink geraniums in the window boxes, and the parties we used to have, and the winter sports at St. Moritz, and buying birthday presents for my wife at Cartier's. All that's gone forever. But I suppose it doesn't matter."

I WAS wondering if it did matter. I know that bacteriologists and physiologists and radiologists have always done their work on small incomes, and glorious work it has been. But to be a great surgeon is different.

Those other workers do not have to make sudden decisions, carry an operating team along with them through moments of sudden crisis and uncertainty, borrow strength from their nerves to stand the strain of hours of momentous and delicate craftsmanship wrought on living flesh. Such ordeals had been delicious to him, because he had the personality of a great actor, and a crucial operation was like playing Hamlet; and like every actor, he was a show-off, and because he was a show-off he had loved the big house with the pink geraniums in the window boxes and the diamond bracelets from Cartier's.

If you are a show-off, can you go on giving your best if you are deprived of the gratifications that are loved by a show-off? And what about his equivalent the brilliant consulting physician? Would he be able to move into the sickroom where somebody was perishing mysteriously, to give a star performance in terms of intuitive diagnosis and resourceful prescription and magic radiation of hope, if he was not treated like a star? Would he be able to give his best in this austerity world?

But my friend went on: "Why do I say that? Why do I say I suppose it doesn't matter? I know it doesn't. When hospital facilities improve, I think there is a chance of spending my last few years in relative happiness.

"Financially, the sight of my hospital wards ought to depress me. There are always a number of cases which, up till two years ago, I would have been looking after in a small private hospital at substantial fees. Actually I do not feel the smallest pang of regret. I get much more satisfaction from operating in a large public hospital with a team I have picked and trained and worked with day in and day out. I operate in two hospitals, I have a team in each which I couldn't admire more, and in both the patients get a fair deal, or would if we weren't overcrowded. We can't give the patients all the privacy they ought to have. Yes, we're overcrowded and understaffed, but essentially the layout's very good.

"Yes, I really do like the National Health Service very much indeed, from the point of view of my work, though I think it is a rushed scheme precipitated on us for purely political reasons, and Bevan raises my

After 25 BEWARE of Dry Skin

After 25 every woman ought to use her mirror with a more critical eye.

From 25 on, the natural oil that keeps skin soft and pliant, starts decreasing. Before 40, skin may lose as much as 20% of its own softening oil.

But you can help offset this drying out—by giving your skin an oil especially suited to its needs. You can use a dry skin cream that is extra rich in lanolin, which is very like the oil of the skin itself—this special cream is Pond's Dry Skin Cream.

See its effects on your skin. Work it in thoroughly for night softening. Use it lightly for a smooth look under make-up. The rich cream brings skin a fresher, younger softness at once.

Under your Lower Lip—those little "dry skin" puckers tighten, make your mouth look "set" and older.

To Relax—Always at bedtime help supple this skin with Pond's Dry Skin Cream, smoothing each time from center of lip out and up to each corner. This lanolin-rich cream will soften puckers, relax tightness caused by dryness.

Around your Eyes, on Eyelids—little dry "crow's feet" come, and skin takes on a darker "crinkled" look.

To "Uncrinkle" Dry Lines. Never forget nightly softening with Pond's Dry Skin Cream. Finger-tap it lightly by eyes. Leave on lids all night. This cream is homogenized to soak in better.

• • • • •

3 features: These 3 features make Pond's Dry Skin Cream so effective: 1. It is rich in lanolin—very like the skin's own oil. 2. It is homogenized to soak in better. 3. It has a softening emulsifier. 89¢, 49¢, 29¢—trial size 10¢ (plus tax). Get your jar—today!

MRS. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, JR., says, "Pond's Dry Skin Cream gives the softening dry skin needs."

Start this truly remarkable correction of Dry Skin today!

Magic MEXICO is a box of thrills and Surprises

Imagine vacationing like a millionaire for just a few dollars a day! That's but one of thousands of wonderful surprises awaiting you in magic Mexico! Your every minute will bring exciting new thrills... cathedrals, fiestas, bull fights, pyramids... the floating gardens ...the glistening white beaches of colorful Veracruz and Acapulco... quaint native markets, exquisite handicrafts and romantic tropical music — all in a cool, Spring-like setting of breath-taking beauty... and only a few hours away by plane or train, a day or so over broad new ribbon-smooth highways!

Mexico is truly a fabulous land... Everything your heart desires (including modern hotels, superb restaurants, night clubs and famed spas) is yours to enjoy at amazing low cost. And English is spoken everywhere, so don't wait—see your travel agent or air mail coupon today!

air mail this coupon TODAY

Dirección General de Turismo
Avenida Juárez 89, México D. F.

Please send me information on Mexico. I'm especially interested in:

☐ Mexico City ☐ A Quiet Rest ☐ Just Fun ☐ Fishing
☐ Archeology ☐ Native Scenes ☐ Beaches ☐ Sports ☐ Education ☐ Low-Cost Retirement ☐ Rentals

Name .....

Address .....

hackles. In the future, owing to the pooling of hospital administration in every region, there is going to be much greater uniformity in the quality of surgical services. These smaller provincial-hospital surgeons are being brought into closer contact with the surgeons from the great teaching hospitals, and in this way the standards will be raised. The old get a chance to find out what the young are learning, the young get a chance to find out what the old have learned.

